15 ¶ But it ſhall come to paſs, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to obſerve to do all his commandments and his ſtatutes which I command thee this day; that all theſe curſes ſhall come upon thee, and overtake thee.

16 Curſed ſhalt thou be in the city, and curſed ſhalt thou be in the field.

17 Curſed ſhall be thy basket and thy ſtore.

18 Curſed ſhall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increaſe of thy kine, and the flocks of thy ſheep.

19 Curſed ſhalt thou be when thou comeſt in, and curſed ſhalt thou be when thou goeſt out.

20 The LORD ſhall ſend upon thee curſing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou ſetteſt thine hand unto, for to do; until thou be deſtroyed, and until thou periſh quickly; becauſe of the wickedneſs of thy doings, whereby thou haſt forſaken me.

21 The LORD ſhall make the peſtilence cleave unto thee, until he have conſumed thee from off the land, whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it.

22 The LORD ſhall ſmite thee with a conſumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation, and with an extreme burning, and with the ſword, and with blaſting, and with mildew: and they ſhall purſue thee until thou periſh.

23 And thy heaven that is over thy head ſhall be braſs, and the earth that is under thee ſhall be iron.

24 The LORD ſhall make the rain of thy land powder and duſt: from heaven ſhall it come down upon thee, until thou be deſtroyed.

25 The LORD ſhall cauſe thee to be ſmitten before thine enemies: thou ſhalt go out one way againſt them, and flee ſeven ways before them; and ſhalt be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.

26 And thy carcaſs ſhall be meat unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beaſts of the earth, and no man ſhall fray them away.

27 The LORD will ſmite thee with the botch of Egypt, and with the emerods, and with the ſcab, and with the itch, whereof thou canſt not be healed.

28 The LORD ſhall ſmite thee with madneſs, and blindneſs, and aſtoniſhment of heart.

29 And thou ſhalt grope at noon-days, as the blind gropeth in darkneſs, and thou ſhalt not proſper in thy ways: and thou ſhalt be only oppreſſed, and ſpoiled evermore, and no man ſhall ſave thee.

30 Thou ſhalt betroth a wife, and another man ſhall lie with her: thou ſhalt build an houſe, and thou ſhalt not dwell therein: thou ſhalt plant a vineyard, and ſhalt not gather the grapes thereof.

31 Thine ox ſhall be ſlain before thine eyes, and thou ſhalt not eat thereof: thine aſs ſhall be violently taken away from before thy face, and ſhall not be reſtored to thee: thy ſheep ſhall be given unto thine enemies, and thou ſhalt have none to reſcue them.

32 Thy ſons and thy daughters ſhall be given unto another people, and thine eyes ſhall look and fail with longing for them all the day long: and there ſhall be no might in thine hand.

33 The

33 The fruit of thy land, and all thy labours, ſhall a nation which thou knoweſt not, eat up; and thou ſhalt be only oppreſſed and cruſhed alway:

34 So that thou ſhalt be mad, for the ſight of thine eyes which thou ſhalt ſee.

35 The LORD ſhall ſmite thee in the knees, and in the legs, with a ſore botch that cannot be healed, from the ſole of thy foot unto the top of thy head.

36 The LORD ſhall bring thee, and thy king which thou ſhalt ſet over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and there ſhalt thou ſerve other gods, wood and ſtone.

37 And thou ſhalt become an aſtoniſhment, a proverb, and a by-word, among all nations whither the LORD ſhall lead thee.

38 Thou ſhalt carry much ſeed out into the field, and ſhalt gather but little in: for the locuſt ſhall conſume it.

39 Thou ſhalt plant vineyards, and dreſs them, but ſhalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes: for the worms ſhall eat them.

40 Thou ſhalt have olive-trees throughout all thy coaſts, but thou ſhalt not anoint thy ſelf with the oil: for thine olive ſhall caſt his fruit.

41 Thou ſhalt beget ſons and daughters, but thou ſhalt not enjoy them: for they ſhall go into captivity.

42 All thy trees and fruit of thy land ſhall the locuſt conſume.

43 The ſtranger that is within thee ſhall get up above thee very high; and thou ſhalt come down very low.

44 He ſhall lend to thee, and thou ſhalt not lend to him: he ſhall be the head, and thou ſhalt be the tail.

45 Moreover, all theſe curſes ſhall come upon thee, and ſhall purſue thee, and overtake thee, till thou be deſtroyed: becauſe thou hearkneſt not unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep his commandments and his ſtatutes which he commanded thee.

46 And they ſhall be upon thee for a ſign, and for a wonder, and upon thy ſeed for ever.

47 Becauſe thou ſervedſt not the LORD thy God with joyfulneſs and with gladneſs of heart, for the abundance of all things:

48 Therefore ſhalt thou ſerve thine enemies which the LORD ſhall ſend againſt thee, in hunger, and in thirſt, and in nakedneſs, and in want of all things: and he ſhall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck, until he have deſtroyed thee.

49 The LORD ſhall bring a nation againſt thee from far, from the end of the earth, as ſwift as the eagle flieth, a nation whoſe tongue thou ſhalt not underſtand:

50 A nation of fierce countenance, which ſhall not regard the perſon of the old, nor ſhew favour to the young.

51 And he ſhall eat the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy land, until thou be deſtroyed: which alſo ſhall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil, or the increaſe of thy kine, or flocks of thy ſheep, until he have deſtroyed thee.

52 And he ſhall beſiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou truſtedſt, throughout all thy land: and he ſhall beſiege thee in all thy gates, throughout all thy land which the LORD thy God hath given thee.

53 And thou ſhalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the fleſh of thy ſons, and of thy daughters (which the LORD thy God hath given thee) in the ſiege, and in the ſtraitneſs wherewith thine enemies ſhall diſtreſs thee:

54 So that the man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eye ſhall be evil toward his brother, and toward the wife of his boſom, and towards the remnant of his children which he ſhall leave:

55 So that he will not give to any of them of the fleſh of his children whom he ſhall eat: becauſe he hath nothing left him in the ſiege, and in the ſtraitneſs wherewith thine enemies ſhall diſtreſs thee in all thy gates.

56 The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to ſet the ſole of her foot upon the ground for delicateneſs and tenderneſs, her eye ſhall be evil toward the husband of her boſom, and toward her ſon, and toward her daughter,

57 And toward her young one that cometh out from between her feet, and toward her children which ſhe ſhall bear: for ſhe ſhall eat them for want of all things ſecretly in the ſiege, and ſtraitneſs wherewith thine enemy ſhall diſtreſs thee in thy gates.

58 If thou wilt not obſerve to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, that thou mayeſt fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD.

59 Then

59 Then the LORD will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy ſeed, even great plagues, and of long continuance, and ſore ſickneſſes, and of long continuance.

60 Moreover, he will bring upon thee all the diſeaſes of Egypt, which thou waſt afraid of; and they ſhall cleave unto thee.

61 Alſo every ſickneſs and every plague which is not written in the book of this law, them will the LORD bring upon thee, until thou be deſtroyed.

62 And ye ſhall be left few in number, whereas ye were as the ſtars of heaven for multitude: becauſe thou wouldſt not obey the voice of the LORD thy God.

63 And it ſhall come to paſs, that as the LORD rejoyced over you to do you good, and to multiply you: ſo the LORD will rejoyce over you to deſtroy you, and to bring you to nought; and ye ſhall be plucked from off the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it.

64 And the LORD ſhall ſcatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth, even unto the other: and there thou ſhalt ſerve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and ſtone.

65 And among theſe nations ſhalt thou find no eaſe; neither ſhall the ſole of thy foot have reſt: but the LORD ſhall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and ſorrow of mind.

66 And thy life ſhall hang in doubt before thee, and thou ſhalt fear day and night, and ſhalt have none aſſurance of thy life.

67 In the morning thou ſhalt ſay, Would God it were even: and at even thou ſhalt ſay, Would God it were morning, for the fear of thine heart wherewith thou ſhalt fear, and for the ſight of thine eyes which thou ſhalt ſee.

68 And the LORD ſhall bring thee into Egypt, again, with ſhips, by the way whereof I ſpake unto thee, Thou ſhalt ſee it no more again: and there ye ſhall be ſold unto your enemies for bond-men and bond-women, and no man ſhall buy you.

Ver. 1. And it ſhall come to paſs.] In this chapter Moſes repeats, with many enlargements, the rewards and penalties which he had promiſed aud threatened in the book of Leviticus, unto the obſervance or breach of the covenant they had made with God: and here, in this verſe, he promiſes in general, the bleſſings which are more particularly enumerated in the following verſes.

——— If thou ſhalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to obſerve and do all his commandments which I command thee this day; that the Lord thy God will ſet thee on high above all nations of the earth.] By beſtowing on them the following bleſſings, ſee chap. vii. 14. They were already endued with ſingular privileges above other nations, Exod. xix. 5, 6. which by their obedience would be confirmed, continued, and augmented in greater plenty of all things.

Ver. 2. And all theſe bleſſings ſhall come on thee, and overtake thee.] Bleſſings that come unexpectedly, and when we are not in purſuit of them, are moſt welcome, and highly delight us. And ſuch God here promiſes to beſtow on them, by his gracious providence, without their laborious and anxious ſeeking after them. By which very thing "he ſet them above all nations:" for what theſe followed after eagerly, and many times in vain, he undertakes ſhould come to them, and prevent their deſires.

——— If thou ſhalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God.] So as to obſerve and do all his commandments; as it is explained in the foregoing verſe.

Ver. 3. Bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the city, and bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the field.] That is, in all their affairs within doors, and without, or whether they lived by employments in the city, or by husbandry, in tilling the ground. It is not a natural interpretation of theſe words, which one of the Hebrew doctors gives of them in Bava Metzia, where he expounds, "bleſſed ſhalt thou be in the city," Thy houſe ſhall be ſo nigh unto the ſynagogue, that thou needeſt not be troubled by going a long way to it; and, bleſſed in the field, Thy ground ſhall lie ſo neat to the city, that thou mayeſt quickly bring the fruit it produces to be ſold in the market. But if he could have gone on in this manner, it had been ſomething tolerable; but he expounds what follows in a moſt undecent manner. See Wagenſeil upon the Gemara Sota, cap. 3. ſect. 9. annot. 5.

Ver. 5. Bleſſed ſhall be thy basket.] The Jeruſalem Targum refers to the basket wherein they carried up their firſt-fruits, chap. xxvi. 2. But the vulgar Latin tranſlates it, thy barns; and ſo do the LXX. αἱ ἀποθῆκαι σου, the place where they laid up their corn, and other fruits of the earth; which God promiſes both to fill, and to preſerve from fire, or thieves, or other diſaſters.

—And thy ſtore.] The LXX. and the Vulgar tranſlate it, all that was remaining; of which they had not preſent uſe, but kept till they had occaſion for it. So it is a promiſe, that they ſhould never want, but ſtill have ſomething lying by them in ſtore (as we tranſlate it) above what they needed.

Ver. 10. And all the people of the earth ſhall ſee that thou art called by the name of the Lord.] They ſhall be convinced that you are, after a peculiar manner, the Lord's people, chap. xiv. 1. xxvi. 18. for whereſoever we read, that a perſon or thing hath the name of God called upon it, or is called by his name, the meaning is, that it is his. As the city called by God's name, Jer. xxv. 29. is the city of God, where he dwelt, namely, Jeruſalem. And thus the ark is ſaid to have the name of God called on it, 1 Chron. xiii. 6. that is, it was the Lord's ark, or the ark of the covenant. And as here the children of Iſrael are ſaid to be the people called by his name, ſo it is ſaid of the Chriſtian church, Acts xv. 17, for the very ſame phraſe, as Mr. Mede obſerves, is uſed of the like relation that men have to that which is theirs. Thus Jacob ſaith, Gen. xlviii. 16. that his name ſhould be called on the two ſons of Joſeph, that is, they ſhould be his, as Reuben and Simeon were. Which ſhews, theſe are words of adoption.

Ver. 15. But it ſhall come to paſs, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to obſerve to do all his commandments, &c.] Eſpecially that great commandment, not to go after other gods to ſerve them.

Ver. 20. The Lord ſhall ſend upon thee curſing, vexation, and rebuke.] It is very hard to know what theſe three words particularly import, the two firſt of them being very variouſly tranſlated. The firſt of them, meera, ſeems to ſignify in general, that God would blaſt them in all they deſigned and went about; for tho' the LXX. and Vulgar here render it, famine, and want, yet elſewhere the LXX. render it as we do, κατάρα, curſing. And the next word, mehuma, they tranſlate, hunger. But in other places the LXX. render it by ſix or ſeven words, which import the ſame with our Engliſh word, vexation, viz. ταραχὴ, trouble or diſturbance; θόρυβον, tumult; ἐπιχυσιν, confuſion; ἔκπληξιν, horror, or affrightment, &c. which relate to great diſorder, diſquiet, and perplexity in their mind. And the laſt word, mighereth, the Vulgar tranſlate as we do, rebuke; but the LXX. ἀνάλωσιν, conſumption; which are the ſame in effect. For when God rebukes a man for his iniquity, he makes his beauty to conſume away like a moth, Pſalm xxxix. 11. for God's rebukes conſiſt not in words, but in ſore afflictions, 2 Kings xix. 3. Pſalm xviii. 15, &c. particularly in diſappointments and ill-ſucceſs in their undertakings, and continual fear of worſe for the future.

Ver. 21. The Lord ſhall make the peſtilence cleave unto thee.] The peſtilence is threatned in Lev. xxvi. 25. where God declares he will ſend it among them, and here adds, that it ſhall cleave unto them, that is, be incurable. And ſo the author of Schebet Judah confeſſes, that after they had been waſted and broken in pieces by wars, they that fled into Spain, in the time of Alphonſus, were ſwept away in great numbers by a plague; and introduces one applying theſe very words, as a prophecy of it: Which we thought fit to obſerve, tho' this part of the prophecy doth not belong to what hath befallen them ſince the laſt deſtruction of Jeruſalem, (as we ſhall ſhew hereafter) but to the times before the firſt deſtruction; when God often ſent a peſtilence to deſtroy them, 2 Sam. xxiv. 15. Jer. xiv. 12. xxi. 6, 7, 9. and many other places of that book, Ezek. v. 12. vi. 11, 12. Amos iv. 10. But it muſt be acknowledged alſo, that the Greeks call ſuch unſeaſonable weather, as deſtroys the fruits of the earth, by the name of λοιμὸς, peſtilence. So Plato, Lib. x. de Legibus, ſaith, that which is called νόσημα, a diſeaſe in bodies, ἐν δ' ὥραις ἐτῶν καὶ ἐναυτῶν λοιμὸν, &c. is called peſtilence in the ſeaſons of the year. The murrain alſo in cattle is called by the ſame name; which even the pagans thought was ſent by the anger of their gods, for the ſins of men; as we learn from Callimachus, in his hymn to Diana, where he ſaith, ver. 125. that when ſhe was angry, peſtilence ate up their cattle, and hail deſtroyed the fruits of the earth.

Κτήνεά φιν λοιμὸς μελαθροφάγος, ἔργα δὲ χάλαζα.

As on the contrary, when ſhe was well pleaſed, ſhe ſent fruitful ſeaſons, and all manner of happineſs, as follows in that hymn.

Ver. 22. And the Lord ſhall ſmite thee with a conſumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation.] Theſe three words ſignify ſevere diſeaſes in mens bodies: the two firſt of which, ſackepheth and kaddachath, we tranſlate in Lev. xxvi. 16. as we do here; only the ſecond of them we render, the burning ague, which here we tranſlate, fever: unto which is here added dalleketh, which ſignifies ſuch an inflammation as is accompanied with an itching, (according to the LXX. who tranſlate it ἐρεθισμὸν) which is extremely grievous, becauſe the ſcratching of it increaſes the inflammation.

—— And with an extream burning, and with the ſword.] Theſe two ſeem to relate to the indiſpoſition of the air, by extream heat and drought, as we tranſlate the word chereb in the margin of our bibles; for it ſignifies both the ſword and dryneſs; as the firſt word charchur ſignifies ſcorching heat, which frequently cauſes diſeaſes; for it being the doubling of the word charar, it denotes the extremity, or higheſt degree of it, as all ſuch words do, of which Bochart hath given many examples in his Hierozoicon, p. ii. lib. 1. cap. 19.

—— And with blaſting and with mildew.] Theſe two relate to the deſtruction of their corn, and the fruits of the earth, which follows upon the corruption of the air, as famine follows upon the corruption of the fruits of the earth. The firſt word ſchiddaphon, the LXX. and the other Greek interpreters, tranſlate ἀνεμοφθορίαν, blaſting by biting winds, tho' elſewhere the LXX. tranſlate it by ἐμπυρισμὸν, and πύρωσιν, which ſignify ſuch bliting as comes by heat; and the ſecond word, jerakon (which comes from jerek, herb or graſs, or any green thing) ſeems properly to be expreſſed by the LXX. who tranſlate it ὠχρὰν; for corn, and graſs, and herbs, turn pale for want of moiſture.

Ver. 23. And thy heaven, that is over thy head, ſhall be braſs.] That is, as braſs, having no more moiſture in it than braſs hath. It is remarkable, that he doth not ſay the heaven, that is, the air or clouds, but thy heaven, that is, the clouds which hung over their country ſhould be dry, tho' they dropped upon other lands. See Jeremiah, xiv.

—— And the earth that is under thee ſhall be iron.] Hard as iron, for want of rain to ſoften it. See Levit. xxvi. 19. The obſervation of Maimonides on this part of the law is worth citing; namely, that the Zabii, an ancient ſort of idolaters in the eaſtern countries, thought the fruitfulneſs of the earth depended upon the worſhip of the planets, and the reſt of the heavenly bodies; and therefore their wiſe men and their prophets (as he ſaith he found in their books, particularly in one concerning the husbandry of the Egyptians) taught the people to keep feſtivals in their honour, becauſe the fruitfulneſs of the earth, by which men ſubſiſt, depends upon their will and pleaſure. In oppoſition to which, God ordered Moſes to tell the Iſraelites in his name, that if they worſhipped the ſtars, they ſhould have no rain; the earth ſhould be barren, the trees yield no fruit; the ſeaſon prove unhealthful, and their lives be ſhortned. On the contrary, if they worſhipped him, the Lord of heaven and earth, and him alone, they ſhould have ſhowers from above; the earth ſhould bring forth abundantly, and they ſhould be bleſſed with healthful ſeaſons, ſound bodies, and long life. For it is the very foundation of the law, (as his phraſe is) to root the forenamed falſe opinion out of the minds of men. More Nevoch. p. 3. cap. 30.

Ver. 24. The Lord ſhall make the rain of thy land powder and duſt. That is, there ſhall be ſuch a long drought, that inſtead of rain, ſhowers of duſt, blown up into the air by wind, ſhould fall down from heaven upon them.

—— From heaven ſhall it come down upon thee, until thou be deſtroyed.] This ſeems to denote ſomething more than the falling of clouds of duſt, wherewith the air was filled by high winds; namely, ſhowers of aſhes which have ſometimes fallen in great quantities, as good hiſtorians teſtify. Nothing is more known than the vaſt clouds of aſhes which mount Ætna hath often thrown out, whereby all the country thereabout hath been laid deſolate. And the like hath been caſt up by Veſuvius, and reached as far as Rome and Conſtantinople. But if there was any ſuch thing in Judæa, it muſt be a miraculous judgment, there being no ſuch mountains in thoſe parts of the world, to make ſuch evomitions.

Ver. 25. The Lord ſhall cauſe thee to be ſmitten before thine enemies, thou ſhalt go out one way againſt them, and flee ſeven ways before them.] Though they marched out in a great body againſt their enemies, God threatens they ſhould ſoon be diſperſed; the hand of the Lord, as well as of their enemies, being againſt them; for that expreſſion is remarkable, the Lord ſhall cauſe thee to be ſmitten. See ver. 7.

—— And ſhalt be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.] This is ſomething more than is threatned, Levit. xxvi. 33. ſignifying not only their diſperſion into the remoteſt parts of the world, but their being toſſed up and down like vagabonds, from one country to another, without any certain ſettlement; which hath been notoriouſly verified ſince their laſt diſperſion by the Romans, of which they themſelves have given us large accounts in ſeveral books, viz. Juchaſin, Schalſcheleth, Hakkabala, Schebet Jehuda, and Zemuch David, wherein they have abundantly confirmed what Tertullian ſaith of them in his time, Diſperſi, palabundi, & cæli, & ſoli ſui extorres vagantur per orbem; that being ſcattered, ſtraggling up and down uncertainly, baniſhed from their own country, they wander about the world, without any king, &c. But this belongs to the time of their firſt captivity, when Nehemiah, i. 8. confeſſes theſe words were fulfilled. See Jerem. ix. 16. Ezek. vi. 8. xii. 14, 15.

Ver. 26. And thy carcaſe ſhall be meat unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beaſts of the earth.] Nothing was accounted a greater calamity among the Jews, than to have their dead bodies lie expoſed, to be buried only in the bowels of birds and beaſts; and therefore Jeremiah threatned this as the utmoſt puniſhment of the king of Judah, xxii. 19. xxxvi. 30. And the Pſalmiſt bewails it as one of the ſevereſt judgments that was befallen them, Pſalm lxxix. 2, 3.

Ver. 27. The Lord will ſmite thee.] Why the Jeruſalem Targum ſhould here, in a particular manner, ſay, the word of the Lord ſhall ſmite thee, we cannot imagine, unleſs it was to ſuggeſt, that he being their conductor out of Egypt, was more eſpecially concerned to puniſh them for their ſhameful ingratitude to their deliverer. See ver. 68.

——— With the botch of Egypt.] Some take this to mean the leproſy, unto which they in that country were ſubject. Others, that boil breaking out with blains, wherewith God ſmote the Egyptians, Exod. ix. 9, &c. for that is called ſchechin, as this is.

——— And with emerods.] The Hebrew word apholim is no where to be met with but here, and 1 Sam. v. 6, 9, 11. and in the reſt of that hiſtory; which, moſt interpreters (and not without reaſon) think, ſignifies thoſe painful tumours in the anus, which ſometimes turn into ulcers. See Bochart in his Hierozoic. lib. 11. cap. 36.

——— And with the ſcab.] The LXX. here tranſlate the Hebrew word garah (as they do alſo Levit. xxi. 20.) ψώρᾳ ἀγρίᾳ, "a raging or malignant ſcab." And the Vulgar adds the word jugis, to ſignify this was no ſmall puniſhment.

——— And the itch.] The Hebrew word cheres ſignifies, as is generally thought, "a dry itch;" which is the moſt troubleſome of all other.

Ver. 28. The Lord ſhall ſmite thee with madneſs, and blindneſs, and aſtoniſhment of heart.] All theſe three relate to the mind: The firſt of them importing ſuch a diſtraction in their thoughts, that they ſhould not know what courſe to take, when they conſulted for their ſafety: The ſecond, ſuch a ſtupidity, that they ſhould not diſcern the true way, but always take the wrong: The third, that amazement and horror which followed thereupon, when they ſaw themſelves ruined by their own fooliſh counſels and mad contrivances. A famous inſtance of which was in the time of Trajan, when they committed ſuch outragious maſſacres, both upon the Greeks and Romans, (as Dion, a very ſober author, relates) in Cyrene and Cyprus (where great numbers of Jews dwelt, after they were driven out of their own country) that the Lord, no doubt, (to uſe the words of Dr. Jackſon on the Creed B. I. cap. 27.) had ſmote them with the madneſs and blindneſs of heart here threatned, that they might thereby provoke that potent emperor's indignation, which otherwiſe would have ſlept, but now purſued them throughout his dominions, not only as enemies, or rebels, but "as noxious creatures to "human ſociety," with a revenge ſuitable to their former outrages. And, indeed, this prediction was verified in their blind credulity, which made them follow every one that pretended to be their Meſſiah; which always brought great calamities upon them, as R. Gedaliah himſelf confeſſes in Schalſheleth Hakkabala; where he mentions no ſmall number of theſe deceivers, and ſhews how many Jews periſhed who followed them. Yet they are but a few, in compariſon of a long catalogue that might be made of thoſe pretended Meſſiahs. See the learned Wagenſeil's confutation of R. Lipman's Carmen Memoriale, p. 233, &c. Unto which we ſhall add only one obſervation more, out of Solomon Ben Virgæ, who ſaith, in ſome places of Germany they were poſſeſſed with ſuch a rabies, or frenzy, that they cut one anothers throats, to avoid the oppreſſion of their enemies; and burnt themſelves and their neighbours in their houſes, ſetting whole cities on fire, and periſhing in the flames. Such was their extreme rage and furious revenge. Many ſtories of the like nature that author tells, in his book, intitled, Schebet Jehuda; where he hath ſixty-four relations of the calamities which befell them in that, and in other countries. But theſe words, we doubt not, were fulfilled before in the firſt deſolation of Jeruſalem, to which they belong. For tho' we have not ſuch particular relations as thoſe now mentioned to illuſtrate them, yet the prophets ſpeak of their being mad, by drinking of the cup of the Lord's fury, Jerem. xxv. 16, 18. and blind, Zephan. i. 17. and aſtoniſhed, Jerem. iv. 9. Ezek. iv. 17.

Ver. 29. And thou ſhalt grope at noon day, as the blind gropeth in darkneſs.] This ſhews, the blindneſs ſpoken of in the foregoing verſe relates to their mind; which was ſo darkened, that in the plaineſt and cleareſt things they miſtook the way and means of their preſervation, Zephan. i. 17.

Ver. 33. The fruit of thy land, and all thy labours ſhall a nation, which thou knoweſt not, eat up.] This was remarkably fulfilled, when Salmaneſer came and diſpoſſeſſed the ten tribes; and when Nebuchadnezzar carried the other two tribes away, and placed other people in their room.

There were many ſtrange people alſo among the Romans, who devoured their labours, before their laſt deſtruction by Titus. And ever ſince, they have been ſubject to depredations of various ſorts; having ſcraped up riches with great care, which have often fallen into the hands of ſtrangers. Particularly in the time of the famous Cruſados, when divers nations marched in great numbers to recover the holy land from infidels, their buſineſs was in their way to rob and ſpoil the Jews, and to make great ſlaughter of them, as both Jewiſh and Chriſtian writers witneſs.

——— And thou ſhalt be only oppreſſed and cruſhed always.] That they ſhould not only ſometimes, in ſome ages, or in ſome one or few kingdoms, but always, in every kingdom whither they removed, (as he ſpeaks, ver. 25.) ſuffer ſuch violence and wrong, as no other people hath done, muſt needs be thought to proceed rather from divine juſtice, than mens inclinations to injuſtice. Which could not but have varied with the diverſity of times and places, and the ſeveral diſpoſitions of parties, among whom they have been diſperſed. And yet the brief enumeration of their particular ſpoils and hard uſage, throughout the moſt civil and beſt governed ſtates of Europe, will abundantly confirm the truth of Moſes's words in this place, "Thou ſhalt "never but ſuffer wrong and violence alway," as our old tranſlation hath it. The ſame is likewiſe obſerved by Wagenſeil, in his confutation of R. Lipman's Carmen Memoriale, p. 241. where he takes notice, that the Jews no ſooner have grown rich, and by degrees become conſiderable in any country, but ſome great calamity hath befallen them. This the attentive conſideration of their hiſtory will juſtify particularly, as he obſerves, in France, Spain, and England; God not ſuffering them to be quite deſtroyed, like the Amalekites, Jebuſites, and Philiſtines, of whom no footſteps remain, but be ſcattered and toſſed about through all Chriſtian countries, (for a teſtimony to the truth of our religion) and there only oppreſſed, cruſhed, and ſqueezed, as Moſes here foretold. One inſtance of which ſevere oppreſſion we cannot forbear to add out of Schebet Jehuda, where R. Solomon Virgæ confeſſes what great miſeries they have been expoſed unto, by perſons pretending to be their Meſſiah, who have drawn the hatred of all nations upon them; particularly in Perſia, he ſaith, they were moſt lamentably handled upon this ſcore, being not only ſtripped of all, but forced to go about like dogs, with a great clog of wood about their necks, which expoſed them to the ſcorn and deriſion of all men: For while ſome threw it behind their backs, others would come and throw it down before their feet; ſome dragging them backwards, and others cruelly beating them with it. This one told him who ſaw it.

Ver. 34. So that thou ſhalt be mad for the ſight of thine eyes which thou ſhalt ſee.] So they were, when their children were taken from them in Portugal. For ſome, being not able to reſcue or diſpatch them, killed themſelves; others, who had better opportunity, drowned their children in wells or ditches. And here in England, one of their learned Rabbins perſwaded 400 of his company, beſieged with him in a ſtrong tower by the furious multitude, to cut their own throats, rather than fall into their enemies hands; himſelf confirming his doctrine, by cutting his wife's throat firſt, then his childrens, and laſtly killing himſelf. And thus in the time of the fore-mentioned Cruſados, the ſoldiers made ſuch dreadful havock of the Jews, as they went along to the Holy Land, that many of them made away with themſelves out of deſpair; as their own authors, R. Gedaliah, and David Ganz, tellus, ad an. 1096.

Ver. 36. And the Lord ſhall bring thee, and thy king which thou ſhalt ſet over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known.] This may ſeem to have been fulfilled literally, only when Jehojachin was carried away captive to Babylon, 2 Kings xxiv. 15. and afterward, Zedekiah xxv. 7. Jerem. xxxix. 7. lii. 11. For when they returned, they had no more any kings. But the latter part of theſe words ("a nation, which neither "thou nor thy fathers have known") may incline us to extend this threatning as far as to their laſt diſperſion by the Romans, ſince which, they have been driven into ſeveral countries, far leſs known to them than Babylon was, (with which which they had correſpondence before their captivity there, 2 Kings xx. 12, &c.) and tho' they have had no king, yet they have ſet over themſelves rulers and governors, who may be comprehended under that name.

Ver. 38. Thou ſhalt carry much ſeed out into the field, and ſhalt gather but little in.] This was fulfilled before they were carried captive to Babylon, when God frequently ſent ſore famine upon them, as we read in the prophet Iſaiah, lii. 19. and Jeremiah xiv. 1, 2, 3, &c. and is often threatned by Ezekiel, among other terrible judgments, and by Jeremiah himſelf, chap. xxix. 17, 18.

——— For the locuſt ſhall conſume it.] They were a great plague in thoſe countries, falling ſometimes in ſuch vaſt numbers, (from whence they had the name of Arbe) that they covered the whole face of the earth, and devoured every green thing: for ſo another of their names imports, which is, chaſil, coming from chaſal, which ſignifies, to conſume and eat up; which they did ſo entirely, that they were looked upon, by all people, as a plague ſent by God; and are therefore called by Joel, his army, chap. ii. 25. And ſo not only the Hebrews, but the Arabians, eſteemed them; who ſay, that ſome of them fell on a time before their prophet Mohammed, as he ſat at meat, with this inſcription on their backs; "I am God, "and there is none other beſide me, the Lord of locuſts, "who nouriſh them; and, when I pleaſe, ſend them forth, "that they may be food for the people; and, when I "pleaſe, that they may be their plague, by eating up their "food." See Bochart, in his Hierozoicon, P. ii. lib. 4. cap. 6.

Ver. 41. Thou ſhalt beget ſons and daughters, but thou ſhalt not enjoy them; for they ſhall go into captivity.] Which is threatened in many places of the prophets, and fulfilled in ſeveral invaſions of their neighbours; for the Syrians, no doubt, carried away captive more than that one little maid, who waited on Naaman's wife, 2 Kings v. 2. and in other inroads upon them, till the captivity of the whole land. This, we may be confident, was a frequent calamity, 2 Kings xiv. 26. xv. 37, &c. But it was never more remarkably fulfilled, than ſince they crucified our bleſſed Saviour; their children having been taken from them, and tranſported ſometimes into other places. And who knows, whether many of their ſtock, detained by king Emanuel of Portugal, have not been tranſported into America? and whether many of the Spaniſh colonies have not a mixture of the Jewiſh progeny in them? as Dr. Jackſon obſerves. Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael, 'tis certain, endeavours to prove (in his book called, Spes Iſraelis) that ſome of the ten tribes are in America; though how they came there, he can give no account.

Ver. 42. All thy trees, and fruit of thy land, ſhall the locuſt conſume.] So Onkelos, and the Hebrew writers, generally tranſlate the word, tzelatzal, which ſignifies a peculiar ſort of locuſts which fall upon trees, as others upon the fields. And it ſeems to have this name, becauſe theſe locuſts come in ſuch thick clouds, that they darken the ſun; the Hebrew word, tzalal, ſignifying, to overſhadow. The Jeruſalem Targum tranſlates it, "All your "trees, and the fruits of your land, ſhall ſpoilers poſ-"ſeſs."

Ver. 49. The Lord ſhall bring a nation againſt thee from far.] This evidently relates to the Romans, as Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael acknowledges; who thinks, that at this verſe begins the prophecy of their calamities under the ſecond temple, as in the foregoing he deſcribes their calamities under the firſt. And in this, we think, he ſaith right, That there is ſcarce any thing mentioned in the following part of this chapter, but what relates to what they ſuffered under the ſecond temple, (as he ſpeaks) and ſince its deſtruction; tho' we cannot ſay, as he doth, of the foregoing part of it, that it was fulfilled in the calamities which befell them under the firſt temple; for many things were never ſo compleatly fulfilled, as ſince they crucified the Lord of life.

——— From the end of the earth.] This ſhews, he ſpeaks of the Romans, rather than of the Chaldeans, who did not come from far, much leſs from the end of the earth; but out of the north country, which was not very diſtant from Judæa: Whereas the Romans, by whom they were laſt deſtroyed, came literally from far, and from the end of the earth; particularly, Julius Severus was called by the emperor Adrian, to their deſtruction, out of this iſland of Britain; wherein Veſpaſian alſo had given great proof of his conduct. And Adrian himſelf, and Trajan, by whom they were ſtill more cruſhed, after Veſpaſian had deſtroyed their city and temple, were both Spaniards by birth: And, therefore, Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael ſays peremptorily, in his book, De termino vitæ, lib. 3 ſect. 3. this is to be underſtood of the ſoldiers in Veſpaſian's army, which he brought out of England, France, and Spain, and other remote parts of the world.

——— As ſwift as the eagle flieth.] Which every one knows the Romans carried in their enſigns. And theſe birds are obſerved to fly upon their prey with great force and violence; to whom, therefore, fierce ſoldiers (ſuch as the Romans were) are compared, when they ſet upon their enemies. So Homer deſcribes Achilles falling upon the Trojans:

Αἰετῷ οἴμαλ' ἔχων.———————

in Iliad Φ, where οἴμαλα ſignifies, ὁρμήματα, furious aſſaults, as the ſcholiaſt interprets it: And ſo the ſame great poet deſcribes Hector, Iliad x. as David alſo repreſents Saul and Jonathan, 2 Sam. i. 23. And the Chaldeans are ſo deſcribed, in their advance againſt Jeruſalem, Jer. iv. 13. xlix. 22. Lament. i. 19. Ezek. xvii. 3. and ſee Dan. vii. 4.

——— A nation, whoſe tongue thou ſhalt not underſtand.] The Roman tongue was more ſtrange to them than the Chaldean, eſpecially the language of many nations, of which the Roman army was compoſed; and being a people whom their anceſtors, perhaps, never heard of. Dr. Jackſon juſtly looks upon the deſtruction and general deſolation of their country, by the Romans, and their tributaries in theſe weſtern parts of the world, as an everlaſting monument of the truth of the Moſaic prophecy in this and in the following verſes.

Ver. 50. A nation.] This word nation being uſed thrice in this and the foregoing verſe, Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael is ſo critical, as to obſerve, that this repetition ſhews, Jeruſalem was to ſuffer thrice by the Roman power; firſt, in the time of Pompey; ſecondly, when Soſius came to the aſſiſtance of Herod, againſt Antigonus; and thirdly, when it was beſieged and overturned by Veſpaſian, and his ſon Titus.

—— Of fierce countenance.] So we tranſlate this phraſe, Dan. viii. 23. which, in the Hebrew, is a ſtrong, or hard face. Accordingly, we tranſlate it impudent, (or, in our language, brazen-faced) Prov. vii. 13. and hard, Prov. xxi. 29. and bold of face, Eccleſ. viii. 1. All which ſet forth a people ſtern, fierce, undaunted, cruel, and hard-hearted; that had neither mercy nor modeſty, but inflexibly purſued their deſigns; which is the true character of the old Romans.

Ver. 52. And he ſhall beſiege thee in all thy gates.] The country being waſted, the Jews fled into their fenced cities, where they had laid up ſome proviſions to enable them to hold out a ſiege.

——Until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou truſtedſt, throughout thy land.] This was literally fulfilled by the Romans, to whom the beſt fortified places were forced to yield, as may be ſeen in Joſephus's hiſtory of the Jewiſh wars, which is the beſt commentary on this part of the prophecy. The walls of Jeruſalem particularly were razed by Pompey; and Soſius took it again by force in the time of Auguſtus. But Tacitus declares, that the Jews took ſuch advantage of the covetouſneſs of Claudius, that they purchaſed of him the liberty to fortify their city again: which they did ſo well, that they truſted, as Moſes here ſpeaks, to its ſtrength; which was ſo great, that Titus could not take it but by a long ſiege, which concluded in its utter ruin.

Ver. 53. And thou ſhalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the fleſh of thy ſons, and of thy daughters, which the Lord thy God hath given thee, in the ſiege, and in the ſtraitneſs wherewith thine enemies ſhall diſtreſs thee.] This was fulfilled to a tittle by Veſpaſian, and his ſon Titus; who, after they had vanquiſhed them in the field, begirt them ſo cloſe in Jeruſalem, that they could not ſtir out, and rather than ſurrender, periſhed by a lamentable famine. For there were vaſt multitudes of people ſhut up in the city, after they had fled thither from all parts for ſafety; who brought the famine ſooner upon them, and made it more more ſevere when it came. If we may believe R. David Ganz, it was furthered alſo by a fire, which the ſeditious people kindled, whereby fourteen hundred magazines were conſumed, ſtored with proviſions to ſerve two hundred thouſand people for twenty years. For this, he quotes Joſephus; tho' no ſuch circumſtance is now to be found in that hiſtorian.

Ver. 54. So that the man that is tender among you, and very delicate.] The two Hebrew words for tender and delicate, ſignify, a man that had lived in pleaſure, and fared daintily, like the rich man in the Goſpel.

——— His eye ſhall be evil toward his brother, and toward the wife of his boſom.] That is, he ſhall grudge every morſel which he ſees his neareſt relations eat, being ready to ſnatch it out of the mouth of his dear conſort and children, and put it into his own; for this is the effect of a ravenous hunger.

——— And toward the remnant of his children which he ſhall leave.] This imports, that they ſhould ſee many of them die in the ſiege; for famine compelled them to feed on bad food, and that bred peſtilential diſeaſes, which ſwept away many; and increaſed ſtill more by the carcaſes of thoſe that were famiſhed. If any credit may be given to one of their own authors, David Ganz, there were above an hundred and ſixteen thouſand dead bodies, of the rich and honourable men of Jeruſalem, carried out of one gate of the city, which was that of the brook Kedron, beſide thoſe which were carried out at other gates, and thrown over the walls: And this he pretends to have out of Minchas, the ſon of Seruk, who was a faithful regiſter in that city. Joſephus mentions almoſt the ſame number, Lib. vii. de Bello Judaico, cap. ult.

Ver. 55. So that he will not give to any of them of the fleſh of his children whom he ſhall eat.] This is a deſcription of the ſharpeſt famine, which forced them, after they had eaten up their horſes, dogs, cats, and ſuch like creatures, and their very belts and ſhoes, to devour even their own children; which fathers, who uſed to live deliciouſly, ſhould, as Moſes propheſies, eat up privately, and let none ſhare with them.

—— Becauſe he hath nothing left him in the ſiege, and in the ſtraitneſs wherewith thine enemies ſhall diſtreſs thee in all thy gates.] They were ſo extremely pinched with famine in a long ſiege, that they had nothing elſe remaining, but their own offſpring, and one another, wherewith to ſatisfy their hunger. Joſephus obſerves, (Lib. vii. de Bello Judaico, cap. 18.) that Jeruſalem had been taken five times before this; but never ſuffered ſo dreadfully as by Titus, whom the Talmudiſts therefore call by the name of Impious; which epithet belonged rather to themſelves, who having with wicked hands, as St. Peter ſpeaks, crucified and ſlain their Redeemer, were, by the juſt judgment of God upon them for their infidelity, hardned into an obſtinate belief and expectation of a deliverer from the Romans, till they were reduced to thoſe extremities.

Ver. 56. The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to ſet the ſole of her foot upon the ground, for delicateneſs and tenderneſs.] This is a deſcription of the greateſt ſoftneſs and delicacy; which the Chaldees expreſs by a word that ſignifies the niceſt motion, and going ſo ſlow a pace, as if they were loth to touch the ground.

——— Her eye ſhall be evil toward the husband of her boſom, and toward her ſon, and toward her daughter.] This is only an higher inſtance of the cruel effects of their diſtreſs by famine: For women, eſpecially of the better ſort, are naturally more tender and compaſſionate than men, and have the moſt paſſionate love to their children; which Moſes here propheſies ſhould be quite extinguiſhed by hunger. And it was literally fulfilled, both in the ſiege of Samaria, wherein a woman boiled her ſon, 2 Kings v. 28, 29. as a man did in the firſt ſiege of Jeruſalem by the Babylonians, Baruch ii. 3. and ſee Lament. ii. 20. iv. 10. But never ſo exactly fulfilled as in the laſt ſiege by the Romans, when a noble woman (which fully anſwers to this prophecy, ſuch perſons being very delicate) did the very ſame, as Joſephus relates in his book of the Jewiſh wars, lib. vii. cap. 8. A moſt unnatural fact, as he obſerves, which was never committed, either by Greek or Barbarian; and which he would not have related, becauſe it might ſeem incredible, if there had not been many witneſſes of it beſide himſelf.

Ver. 57. And toward her young one, that cometh out from between her feet.] Toward her new-born babe, which is wont to be welcomed into the world with great joy; but in this ſiege was diſpatched out of it, to aſſwage the rage of their hunger.

——— And toward her children which ſhe ſhall bear.] That is, the reſt of their children, whoſe cries for food they had no way to ſtop, but by killing them, and making them their own food. So it follows in the next words.

——— For ſhe ſhall eat them for want of all things.] Having nothing elſe left to eat: For they had devoured not only the leather of their girdles, and their ſhoes, and that which covered their ſhields, but the very ſtale dung of oxen, and ſuch things as the moſt ſordid of all living creatures could not eat.

——— Secretly.] It was not done ſecretly for any other reaſon, but leſt any perſon ſhould have a ſhare with them, and ſo make their hunger return the ſooner: And yet it was a hard matter to conceal what they had performed of this kind; for the ſeditious people, preſently ſmelling there had been ſomething boiled, got into the houſe, when a woman had eaten one half of her child, and found the other half, which ſhe had left till another time, and of which ſhe invited them to eat.

——— In the ſiege and ſtraitneſs.] Theſe two words, which are uſed here, and ver. 53, 55. may both relate to the grievous miſeries they ſhould endure, when they were beſieged, (ver. 52.) and may be tranſlated, "in the preſ-"ſure and ſtraits" wherewith thine enemies, &c.

——— Wherewith thine enemy ſhall diſtreſs thee in thy gates.] We have not ſuch an account of their diſtreſs in other cities, as we have of what they ſuffered in Jeruſalem; where ἀπαρθμητος πληθος an innumerable multitude periſhed by famine, as Joſephus tells us, lib. vii. ἁλώσεως cap. 7. and ineffable calamities thereupon happened: For in every houſe, where the leaſt ſhadow of food appeared, a war immediately began; and the deareſt relations fell to blows, ſnatching from each other the miſerable ſupports of life. Nor would they let thoſe who were dying expire quietly, not believing what they affirmed, when they told them they had no food in their houſes; but the cut-throats came and ſearched their very boſoms, as they lay in their laſt agonies, to ſee whether they had not hid ſome food there.

Ver. 59. Then the Lord will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy ſeed, even great plagues, and of long continuance.] Though their great plagues under Veſpaſian, by famine, ſword, and peſtilence, had leſſened their numbers exceedingly, yet by the time of Trajan and Adrian, they had, like traitors taken a while from the rack) to uſe Dr. Jackſon's words) recovered ſtrength enough to be put to greater torture; for then they were made a ſpectacle to the world of the divine vengeance again, which they brought upon themſelves by their rebellion; and ſhewed therein their natural ſtrength, by their grievous lingering pains in dying; for not only in Meſopotamia, and in Cyprus, but eſpecially in Cyrene, and throughout all Egypt, they broke out into ſuch outrages, ὡσπερ ὑπ' ἀνδίμαλος δεινὸς τινος καὶ σασιόδους, as if they had been poſſeſſed with ſome fierce and ſeditious ſpirit (as Euſebius ſpeaks, lib. iv. Eccleſ. hiſt. cap. 2.) whereupon Marcius Turbo was ſent againſt them, and ſetting upon them both by ſea and land with horſe and foot, made a vaſt deſtruction of them. See Dion, lib. lxviii. and Xiphilinus, who deſcribe their ſlaughter to have been ſo great, that now was fulfilled (as the forenamed Dr. Jackſon thinks) what Moſes foretold in this place, "The Lord will make "thy plagues wonderful, great plagues, and of long con-"tinuance." And indeed Euſebius ſaith, in the forenamed place, that Turbo deſtroyed many thouſands of them, πολλαῖς μάχαις ἐν ὀλίγῳ τε χρόνῳ, &c. "In "many battles, and in no ſmall time; the war being "protracted a great while, to compleat their deſtruction." And the application of the prophecy, to this time, may be confirmed by a ſtrange relation which occurs in their own books: For, in the Jeruſalem Talmud, one of their doctors tells us, that when Trajan came upon them with his army, they were reading theſe very words of the law, ver. 49. "The Lord ſhall bring a nation againſt thee from "far, from the ends of the earth," &c. which that emperor underſtanding, (having asked them what they were doing) he cried out, Here is the man, (pointing to himſelf) ſelf) who am come five days ſooner than I intended; and immediately, compaſſing them about with his legions, ſlew them all. Then he went to their wives, and offered them mercy, if they would ſubmit themſelves: But they replied, What thou haſt done to the ground, do to the ſtubble. So he diſpatched them alſo, and ſhed ſo much blood, that it ran into the ſea, as far as Cyprus. At this time, (ſo he concludes his ſtory) the horn of Iſrael was cut off from Iſrael, never to be reſtored into its place, till the Son of David come. This paſſage we find alledged by John Benedictus Carpſovius, out of Maſſec. Sanhedr. in explication of another matter in Schickard's Miſchpat. Hammelek, cap. 3. theor. 10. p. 199.

Ver. 62. And ye ſhall be left few in number, whereas ye were as the ſtars of heaven for multitude.] The multitude of the Jews, killed in the wars, was equal to the number of living men in Iſrael, in the time of king David: For Joſephus ſaith, that in the ſiege of Jeruſalem there were deſtroyed, by peſtilence, famine, and other ways, eleven hundred thouſand; and above ninety thouſand were carried into captivity. For they being come from all countries to keep the paſſover, the whole nation (as his words are, lib. vii. cap. 17. ἀλωσεως) were ſhut up here by a fate, ὥσπερ εἰς εἱρκτὴν, as in a cloſe priſon; or rather driven thither, as Dr. Jackſon ſpeaks, into a ſlaughter-houſe, after they had been foiled by the Romans in the field. And yet after this they recovered ſtrength, as we obſerved before, merely to be more tormented, and miſerably deſtroyed: for in the reign of Adrian, (who ſucceeded the emperor Trajan) they ſhook the Roman empire by their rebellious commotions, as Dion, who lived not long after, relates in his hiſtory, lib. lxix. which provoked Adrian to exerciſe the greater ſeverity upon them in their puniſhments, there being ſlain of them in battles and ſkirmiſhes, five hundred and eighty thouſand, beſide a vaſt number who were conſumed by famine, ſickneſs, and fire, during the time of this lingering war; which Julius Severus, a famous commander, ſent for on purpoſe out of Britain, deſignedly protracted to a great length, not being willing to try it out in the field in one battle, with a deſperate multitude. And now, as Moſes foretold, they were left few in number: for Dion, as if he had intended to expound theſe words, ſaith, that Severus ſo befet and attacked them ſeparately, in ſeveral parties, "that very few of them eſ-"caped; fifty" of their ſtrongeſt fortreſſes being utterly razed, and "nine hundred eighty and five" of their moſt noble and populous towns ſack'd and conſumed by fire, with the ſlaughter of the fore-mentioned number; inſomuch that, as his words are, "all Judæa was in a manner "laid waſte, and left as a deſert." This we may truly call, "the laſt conflict of this nation, with death and de-"ſtruction in their own land;" out of which they were now almoſt totally expelled.

But tho' they were left few in number in Judæa, yet in other countries, where they were diſperſed, they multiplied again, that God's plagues might continue to be multiplied upon them, and this prophecy more perfectly fulfilled; for ſome ages after this, Anno 1009, they had ſo incenſed Chriſtian people againſt them, by bringing the Perſians upon them, who deſtroyed the churches dedicated to our Saviour at Jeruſalem, that it was reſolved by the common conſent of all Chriſtians, that no Jew ſhould live in their territories, but be driven out of them throughout all the world. By which means the greateſt part of them died of ſeveral kinds of deaths, or made away with themſelves; ſo that vix pauci reſidui fierent in orbe Romano, "there re-"mained but a very few of them in the Roman world." They are the words of Glauber, who relates this, lib. 3. cap. 7.

Ver. 63. And it ſhall come to paſs, as the Lord rejoiced over you, to do you good, and to multiply you; ſo the Lord will rejoice over you, to deſtroy you, and to bring you to nought.] The ſtate of the Jews, from the time of Adrian, till the expiration of the Roman empire, cannot be gathered from the Roman writers; but the fathers of the church often mention their miſeries. And ſo do their own authors; particularly the author of Schebet Jehuda, who ſaith. "It is not in the power of man to tell all the "kingdoms and cities where they were ſcattered; in "which they ſuffered things ſo horrid, that it is fitter to "paſs them over in ſilence, than to relate them: But "therein was verified the divine prediction, Lev. xxvi. "38, Ye ſhall periſh among the heathen, and the land of "your enemies ſhall eat you up" And Dr. Jackſon, to explain this, hath more particularly obſerved, that as God raiſed up Cyrus in teſtimony of his rejoicing to do them good, and inſpired that Monarch with a reſolution to releaſe them from their captivity in Babylon; ſo to give the world a proof of his "rejoicing to deſtroy them, and "bring them to nought," he advanced Philip Auguſtus to the crown of France, (about the year 1179,) to defeat all the hopes, which ſome kindneſs ſhewn unto them, had infuſed into their hearts: for he ſtripped their ſynagogues of all their donatives and ornaments; confiſcated all their lands and immoveable goods, and granted a releaſe of all debts due to them from Chriſtians.

——And ye ſhall be plucked from off the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it.] This was wonderfully fulfilled by Adrian; who, after a ſtrange deſolation, before-mentioned, prohibited, by a publick decree ratified with the ſenates conſent, any Jews to come within ſight of Judæa. This he did with a politic view, leſt the ſight of their native ſoil might inſpire them with ſome freſh deſperate reſolutions to endeavour to ſettle themſelves there again; but herein he was unwittingly the angel of God, to keep this wicked race out of that Paradiſe, the good land, out of which he had driven them.

Ver. 64. And the Lord ſhall ſcatter thee among all people.] That was the effect of Adrian's ſevere decree, of not coming within view of their own country, which made them diſperſe all the world over, where they could find any admittance.

——From the one end of the earth, even unto the other.] Such as were carried captive, in Adrian's war, were tranſported by his order into Spain, his own native country, which was then accounted the end of the world weſtward. And many of them, it is evident by their own books, fled to Babylon, and the adjacent country, which was as far as they knew eaſtward. In Spain they continued many years, in great abundance, as it were expecting a wind for their paſſage to ſome place more diſtant from their ancient ſeat. And who knows whether many of them have not, ſince the diſcovery of America, been tranſported thither? Certain it is, that the Jews themſelves are ſenſible this prophecy was not fulfilled, till this their laſt diſperſion, after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans: For thus R. Iſaac, who had occaſion to mention theſe words, (in his Muninem Fidei) gloſſes upon them: "In the Roman captivity, the Jews were diſperſed "and diſſipated through all the regions of the eaſt, and "of the weſt; for every nation, of which the Roman "army conſiſted, when they returned to their own coun-"tries, carried ſome of them along with them into "Greece, Germany, Italy, Spain, France, and all other "countries, which either Chriſtians, or Mohammedans, "now poſſeſs."

——And there thou ſhalt ſerve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and ſtone.] Here Dr. Jackſon recommends it to the readers conſideration, whether this part of the Moſaic prophecy may not be underſtood of the convert Jews throughout the Pope's dominions, who are often urged to commit idolatry with ſtocks and ſtones, upon more tyrannical terms, than their fore-fathers were, either by the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans, Egyptians, Romans, or any whatſoever, that led them captive out of their land.

If it be ſaid, there is a great difference between the heathen idolatry, and the preſent image worſhip in the Roman church; it is granted the idolatry is of a diverſe kind, and ſo it ſeems Moſes meant, when he threatens the Jews, that after their final tranſportation into theſe weſtern countries, they ſhould ſerve ſuch gods as their fathers had not known; for their fore-fathers, before the time of Moſes, and after, had known the heathen gods too well, but were perfect ſtrangers to this image worſhip now in uſe; and to ſtrengthen this interpretation, it ought to be obſerved, that theſe words (which neither thou nor thy fore-fathers have known) are omitted in the 36th verſe of this chapter; where he ſpeaks of their ſerving of other gods of wood and ſtone, as he doth here. But that part of the prophecy belongs to what they did in the firſt captivity in Babylon, as Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael obſerves, who underſtands theſe words to be a prophecy of what they have ſuffered in this laſt diſperſion; for reciting theſe words,

(Lib. iii. de Termino vitæ, ſect. 3. p. 131.) as containing the greateſt calamity that hath befallen them, he declares, This we ſee fulfilled, after a ſingular manner, in this preſent captivity, becauſe of all thoſe evils wherewith the Hebrews have been afflicted in France and England, and Spain; for they had been often preſſed, either to renounce their religion, or to be undone; and many times choſe rather to comply with the idolatrous worſhip in the Roman church, than to be baniſhed, and have their goods confiſcated.

Ver. 65. And among theſe nations ſhalt thou find no reſt.] This was wonderfully fulfilled in the ages which followed that in which Adrian lived, when they both diſturbed others, and could find no reſt themſelves; for in the third century, they raiſed ſedition in the reign of Severus, by whom they ſuffered very much about the year 202, after our Saviour's birth; and in the next century we are informed by St. Chryſoſtom, in his ſecond oration againſt the Jews (Tom. vi. Edit. Savil. p. 333.) That they rebelled again in the time of Conſtantine; who cauſing their ears to be cropped off, diſperſed them καθάπερ τινὰς δραπέτας καὶ μαγίγιας, as vile fugitives and vagabonds, into various countries, where they carried this mark of infamy along with them, that all might be inſtructed to make no more ſuch attempts. But in the fifth century they made new commotions, and were driven out of Alexandria for their ſeditious practices, where they had been ſettled ever ſince the time of Alexander the great, and diſperſed into ſeveral countries, as Socrates obſerves in his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, Lib. vii. cap. 16. And in the next chapter, relates how miſerably they were deluded, by one who pretended to be Moſes come down from heaven to lead them to their own land through the ſea; into which many threw themſelves, and periſhed. That expulſion out of Alexandria is mentioned by David Ganz alſo, one of their own authors. In the ſixth century, as Elmacinus tell us, they again rebelled in Paleſtine againſt the Romans, who ſlew a great number of them. And in the ſeventh, they were expelled from Antioch by Phocas, and out of Jeruſalem by Heraclius, and out of Spain in the year 604, by Siſebutus, or, as ſome call him, Siſebodus, king of the Goths; and they flying in great numbers into France, were ſhortly after put to this hard choice, either to renounce their religion, or loſe all they had; which perſecution Dr. Jackſon obſerves, is recorded by thoſe who wrote the life of Dagobert, as one of the chief memorables of his reign. What their ſtate was in the next three centuries, he ſaith, he had obſerved nothing remarkable; nor can we find any thing notable in the eighth, but the appearance of a falſe Meſſiah, by whom they were deluded, and brought into trouble. And as for the ninth, there were no learned men among them in that age, nor in the chriſtian world. And in the tenth they were in the ſame condition; inſomuch, that they were obliged to make a weaver the head of one of their univerſities.

——— Neither ſhall the ſole of thy foot have reſt.] They being not able to obtain a long ſettlement any where; but were toſſed up and down, and forced from one country to another; for ſo it was, that in the beginning of the eleventh century, about the year of our Lord 1000, they were ſo vexed throughout the moſt part of Europe, that quid agerent, aut quo ſe verterent neſciebant, they knew not what they ſhould do, or which way they ſhould turn themſelves, as the forenamed Doctor obſerves, out of Papirius Maſſonus, who hath it out of Glauber; to which we will add this teſtimony out of David Ganz, in his book called Tzemach David, that in the latter end of this century, anno 1096. when there was a famous expedition for the recovery of the holy land, the Jews felt it a moſt calamitous time (as he ſpeaks) being robbed and pillaged, and killed by the ſoldiers as they went along; and indeed, ſo much cruelty was exerciſed upon them, that it moved St. Bernard's compaſſion, to write to the biſhop, clergy, and people of Spire, not to perſecute them, much leſs kill them, or drive them out of their country; "for they are "diſperſed, faith he, into all lands, that while they ſuffer "the juſt puniſhment of their horrid wickedneſs, they "may be witneſſes of our redemption. Epiſt. 322." And the author of Schebet Juda, mentioning their baniſhment out of Savoy, Piedmont, Lombardy, Sicily, and other countries, quotes theſe very words of Moſes, among thoſe nations thou ſhalt find no reſt, &c. as a prophecy of that exile, which was accompanied with many other miſchiefs: for as they fled to other countries, an immenſe multitude of people fell upon them, and pillaged them of all the gold and ſilver they were carrying away with them.

——— And the Lord ſhall give thee a trembling heart.] They being always in dread of ſome new miſery, their condition ſtill growing more deplorable in the twelfth century; for as there is a progreſs of Moſes's prophecy of the increaſe of their calamities; ſo it proved in the event, that their ſufferings grew greater and greater. They themſelves (in Tzemach David, and other books) relate that in the year 1142. an hundred and twenty of their congregations were utterly ſubverted and diſperſed. And in the year 1170, they were expelled again out of France, and ſpoiled of their Treaſure; and this ſeverity was renewed in the year 1198. How they were uſed here in England, our own chronicles tell us; and the like ill uſage they met withal in Germany and Spain: So that R. Zacut complains of no leſs than ten grievous perſecutions in this one age, to aboliſh the name of Jews out of the world. This could not but give them a very trembling heart.

——— And failing of thine eyes.] Which looked for ſome relief; inſtead whereof they were ſtill more hardly uſed in the thirteenth century, being in the year 1253 again expelled out of France, whither they had returned; and again in 1295, when they expected ſome reſt, there was a freſh expulſion, mentioned by R. Levi Ben Gerſom, who ſaith they were ſpoiled of all their goods, and ſent away only with their cloaths upon their backs; which he affirms with the more confidence, becauſe it was done in his time; when, he ſaith, there was ſuch a number of them, that they exceeded thoſe who came out of Egypt. So he writes in his expoſition of theſe words, Numb. xxiii. 10. who can count the duſt of Jacob? We will forbear to mention how they were treated here in England in the year 1290. and in Germany, into which they flying out of France, were moſt cruelly uſed.

——— And ſorrow of mind.] Which muſt needs ſeize upon them heavily to find their miſeries ſo far from abating, that they ſtill increaſed in the fourteenth century: When they were baniſhed again out of France, and diveſted of their goods 1306. and once more 1395. which the Jews call their fourth and laſt baniſhment. About the ſame time, they were baniſhed out of Germany in the year 1392. In Caſtile, indeed, they redeemed their lives with money (which they could not part with without much ſorrow of mind.) But in Catalonia, Arragon, and other parts of Spain, ſuch a terrible ſtorm fell upon them, that they themſelves in Juchaſin, ſay, no leſs than two hundred thouſand turned chriſtians, with heavy hearts. It would be too tedious to mention all they ſuffered in the fifteenth century in Germany, Hungary, Polonia, and in Italy, Spain, and Portugal. We will only obſerve what befel them in the country laſt named, in the next century, anno 1506, when all that is ſaid in this verſe is fulfilled, by that dreadful maſſacre which was made of them at Lisbon for three days together; where men were not ſuffered to die of their deadly wounds, but were dragged by their mangled limbs into the market place, where the bodies of the living and the ſlain, with others half alive, half dead, were burnt together in heaps. This ſpectacle was ſo horrible, that it quite aſtoniſhed the reſt of this wretched people; two thouſand of whom periſhed in this barbarous manner. Parents durſt not mourn for their children, nor children ſigh for their parents, when they ſaw them dragged to the place of torment; ſo that their hearts, no doubt, were ready to break with grief and ſorrow. In ſhort, ſic eos metus exanimaverat, ut vivi non multum a mortuorum ſimilitudine diſtarent: Fear had ſo diſpirited them, that the living, in their aſpect, did not much differ from the dead; which words of Oſorius, (in his fourth book, De rebus Emanuelis) our Dr. Jackſon, who relates this ſad ſtory out of him, looks upon as a paraphraſe upon theſe words of Moſes, (tho' Oſorius did not think of them) "I will give thee a trembling heart, "and failing of the eyes, and ſorrow of mind."

There are thoſe who, by a trembling heart, underſtand the terrors of an evil conſcience; ſo D. Chytræus, p. 134. and by failing of the eyes, may be underſtood, the conſtant diſappointment of their hopes, wherewith they were ſometimes fed by falſe Meſſiahs in ſeveral ages; which diſapdiſappointment bred great ſorrow of mind, when after earneſt expectation of ſome good, the quite contrary came upon them.

Ver. 66. And thy life ſhall hang in doubt before thee.] That is, it ſhould be doubtful whether they ſhould live or die the next moment, as it manifeſtly happened in the fore-named maſſacre, when they durſt not breathe a ſigh, and yet could hardly avoid it, at the ſight of their parents or childrens tortures, for fear they ſhould ſuffer the ſame before the breath was out of their tortured bodies.

Ver. 67. And in the morning thou ſhalt ſay, would God it were Even.] That they might not ſee thoſe miſerable ſpectacles, which they hoped would end in the night, when men went to reſt.

——— And at even thou ſhalt ſay, would God it were morning.] Being afraid of unſeen dangers, to which the night might give an opportunity; or, that they might not ſee their way, when they fled by ſea and land, from one country to another, as they were forced to do very often: For Abarbinel, in his commentary upon Iſaiah xl. 11. reckons up four univerſal baniſhments, out of the countries where they lived. The firſt, out of England; the ſecond, out of France; the third, out of Aſia, Germany, Tuſcany, Lombardy, and Savoy; and the laſt, out of Spain: when he himſelf was one of thoſe who were conſtrained to leave that country, and knew not whither to go. He hath given us a lively deſcription of that calamity, (like to which he ſaith, none had ever befallen them, ſince they were baniſhed their own country) in his preface to his commentary upon the book of the Kings; which he wrote the very next year after their expulſion, 1493, and the author of Shebet Juda hath tranſcribed in his own words. A decree was made and proclaimed publickly, that all the Jews ſhould either change their religion, or quit the country in three months time. Abarbinel had then a place in the court, where he petitioned the king, and implored his miniſters and counſellors to revoke the edict, and be content with their eſtates, which they offered to him; but all in vain: for three hundred thouſand, old and young, men and women, and he among the reſt, went away on foot upon one day, not knowing whither to go. Some went into Portugal, others to Navar; where they conflicted with many calamities; for ſome became a prey, or periſhed by famine and peſtilence. And therefore others committed themſelves to the ſea, hoping to find a quiet ſeat in ſome other countries. But on the ſea they met with new diſaſters; for many were ſold as ſlaves when they came on any coaſt, many were drowned, many burnt in the ſhips which were ſet on fire: In ſhort, all ſuffered the juſt puniſhment of God the avenger, as he ſpeaks: For, after all this, a plague came and ſwept away the reſt of the miſerable wretches, who were hated by all mankind; ſo that all this vaſt number periſhed by one calamity or other, except a very few. Shebet Juda, ſect. 53. where he ſhews what befel thoſe who went to ſeek new habitations in the kingdom of Fez, where they lived a long time upon graſs, and ate its very roots, and then died, and their bodies lay expoſed, none being ſo charitable as to bury them.

Ver. 68. And the Lord ſhall bring thee into Egypt again.] The Jeruſalem Targum tranſlates it, the word of the Lord ſhall bring thee back again. That is, He, who conducted them out of Egypt in a glorious cloud, would puniſh them for their foul offences againſt him, by bringing them again into bondage there. This was firſt fulfilled after the deſolation made by Titus, when there was, as we obſerved before, ver. 62, above ninety thouſand carried captive, and many of them tranſported into Egypt, as Joſephus relates in the concluſion of the ſixteenth chapter of the ſeventh book, concerning the wars of the Jews. And here Manaſſeh ben Iſrael hath a very pertinent obſervation, namely, that Veſpaſian tranſported them into various regions; but Egypt is only here named, the more to reproach the Jews; as if Moſes had ſaid, ye ſhall be carried into that land as captives, out of which ye came in a triumphant manner, Lib. iii. de Termino vitæ, ſect. 3. which may incline us to think, that he was of the ſame mind with our Dr. Jackſon, who obſerving how cruelly they were uſed here in England, and many other countries, concludes that this iſland, and every place of Europe, wherein their condition of life hath been more hard and burdenſome than was experienced by their fore-fathers in their Egyptian ſervitude, may properly be repreſented as the land of Egypt, unto which God threatens here to bring them in ſhips. And indeed we never read of their being carried into Egypt, after the time of Veſpaſian; tho' that circumſtance is ſet down in the Moſaic text, as a puniſhment to come upon them after a long train of other miſeries; and muſt relate to the rigorous uſage they ſuſtain'd in many countries, and in ſeveral ages down to theſe latter times.

——— With ſhips] which ſeems intended to put them in mind, how different their condition was now become, from what it was when they came out of Egypt without any ſhips; for the ſea gave them a paſſage through it, by being made dry land. Their being carried alſo thither by ſhips, made their condition the more deplorable, becauſe there could then be no poſſibility of their eſcape, as there might have been, if they had gone by land.

——— By the way whereof I ſpake unto thee,] or, to the way (ſo the particle beth often ſignifies, Gen. xi. 4. xvi. 22.) that is, to the place, whereof I ſaid, ye ſhall ſee it no more again: For it ſeems to be a manifeſt alluſion to what we read in the 17th chapter of this book, ver. 16.

——— And there ye ſhall be ſold unto your enemies for bond-men and bond-women.] Ye ſhall there be expoſed to ſale like beaſts in the open market; and for ſo deſpicable a price, that thirty of them (as hiſtorians prophane and eccleſiaſtical relate) were ſold for one ſmall piece of money. Joſephus giving a particular account how the captives were diſpoſed of by Titus, declares, that the moſt amiable young men were reſerved by that emperor to attend his triumph; and as to the reſt, he ordered thoſe above ſeventeen years of age to be ſent in fetters to Egypt, to labour in the works there; many were diſtributed into the provinces to periſh in the theatres by the ſword and wild beaſts; and all under ſeventeen years old were commanded to be ſold. But while they were making this diſtribution, twelve thouſand of them died by famine; partly by the hatred of their guards, who neglected to ſupply them with food; and partly by the weakneſs of great numbers of that unhappy people, whoſe ſtomachs could not receive it, Lib. vii. cap. 16. By which a judgment may be formed of the contemptible opinion that was entertained of theſe poor wretches agreeable to what follows in the ſacred text. In after times, as we have already obſerved in the courſe of this commentary, they were ſold for ſlaves in ſome places, and in all uſed as no better. Benjamin Tudalenſis, who went on pilgrimage to viſit his countrymen, repreſents their condition as moſt deplorable throughout the eaſtern empire; and particularly complains of their hard uſage among the Greeks at Conſtantinople; within the walls of which city they were not ſuffered to live, nor to come thither, but on occaſion of traffic and other buſineſs; and that only by boats, (for they had their habitation in a kind of Iſland,) not a man being permitted to go on horſeback, except only one Solyman the emperor's phyſician, whoſe advancement was their ſole comfort in that miſerable ſervitude, under which the reſt groaned, without any difference of good or bad, (as he acknowledges) ſince they all were daily beaten and abuſed promiſcuouſly in the open ſtreets. Thus he confeſſes, though his principal deſign was to ſet forth the power they retained in the world. Itinerarium, p. 27, 28. Edit. L' Empereur.

——— And no man ſhall buy you,] Though ſome, as we ſaid before, were ſold at a very vile rate; yet others hung upon the ſellers hands, (as we ſpeak,) the market being either ſo over ſtocked with their numbers, that none would cheapen the greateſt part of them, or they were ſo contemptible, that no body would give what was asked for ſuch uſeleſs ſlaves; for as no money could purchaſe their peace and ſecurity from calamities, ſo neither could their calamities, though continually moſt grievous, redeem their eſtimation in the world; nor all the blood of their ſlain (though their maſſacres were numberleſs) extinguiſh that hateful and loathſome conceit, which moſt men had entertained of them. For in the fifteenth century they were become ſo abominable, that ſeveral doctors began to hold it unlawful for chriſtians to let them live among them. Particularly the famous Thomas Terrecremata, inquiſitor-general, prohibited all men from having any dealing with them, or to afford them a neceſſary ſuſtenance or any other accommodation. Hence proceeded thoſe diſmal proſcriptions we read of in that age, whereby they were forced out of Spain, Poland, Hungary, and ſeveral other countries; where they were not ſuffered to live, even with a note and character upon them to diſtinguiſh them from all other men.

We conclude our obſervations on this chapter with the remark made by Dr. Jackſon, namely, that the extraordinary bleſſings and plagues which were to overtake this people, being here ſet down by Moſes; though their bleſſings might have been more, than the curſes that have befallen them, yet their great legiſlator either foreſeeing, or fearing what would be the event, rather than hoping the beſt that might be, is almoſt four times as long in enumerating their plagues, as he is in ſpecifying their bleſſings. The miſeries of the latter Jews have accordingly been four times as long, as the proſperity of their worthy anceſtors. And ſince their impious crucifixion of our bleſſed Saviour, all the plagues which were in part fulfilled before, have been more than ſeven times multiplied upon them: For in their former overthrows or captivities, though they ſuffered the violence of war, yet when that ſtorm was calmed, if they did but ſubmit to their conquerors, they were permitted to live in a comfortable manner, and uſually treated with more than ordinary favour by their conquerors: But ſince the death they inflicted on the Meſſiah, they have through all ages been more and more miſerable; the memory of the foregoing plagues having been but an invitation to the like, or worſe; and their continual bad uſage preſcribing the lawfulneſs of thoſe abuſes they themſelves ſuſtained.

CHAP. XXIX.

2 Moſes exhorteth them to obedience, by the memory of the works they have ſeen. 10 All are preſented before the Lord to enter into his covenant. 18 The great wrath on him that flattereth himſelf in his wickedneſs. 29 Secret things belong unto God.

THESE are the words of the covenant which the LORD commanded Moſes to make with the children of Iſrael, in the land of Moab, beſide the covenant which he made with them in Horeb.

2 ¶ And Moſes called unto all Iſrael, and ſaid unto them, Ye have ſeen all that the LORD did before your eyes in the land of Egypt, unto Pharaoh, and unto all his ſervants, and unto all his land;

3 The great temptations which thine eyes have ſeen, the ſigns, and thoſe great miracles:

4 Yet the LORD hath not given you an heart to perceive, and eyes to ſee, and ears to hear, unto this day.

5 And I have led you forty years in the wilderneſs: your clothes are not waxen old upon you, and thy ſhoe is not waxen old upon thy foot.

6 Ye have not eaten bread, neither have you drunk wine, or ſtrong drink: that ye might know that I am the LORD your God.

7 And when ye came unto this place, Sihon the king of Heſhbon, and Og the king of Baſhan, came out againſt us unto battle, and we ſmote them.

8 And we took their land, and gave it for an inheritance unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half-tribe of Manaſſeh.

9 Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may proſper in all that ye do.

10 ¶ Ye ſtand this day all of you before the LORD your God; your captains of your tribes, your elders, and your officers, with all the men of Iſrael,

11 Your little ones, your wives, and thy ſtranger that is in thy camp, from the hewer of thy wood, unto the drawer of thy water:

12 That thou ſhouldſt enter into covenant with the LORD thy God, and into his oath, which the LORD thy God maketh with thee this day:

13 That he may eſtabliſh thee to day for a people unto himſelf, and that he may be unto thee a God, as he hath ſaid unto thee, and as he hath ſworn unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob.

14 Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath;

15 But with him that ſtandeth here with us this day before the LORD our God, and alſo with him that is not here with us this day:

16 (For ye know how we have dwelt in the land of Egypt, and how we came through the nations which ye paſſed by.

17 And ye have ſeen their abominations, and their idols, wood and ſtone, ſilver and gold, which were among them)

18 Leſt there ſhould be among you man or woman, or family, or tribe, whoſe heart turneth away this day from the LORD our God, to go and ſerve the gods of theſe nations; leſt there ſhould be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood,

19 And it come to paſs when he heareth the words of this curſe, that he bleſs himſelf in his heart, ſaying, I ſhall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine heart, to add drunkenneſs to thirſt:

20 The LORD will not ſpare him, but then the anger of the LORD, and his jealouſy ſhall ſmoke againſt that man, and all the curſes that are written in this book ſhall lie upon him, and the LORD ſhall blot out his name from under heaven.

21 And the LORD ſhall ſeparate him unto evil, out of all the tribes of Iſrael, according to all the curſes of the covenant, that are written in this book of the law:

22 So that the generation to come of your children that ſhall riſe up after you, and the ſtranger that ſhall come from a far land, ſhall ſay, when they ſee the plagues of

of that land, and the ſickneſſes which the LORD hath laid upon it;

23 And that the whole land thereof is brimſtone, and ſalt, and burning, that it is not ſown, nor beareth, nor any graſs groweth therein, like the overthrow of Sodom, and Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim, which the LORD overthrew in his anger: and in his wrath:

24 Even all nations ſhall ſay, Wherefore hath the LORD done thus unto this land? what meaneth the heat of this great anger?

25 Then men ſhall ſay, Becauſe they have forſaken the covenant of the LORD God of their fathers, which he made with them when he brought them forth out of the land of Egypt.

26 For they went and ſerved other gods, and worſhipped them, gods whom they knew not, and whom he had not given unto them.

27 And the anger of the LORD was kindled againſt this land, to bring upon it all the curſes that are written in this book.

28 And the LORD rooted them out of their land in anger, and in wrath, and in great indignation, and caſt them into another land, as it is this day.

29 The ſecret things belong unto the LORD our God: but thoſe things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.

Ver. 1. Theſe are the words of the covenant.] The Talmudiſts in the Gemara of Sota, cap. 7. ſect. 24. refer theſe words to the benedictions and curſings mentioned in the foregoing chapter; which plainly belong to what God delivered to Moſes on mount Sinai at the firſt, and which he had now repeated in this book, with the addition of ſeveral bleſſings and curſes, to render what he ſaid the more effectual.

—— Which the Lord commanded Moſes to make.] That is, to renew; for which end, Moſes repeated the principal laws of God, and explained them in this book, which is from thence called Deuteronomy; being a compendium of the pentateuch, and a breviary of the covenant, compoſed for the familiar and daily uſe of the children of Iſrael.

—— Beſide the covenant which he made with them in Horeb.] This doth not ſignify that God made a covenant with them different from the former at Horeb, Exod. xxiv. but only that he now renewed the ſame, after they had ſhamefully violated it more than once, which was the more neceſſary, becauſe they were ready to enter into the land of Canaan, and Moſes was juſt upon his departure from them into another world; for which reaſon he was as ſedulous as poſſible to engage them in a more firm obedience to the divine Majeſty; and for that end, he gave them a more ample explanation of ſeveral laws, with the addition of other precepts, and at large laid before them the happineſs or miſery that would be conſequential to their fidelity or falſeneſs in this covenant.

Ver. 2. And Moſes called unto all Iſrael, and ſaid unto them, ye have ſeen all that the Lord did before your eyes in the land of Egypt, &c.] Some of them had ſeen, when they were young, and others had underſtood from them (which is here called ſeeing) all the plagues which God brought upon Pharaoh and his court, and likewiſe upon his whole country. Of this they had often been reminded by Moſes, in his preface to the repetition of his laws, (vi. 12. vii. 18, 19. xi. 3, 4.) and repreſents their apoſtacy from God, who had wrought ſo many wonders for their welfare, as an unpardonable aggravation of their guilt, xiii. 5, 10. and now he concludes with the ſame argument, as moſt powerful to move them, if they had any ſenſe of their obligations to their greateſt benefactor.

Ver. 4. Yet the Lord hath not given you an heart to perceive, and eyes to ſee, and ears to hear unto this day.] This verſe comes in by way of correction or exception to the foregoing clauſe in this manner, I ſaid indeed, ye have ſeen, &c. but I muſt recall thoſe words, for in reality, you have not ſeen them; in ſeeing you have not ſeen, and perceiving you not perceived them; you indeed have perceived and ſeen them with your bodily eyes, but not with thoſe of your minds and hearts; you have not ſeen them to any purpoſe; you have not yet learned rightly to underſtand the word and works of God, ſo as to know them for your good, and to make a right uſe of them, and to comply with them; which Moſes expreſſeth thus, the Lord hath not given you, &c. not to excuſe their wickedneſs, but partly to direct them in the conduct incumbent on them to purſue, and to whom they ought to have recourſe for the reformation of their paſt errors, and for obtaining a good underſtanding, and making a due improvement of God's works, and partly to aggravate their ſin, and to intimate, that although the hearing ear, and the ſeeing eye, and the underſtanding heart, be the workmanſhip of God, Prov. xx. 12. and the effects of his ſpecial grace, Deut. xxx 6. Jer. xxxi. 33. xxxii. 39, &c. yet their want of this grace was their own fault, and the juſt puniſhment of their former ſins; their preſent caſe being like theirs who firſt ſhut their eyes and ears, that they might not ſee and hear, and would not underſtand, and then by the tremendous, but righteous judgment of God, had their hearts made fat, and their eyes and ears cloſed that they ſhould not be able to ſee and hear, and underſtand, as is manifeſt from the hiſtory of their carriage in the wilderneſs.

What the difference is between an heart to perceive, and eyes to ſee, and ears to hear, need not be curiouſly enquired. They are perhaps but three various expreſſions of their groſs ſtupidity, or three degrees of it, which was ſo great, that they had no continued ſenſe of the wonderful works God had accompliſhed in their favour, nor did ſo much as regard and obſerve them; no, nor hearken to thoſe who reminded them of their obligations to their divine benefactor. This inſenſibility muſt not be imputed to any want of efficacy in theſe conſiderations to move them, much leſs of the divine grace to work upon their hearts by them, but was wholly to be aſcribed to their voluntary negligence and perverſeneſs, of which God here complains, and as a puniſhment for which he ſeverely upbraids them, that he had not given them this grace; which is a clear demonſtration the fault was in themſelves. And therefore Maimonides rightly and judiciouſly explains theſe words, when he ſaith, the meaning is, they had not diſpoſed themſelves to receive this grace from God.

Ver. 5. —— —— Your cloaths are not waxen old upon you, and thy ſhoe is not waxen old upon thy foot.] The Jews uſed no ſhoes in Egypt, as Bochart probably conjectures, but when they were about to take a long journey, through a rough way in the wilderneſs, God commanded them to eat the paſſover with ſhoes on their feet, Exod. xii. 11. and theſe very ſhoes which they put on at that feſtival, when they were ready to march, God ſuffered not to decay in all their travels for forty years following.

Ver. 10. Ye ſtand this day all of you before the Lord your God.] The ſummons which Moſes ſent out, (ver. 2.) it ſeems by this, was for their appearing at the tabernacle, where they now ſtood; and from whence he delivered theſe words to them, by the prieſts and Levites, xxvii. 9, 14.

Ver. 12. That thou ſhouldeſt enter into covenant with the Lord thy God.] In the Hebrew, the words are, paſs into covenant. For covenants were anciently made in the eaſtern countries, by dividing the ſacrifice, and paſſing between the parts of it; as appears from the manner of God's making a covenant with Abraham in Gen. xv. 10, 17. whence ſome derive the Hebrew word Berith (which imports a covenant) from Bara, which ſignifies cutting off; becauſe ſomething was always ſacrificed at the making covenants, and anciently cut in pieces; for the ſame reaſon, the Romans called a covenant Fædus, which they derive a feriendo, from ſtriking, that is, killing ſome beaſt, particularly a ſwine, which was performed with various ceremonies.

——— And into his oath.] The Hebrew word, which we tranſlate oath, rather imports a curſe, which was annexed to an oath. And ſo the LXX ἐν ταῖς ἀραῖς; for they entered into this covenant with ſuch imprecations upon themſelves, as are mentioned xxvii 15, 16, &c. wiſhing, perhaps, that they might be cut in pieces, as the ſacrifice was (between whoſe parts they paſſed) if they did not faithfully perform their engagement.

——— Which the Lord thy God maketh with thee this day.] For the covenant was mutual, as appears by the burning lamp, repreſenting the divine Majeſty paſſing through the pieces of the ſacrifice, when God entered into a covenant with Abraham, Gen. xv. 17.

Ver. 14. Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath.] He means thoſe mentioned, ver. 10, 11.

Ver. 15. But with him that ſtandeth here with us this day, before the Lord our God, and alſo with him that is not here, &c.] We think the particle ki (which begins this verſe) ſhould not be tranſlated but; for this is the ſame with what was ſaid before, not diſtinct from it; and therefore ſhould be tranſlated thus, as with him that ſtandeth here with us before, that is not here with us this day, i. e. with all that were abſent from the preſent aſſembly, and with all future poſterity, who were as yet unborn. So the Jeruſalem Targum underſtands the latter part of this verſe, with all generations which ſhall be after us, as if they ſtood here with us to day; and ſo Uzielides, as they call him, with all generations to come, unto the end of the world, as if they ſtood here with us at preſent. For perpetual leagues are ſometimes made between whole nations; for whom ſome particular perſons contract in the name and place of all the reſt, and bind not only themſelves, but their ſucceſſors. And thus kings beſtow fiefs to their ſubjects, upon conditions which their families are bound to perform in after ages, or elſe loſe the benefit of them.

Ver. 18. Leſt there ſhould be among you man, or woman, or family, or tribe.] Theſe words are to be connected with ver. 15. as the principal end, why Moſes engaged every individual of the Iſraelites to renew their covenant with God; namely, that none of them might revolt from him, to ſerve any other god. And the order wherein he places theſe words, ſhews that idolatry is of a very infectious nature, diffuſing it ſelf ſtrangely, from ſingle perſons into entire families, and at laſt into whole tribes.

——— Leſt there ſhould be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood.] Several commentators are of opinion that the word root ſignifies, in this paſſage, an evil principle, which the Apoſtle calls, an evil heart of unbelief, Heb. iii. 12. But the preceding words in this verſe, and thoſe which follow in the next, plainly lead us to expound it of any idolatrous perſon lurking ſecretly among them, (like a root under ground) and who might poiſon others with that malignant crime, ſo as in time to bring forth the fruits of their impiety, which Moſes calls, gall and wormwood. Where it muſt be obſerved, that the Hebrew word Roſch, which we tranſlate gall, properly ſignifies an herb growing among corn as bitter as gall. Which in Hoſea x. 4. we tranſlate, hemlock; and commonly, in Scripture, is joined with wormwood, as it is here. Unto which, idolatry is compared, becauſe it is moſt odious and diſtaſteful to God, and produces bitter effects, by the dreadful puniſhments it draws down upon men.

Ver. 19. And it come to paſs when he heareth the words of this curſe.] Againſt idolatry, which Moſes engaged every one of them to renounce, by making a ſolemn covenant with God to worſhip him alone, and uttering dreadful imprecations upon themſelves, if they did not make good this covenant, ver. 12, 14, 15, 16. chap. xxvii. 15.

——— That he bleſs himſelf in his heart, ſaying, I ſhall have peace, tho' I walk in the imagination of mine heart.] Or, in the ſtubbornneſs of my heart, as it is in the margin of our Bibles, that is, tho' I reſolve to worſhip what God I beſt fancy.

——— To add drunkenneſs to thirſt.] In the Hebrew the words are, as the margin obſerves, "the drunken to "the thirſty;" for both words are adjectives; and ſuppoſing a ſubſtantive to ſupport them, many think none ſo proper to be underſtood, as the word earth. Which makes this a proverbial ſpeech, "to add the wet ground to the "dry and thirſty, or rather, the thirſty to the wet." For the particle Beth, which in the Hebrew is the note of the accuſative caſe, is put before the word dry or thirſty; and therefore that's the thing which is to be added to the wet or drunken; not the drunken to the dry. And the ſenſe is, "draw others into the ſame wickedneſs;" juſt as if a drunken man ſhould prevail upon ſober perſons to play the fool with him, and act as indecently as himſelf; or, after one piece of land is overflowed, the water ſhould be let into that which is dry, and ſpoil that alſo. For this ſeems to be the meaning of the whole verſe, if a man ſhall be ſo preſumptuous, as not only to cry peace to himſelf, when he runs after his own devices, in ſerving other gods, but endeavours to draw others into the ſame wicked practices.

There are many other interpretations of theſe words (ſeven or eight) given by the Hebrew doctors, and ſeveral Chriſtian writers; which may be ſeen in Coccejus, in his Ultima Moſis, ſect. 134. But this ſeems to be the moſt eaſy, at which the Chaldee, and the LXX. aim, if the particle μὴ be omitted, which is not in the Hebrew, or the Chaldee, nor the Vulgar Latin. And if we take the words as we tranſlate them, (only inverting them) add thirſt unto drunkenneſs, the ſenſe is as eaſy, viz. add more ſins to the foregoing, Iſa. xxx. 1. and to be ſtill inflamed, as the ſcripture ſpeaks, with love to more idols, after the ſervice of many of them; "increaſing their al-"tars," as Hoſea ſpeaks, "like heaps in the furrows of "the field," Hoſea x. 1. xii. 11.

Dr. Jackſon, in his firſt book upon the Creed, ch. xxx. paragr. iv. thinks the meaning is, that poſterity added to the wickedneſs of their anceſtors. For they being caſt out of their good land for their infidelity and diſobedience, their poſterity, ſaith he, continue exiles and vagabonds for their ſtubbornneſs in like practices; not being willing, to this day, to offer up the ſacrifice of a contrite heart for their diſobedience paſt, but rather ("adding thirſt to "drunkenneſs) bleſs themſelves when they hear the words "of that curſe, promiſing peace to themſelves, tho' they "walk on according to the ſtubbornneſs of their fore-"fathers hearts."

Ver. 22. So that the generations to come of your children, that ſhall riſe up after you, and the ſtranger that ſhall come from a far land, ſhall ſay, when they ſee the plagues of that land.] This ſhews that theſe threatnings are denounced not meerly againſt a ſimple idolater, but ſuch an one as made it his endeavour to draw others from the worſhip of God; not being content to be drunk himſelf with heatheniſh ſuperſtition, but zealous to intoxicate as many as he could with it, and to root true religion out of the nation.

Ver. 23. And that the whole land is brimſtone, and ſalt, and burning.] Or, as it may be tranſlated, "Is burnt "up with brimſtone and ſalt." For, theſe make land barren and unfruitful, as Pliny particularly obſerves of ſalt, lib. xxx. cap. 7. Omnis locus in quo reperitur ſal, ſterilis eſt, nihilque gignit. All ground, in which ſalt is found, is barren, and produceth nothing. See Judges ix. 45. Pſalm cvii. 34. Jerem. xvii. 6. Ezek. xlvii. 11. Zeph. ii. 9.

Ver. 24. Even all nations ſhall ſay.] All that were near them, or came that way from far countries; as it goes before, ver. 22.

———Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this land?] Which he formerly made ſo populous and fertile.

———And what meaneth the heat of this great anger?] Theſe exceeding dreadful calamities, which evidently proceeded from a divine vengeance. For the Jews fought ſo valiantly, and defended Jeruſalem ſo reſolutely, (as appears by Joſephus) that the author of Schebet Juda had reaſon to ſay, it was not want of arms, or the unuſual terror of new machines, but the anger of God, provoked by their wickedneſs, which was the true and only cauſe of their deſtruction. And indeed Titus himſelf ſaid as much, That God fought for the Romans, and drove the Jews from their fortifications, Ἐπεὶ χεῖρες τὲ ἀνθρώπων, ἢ μηχαναὶ, "For what could the hands of men or machines "have done againſt ſuch ſtrong towers," chap. xxxii. 22.

Ver. 25. Then men ſhall ſay, becauſe they have forſaken the covenant of the Lord God of their fathers, which he made with them, when he brought them forth out of the land of Egypt.] This account muſt be ſuppoſed to be given by the pious Jews, or by thoſe who were made ſenſible when it was too late, how ſtedfaſt God was in his covenant; which contained curſes as well as bleſſings, ſee chap. vii. 9, 10. xi. 26, 27, 28.

Ver. 28. And the Lord rooted them out of their land in anger and wrath, and in great indignation.] Here is one word more to expreſs the divine diſpleaſure againſt them, than was uſed before, when mention is made of the deſtruction of Sodom, &c. ver. 23. And they all denote the great plagues threatened in Levit. xxvi. and in the foregoing chapter of this book.

——— And caſt them into another land, as it is this day.] This may ſeem to relate only to their captivity in Babylon; for after they were rooted out by the Romans, they were ſcattered into all lands, chap. xxviii. 63, 64. But conſidering what goes before, ver. 23, 24. and that they were not quite rooted out, many of them remaining in the land when Nebuchadnezzar conquer'd them, till the deſolation made by the Romans, we think theſe words relate to them alſo; and another land is only the ſingular number, as is uſual, for the plural. And ſo the author of Schebet Juda underſtood it, who, quoting theſe words [caſt them out into another land] adds, which experience now proves to be true.

Ver. 29. The ſecret things belong unto the Lord our God; but thoſe things that are revealed belong unto us, and to our children for ever, &c.] The Jews generally take theſe words to be meant of the puniſhment of ſecret ſins, particularly of idolatry, ſpoken of before, ver. 19. which belongeth unto God, as the puniſhment of open ſins belonged unto them, in obedience to his law, who commanded them to put to death him who ſeduced any perſon to idolatry, and to raze the city that apoſtatiſed unto it, ch. xiii. 5, 6, &c. 12, 13, &c. and their negligence, in doing their duty in this particular, made idolatry ſpread among them to their utter ruin. But theſe words may be underſtood as a farther anſwer to ſuch enquiries, as that mentioned, ver. 24 in which if men perſiſted, and ſtill asked, But why doth God puniſh his own people with ſuch unuſual ſeverity, when there are many idolatrous nations, far worſe than they, who continue ſtill in their own land, and are not thus rooted out? Moſes bids them ſilence ſuch demands, and reſt ſatisfied in this, that we cannot give an account of ſuch things, as God hath not revealed, particularly why he puniſhes ſome people, when he ſpares others who are as bad; but muſt mind our own duty, when he hath plainly revealed it unto us, that is, (as Moſes concludes this chapter) to do after all his commandments which he hath given us in his law, believing he will greatly reward the obedient, and terribly puniſh, one time or other, all thoſe who tranſgreſs it.

There may be alſo a more obvious ſenſe of theſe words, if we tranſlate them as ſome great men have done, The ſecrets of the Lord our God are revealed to us, and to our children. Thus Onkelos, whoſe judgment is very valuable; which Grotius follows, and before him Forſterus and Paulus Fagius repreſent it as a commodious ſenſe, and make it the ſame with the words of the Pſalmiſt, cxlvii. 20. "He hath not dealt ſo with any nation," &c. For this was a peculiar favour to the Jews, that thoſe things, which God before kept ſecret in his own breaſt, he now manifeſted to them, that they might know how to order their lives ſo, as to pleaſe him. But this made them liable to be puniſhed more grievouſly than all other people, if they did not obſerve his will, which he moſt graciouſly diſcover'd to them. And if we could give any credit to the Jews, who ſay, that all words in the Bible, that have extraordinary points upon them, (of which there are but ten in the Pentateuch, and theſe words, lanu ule benu, to us and our children, are the laſt of them) denote ſomething peculiar and extraordinary, 'tis very probable, that they relate to the revelation to be made by Jeſus Chriſt, the great prophet promiſed to them, chap. xviii. unto which if they did not give heed, the moſt dreadful puniſhments would be inflicted on them; as we ſee they have been for many ages, and are not yet ended.

CHAP. XXX.

1 Great mercies promiſed unto the repentant. 11 The commandment is manifeſt. 15 Death and life are ſet before them.

AND it ſhall come to paſs when all theſe things are come upon thee, the bleſſing and the curſe, which I have ſet before thee, and thou ſhalt call them to mind among all the nations, whither the LORD thy God hath driven thee,

2 And ſhalt return unto the LORD thy God, and ſhalt obey his voice according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thine heart and with all thy ſoul:

3 That then the LORD thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compaſſion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations, whither the LORD thy God hath ſcattered thee.

4 If any of thine be driven out unto the outmoſt parts of heaven, from thence will the LORD thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee.

5 And the LORD thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers poſſeſſed, and thou ſhalt poſſeſs it: and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers.

6 And the LORD thy God will circumciſe thine heart, and the heart of thy ſeed, to love the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoul, that thou mayſt live.

7 And the LORD thy God will put all theſe curſes upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, which perſecuted thee.

8 And thou ſhalt return and obey the voice of the LORD, and do all his commandments which I command thee this day.

9 And the LORD thy God will make thee plenteous in every work of thine hand, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy land, for good: for the LORD will again rejoyce over thee for good, as he rejoyced over thy fathers:

10 If thou ſhalt hearken unto the voice of the LORD thy God, to keep his commandments and his ſtatutes, which are written in this book of the law, and if thou turn unto the LORD thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoul.

11 ¶ For this commandment which I command thee this day, it is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off.

12 It is not in heaven, that thou ſhouldſt ſay, Who ſhall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?

13 Neither is it beyond the ſea, that thou ſhould ſay, Who ſhall go over the ſea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?

14 But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayſt do it.

15 ¶ See, I have ſet before thee this day life and good, and death and evil:

16 In that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments and his ſtatutes and his judgments, that thou mayſt live and multiply: and the LORD thy God ſhall bleſs thee in the land whither thou goeſt to poſſeſs it.

17 But if thine heart turn away, ſo that thou wilt not hear, but ſhalt be drawn away, and worſhip other gods, and ſerve them:

18 I denounce unto you this day, that ye ſhall ſurely periſh, and that ye ſhall not prolong your days upon the land, whither thou paſſeſt over Jordan, to go to poſſeſs it.

19 I call heaven and earth to record this day againſt you, that I have ſet before you life and death, bleſſing and curſing: therefore chuſe life, that both thou and thy ſeed may live:

20 That thou mayſt love the LORD thy God, and that thou mayſt obey his voice, and that thou mayſt cleave unto him (for he is thy life, and the length of thy days) that thou mayſt dwell in the land which the LORD ſware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob, to give them.

Ver. 1. And it ſhall come to paſs, when all theſe things are come upon thee, the bleſſing and the curſe which I have ſet before thee.] God at the firſt beſtowed great and ſingular bleſſings upon them; but when they grew ſo inſenſible of his mercy, as to violate the covenant he had made with them, then he ſent his curſes, which he had threatned, upon them; which were compleated in their expulſion out of the good land which he had given them, eſpecially in their laſt expulſion by the Romans, which was rather an extirpation.

—— And thou ſhalt call them to mind.] In the Hebrew, bring back to thy heart, as we obſerve in the margin, 1 Kings viii. 47. where there is the very ſame phraſe, and there tranſlated, ſhall bethink thyſelf, that is, reflect ſeriouſly both upon the bleſſings and curſes, and conſequently conſider the truth of God in fulfilling both. In which conſideration, repentance and converſion to God begin. See Ezek xviii. 28.

——— Among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee.] Where they could not chuſe but often think of all the bleſſings they had enjoyed in their own land, and might have ſtill enjoyed, if they had not been diſobedient; and of all the curſes which had befallen them, till they were driven from thence, and which had purſued them ever ſince. See Levit. xxvi. 40, &c. Deut. iv. 29, 30, &c.

Ver. 2. And ſhall return unto the Lord thy God, and ſhall obey his voice, according to all that I command thee this day, thou and thy children, with all thine heart, and with all thy ſoul.] Repentance was compleated by forſaking their idols, and returning to the worſhip of the Lord their God alone, and by obeying all the reſt of his commands, and teaching their children to do the ſame; and all this with ſincerity of heart. This they did in ſome meaſure, after they were carried captive to Babylon; ſince which time we read nothing of their idolatry. But they fell into other ſins, which ſtopped their ears to that great prophet, the Lord Chriſt, when he came to them; for which they are puniſhed to this day, and will be till they repent and obey him.

Ver. 3. Then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity.] That is, bring thoſe who were carried captive back again to their own land. Thus the word captivity is uſed, Pſalm xiv. 7. Epheſ. iv. 8.

—— And have compaſſion upon thee, and will return and gather thee, from all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath ſcattered thee.] This was fulfilled in part, when they returned from Babylon; for then they who were ſcattered into other countries, flocked again to them; and will be more compleatly fulfilled, when they ſhall believe on our bleſſed Saviour.

Ver. 4. And if any of thine be driven out unto the uttermoſt parts of Heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee.] Unto this promiſe Nehemiah plainly alludes, in his prayer to God, to proſper his endeavours for the reſtoration of Jeruſalem, Nehem. i. 8, 9. And finding the truth of it confirmed by the kings gracious conceſſion to him, he went about the work, though one, who was accounted a prophet, (nay ſeveral of the like quality) diſſuaded him from the enterprize, as likely to prove dangerous to his perſon, vi. 10, 11, 12, &c. Ezra alſo tells us, how Cyrus made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, which was very large, that all the Jews might return if they pleaſed into their own country, Ezra i. 1, 4. And ſee Zachariah vii. 7, 8. And though in their laſt diſperſion by the Romans, they be far more ſcattered, and into more diſtant regions than they were in the Babylonian captivity, (according to what Moſes had threatened xxviii. 64. of this book,) yet if they did now conſider the cauſe of it, and lay to heart their ſin in crucifying the Lord Chriſt, no doubt God would have compaſſion on them, and wonderfully reſtore them. For the Jews themſelves apply this place, (and have long done ſo,) to their preſent condition, being of opinion that God hath appointed a prefixed time in his own mind, though he hath not declared it, when he will relieve them; but if they did repent, he would ſhorten the days of their baniſhment, and immediately bring them to their own land. Thus the antient Nitzacon ſet forth by Wagenſeil, p. 254. and R. Iſaac ſince him, often inſiſts upon this, in his Chiſſuk Emuna, publiſhed by the very ſame learned perſon; particularly Perek vii. where he ſaith, "There can be no "time prefixed for their deliverance, becauſe it depends "upon their repentance; whereby they may cut off the "length of this baniſhment, provided they turn to God "with their whole heart, and a full repentance." For which he alledges this place. And he repeats it again (Perek xxvii.) as the great comfort they have in this long baniſhment, that upon their perfect repentance, God will be merciful to them, and overcome their ſins, and perform this promiſe, which we find ſtill more lately mentioned in Manaſſeh ben Iſraels book de Termino vitæ, Lib. iii. Sect. 3. where he ſaith, herein all the prophets imitate Moſes, being wont after terrible threatnings to conclude with ſome ſingular conſolation, which made R. Aquiba (as the Talmudiſts report) fall a laughing, when all the wiſe men who were with him wept and lamented, at the ſight of the ruins of Jeruſalem and the temple, which they wondring at, he ſaid, "After the clouds the ſun will break "out; and after the end of the evils which Moſes threat-"ned, we may hope for good things; for God is not more "faithful in fulfilling the one, than in performing the "other."

But, alas! in all ages hitherto there are no ſigns of repentance, much leſs of a perfect one; but they have been ſtrangely hardened in their unbelief, and have bitterly reproached proached the Lord Jeſus and his religion. Abarbinel himſelf, though a gentleman of a noble family, a well bred perſon, and of an excellent underſtanding, is extreamly guilty of this. And ſince his time Solomon Virgæ, conſidering the aſtoniſhing plagues that have befallen them, and that never any people, as he acknowledges, conflicted with ſo many miſeries and for ſo many ages, as they have done, enquires the cauſes why the divine majeſty ſhould be ſo angry with them: He reckons ſeven; among which he accounts the putting of Jeſus of Nazareth to death as one; yet not as a crime, but that which hath enraged chriſtians againſt them. For he wickedly illuſtrates this, by that ſpeech of Moſes, Exod. viii. 24. which he thus tranſlates, "If we ſlay and ſacrifice the abominable Gods of the E-"gyptians in their ſight, will they not ſtone us?" which is the higheſt reproach he could vent againſt our bleſſed Saviour; and is mingled with the moſt ſtupid folly, in giving that as a reaſon of the divine anger, which at the moſt is only a reaſon (in their account) of men's indignation, Schebet Jehuda, Sect. 63.

The moſt cruel uſage which they have met with in all Chriſtian countries, might thus exaſperate and embitter their ſpirits; and we cannot excuſe the violent hatred of chriſtians to them, and their barbarous treatment of them, though they therein fulfilled the divine threatnings, as we have ſhewn upon the 28th chapter; which being ceaſed ſince the reformation of religion, the Jews have not been ſo virulent againſt our bleſſed Saviour; and it is to be hoped will be won to the obedience of faith, by our chriſtian uſage of them; when thoſe other ſtumbling blocks, which hinder their converſion are removed out of the way.

Ver. 5. And the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers poſſeſſed, and thou ſhalt poſſeſs it.] Be again planted in it, as they were at their return from the captivity of Babylon; eſpecially after they had laid the foundation of the houſe of the Lord, he bleſſed them exceedingly, Haggai ii. 18, 19. Zachar. viii. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12.

——And he will do thee good.] The prophet Zachariah hath given a full explication of theſe words, chap. viii. 13, 14, 15. and the prophet Jeremiah before him, chap. xxxii. 42, 43, &c. which was fulfilled in the building of the houſe of the Lord, tho' great oppoſition was made to it; and in the compaſſing Jeruſalem with walls, and ſettling the inhabitants in a ſtate of liberty, according to the prophecy of Iſaiah, lii. 1, 2.

——And multiply thee above thy fathers.] The Hebrew words import that he would "make them greater "than their fathers." Which he did, by that vaſt increaſe after they returned from Babylon, Zachar. viii. 4, 5. and before him, Hoſea i. 10. which is manifeſt from their ſpreading themſelves in ſo many colonies, through all Aſia, Egypt, Greece, Italy, and Spain: ſee Strabo, lib. xvi. concerning Joppa. By theſe means they were very much exalted, as Zachariah propheſied, after the captivity, chap. xii. 6. For as they had their liberty in their own country, (God being a wall of fire to them, while Jeruſalem had no walls) ſo they ſpread themſelves, and had their ſynagogues in Babylon, Arabia, Syria, and other countries before-mentioned; and a great many proſelytes alſo joined themſelves to them.

Yet we cannot well think that ſo magnificent a prophecy as this is, was entirely fulfilled after their return from Babylon, when they were tributary to the Perſians, and afterwards fell under the power of the Grecians, under whom they ſuffered very much, eſpecially in the days of Antiochus Epiphanes; whoſe death did not conclude their troubles, as Hermannus Witſius has ſhewn at large, in his Decaphylon, cap. 10, n. 9, 10, 11, 12, &c. where he endeavours to prove that there was no moment of time, after their return from Babylon, wherein they could be ſaid to be "made greater than their fathers," eſpecially in the days of David and Solomon. And therefore he concludes that this promiſe is ſtill to be compleatly fulfilled. And thus R. Iſaac (in his book before-named, Chiſſuck Emuna) argues, Perek vi. that God did not beſtow benefits upon them equal to thoſe which their fathers enjoyed, much leſs ſuperior, while the ſecond temple ſtood; but all that time was full of ſtraits and calamities; for which he alledges the prophecy of Daniel, ix. 25. And therefore ſaith, theſe words of Moſes can by no means be thought to be fulfilled, when the tribes of Judah and Benjamin returned from Babylon, and left a vaſt number behind them, who would not come back with them, but remain there to this day.

Ver. 6. And the Lord thy God will circumciſe thine heart.] By ſuch ſingular benefits beſtowed upon them, in a miraculous manner, God deſigned to take away the ſtubborn refractorineſs of their ſpirits, (called hardneſs of heart, ch. xxix. 19.) and to cut of all their wicked inclinations and diſpoſitions to idolatry and ſuperſtition, which had been their ruin. This is called, humbling their circumciſed hearts, Levit. xxvi. 41. But tho' God circumciſed them, yet their hearts might remain uncircumciſed, as appears from chap. xxix. 3, 4. And therefore he calls upon them to circumciſe their hearts themſelves, chap. xvi. 10. by laying to heart his benefits, and following the motions of his grace and holy ſpirit, which thereby he put into their hearts: And their neglect of this, and reſting meerly in the circumciſion of the fleſh, was that which ruined them again.

—— And the heart of thy ſeed.] Accordingly, we find they were freed from idolatry, after their return from Babylon; though ſtill they continued in other ſins, which brought the preſent captivity (as they call it) upon them; another baniſhment being neceſſary (ſaith R. Iſaac, in the book before-mentioned, Perek vii.) to purge them from their ſins, by the ſevere afflictions which they now endure, and have long ſuffered; becauſe their manifold ſins, as he expreſſes it, need much ſcouring, by contuſions and preſſures. After which, he ſaith, they ſhall ſin no more, but that ſhall be fulfilled which is written in the law, the Lord thy God ſhall circumciſe thine heart, &c. quoting theſe very words of Moſes. But, alas! they are not ſenſible for what ſin they ſuffer.

Ver. 7. And the Lord thy God will put all theſe curſes upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, which perſecuted thee.] Their very reſtoration created them many enemies, whoſe hatred increaſed with their proſperity in their own land, and was vented in cruel perſecutions of them. God, however, remarkably plagued theſe oppreſſors, particularly Antiochus Epiphanes, who died in miſerable torments.

Ver. 8. And thou ſhalt return, and obey the voice of the Lord thy God, and do all his commandments, which I command thee this day.] Continue ſtedfaſt in their love to him, by a ſtrict obſervance of all his commandments.

Ver. 10. If thou ſhalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to keep his commandments, &c.] With a ſincere love to all his commands, (ver. 2.) who had planted them aſſuredly in their land, with his whole heart, and his whole ſoul, as Jeremiah ſpeaks, chap. xxxii. 41. But herein they were defective, after they came out of the captivity of Babylon. For tho' they never returned again to idolatry, but kept cloſe to the worſhip of God alone, yet they reſted merely in the outward rites of religion, and had not an hearty love to God, and to all goodneſs; which made them reject the Son of God when he came among them, and fall under thoſe long calamities, which will not end, till they turn to him with all their hearts and ſouls.

Ver. 11. For this commandment which I command thee this day, it is not hidden from thee.] Or it may be tranſlated out of the Hebrew, "it is not too wonderful above "thee;" that is, abſtruſe and hard to be underſtood, becauſe above their reach; but eaſy to be known, becauſe plainly revealed: which is as true of the Goſpel (unto which St. Paul applies theſe words, Rom. x. 6, &c.) as it was of the law of Moſes; for therein our Saviour hath declared the mind and will of God to us, in ſuch familiar words, that the moſt ſimple people may underſtand their duty.

—— Neither is it far off.] So that they ſhould go to ſeek it, and learn it in ſome diſtant nation. R. Iſaac, in his Chiſſuk Emuna, cap. 45. had his thoughts ſo fixed upon what is ſaid ver. 4. that he fancies theſe words belong to that matter; and that Moſes ſtill ſpeaks to them of repentance, "which is of greater value than any other "thing, and yet moſt eaſily acquired." Which cannot but make one wonder at their blindneſs; for if repentance be ſo very eaſy, how comes it to paſs that they remain impenitent for ſo many ages, and thereby, as they confeſs, prolong their miſeries? and yet he repeats the ſame words in the ſecond part of his book, Perek lxxx. where he hath the confidence to ſay St. Paul miſapplies this place.

Ver. 12. It is not in heaven that thou ſhouldſt ſay, who ſhall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it?] R. Jacob Haclæi, in his preface to that part of the Miſna, called Seder Neſim, (as Guil. Vorſtius obſerves upon Abarbinel, about the "articles of "their faith") hath very fairly expounded this; which he takes to be a proverbial ſpeech, to ſhew that there is no need of hard, or rather impoſſible labour, to come at the knowledge of God's will, as there is in many human ſciences, where the mind of man is tired with ſeveral propoſitions and deductions, &c. before he arrives at what he ſeeks: But all things are plain and eaſy to be underſtood, and not hard to be performed: For God had revealed his mind clearly by Moſes from heaven, and therefore none had need go thither to deſire God to acquaint them with it, which he had done of his own accord, out of his good will towards them. And thus Grotius obſerves, upon Romans x. 6. out of ſeveral Greek authors, that they expreſſed things very difficult, by going up to heaven. Maimonides, indeed, and Abarbinel, make theſe words an argument for the eternity and unchangeableneſs of their law, and that there ſhould be no new revelation from heaven: But there is no colour for this from theſe words, the particle hu being of the feminine gender, and therefore doth not refer to God, but to the command before-mentioned, plainly importing, that men could not pretend ignorance of their duty, nor had any reaſon to deſire that ſome perſon would go to heaven again, for thoſe things which Moſes had already brought from thence. And thus the Apoſtle moſt juſtly accommodates theſe words to the new revelation from heaven by the Son of God, which was not abſtruſe and difficult, but as plain and perſpicuous as this now made by Moſes.

Ver. 13. Neither is it beyond the ſea, that thou ſhouldſt ſay, who ſhall go over the ſea for us? &c.] Ὡς δεῖσθαι πολυχρονίου καὶ καματηρᾶς ἀποδημίας, (to uſe the words of Philo, in his book concerning Rewards and Puniſhments,) ſo "as to need long and tedious voyages, laborious and wea-"riſome travels, to fetch it from foreign countries." Such as the Greek philoſophers undertook, who travelled into Egypt, and the eaſtern part of the world, to learn wiſdom, which God now taught his people in the wilderneſs, without any pains to attain it.

Ver. 14. But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart.] Made ſo familiar to them, that they might always have it in their common diſcourſe, to teach it their children; and had now been ſo often repeated, that it might be well laid up in their memory, never to be forgotten by them, chap. vi. 6, 7, 8, 9. xi. 18, 19, 20. It was alſo in the mouth of their prieſts, who were to teach them knowledge, Mal. ii. 7. and preſs it upon their hearts. Here the fore-named R. Iſaac obſerves, "that repentance depends on the confeſſion of the mouth, "and grief of the heart:" But the largeſt confeſſion, and the ſoreſt grief, will not avail them, till they repent of their crucifying the Lord Jeſus, and ſhall confeſs him with their mouth, and believe in their heart, that God hath raiſed him from the dead, &c. as St. Paul ſpeaks, Rom. x. 9, 10.

——— That thou mayſt do it.] That they might have nothing to do but put it in practice; and, in order thereunto, continually read it, and keep it in mind. In which, the Jews were ſo diligent, that, as Joſephus tells the Gentiles, (Lib. ii. contra Appionem,) they could as eaſily recite all the laws of God, as tell their names. But here was their error, that they were not careful to do what they knew to be the will of God: And ſo, when he ſent his ſon among them, who plainly declared to them more fully the meaning of their holy books, they could not underſtand and receive that which they read every day. And indeed this is the common error (as Dr. Jackſon well obſerves) of all corrupt minds, to ſeek that afar off, as if they were ſtrangers to it, which is really in their mouth, and in their heart, if they would but be doers, and not only hearers of the Word, as St. James ſpeaks, alluding, perhaps, to theſe words of Moſes; as St. Paul applies this whole paſſage to the goſpel, which is that word of faith, ſo preached and publiſhed by the Apoſtles, that it may be in all our mouths and hearts, without going to ſeek for any other infallible teacher.

Ver. 15. See I have ſet before thee this day, life and good, and death and evil.] Life and good, death and evil, may be but two words for the ſame thing; namely, all manner of happineſs, and all manner of miſery; both which, Moſes had at large ſet before them in the twenty eighth chapter: Or by life, may be meant long life in the land God had promiſed them; and good, all the proſperity they could wiſh for there: As on the other ſide, death may ſignify their being cut off from the land of the living before their time; and evil; all the calamities he had threatned while they lived: And ſo the next verſe ſeems to interpret it. Maimonides, from theſe words obſerves, that the wills of men are under no force nor coaction, but are free-agents, and therefore have precepts impoſed upon them, with a puniſhment threatned to the diſobedient, and a reward promiſed to thoſe who keep God's commandments, of which he treats at large in his preface to his commentary upon Pirke Avoth, cap. 8.

Ver. 17. But if thine heart turn away, ſo that thou wilt not hear, &c.] Want of love to God, and of a due eſteem of his wonderful love to them, made their heart turn away to other things, and not regard what he had revealed to them from heaven.

Ver. 18. I denounce unto you this day, that ye ſhall ſurely periſh, and that ye ſhall not prolong your days upon the land whither thou paſſeſt, &c.] This is the explication of the death and evil he ſet before them, ver. 15.

Ver. 19. I call heaven and earth to record this day againſt you, that I have ſet before you life and death.] God, angels, and men, were witneſſes that Moſes had done his duty. See iv. 26. viii. 19. And therefore he is owned by God himſelf to be faithful in all his houſe, Numb. xii. 7.

——— Bleſſing and curſing.] They are the ſame with life and death: But the legiſlator of the Jews uſes ſeveral words to make them ſenſible that both proceeded from God; the one being the effect of his love and favour, and the other of his anger and high diſpleaſure.

——— Therefore chuſe life, that both thou and thy ſeed may live.] That is, chuſe to be obedient, without which they could not be happy: Or, he wiſhes them to ſet their hearts on the happineſs God had promiſed them, that it might incline them to do his will.

CHAP. XXXI.

1 Moſes encourageth the people. 7 He encourageth Joſhua. 9 He delivereth the law unto the prieſts to read it in the ſeventh year to the people. 14 God giveth a charge to Joſhua. 19 And a ſong to teſtify againſt the people. 24 Moſes delivereth the book of the law to the Levites to keep. 28 He maketh a proteſtation to the elders.

AND Moſes went and ſpake theſe words unto all Iſrael.

2 And he ſaid unto them, I am an hundred and twenty years old this day; I can no more go out and come in: alſo the LORD hath ſaid unto me, Thou ſhalt not go over this Jordan.

3 The LORD thy God, he will go over before thee, and he will deſtroy theſe nations from before thee, and thou ſhalt poſſeſs them: and Joſhua, he ſhall go over before thee, as the LORD hath ſaid.

4 And the LORD ſhall do unto them as he did to Sihon, and to Og, kings of the Amorites, and unto the land of them, whom he deſtroyed.

5 And the LORD ſhall give them up before your face, that ye may do unto them according unto all the commandments which I have commanded you.

6 Be ſtrong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them: for the LORD thy thy God, he it is that doth go with thee, he will not fail thee, nor forſake thee.

Moses names Joshua to succeed him.

7 ¶ And Moſes called unto Joſhua, and ſaid unto him in the ſight of all Iſrael, Be ſtrong and of a good courage: for thou muſt go with this people unto the land which the LORD hath ſworn unto their fathers to give them: and thou ſhalt cauſe them to inherit it.

8 And the LORD, he it is that doth go before thee, he will be with thee, he will not fail thee, neither forſake thee: fear not, neither be diſmayed.

9 ¶ And Moſes wrote this law, and delivered it unto the prieſts the ſons of Levi, which bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and unto all the elders of Iſrael.

10 And Moſes commanded them, ſaying, At the end of every ſeven years, in the ſolemnity of the year of releaſe, in the feaſt of tabernacles, 11 When all Iſrael is come to appear before the LORD thy God, in the place which he ſhall chuſe: thou ſhalt read this law before all Iſrael in their hearing.

12 Gather the people together, men and women, and children, and thy ſtranger that is within thy gates, that they may hear, and that they may learn, and fear the LORD your God, and obſerve to do all the words of this law:

13 And that their children which have not known any thing, may hear and learn to fear the LORD your God, as long as ye live in the land whither ye go over Jordan to poſſeſs it.

14 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Behold, thy days approach that thou muſt die: call Joſhua, and preſent your ſelves in the tabernacle of the congregation, that I may give him a charge. And Moſes and Joſhua went, and preſented themſelves in the tabernacle of the congregation.

15 And the LORD appeared in the tabernacle in a pillar of a cloud: and the pillar of the cloud ſtood over the door of the tabernacle.

16 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, Behold, thou ſhalt ſleep with thy fathers, and this people will riſe up, and go a whoring after the gods of the ſtrangers of the land whither they go to be amongſt them, and will forſake me, and break my covenant which I have made with them.

17 Then my anger ſhall be kindled againſt them in that day, and I will forſake them, and I will hide my face from them, and they ſhall be devoured, and many evils and troubles ſhall befal them, ſo that they will ſay in that day, Are not theſe evils come upon us, becauſe our God is not amongſt us?

18 And I will ſurely hide my face in that day, for all the evils which they ſhall have wrought, in that they are turned unto other gods.

19 Now therefore write ye this ſong for you, and teach it the children of Iſrael: put it in their mouths, that this ſong may be a witneſs for me againſt the children of Iſrael.

20 For when I ſhall have brought them into the land which I ſware unto their fathers, that floweth with milk and honey; and they ſhall have eaten and filled themſelves, and waxen fat; then will they turn unto other gods, and ſerve them, and provoke me, and break my covenant.

21 And it ſhall come to paſs when many evils and troubles have befallen them, that this ſong ſhall teſtify againſt them as a witneſs: for it ſhall not be forgotten out of the mouths of their ſeed: for I know their imagination which they go about, even now before I have brought them into the land which I ſware.

22 ¶ Moſes therefore wrote this ſong the ſame day, and taught it the children of Iſrael.

23 And he gave Joſhua the ſon of Nun a charge, and ſaid, Be ſtrong and of a good courage: for thou ſhalt bring the children of Iſrael into the land which I ſware unto them: and I will be with thee.

24 ¶ And it came to paſs when Moſes had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finiſhed;

25 That Moſes commanded the Levites which bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, ſaying,

26 Take this book of the law, and put it in the ſide of the ark of the covenant of the LORD your God, that it may be there for a witneſs againſt thee.

27 For I know thy rebellion, and thy ſtiff neck: behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, ye have been rebellious againſt the LORD; and how much more after my death?

28 Gather unto me all the elders of your tribes, and your officers, that I may ſpeak theſe words in their ears, and call heaven and earth to record againſt them.

29 For I know, that after my death ye will utterly corrupt your ſelves, and turn aſide from the way which I have commanded you: and evil will befal you in the latter days, becauſe ye will do evil in the ſight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger through the work of your hands.

30 And Moſes ſpake in the ears of all the congregation of Iſrael the words of this ſong, until they were ended.

Ver. 1. And Moſes went, and ſpake theſe words unto all Iſrael.] By this it ſeems plain, that after Moſes had renewed the covenant with the people (mentioned in the foregoing chapter) he diſmiſſed them, and retired to his own tent; but not long after gave them a new ſummons, as he had done xxix. 2. and went again to take his leave of them. The LXX indeed ſeem to take the firſt words, as if the meaning was, that he went on with his diſcourſe. For thus they render them, συνέλεσε λαλῶν πάντας τὺς λόγυς τύτυς, He finiſhed ſpeaking all theſe words. For which we ſee no warrant, nor is it likely he could ſpeak all that here follows, at the ſame time.

Ver. 2. And he ſaid unto them, I am an hundred and twenty years old this day.] This ſhews theſe words were ſpoken not long before his death, which was this year, xxxiv. 7. Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael would have us from hence obſerve, "The ſingular care God hath of thoſe who ſerve "him with a perfect heart, as Moſes did; the days of "whoſe years, ſaith he, are exactly proportioned. For "ſo theſe words are expounded in Sota cap. 1. To day "my years are compleated, to day I was born, and to day "I ſhall die: For he was born on the ſeventh day of the "month Adar, and on the ſame day of the ſame month "he died. Thus Enoch, he adds, lived juſt three hun-"dred ſixty five years, which are proportioned to the days "of the ſun's annual courſe, Lib. iii. de termino vitæ, "ſect, 5." But as there is no great weight in this obſervation, if it were true, ſo that which he ſaith of Moſes is evidently falſe: For he did not die this very day as appears from ver. 14. where he ſaith, The days approach that I muſt die. Therefore the time was not yet come.

——— I can no more go out and in.] I am no longer capable of diſcharging the office I have long ſuſtained of your governor and leader (ſee Numb. xxvii. 17.) not becauſe he wanted vigour, either of body or mind, for that is contrary to xxxiv. 7. of this book, but becauſe God did not think fit to permit him to conduct them any farther; as the following words explain it.

——— Alſo the Lord hath ſaid unto me, thou ſhalt not go over this Jordan.] The particle we tranſlate alſo, often ſignifies for; and ſo is tranſlated by us in divers places; particularly in Iſai. iii. 7. Jerem. xvii. 8. and being ſo taken here, the ſenſe of theſe words is plain and eaſy; giving a reaſon why he could no longer take the charge of them, as he had done, becauſe God had otherwiſe ordered, having told him, he ſhould not bring them into Canaan, which they were now ready to enter.

Ver. 3. The Lord thy God, he will go over before thee, and he will deſtroy thoſe nations from before thee, and thou ſhalt poſſeſs them: And Joſhua, he ſhall go over before thee.] As their captain and leader, when Moſes had left them, iii. 28. Joſh. i. 2.

Ver. 6. Be ſtrong, and of good courage, Fear not, nor be afraid of them.] Be not affrighted, much leſs diſmayed, at their multitude, ſtature, and ſtrength, when ye go to fight with them. The ſecond word (afraid) only expreſſes an higher degree of the ſame paſſion of fear; ſignifying, being overcome with it. For that is the import of the Hebrew word aratz, which originally ſignifies to prevail over another. This he had ſaid to their fore-fathers, i. 21, 29. and after repeated to them, iii. 2, 22. vii. 17, 18, 21.

Ver. 7. And Moſes called unto Joſhua, and ſaid unto him, &c.] Moſes proceeded in this manner with reſpect to Joſhua, that the Iſraelites might ſhew the greater reverence to his perſon and authority, and follow his conduct as a leader appointed by God.

——— Be ſtrong, and of good courage, for thou muſt go with this people.] Thou art to be their leader and commander in chief, by God's ſpecial order, Numb. xxvii. 21.

Ver. 9. And Moſes wrote this law.] Some underſtand by this law, only the book of Deuteronomy; for which we ſee no reaſon, the ſcripture calling all that is contained in the five books of Moſes by the name of the law. St. Paul, for inſtance, in Galat. iii. 21. asks this queſtion, Do you not hear the law? And then quotes what we read in Gen. xvi. 21. and ſo Nehemiah ſaith, x. 34, 35. that they brought firſt fruits unto God, as it is written in the law, viz. Exod. xiii. 12. xxiii. 19. And Joſiah put away the workers with familiar ſpirits, &c. that he might perform the words of the law, 2 Kings xxiii. 24. which we find, Levit. xix. 30. xx 6, 27. And Hezekiah alſo, 2 Chron. xxxi. 3. appointed the daily oblations, and thoſe required at ſtated times to be offered, as it is written in the law of the Lord, which plainly refers to the xxviiith and xxixth of Numbers. And Joſhua built an altar on mount Ebal, viii. 30, 31. as it is written in the book of the law of Moſes, which we find no where but in this book of Deuteronomy, xxvii. 4.

——— And delivered it unto the prieſts, the ſons of Levi.] It is probable, Moſes had written moſt of theſe five books ſome time ago, (and ſo the foregoing words may be tranſlated, Moſes had wrote this law) but did not finiſh them till a little before his death, and then delivered them to the prieſts. But there is no neceſſity thus to underſtand it, for he might have time enough between this and his death, to write the whole Pentateuch; it being only ſaid, ver. 14. Thy days approach, that thou muſt die; which doth not import, that he was to die in a day or two, but that ſome weeks might intervene before his departure.

——And unto all the elders of Iſrael.] As he deliver'd this book of the law, that is, the whole Pentateuch (as Abarbinel and others of the Jews underſtand it) unto the prieſts, commanding them to preſerve it ſafe, near the ark, ver. 24. ſo he delivered another copy of this book to the elders of every tribe, as the Jews affirm, in Debarim Rabba; where they ſay, (and it is highly probable) that Moſes, before his death, wrote thirteen copies of the law, (with his own hand, as they add) and having delivered one unto the prieſts, to be preſerved in the holy place, gave one to each tribe, committing it to the care of the elders thereof. Thus Maimonides alſo, in his preface to Jad Chazakah, as Buxtorf obſerves, in Hiſtor. Arcæ Fœderis, cap. 5. the intent of which was, as we ſuppoſe, that all the people of each tribe might reſort to it, as the whole nation were to reſort to that in the ſanctuary, if they doubted of any thing, which might be thought to be amiſs by the errors of tranſcribers.

Ver. 11. When all Iſrael is come to appear before the Lord thy God, in the place which he ſhall chuſe, thou ſhalt read this law before all Iſrael, in their hearing.] This order being directed, not to all Iſrael, but to a particular perſon, plainly imports, that the ſupreme governour, whoſoever he was, had this charge laid upon him, to take care theſe laws ſhould be read at this ſolemn time, that all the people might hear them; and therefore, we think, the Jews rightly ſay, that their kings, when they had them, were bound not only to look after this matter, but to read the law themſelves, to as many as could hear them, appointing the prieſts and the Levites to read it in as many other aſſemblies of the people, as were neceſſary for the fulfilling of this precept. In order to which, a pulpit was ſet up in the court of the men of Iſrael, on the very firſt day of the feaſt; for they did not think fit to defer it till the laſt, becauſe it is here ſaid, "when Iſrael is come to "appear before the Lord," not, when they were ready to depart, as the Jews obſerve; the king going up into it, the miniſter took the book of the law, and delivered it to the ruler of the ſynagogue, who gave it to the Sagan, or vicar of the high prieſt, who delivered it to the high-prieſt, and he to the king; who ſtood up to receive it, and then ſat down to read. All this expreſſes the reverence with which this holy book was delivered; and likewiſe the reverence with which they approached the king; who, they ſay, began to read at this book of Deuteronomy, which is a compendium of the law, and proceeded, before he ſtopped, to thoſe words, chap. vi. 4. Hear, O Iſrael, &c. which having alſo read, he omitted the reſt till he he came to chap. xi. 13. And it ſhall come to paſs, if thou wilt hearken diligently, &c. reading on to verſe 22. and then skipped to chap. xiv. 22. And thou ſhalt truly tithe, &c. reading on to the ſection concerning the king, chap. xvii. 14. and then the curſings and bleſſings out of the xxviith and xxviiith chapters, till he had ended all that ſection of the law. Thus the Miſchna, in the title Sota, cap. vii. ſect. 8. which Wagenſeil hath illuſtrated with moſt learned annotations, and our Dr. Lightfoot alſo hath given an account of it long ago, in his Temple Service, cap. 17. ſect. 1. where he ſaith, the king might ſit down if he pleaſed, when he read, but it was eſteemed more honourable if he ſtood; as king Agrippa did, when he performed this office. And before he began to read, he made a prayer to God; and all this, he adds, was done in the court of the women. Which well agrees with what is ſaid in the next verſe, Gather the people, men and women, &c. But it doth not contradict what we ſaid before, of his reading it in the court of the men of Iſrael: For if the king were of the family of David, it was always done there; if he were not, then in the court of the women, as Wagenſeil obſerves out of Maimonides.

Ver. 14. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Behold, thy days approach, that thou muſt die.] God admoniſhes his ſervant Moſes, that the end of his days upon earth was near, when he muſt reſign up his office into the hands of Joſhua, who had been before appointed his ſucceſſor, Numb. xvii.

——— Call Joſhua, and preſent yourſelves in the tabernacle of the congregation, that I may give him a charge.] This was done, we ſuppoſe, in the face of all the people, to whom Moſes had been ſpeaking ver. 1, 2. to give Joſhua the greater authority, and to make him reverenced by them, when they ſaw he was appointed by God himſelf to be their governour, as he had been before ordained publickly by God's order, Numb. xxvii. 18, 19, &c.

——— And Moſes and Joſhua went, and preſented themſelves in the tabernacle of the congregation.] In the court of the ſanctuary, with their faces toward it; for it was not lawful for any but the prieſts to go into the ſanctuary itſelf. Some indeed have thought, that by a ſpecial order from God, Joſhua was now admitted into it. But this ſeems to be contradicted by the next verſe, which, ſaith God, appeared in a cloud over the door of the tabernacle.

Ver. 15. And the Lord appeared in the tabernacle in a pillar of a cloud.] This ſignifies, that the glory of the Lord, as other places ſpeak, appeared unto them, and unto the people, as it had done upon many occaſions, Exod. xxxiii. 9, 10. Numb. ix 15. xvi. 42, 43.

—— And the pillar of the cloud ſtood over the door of the tabernacle.] Being a ſymbol of the divine preſence, whoſe glory appeared out of the cloud, as it did, Numb. xvi. 42. for the cloud was always upon the tabernacle, Ex. xl. 35, 38. Numb. ix. 18 but when the Lord would ſtrike an awe into the people, and move them to regard what he ſaid or did, then the cloud ſtood at the door of the tabernacle, and the glory of the Lord came out of the moſt holy place, and appeared in it.

Ver. 16. And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, behold thou ſhalt ſleep with thy fathers.] He firſt admoniſhed Moſes again of his departure, in the audience, we may ſuppoſe of Joſhua, who heard all the following admonition, to make him more carefully obſerve the end and deſign of it.

——— And this people will riſe up and go a whoring.] God, who ſearches all mens hearts, diſcerned ſuch bad inclinations in this people, that he knew they would fall into idolatry, which is called going a whoring from him, notwithſtanding all the means he had preſcribed to prevent it. And therefore he adds one more; which was the learning them the following ſong; notwithſtanding which, he foreſaw, that after the death of Joſhua, and the elders who ſurvived him, they would forſake him, and worſhip other gods. See Pſal. cvi. 36, 38.

——— After the Gods of the ſtrangers of the land.] This is an unuſual phraſe, ſignifying no more than what he calls in other places ſtrange Gods, though ſome think it imports peculiarly the Gods of the Canaanites, who were the former inhabitants, but being expelled, became ſtrangers of the land. And thus Onkelos ſeems to have underſtood it, who tranſlates it, "After the idols of the people "of the land," which was an high aggravation of their ſin, that they ſhould worſhip ſuch Gods as had not been able to protect their ſervants.

——— Whither they go to be amongſt them.] This ſeems to countenance the foregoing expoſition. And God charges them in future ages with this, as a very great guilt, that they worſhipped the Gods of the Amorites, in whoſe land they dwelt, Judges vi. 10.

Ver. 17. Then my anger ſhall be kindled againſt them in that day.] So we read it was upon their very firſt apoſtacy to idolatry, Judges ii. 14. and continued ſo in all ages, as we read frequently in that and the following books.

—— And I will hide my face from them.] Withdraw my favours and protection. So that they were devoured, as it follows, by their enemies, and wild beaſts; and "many evils and troubles beſet them; or, as the Hebrew phraſe ſignifies, "came upon them on a ſudden." The prophet Ezekiel expreſſes this calamity in theſe words; "My face will I turn from them," chap. vii. 22. The effect of which was, the divine preſence departed out of the ſanctuary, and he left it, to be polluted and defiled by robbers.

Ver. 19. Now therefore write ye.] This ſhews theſe words were directed both to Moſes, and to Joſhua, who was to take care, after Moſes's death, to ſee this command obſerved.

—— This ſong for you.] Which follows in the thirty-ſecond chapter.

—— And teach it the children of Iſrael.] Make them get it by heart, as we now ſpeak.

—— Put it in their mouths.] That they might ſing it, and thereby preſerve it in their memory. For it hath been always thought, the moſt profitable way of inſtructing people, and communicating things to poſterity, by putting them into verſe; and eſpecially children, and young people, are beſt taught in this way. And the greater moment any thing is of, the more carefully it ought to be preſerved; which Plato himſelf thought could be done by no better means than this. And therefore having ſpoken the ſongs which he would have compoſed for the uſe of the people, he would have it enacted, Δεῖν πάντα ἄνδρα ἢ παῖδα, &c. "That all men or children, whether bond "or free, male or female, ſhould be bound through the "whole city to ſing ſuch ſongs, and never ceaſe ſo to "do," &c. See Euſebius, Lib. 12. Præpar. Evang. cap. 32. and Plato himſelf, Lib. 2. de Legibus, where he gives a great many cautions about this matter, and concludes that, Τοῦτο ὃ Θεοῦ, ἢ Θεοῦ τινὸς ἂν εἴη p. 657. "this muſt "be the work of a god, or ſome god-like man." As if he had been acquainted with what Moſes, the man of God, or rather God himſelf here ordained, that every one ſhould have this ſong in their mouths, as a means to preſerve them in the worſhip of God alone. However, this juſtifies the admirable diſcipline of the Hebrews, in thoſe ancient times, who were taught by ſuch hymns, as the wiſeſt men among the Heathens in future times, thought the beſt way of inſtruction. For which reaſon as Ariſtotle reports in his Problems, (ſect. 19. Probl. 28.) people anciently ſung their laws as the Agathyrſi (he ſaith) continued to do in his days, Ὅπως μὴ ἀπιλάθωνται "that they "might not be forgotten." Particularly, the laws of Charondas (as Athenæus informs us out of Hermippus) were wont to be ſung at Athens παρ' εἶνον, "over a regale "of wine;" and were therefore written in ſome ſort of verſe, or tunable meaſure, as Dr. Bently has made it probable, in his Diſſertation on the Epiſtles of Phalaris, p. 373. Tully alſo (to add no more) tells us, that Cato, in his book de Originibus, reports, that it was the cuſtom among the old Romans to have the praiſes and virtues of famous men ſung to a pipe at their feaſts, which he thinks they learnt from the ancient Pythagoræans in Italy, who were wont, carminibus præcepta quædam occultius tradere, to deliver in verſes certain precepts, which were the greateſt ſecrets in their philoſophy; and compoſed the minds of the ſcholars to tranquility, by ſongs and inſtruments of muſick.

——— That this ſong may be a witneſs for me againſt the children of Iſrael.] Teſtifying that they were ſufficiently warned, and could not complain that they were not taught their duty, and told their danger; and reproving alſo their ingratitude, and putting them in mind how ill they requited their God, ver. 21.

Ver. 21. And it ſhall come to paſs when many evils and troubles are befallen them, that this ſong ſhall teſtify againſt them, as a witneſs.] That they are moſt juſtly puniſhed for their foul ingratitude and unbelief, with which this ſong upbraided them; God having told them plainly, chap. xxxii. 18, 19. what would be the effect of their forſaking him; and at the delivery of it, God having ſaid here, ver. 17. that when they went a whoring from him; he would "forſake "them, and hide his face from them."

Ver. 22, Moſes therefore wrote this ſong the ſame day, and taught it the children of Iſrael.] Commanded them to learn it, ver. 19. In order to which, the Jews ſay, every man was bound to write for himſelf a copy of it; and more than that, they make it one of the affirmative precepts (as Maimonides tells us) which obliged every Iſraelite to write out a copy of this law with his own hand. For ſo they interpret thoſe words, ver. 19. "Write "ye this ſong for you," as if they were ſpoken to all the people, and their meaning had been, "Write ye this law "for you, wherein is this ſong;" for they were not to write the law by ſmall parts and ſections, as his words are, but all of it entirely. And if a man's parents had left him a copy, yet he was oblig'd to write one himſelf; or if he could not write, to procure one to be written for him by ſome other perſon, &c. See Schickard's Miſchpat Hamelek, cap. ii. Theor. 5.

Ver. 23. And he gave Joſhua the ſon of Nun a charge.] That is, the LORD, who had hitherto ſpoken to him by Moſes, now ſpake to him himſelf, and gave him this charge, to gain him the greater authority. For which end he had order'd Joſhua to preſent himſelf before him, together with Moſes, ver. 14.

Ver. 24. And it came to paſs, when Moſes had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finiſhed.] The whole book of his laws which he put together before his death.

Ver. 25. That Moſes commanded the Levites, &c.] The Prieſts who were of the tribe of Levi. See ver. 9.

Ver. 26. Take this book of the law, and put it in the ſide of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God.] Not in the in-ſide of it; for he doth not ſay, "put it into the "ark," but "in the ſide of the ark," that is, on the out-ſide, in a little box, as Jonathan and others expound it. For it is the very ſame phraſe with that, 1 Sam. vi. 8. where the Philiſtines are ſaid to have put the jewels of gold, which they returned for a ſin-offering, in a coffer, "by the ſide of the ark," where none could depoſite any thing but the high-prieſt, becauſe no perſon but himſelf might go into the holy place, where the ark was. And therefore thoſe prieſts who received the book of the law from Moſes, delivered it to Eleazar, to be there placed. See Buxtorf Hiſtor. Arcæ, cap. 5. and Huetius more lately in his Demonſtratio Evangelica. Propos. iv. cap. de Can. Libr. Sacrorum, ſect. 8. Where he obſerves that R. Meir in both the Talmuds, Abarbinel himſelf and many others have been of opinion, from this very place, that the book of the law was put into the ark itſelf, being no leſs precious than the tables of ſtone that were there. But the Scripture tells us, "There was nothing in the ark, ſave "the two tables of ſtone," 1 Kings viii. 9. 2 Chron. v. 10. and their reaſon is good for nothing, the two tables far excelling this book, becauſe written by the finger of God; and therefore other great Doctors among the Jews rightly place it without the ark, as the very words of Moſes import.

——— That it may be there for a witneſs againſt thee.] It was depoſited in that place, as a publick record, that if any one ſhould falſify or deprave any thing in the law (as Abarbinel interprets it) he might be convicted out of this book, which was ſacredly preſerved to be produced as a witneſs againſt him. Or (as the author of Tzeror Hammor expreſſes it) that if they ſhould be ſo wicked, as to loſe the books of the law, this copy, kept under the care of the Prieſts, might remain to teſtify what was the will of God. As we ſee it did in the days of Joſiah, when it was caſually found in the houſe of God, as they were about the reparations of it: Though we cannot ſay, they found it in the ſide of the ark, but rather upon the roof of the houſe, or in the raiſers; where the Prieſts had hid it, as ſome of the Jews think, when Manaſſeh endeavoured to deſtroy this authentic copy of the law, as he had done all others that he could find; and when they came to uncover the houſe, there it appeared.

Ver. 28. Gather unto me all the elders of your tribes.] We ſuppoſe after Moſes had ſpoke to the people what God had ordered, ver. 1, 2, &c. he diſmiſſed them again, that he might write the book of the law, ver. 9. and deliver it to the Prieſts, &c. and then write the ſong, which follows in the next chapter, ver. 19, 22, &c. Which being done, he is ordered here to ſummon all the elders of the ſeveral tribes, and with them all the people came, ver. 30. that he might deliver to them by word of mouth, the ſong which he had written.

—— And your officers.] We have frequently obſerved that theſe ſchoterim (which we tranſlate officers) were but miniſters to their elders or judges. See Exod. v. 14. Deut. i. 15. xvi. 18. Unto which we ſhall add here only the words of Abarbinel; the office of the ſchoterim was to ſee that the ſentence which the judges had given was obſerved, and to compel men to it. They who would have more, may find a long roll of authors, who are of this mind, both Jews and Chriſtians, in Jo. Benedic. Carpzovius upon Schickard's Jus Regium; who hath alſo ſaid a great deal to the ſame purpoſe, cap. iv. Theorem 14.

——— That I may ſpeak theſe words in their ears.] The ſong which God had ſuggeſted to him; and commanded him to write, ver. 19, 22.

—— And call heaven and earth to record againſt them.] Call the whole world to witneſs how wicked they are, if they fall from God, after ſuch care to preſerve them in his obedience.

Ver. 29. For I know, that after my death ye will utterly corrupt yourſelves, and turn aſide from the way which I have commanded you.] Departing from that way of God, which I have delivered to you by his command. It was a very melancholy thing for Moſes to leave the world in this belief, that all his pains would be loſt upon them; but he comforted himſelf in doing his duty to the very laſt, and omitting no means to ſecure them from apoſtaſy.

Ver. 30. And Moſes ſpake.] With the aſſiſtance of Joſhua, xxxii. 44.

—— In the ears of all the congregation of Iſrael.] Whom the elders and officers, ver. 28. had aſſembled, according to their tribes and families; unto whom they went ſeverally, and ſpake theſe words in their hearing.

——— The words of this ſong.] Which follows in the next chapter, and much differs in the raiſed expreſſions, and loftineſs of the ſtile, from the reſt of this book hitherto.

——— Until they were ended.] Omitted nothing, but completely delivered this ſong to them; or, they ſpake all theſe words to them at the ſame time, with one continued ſpeech. We obſerved before, that the moſt ancient way of inſtruction was by poetical compoſitions, which were more ancient than rhetorical diſcourſes. And as their chief learning did conſiſt of poetry, ſo the excellency of their poetry was ſeen in the proper and native ſubject of this faculty, that is, in matters of ſacred uſe or obſervation: From whence the title of vates deſcended to ſecular and prophane poets, who retained the manner of ſpeech uſed by the former. But, as Conradus Pellicanus here truly obſerves, the ſcripture poetry doth not conſiſt in the cadency and number of ſyllables, contrived to pleaſe the ear, but in brief and weighty ſentences, ſimply and ſincerely compoſed in a lively manner, to enlighten the underſtanding, move the affections, and ſink deep in the memory. And the ancients, as a great man of our own obſerves, had this advantage of later poets, That the faſhion of the world (as he ſpeaks) in their times, was more apt to raviſh their thoughts with admiration, wonderful events being then more frequent, and their frequency not abating, but rather increaſing their wonder, becauſe their variety was very great, and the apprehenſion of inviſible or ſupernatural powers in thoſe events was uſual and undoubted. So that admiration was then enforced upon men, and the breaſts of thoſe who diligently obſerved thoſe events, or were any way diſpoſed by nature to it, were inſpired with lively and ſublime affections, apt to vent themſelves in ſuch poetical phraſes and reſemblances as we cannot reach, unleſs we raiſe our invention by imitation, and ſtir up admiration by meditation and ſtudy. But now, our ſenſes being neither moved with ſuch extraordinary effects of God's power, nor our minds bent to obſerve the ways of his wiſdom, ſo as to be ſtricken with true obſervation of them, we have fewer good ſacred poems than of any other kind.

Thus Dr. Jackſon, on the Creed, book 1. chap. 14. David Chytræus alſo hath an excellent diſcourſe on this ſubject, to ſhew, that the ancient poetry among the Heathens contained the doctrine of God, and of celeſtial things; all the offices and rewards of virtue, with the puniſhment of vice; the hiſtory of their kings, and the noble acts of famous men, Tome 1. of his Works, p. 154, &c. where he confirms this out of the verſes of Orpheus, who lived, as he computes, about an hundred and fifty years before David; and thoſe of Pindar, Simonides, and the reſt, who lived in the time of the war with Xerxes. But Moſes led the way to them all, whoſe mind was raiſed to that ſublimity of thought and ſpeech, which we find in his ſongs, by admiration of thoſe ſtrange events which he ſaw, Exod. xv. Numb. xxi. and here in the next chapter, wherein he was followed by Deborah, Barak, and Hannah, &c. in after-times, Judges v. 1 Sam. ii.

CHAP. XXXII.

1 Moſes his ſong, which ſetteth forth God's mercy and vengeance. 46 He exhorteth them to ſet their hearts upon it. 48 God ſendeth him up to mount Nebo, to ſee the land, and die.

GIVE ear, O ye heavens, and I will ſpeak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth.

2 My doctrine ſhall drop as the rain: my ſpeech ſhall diſtil as the dew, as the ſmall rain upon the tender herb, and as the ſhowers upon the graſs.

3 Becauſe I will publiſh the name of the LORD: aſcribe ye greatneſs unto our God.

4 He is the rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he.

5 They have corrupted themſelves, their ſpot is not the ſpot of his children: they are a perverſe and crooked generation.

6 Do ye thus requite the LORD, O fooliſh people and unwiſe? is not he thy father that hath bought thee? hath he not made thee, and eſtabliſhed thee?

7 ¶ Remember the days of old, conſider the years of many generations: ask thy father, and he will ſhew thee, thy elders, and they will tell thee.

8 When the moſt High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he ſeparated the ſons of Adam, he ſet the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Iſrael.

9 For the LORDS portion is his people: Jacob is the lot of his inheritance.

10 He found him in a deſert land, and in the waſte howling wilderneſs: he led him about, he inſtructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye.

11 As an eagle ſtirreth up her neſt, fluttereth over her young, ſpreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings;

12 So the LORD alone did lead him, and there was no ſtrange god with him.

13 He made him ride on the high places of the earth, that he might eat the increaſe of the fields, and he made him to ſuck honey out of the rock, and oyl out of the flinty rock.

14 Butter of kine, and milk of ſheep, with fat of lambs, and rams of the breed of Baſhan, and goats, with the fat of kidneys of wheat, and thou didſt drink the pure blood of the grape.

15 ¶ But Jeſhurun waxed fat, and kicked: thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs; then he forſook God which made him, and lightly eſteemed the rock of his ſalvation.

16 They provoked him to jealouſy with ſtrange gods, with abominations provoked they him to anger.

17 They ſacrificed unto devils, not to God; to Gods whom they knew not, to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not.

18 Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and haſt forgotten God that formed thee.

19 And when the LORD ſaw it, he abhorred them, becauſe of the provoking of his ſons, and of his daughters.

20 And he ſaid, I will hide my face from them, I will ſee what their end ſhall be: for they are a very froward generation, children in whom is no faith.

21 They have moved me to jealouſy with that which is not God, they have provoked me to anger with their vanities: and I will move them to jealouſy with thoſe which are not a people, I will provoke them to anger with a fooliſh nation.

22 For a fire is kindled in my anger, and ſhall burn unto the loweſt hell, and ſhall conſume the earth with her increaſe, and ſet on fire the foundations of the mountains.

23 I will heap miſchiefs upon them, I will ſpend mine arrows upon them.

24 They ſhall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter deſtruction: I will alſo ſend the teeth of beaſts upon them, with the poiſon of ſerpents of the duſt.

25 The

25 The ſword without, and terror within, ſhall deſtroy both the young man and the virgin, the ſuckling alſo with the man of gray hairs.

26 I ſaid, I would ſcatter them into corners, I would make the remembrance of them to ceaſe from among men:

27 Were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy, leſt their adverſaries ſhould behave themſelves ſtrangely, and leſt they ſhould ſay, Our hand is high, and the LORD hath not done all this.

28 For they are a nation void of counſel, neither is there any underſtanding in them.

29 O that they were wiſe, that they underſtood this, that they would conſider their latter end!

30 How ſhould one chaſe a thouſand, and two put ten thouſand to flight, except their Rock had ſold them, and the LORD had ſhut them up?

31 For their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themſelves being judges.

32 For their vine is of the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah: their grapes are grapes of gall, their cluſters are bitter.

33 Their wine is the poiſon of dragons, and the cruel venom of aſps.

34 Is not this laid up in ſtore with me, and ſealed up among my treaſures?

35 To me belongeth vengeance, and recompenſe, their foot ſhall ſlide in due time: for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that ſhall come upon them make haſte.

36 For the LORD ſhall judge his people, and repent himſelf for his ſervants; when he ſeeth that their power is gone, and there is none ſhut up, or left.

37 And he ſhall ſay, Where are their gods, their rock in whom they truſted, 38 Which did eat the fat of their ſacrifices, and drank the wine of their drink-offerings? let them riſe up and help you, and be your protection.

39 See now that I, even I am he, and there is no god with me: I kill, and I make alive; I wound, and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand.

40 For I lift up my hand to heaven, and ſay, I live for ever.

41 If I whet my glittering ſword, and mine hand take hold on judgment; I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and will reward them that hate me.

42 I will make mine arrows drunk with blood (and my ſword ſhall devour fleſh) and that with the blood of the ſlain, and of the captives, from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy.

43 Rejoyce, O ye nations, with his people: for he will avenge the blood of his ſervants, and will render vengeance to his adverſaries, and will be merciful unto his land, and to his people.

44 ¶ And Moſes came and ſpake all the words of this ſong in the ears of the people, he and Hoſhea the ſon of Nun.

45 And Moſes made an end of ſpeaking all theſe words to all Iſrael.

46 And he ſaid unto them, Set your hearts unto all the words which I teſtify among you this day; which ye ſhall command your children to obſerve to do, all the words of this law.

47 For it is not a vain thing for you: becauſe it is your life; and through this thing ye ſhall prolong your days in the land whither ye go over Jordan to poſſeſs it.

48 And the LORD ſpake unto Moſes that ſelf-ſame day, ſaying,

49 Get thee up into this mountain Abarim, unto mount Nebo, which is in the land of Moab, that is over againſt Jericho; and behold the land of Canaan which I give unto the children of Iſrael for a poſſeſſion.

50 And die in the mount whither thou goeſt up, and be gathered into thy people; as Aaron thy brother died in mount Hor, and was gathered unto his people:

51 Becauſe ye treſpaſſed againſt me among the children of Iſrael, at the waters of Meribah-kadeſh, in the wilderneſs of Zin; becauſe ye ſanctified me not in the midſt of the children of Iſrael.

52 Yet thou ſhalt ſee the land before thee, but thou ſhalt not go thither unto the land which I give the children of Iſrael.

Ver. 1. Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will ſpeak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth.] He calls angels and men to bear witneſs, chap. xxx. 19. that the Iſraelites had been admoniſhed of their duty, and warned of their danger; and this, not by words of his own invention, but which were put into his mouth by the ſpirit of God. Or, after an elegant form of ſpeech, he called upon all inſenſible creatures every where to liſten to him, that he might awaken the Iſraelites out of their ſtupidity, or upbraid them as a people who had ears to hear, and would not hear him. And, as ſome of themſelves have obſerved, he may be thought to intimate hereby, that if they would not hearken, and keep his precepts, the heavens were forbidden to give them rain, and the earth to bring forth fruit. The gloſs alſo of the Jeruſalem Targum is not amiſs, namely, that Moſes being ſhortly to die, calls the heavens heavens and the earth, which endure through all ages, to be witneſſes againſt them when he was gone. But the following obſervation is too curious; That Iſaiah, when he propheſied, being far remote from the heavens, and near to the earth, calls upon the heavens to hear, and the earth to give ear, or attend: Whereas Moſes, quite contrary, approaching now very near to the heavens, calls upon them to attend, or give ear; and being in ſpirit remote from the earth, bids it hear.

Ver. 2. My doctrine ſhall drop as the rain, my ſpeech ſhall diſtill as the dew.] Or, let my doctrine drop, &c. For this ſeems to be a prayer, that his words, which were ſent from heaven to them, might ſink into their hearts, and ſoften them, as the drops of rain and dew mollify the earth, and produce ſuch fruits of obedience as might make them happy.

Ver. 3. Becauſe I will publiſh the name of the Lord.] For my ſong ſhall be concerning the Lord of heaven and earth, whoſe glorious perfections I will proclaim; which make him the ſole object of your worſhip.

——— Aſcribe ye greatneſs unto our God.] Acknowledge therefore the infinite power of our God, and his ſovereign dominion over all; and give honour and ſervice to none beſide him.

Theſe three firſt verſes ſeem to be the preface to the ſong; and now follows the ſong itſelf, which Joſephus calls ποίημα ἑξάμετρον, a poem in hexameter verſe, Antiq. lib. 4. cap. 8.

Ver. 4. He is the rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth, and without iniquity, juſt and right is he.] Maimonides takes the firſt words of this verſe, he is the rock, to ſignify the firſt principle, and the efficient cauſe of all things without himſelf. For ſo the word rock is uſed, when God bids the children of Iſrael, look to the rock out of which they were hewn, Iſai. li. 1. that is, to Abraham their father, from whom they were deſcended. And ſo he thinks it ſignifies, ver. 18. of this chapter, of the rock that begat thee, thou art unmindful; that is, of God, the author of their being. And again, ver. 30. their rock (i. e. the Lord) ſold them. See More Nevochim, p. 1. cap. 16. And then by the next words, his work is perfect, he thinks is meant, that as God is the creator of all things, ſo there is no defect or ſuperfluity in his works: For he takes theſe words to be the ſame with thoſe, Gen. i. 31. God ſaw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good. And as his works of creation are moſt perfect, ſo are his works of providence; for he governs the world with the greateſt judgment and juſtice. So he ſeems to underſtand the next words, p. 111. cap. 17. all his ways are judgment. We are ignorant of the methods and reaſons of his judgments, yet no injuſtice or iniquity is to be aſcribed to him. But all the evil and all the good that befalls any man, or the whole church, proceeds from the juſt and equal judgment of God. And more largely, cap. 49. Our narrow minds cannot apprehend either the perfection of his works, or the equity of his judgments; for we apprehend his admirable works only by parts, whether we look upon the bodies of animals, or the cæleſtial ſpheres: And in like manner we apprehend but a little of his judgments; for that of which we are ignorant in both, is far more than that which we know of either. We conclude this with the words of the author of Sepher Coſri, p. 3. ſect. 11. He that believes this, that all God's works are perfect, and his ways judgment, will always lead a ſweet and pleaſant life; all afflictions will be made light to him, nay, he will rejoice that his iniquities are hereby alleviated, and that he ſhall one day be rewarded for his patience, which he teaches men by his example, and thereby juſtifies the judgments of God. With reſpect to which, we ſuppoſe, the Jews now begin the prayer which they make at the burial of their dead, with this verſe of Moſes's ſong: Which prayer they call Tzidduck haddin, i. e. juſt judgment, as Leo Modena obſerves, in his hiſtory of the preſent Jews, p. 5. cap. 8.

Ver. 5. They have corrupted themſelves, &c.] We know not how to juſtify this tranſlation, nor that in the margin, (He hath corrupted himſelf.) Maimonides tranſlates them better; making theſe words a queſtion, and the next words an anſwer to them, in this manner: Did he (i. e. God, the rock, before ſpoken of) Do him any hurt? For the Hebrew word Scecheth with Lamed after it, ſignifies to hurt or deſtroy, Numb. xxxii. 15. 1 Sam. xxiii. 10. (as Joh. Cocceius obſerves in his Ultima Moſis, ſect. 701.) And ſo the meaning is, Is God to blame for the evils that befall him? i. e. Iſrael. Unto which the anſwer follows in the next words, which we thus tranſlate:

——— Their ſpot is not the ſpot of his children.] In the Hebrew, the firſt word of this ſentence is lo, which ſignifies not, or no; which the accent tipcha (as they call it) under it, ſhews is not to be joined with the words that follow (banau mumam) but taken by itſelf, being a denial of the foregoing queſtion: And theſe words are thus to be tranſlated, No his children are their lot; or in other words, all the evil that befalls them, is the fruit of their children's wickedneſs. And ſo theſe words, are in effect the ſame with thoſe of Solomon, Prov. xix. The fooliſhneſs of man perverteth his way, and his heart fretteth againſt the Lord: He complains of God, when the fault is in himſelf. See More Nevochim, p. 111. cap. 12.

Onkelos tranſlates it thus: They corrupted to themſelves, not to him, children that ſerved idols, That is, as Paulus Fagius obſerves, they hurt themſelves, not God, when leaving him the true God they turned to idols; for the word corrupt is commonly uſed in ſcripture, where it ſpeaks of the ſin of idolatry. The Jeruſalem Paraphraſt aims at the ſame ſenſe.

—— They are a perverſe and crooked generation.] The whole body of them are untoward and untractable, walking contrary to God in all their ways; for there being a gemination (as they ſpeak) of a ſyllable in the latter of theſe words (Pethaltbol) it increaſes the ſenſe, and makes it the ſame with the ſuperlative degree among us, importing the higheſt obliquity imaginable. And theſe words were never more exactly fulfilled, than in the days of our bleſſed Saviour, who calls them a wicked and adulterous, a faithleſs and perverſe generation, Matth. xvi. 4. xvii. 17. And in the days of the apoſtles, who call them ἀτόπους, an abſurd kind of people, 2 Theſſ. iii. 3. "who pleaſed not "God, and were contrary to all men, 1 Theſſ. ii. 15.

Ver. 6. Do ye thus requite the Lord, O fooliſh people and unwiſe?] He upbraids them with their ſenſeleſs folly, and baſe ingratitude, which, in the following words, he demonſtrates, by repreſenting the obligations God had laid upon them.

——— Is not he thy father, who hath bought thee? hath not he made thee? and eſtabliſhed thee?] By ſettling them in excellent order, under the government of moſt wiſe and righteous laws. See the 4th chapter of this book, ver. 7, 8.

Ver. 7. Remember the days of old, conſider the years of many generations.] Conſult the moſt antient records; which would inform them how God choſe their father Abraham long ago, and promiſed to bleſs his poſterity, as he did Iſaac and Jacob, in a moſt eminent manner; and ſent Joſeph, by a wonderful providence, into Egypt, to preſerve them from periſhing by famine.

——— Aſk thy father, and he will ſhew thee, thy elders, and they will tell thee.] All this is to expreſs the ſame thing, namely, that they ſhould adviſe with thoſe that knew more than themſelves; and particularly with old men, (as the word may be underſtood which we tranſlate elders) who, by the benefit of their great age, had heard and ſeen more than others, and could tell them how God had dealt with them, ever ſince he brought them, by a wonderful power, out of the land of Egypt.

Ver. 8. When the moſt high divided to the nations their inheritance.] He directs them ſtill to look farther back, and they would find, that long before Abraham's time God had them in his thoughts, even when he divided the earth among the ſons of Noah and their poſterity after the flood, Gen. x. 5, 25, 32.

——When he ſeparated the ſons of Adam.] Or, the ſons of men; who were one people, till he ſcattered them into ſeveral parts of the earth, and ſeparated them into divers nations, by confounding their language, Gen. xi. 8, 9.

——— He ſet the bounds of the people, according to the number of the children of Iſrael.] He had then the children of Iſrael in his mind, before they were a nation; and made ſuch a diſtribution to other people, (particularly to the ſeven nations of Canaan) within ſuch bounds and limits as that there might be ſufficient room for ſo numerous a people as the Iſraelites, when they came to take poſſeſſion of that country.

How the LXX. came to tranſlate theſe words thus, "He appointed the bounds of the nations according to "the number of the angels," it is hard to ſay. Bochart hath made the beſt conjecture about it, (which was hinted by de Muis before him) Phaleg. lib. i. cap. 15. that they had a bad copy before them, which left out the three firſt letters of Iſrael; and ſo they read Baneel, the children of God, meaning the Iſraelites. Inſtead of which, ſome tranſcribers put the angels of God, becauſe they are called, his ſons. Which led the antient Greek fathers, who followed this tranſlation, into great difficulties: And it grew a common opinion, that every nation was under the government of an angel; which ſeems to be the meaning alſo of the ſon of Sirach, Eccleſ. xvii. 17. and many others, fancying that God divided the nations according to the number of the children of Iſrael, when they came into Egypt, which was juſt ſeventy, they thence gather there were juſt ſo many diſtinct nations, and ſo many ſeveral languages; which is a conceit of ſome of the Jews, as Mr. Selden obſerves, lib. ii. de Synedr. cap. 9. But Bochart, in the place above-named, hath given the plain and ſimple meaning of this place, in theſe words; "God ſo diſtributed the earth among the ſeveral people that "were therein, that he reſerved, or in his counſel deſigned, "ſuch a part of the earth for the Iſraelites, who were then "unborn, as he knew would afford a commodious habitation to a moſt numerous nation."

Ver. 9. For the Lords portion is his people.] And not ſatisfied with this kindneſs, he choſe them alone out of all other nations, to be under his ſpecial care, and to enjoy ſingular privileges, which no other nation poſſeſſed; and therefore they are called his peculiar treaſure, Exod. xix. 5. This Origen maintains to be true, againſt all the cavils of Celſus, Lib. 5. p. 250. Edit. Cantabr. where he ſhews how beneficial their laws were; and that they were taught ſo early to know God, to believe the immortality of the ſoul, and rewards and puniſhments in the life to come, as demonſtrated they were diſtinguiſhed from all other people whatſoever. See. p. 260.

——— Jacob is the lot of his inheritance.] This is the ſame ſenſe, repeated in other words; alluding to the manner of meaſuring and dividing lands by cords, as the word in the Hebrew is, which we tranſlate lot. See Pſalm xvi. 6. and cap. 4. of this book, ver. 20.

Ver. 10. He found him in a deſert land.] There he firſt took the Iſraelites to be his peculiar people; for ſo the word, we tranſlate found, frequently ſignifies; as in Pſalm cxvi. 3. "the pains of hell gat hold upon me;" where in the Hebrew, the words are, found me. And in the New Teſtament, Rom. iv. 1. "What ſhall we ſay then, that "Abraham our father hath found?" that is, attained.

———And in the waſte howling wilderneſs.] Deſolate and void of all ſuſtenance; where nothing was to be heard but the howlings and yellings of wild beaſts, Deut. viii. 15.

——— He led him about, he inſtructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye.] Protected and defended them from all dangers with extraordinary care; for there is nothing of which we are more tender than the ſight of our eyes; which God hath guarded by ſeveral coats and humours, and eye-lids fenced with hairs, to preſerve it from injury, unto which R. Levi Ben Gerſom thinks theſe words allude.

Ver. 11. As an eagle ſtirreth up her neſt, &c.] Eagles are obſerved to have a moſt tender affection to their young ones who are here meant by her neſt, as Bochart obſerves, (it being a common figure uſed by other authors, to put continens pro contento) whom ſhe provokes to fly, (which is meant by ſtirring up her neſt,) by fluttering over them with her wings ſtretched out; upon which ſhe takes them, while they are ſo weak and feeble that they fail in their attempt to fly, and ſupporteth them till they recover ſtrength to commit themſelves to the air. See Hierozoicon, P. i. lib. 2. cap. 3. and J. G. Voſſius de orig. & progr. Idolol. lib. iii. cap. 77. where he obſerves that this kindneſs to her young ones is chiefly found in the black eagle; tho' ſomething of it be ſeen in others; which may be the reaſon they lay a few eggs, becauſe they are not able to educate many young ones with ſuch tender care.

Ver. 12. So the Lord alone did lead him.] Numb. xiv. 14. This is an exact reſemblance of God's tender care of his people Iſrael: Whom he ſollicited, by Moſes and Aaron, to aſpire after their liberty, when they were oppreſſed in Egypt; juſt as an eagle excites her young ones, when they lie drowſy in the impurities of their neſt, to fly away. And as the eagle "flutters over them, with her wings "ſpread abroad," ſo God, by his Spirit, moved the Iſraelites to be obedient to their deliverers out of Egypt. For Moſes uſes the very ſame word, when he ſpeaks of the Spirit of God "moving upon the waters," Gen. i. 2. And as the eagle carries her fainting young ones on her wings, ſo God ſupported them when they were weary, and upheld them in dangerous ways: Inſomuch, that he is ſaid to carry them in his arms, as a father doth his child, Deut. i. 31. Hoſea i. 1, 3.

——— And there was no ſtrange God with him.] To help or aſſiſt him, but by his Almighty power alone they were protected and preſerved. Which made their ſin the more heinous, in ſacrificing to other gods, ver. 17. as if they had been their benefactors.

Ver. 13. He made him ride on the high places of the earth.] He brought the Iſraelites in a triumphant manner to poſſeſs another country, full of lofty and very fruitful mountains, which were in Canaan, where they lived deliciouſly So, to ride, ſignifies, as Bochart thinks, laute & opipare vivere. Which he juſtifies by that place in Hoſea, x. 11. "I will make Ephraim to ride; Judah ſhall "plow, and Jacob ſhall break his clods;" that is, ſaith he, the people of Iſrael lived in pleaſure, when Judah lived laborioufly, Hierozoic. P. i. Lib. ii. cap. 41. But, to ride, ſignifies alſo, to ſubdue and conquer; which may be the meaning here, Pſalm xlv. 4. lxvi. 12. and to have dominion and rule, as Maimonides interprets it, in his More Nevochim, P. i. cap. 70. In which ſenſe it is ſaid of God himſelf, in the next chapter of this book, "he rideth upon "the heavens, for thy help," ver. 26. and he rideth upon Araboth in the higheſt heavens, Pſalm lxviii. 4.

——— And he made him to ſuck honey out of the rock.] Wild honey, which was eſteemed an excellent food in that country, and was ſometimes found upon the ground, ſometimes in the hollow of trees, and ſometimes in the cleſts of rocks, as Bochart obſerves out of good authors, Hierozoicon, P. ii. lib iv. cap. 15. This rock honey ſeems to be ſpoken of as the beſt of the kind, being joyned with the fineſt wheat, Pſalm lxxxi. ult.

———And oil out of the flinty rock.] No part of this country being barren, but affording ſomething or other for their ſuſtenance; tho' ſome ſay that the olive-tree thrives beſt in rocky places. Columella himſelf obſerves, that it doth not delight either in low places, or in high, but magis modicos clivos amat, but rather loves the ſides of moderately riſing hills, lib. vi. cap. 6. And D. Chrytæus notes, that as the moſt generous wine is produced upon the Rhine, below Mentz, out of the hardeſt flints, "Sic "oleæ locis petroſis ſterilibus non infeliciter proveniunt;" ſo olive-trees grow proſperouſly in ſtony and barren places, Tom. 1. p. 173.

Ver. 14. Butter of kine, and milk of ſheep.] Which the ſcripture often mentions, Iſa. vii. 21, 22. 1 Cor. ix. 1, 7. And under the word tzon as hath been obſerved, goats alſo are comprehended, whoſe milk likewiſe is mentioned, Prov. xxvii. 27. Ariſtotle mentions both, and ſo doth Columella, and many others, in Bochart's Hierozoicon, p. i. lib. ii. cap. 45. where he proves, that they made butter of theſe milks as well as that of cows.

——— With fat of lambs, and rams of the breed of Baſhan.] A country famous for excellent paſture; being ὑπόδ.ℳ καὶ ὑανδ'ις, &c. as St. Cyril calls it; ſee Numb. xxxii. 1, 4.

——— And goats, with the fat of kidneys of wheat.] The Hebrews call the beſt of every kind of thing, by the name of the fat. And the kidneys of wheat ſignify, large and plump corn, affording great plenty of flour. Cajetan thinks it ſignifies wheat as big as a kidney; or rather, having that ſhape, as kidney beans have.

——— And thou didſt drink the pure blood of the grape.] Moſt generous red wine; very clear and bright. So Achil. Tacius, lib. ii. calls wine, αἷμα βοτρυων.

Maimonides, in his More Nevochim, p. ii. cap. 47. takes all the expreſſions in this verſe to be metaphorical, ſignifying (as Onkelos allegorizes them) the poſſeſſion of all their their enemies cities and goods, after they had poured out their blood like water on the ground.

Ver. 15. But Jeſhurun waxed fat, and kicked.] Againſt him who fed him ſo plentifully and deliciouſly. It ſeems to be a metaphor taken from oxen, who being ſtirred up with a goad to labour, lift up their heels, and kick againſt him who pricks him forward. So did the Iſraelites, when they were urged and preſſed to their duty by the Prophets; for they not only deſpiſed, but evil entreated them.

Why Iſrael is called Jeſhurun is not eaſy to reſolve. Jo. Cocceius (in his Ultima Moſis, ſect. 973.) derives it from ſhur, which ſignifies to ſee, behold, or deſcry. From whence in the future tenſe, and the plural number, comes Jeſhuru, which, by the addition of nun parogogicum, as they ſpeak, makes Jeſhurun, that is, "the people who "had the viſion of God." We know nothing more ſimple, nor more probable than this; which highly aggravated their ſin, who having God ſo nigh unto them, chap. iv. 7. and their elders having had a ſight of him, (Exod. xxiv. 10.) were ſo ungrateful, as to rebell againſt him, and worſhip other gods. Some refer this kicking to their revolt from the houſe of David; when Jeroboam, to preſerve his own kingdom, ſet up the golden calves, to prevent the return of the people to their old maſter, by going up to Jeruſalem to worſhip.

——— Thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatneſs.] This variety of expreſſions is uſed to ſignify how exceeding bountifully God had provided for them; and withal, how very wanton and inſolent they were grown, as cattle fed in a fat paſture uſually are. The words with fatneſs (after covered) are not in the Hebrew, but are well ſupplied out of other places, particularly, Pſalm xvii. 10.

— Then he forſook God which made him.] They forſook the God who advanced them from a deſert where he found them, (ver. 10.) into a very rich and plentiful country.

——— And lightly eſteemed the rock of his ſalvation.] As there was a progreſs in their inſolent forgetfulneſs of God, expreſſed in three phraſes, which may ſignify three degrees of their ſtupidity ("waxen fat, grown thick, and "covered with fatneſs") ſo ſome obſerve as many degrees of their rebellion: Firſt, "they kicked againſt "God," that is, they threw off the yoke of his laws, and refuſed to obſerve them; Secondly, they forſook God and fell into idolatry; and laſtly, They "lightly eſteemed "the rock of their ſalvation."

Ver. 17. They ſacrificed to devils, not to God.] The Hebrew word ſchedim, which we tranſlate Devils, imports as much as Deſtroyers (as the Devil is called in the book of Revelations, ix. 11.) evil ſpirits delighting in miſchief, and leading thoſe who worſhip them into fatal perdition. Tho' ſome think they are called ſchedim ironically, by way of ſcorn, the true God being Schaddai, the Omnipotent, and All-ſufficient; and that theſe in a ſtrain of mockery are ſtigmatized by the name of counterfeit gods, who had no power to aſſiſt their adorers, nor were capable of preſerving themſelves. Either of theſe accounts are better than that of Manaſſeh ben Iſrael, who derives it from a Hebrew word which ſignifies a field, becauſe thoſe falſe gods were ſuppoſed to frequent deſert places. But then they ſhould have been called ſedim, not ſchedim, as he certainly muſt know, being a great maſter of the Hebrew learning. The LXX call them δαιμόνια, and ſo doth the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. x. 19. becauſe the Dæmons ſeduced men into the impiety of worſhipping other gods, either thoſe malignant ſpirits themſelves, or ſome other beings which they perſuaded ſimple people had ſome divinity in them; and that not only the ſtars, but even beaſts, nay, onions and garlick, which they did not conceive to be gods, but things by which, as intermediate cauſes, their gods were pleaſed or offended with them, and therefore worſhipped them.

——— To gods whom they knew not.] Or, as the words may be tranſlated, "gods who knew not them," that is, had never beſtowed any benefits upon them.

——— To new gods, that came newly up.] Such as Jeroboam's calves, invented out of his own brain; and the gods of other nations, Moloch and Baal, which were new to the Iſraelites; for the Dæmon gods were of no great antiquity: Bel, or Baal, as he is called in the Chaldee Dialect) the firſt king of Babel, after Nimrod, being the firſt that ever was deified, or reputed a god, after his death; whence all other Dæmons were called Baalim, as all the Roman emperors were called Cæſar, from the firſt monarch of that name.

——— Whom your fathers feared not.] That is, did not worſhip. This was a great aggravation of their guilt, that when they were deſirous of other objects of worſhip, they did not return to thoſe whom their anceſtors had reverenced (the Teraphim, for inſtance which were the gods of Laban and Rachel) for whoſe worſhip they might have pretended tradition; inſtead of which they choſe gods with whom their progenitors were unacquainted, which was an indication of a ſtrange propenſity to idolatrous worſhip.

Ver. 21. ——— I will provoke them to anger with a fooliſh nation.] The Jews thought all nations ſo, except themſelves. And in one ſenſe all the Gentiles were really ſo: For nothing was more ridiculous than to worſhip creatures meaner than themſelves, Jer. x. 8.

Ver. 22. For a fire is kindled in my anger, and ſhall burn unto the loweſt hell.] That is, this fire, by which great calamities are adumbrated, ſhall never ceaſe, till it has effectually deſtroyed them; for hell, and deſtruction, ſeem to be the ſame, Prov. xv. 11. And therefore the "loweſt hell" ſignifies the utmoſt depth of miſery.

——— And ſet on fire the foundations of the mountains.] Subvert the ſtrongeſt fortreſſes, which, till then, were accounted impregnable. Such as Jeruſalem (which Raſi thinks is here meant) in whoſe laſt deſtruction this threatning was perfectly accompliſhed. For Titus himſelf, as Joſephus relates (lib. vii. de Bello Judaico, cap. 43.) obſerving the vaſt height of the walls, and the bigneſs of every ſtone, together with the exact order in which they were diſpoſed and compacted, cried out, God was with us in this war, and he drove the Jews from theſe fortifications, for what could mens hands or machines perform againſt ſuch towers?

Ver. 26. I ſaid, I would ſcatter them into corners, &c.] Utterly deſtroy them, ſo that not one of them ſhould be found; and if any of them remained, they ſhould ſecrete themſelves, and not dare to appear among mankind.

Ver. 27. Were it not that I feared the wrath of the enemy.] He who is omnipotent is not capable of fear; but the Deity condeſcends to unfold himſelf conformably to our language, and aſſigns this reaſon why he did not condemn the Iſraelites to abſolute extirpation, becauſe he would not have their enemies inſult, and grow outragious in their impious language, even againſt himſelf; of which we find an inſtance, Iſa. xxxvii. 28, 29.

Ver. 28. For they are a nation void of counſel.] The Hebrew word abad, which is commonly tranſlated, periſh, and here render'd, void, ſignifies, in the Ethiopic language, is fooliſh, or mad; which makes it probable, this was the ancient ſenſe of the word among the Hebrews, and gives the beſt account of this paſſage, which may be thus tranſlated, They are a nation fooliſh in their counſel. By which kind of counſel, they were led into ſuch courſes, as were pernicious to them, and when they ſeemed moſt wiſe, they deſtroyed themſelves by their vain infatuations.

Ver. 30. How ſhould one chace a thouſand, and two put ten thouſand to flight?] Whence ſhould ſuch an amazing change proceed? that the Iſraelites, who formerly, with an handful of men, put vaſt armies to flight, Lev. xxvi. 8. ſhould now, tho' ever ſo numerous, be defeated by one or two of their enemies, fleeing when none purſued them?

——— Except their Rock had ſold them.] A little conſideration was ſufficient to make them ſenſible, that this calamity had been impoſſible, if they had not forſaken their God; who is here repreſented by the word Rock; and his ſelling them intimates, his quitting his intereſt in them, and giving them up to be ſlaves to thoſe who hated them.

Ver. 31. For their rock is not as our Rock.] None of the gods of the Pagans, who are here ſtyled their rock, becauſe their votaries relied on them for protection and ſafety, have ſuch power as he who gave us our being. So Maimonides interprets the word tzur, the ſpring and fountain of all things.

——— Even

—— Even our enemies themſelves being judges.] Who were frequently compelled to acknowledge the over-ruling power and providence of Jehovah controlling all their deſigns. As the Egyptians confeſſed, Exod. xiv. 2, 5. and Balaam, Numb. xxiii. 19, 22. and the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. iv. 7, 8. and the king of Babylon, Dan. iii. 29.

Ver. 32. For their vine is of the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah.] We ſuppoſe this relates to the Iſraelites, who are repreſented as giving an account, why their enemies ſo ſhamefully chaſed them, ver. 30. And they are here compared to a vine, which God had brought out of Egypt, and tranſplanted in Canaan, Pſalm lxxx. 8. And the prophet afterward calls them, the plant of his pleaſure, Iſa. v. 7. Which was an ancient reſemblance, as appears by this place; where they are repreſented as ſuch a degenerate people, that they were as bad as the Sodomites, or the people of Gomorrah, nay worſe than thoſe wretches, as it is in the marginal tranſlation, and therefore deſerved to be utterly deſtroyed, as they were.

—— Their grapes are grapes of gall, their cluſters are bitter.] Theſe words repreſent their actions, called fruit in ſcripture, to be ſo wicked, that they were no longer to be endured. And ſo Joſephus deſcribes them before their laſt deſtruction, lib. vi. de Bello Judaico, cap. ult. Where he declares, that if the Romans had delayed to fall upon ſuch an impious people, he thinks either the earth would have opened its mouth, and ſwallowed them up, or a flood drowned their city, or thunder and lightning from heaven deſtroyed it, as was the caſe of Sodom. Πολὺ γὰρ τῶν τοῦτα παθόντων ἤνεγκε γενεὰν ἀθεωτέραν, for they were a more atheiſtical generation, than they who ſuffered ſuch vengeance. And again, lib. vii. cap. 30. he ſaith, that the time when they were deſtroyed was ſo fruitful in all manner of wickedneſs among the Jews, ὡς μηδὲν κακίας ἔργον ἄπρακτον καταλιπεῖν, that there was no one work of wickedneſs that was not committed; nor can one imagine any thing ſo bad, that they did not do; endeavouring publickly, as well as privately, to exceed one another, both in impiety to God, and injuſtice to their neighbours.

Ver. 33. Their wine is the poiſon of dragons.] Many authors affirm, that dragons have not any poiſon; but as the Hebrew word thaanim ſignifies any kind of ſerpent, ſo it is certain, that the dragons of Africk and Arabia had a deadly poiſon in them, tho' thoſe of Greece had not, as Bochart proves at large, in his Hierozoicon, p. ii. lib. 3. cap. 14.

—— And the cruel venom of aſps.] The poiſon of aſps is called cruel, becauſe it is accounted the acuteſt of all other, inſtantly penetrating to the vital parts; whence the proverb, δῆγμα ἀσπίδων, the biting of aſps, for an incurable wound.

Ver. 34. Is not this.] That is, the vengeance mentioned in the following verſes; for the particle hu often refers to what comes after.

—— Laid up in ſtore with me.] To be produced and manifeſted in due time.

— And ſealed up among my treaſures.] This vengeance is repreſented as already determined or ordered, as deeds are which are ſigned and ſealed, tho' not preſently executed, but ſafely depoſited in a cabinet. And the meaning of this verſe is, that tho' the Almighty do not ſpeedily inflict his puniſhments upon evil doers, it is not becauſe he doth not obſerve them, or forget what they do; for he hath preſixed a time to reckon with them, as will appear in the fatal event.

Ver. 35. To me belongeth vengeance and recompence.] As the ſupreme lord, governour, and judge of the world, whoſe office it is to puniſh offenders. It is evident, the apoſtle alledging theſe words, Rom. xii. 19. ἐμοὶ ἐκδίκησις, vengeance is mine, (or, to me belongeth vengeance) exactly follows the Hebrew text, and not the preſent LXX which renders theſe words, ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐκδικήσεως ἀνταποδώσω, in the day of vengeance I will recompence.

—— Their foot ſhall ſlide.] Tho' they think themſelves immoveably fixed in their dominion, they ſhall certainly fall.

—— In due time.] Not ſo ſoon, perhaps, as men may expect; but when the great judge of the world ſees it moſt ſeaſonable.

—— For the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that ſhall come upon them make haſte.] When they little thought of it, and prided themſelves in their poſterity, God ſuddenly brought down the Chaldeans, who had been the great inſtruments of plaguing the Jews, Iſaiah xlvii. 7, 8, 9, 10, &c. Jer. l. 15, 27, 31. li, 6, 8. And ſo ſhall the plagues of Babylon the great "come in one day. "In one hour her great riches ſhall come to nought," Rev. xvii. 8, 10, 17.

Ver. 36. For the Lord ſhall judge his people.] Plead their cauſe, as the ſcripture elſewhere ſpeaks, Jer. l. 34. and deliver them from the oppreſſion of their enemies; as this phraſe is often uſed in the book of Pſalms, vii. 8. x. 18.

—And repent himſelf for his ſervants.] Have mercy upon them, as the vulgar truly expreſſes the ſenſe, and turn his hand, which puniſhes them upon their enemies. See Jer. l. 20. li. 24.

—— When he ſeeth that their power is gone.] That they are not able to help themſelves. That's the due time or ſeaſon, before mentioned, for God to interpoſe; when the enemies of his people think themſelves irreſiſtable, there being none able to oppoſe them.

—— And there is none ſhut up, or left.] Some refer this to perſons, and others to things; and either way it ſignifies their condition to be ſo forlorn, that they could do nothing, either by men or money, for their deliverance. J. Forſterus tranſlates theſe words, Cuſtoditum aut neglectum, i. e. precious or vile: By which wonderful deliverance and reſtoration, when they were ſo totally deſtitute of all help, all the world was given to underſtand, that there is no God like unto the Lord.

Ver. 37. And he ſhall ſay, where are their gods, their rock in whom they truſted.] It is dubious, whether theſe words be directed to the Jews, or to the Gentiles who had oppreſſed them. It ſeems moſt agreeable to take them as a reproach to the enemies of the Jews, who had long boaſted the power of their gods, and aſcribed all ſucceſs to them, ver. 27. who could not deliver them in their diſtreſs.

Ver. 38. Which did eat the fat of their ſacrifices, and drank the wine of their drink-offerings.] For the ſame rites were uſed among the Gentiles, as among the Jews; who offered all the fat upon the altar, and then poured out the wine which accompanied the meat-offering, &c. See Numb. xv. The LXX refer this to the worſhippers themſelves, and tranſlate it thus, (agreeably enough to the Hebrew:) "The fat of whoſe ſacrifices ye ate, and "drank the wine of their drink-offerings. And Onkelos to the ſame purpoſe.

Ver. 39. See now.] Open your eyes now at laſt, and be convinced, by your ſad experience, of your error.

——That I, even I am he.] That is, I, and none but I, who have effected theſe changes in the world: Firſt, making you inſtruments in puniſhing my people; and now inflicting the like puniſhments upon you, Jerem. li. 24, 25, 49.

The words in the Hebrew being, I, I am he, the author of the old Nitzacon was ſenſible, that we Chriſtians might hence obſerve, that there are two who are here called God, namely, the Father and the Son; and therefore takes care to inform his readers, that there are not two firſt principals of things. Which, as no Chriſtian is ſo fooliſh as to affirm, ſo their own authors have acknowledged more perſons than one, here called God. Thus Jonathan, in his paraphraſe, plainly ſuppoſes another perſon in the divinity, whom he calls the Word, when he thus explains this verſe; "when the Word of the Lord "ſhall reveal himſelf to redeem his people, he ſhall ſay to "all people, I am he that have been, and am, and ſhall "be, (ſee Rev. i. 8.) and by my word kill and make alive. I "ſmote the people of Iſrael, and I will heal them in the end "of the days," which makes theſe words a plain prophecy of the Meſſiah, and him to be God. And ſo the Jeruſalem Targum: "See that I now am he in my word, and "there is no God beſide me, I am he who kill the "living in this world, and raiſe the dead in the world to "come," &c.

——— And there is no God with me.] As I have no ſuperior, ſo neither have I any equal.

— I

—— I kill and I make alive, I wound and I heal.] If I pleaſe to deſtroy any people for their ſins, none can hinder me; and if any repent, and implore my mercy, I reſtore them to perfect ſafety. R. Iſaac, in his Chiſſuk Emuna, P. i. cap. 6. ſect. 20. alledges theſe words, as a prophecy of the reſurrection of the dead in the days of the Meſſiah. And, in another place, cap. x. he alledges them as an effectual confutation of thoſe ancient heretics, who imagined two ſupream powers; one of them, the author of all good; and the other, the author of all evil: For there could not be, they fancied, the ſame care, which had an influence upon both. To remove which falſe conceit, God declares, I kill, as well as make alive, &c. And for the ſame reaſon he ſaith, in Iſaiah xlv. 7. "I form the "light, and create darkneſs; I make peace, and create "evil: I, the Lord, do all theſe things."

Ver. 40. For I lift up my hand to heaven.] Swear ſolemnly to do what follows, namely, be revenged on his enemies, as well as deliver his people. Thus Abraham anciently ſware, Gen xiv. 22. And when God promiſed to bring the Iſraelites into Canaan, he is ſaid, to lift up his hand, Exod. vi. 8. Nehem. ix. 15. From whence, ſome think, the word, promittere, is derived, ſignifying, to engage by ſtretching out the hand: and that from thence ſprang the cuſtom of ſtretching out, and lifting up their hand, when they ſware. Which the Gentiles practiſed, as thoſe known words of Virgil inform us, Æneid xii.

Suſpiciens Cœlum tenditque ad ſydera dextram.

When God therefore is ſaid to lift up his hand to heaven, the meaning is, he ſwears by himſelf, as it here follows.

—— And ſay, I live for ever.] As ſure as I live.

Ver. 41. If I whet my glittering ſword.] Make all things ready for the execution of my judgments.

—— And mine hand take hold on judgment.] I begin to puniſh.

—— I will render vengeance to mine enemies.] None ſhall ſtop my proceedings, to be fully avenged of them.

—— And will reward them that hate me.] For, as Jeremiah ſpeaks, chap. li. 56. the Lord God of recompences will ſurely requite: For, it is the vengeance of the Lord (as he ſpeaks in the foregoing chapter concerning Babylon, chap. l. 15.) Take vengeance upon her; as ſhe hath done, do unto her.

Ver. 42. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my ſword ſhall devour fleſh.] Make an exceeding great ſlaughter, Iſaiah xxxiv. 5, 6.

—— With the blood of the ſlain, and of the captives.] This ſignifies, none ſhould be ſpared: For they ſhould be killed who were taken captive, as well as thoſe that fell in the battle.

—— From the beginning of revenges upon the enemy.] How the Hebrew word Paroth comes to ſignify revenges, we are not able to give an account; but in that ſenſe we take it, both here, and in Judges v. 2. The word Para, from whence it ſeems to be derived, ſignifies, to make bare, or naked. And ſo the Vulgar Latin here underſtands it; and thence Joh. Foſterus hath given a probable ſenſe of theſe words, (taking Roſch, which we tranſlate beginning, for the head, as it properly ſignifies, or the king) in this manner, "becauſe of the bareing, (i. e. making bare) of "the head by the enemy;" that is, the taking away of the kingdom and prieſthood from Iſrael. The LXX tranſlate it, ἀπο κεφαλης ἀρχόντων ἐχθρῶν, "from the head "of the princes of the enemies." Which is a ſenſe very agreeable, if we could find any word in the Hebrew like to Paroth, that ſignifies princes or rulers. But we think a more ſimple ſenſe may be given of theſe words, than any of the fore-mentioned, only by ſuppoſing the particle Lamed to be omitted (as in many other places) before Paroth, which is this, "from the king to the ſlave of the enemies." For they were wont to ſhave their captives, as every one knows, by way of contempt and ſcorn. Which is the reaſon God threatens baldneſs ſo often to the Iſraelites by his prophets, when he was ſo angry with them, that he gave them up to be ſlaves. Next to this is the tranſlation of Onkelos, I will take away (thoſe words he adds) the crowns from the head of the enemy. By which action the king's head was made bare.

This univerſal ſlaughter is moſt emphatically expreſſed by Jeremiah, chap. l. 35, 36, 37, 43. And ſome think this prophecy will be then moſt amply fulfilled, when the Jews ſhall be called, and made members of the church of Chriſt. See Dr. Jackſon, book xi. on the Creed, chap. xii.

Ver. 43. Rejoice, O ye nations with his people.] Here the particle eth is omitted before ammo, as we ſuppoſed, in the foregoing words, lamed to be before paroth. Which made the Vulgar tranſlate theſe words, O ye nations, praiſe his people. But the LXX diſcerned the true ſenſe, and tranſlated it as we do: The apoſtle having juſtified their tranſlation in Rom. xv. 10. where he expreſſes this, word for word, as they do, Εὐφράνθητε ἔθνη μετὰ τοῦ λαοῦ αὐτοῦ, Rejoice ye gentiles with his people. But it muſt here be noted, that before theſe words the LXX have ſome other, which are very remarkable, Εὐφράνθητε οὐρανοὶ ἅμα αὐτῷ, καὶ προσκυνησάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες ἄγγελοι Θεοῦ, Rejoice ye heavens together with him, and let all the angels of God worſhip him, and then follows, rejoice ye Gentiles with his people) which are not in the Hebrew, nor the Chaldee, and yet the latter clauſe of them προσκυνησάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες ἄγγελοι Θεοῦ Let all the angels of God worſhip him, are the very words of the apoſtle, Heb. i. 6. which ſeem to have been taken out of the LXX, for they are no where elſe to be found in the ſcripture. The margin, indeed, of our bibles refers us to Pſalm xcvii. 7. But there the words of the LXX are otherwiſe προσκυνήσατε αὐτῷ πάντες ἄγγελοι αὐτοῦ, worſhip him all ye angels, which are in the ſecond perſon; whereas here, and in the apoſtle, the words are in the third. We may therefore ſuppoſe rather, that the LXX, from ancient tradition among the Jews, added theſe words, (before they tranſlated this verſe) to declare unto what time the fulfilling of them ſhould principally belong. For Pſalm xcvii. ſeems to be but a deſcant (as Dr. Jackſon's words are) upon this part of Moſes's ſong, from whence the Jews might learn the ſcope of it. And accordingly the apoſtle uſes the words of the LXX here in this place, rather than thoſe of the Pſalmiſt; becauſe he would have the Hebrews underſtand and conſider, that Moſes himſelf had predicted the exaltation of the Son of God, as the Pſalmiſt afterward expounded him.

There is another tranſlation of theſe words of Moſes, which is very agreeable to the Apoſtle in Rom. xv. 10. "Rejoice ye nations, who are his people." See ver. 21. of this chapter. Either way, this is a plain prophecy of the Gentiles becoming one body with the people of Iſrael. And thus Kimchi himſelf tranſlates it, "ſing ye Gentiles, "who are his people:" which began to be fulfilled after our Saviour's aſcenſion to the throne of his glory in the heavens, when all the angels of God worſhipped him. Hitherto Moſes had ſuppoſed, in this ſong, great enmity between them; and that ſometimes they had ſeverely plagued Iſrael; as at others, God rendered to them according to what they had done to his people. But now he breaks out into a rapture of joy, to think that they ſhould one day be reconciled, and made one people of God. And the LXX thus underſtanding it, might well preface to their tranſlation of this verſe, with the words now mentioned, "Rejoice ye heavens together with him." For, if there be joy in heaven, as Procopius Gazæus well gloſſes, at the repentance of one ſinner, how much more for the ſalvation of the whole world, by deſtroying the devil's tyranny? which being to be performed by the advancement of the Son of God into the heavens, the next words might well be added, "Let all the angels of God "worſhip him." Which they had always done, (the ſame Procopius obſerves) as their God who created them: But now they praiſe and extoll his humanity, exalted at the right hand of God.

—— For he will avenge the blood of his ſervants.] Theſe words ſeem to expreſs ſome of the motives that ſhould perſuade the Gentiles to become one body with the Jews, (for ſuch the apoſtles, and all the firſt converts were) God puniſhing all thoſe who ſhed the blood of his ſervants; as the Chriſtian martyrs are called in the book of the Revelations. In which confidence the LXX add another ſentence before theſe words, καὶ ἐνισχυσάτωσαν αὐτῷ πάντες υἱοὶ Θεοῦ, "and let all the ſons of God be "ſtrong in him."

——— And will render vengeance to his adverſaries.] To all ſuch who oppoſe this bleſſed union; and firſt to the Jews, who ſet themſelves againſt it, more than any others, being mad at the apoſtles for preaching to the Gentiles, and then to the Romans, who perſecuted all thoſe who embraced Chriſtianity.

——— And will be merciful unto his land.] This cannot be meant of the land of Iſrael, which was no longer God's land than any other, but of the whole earth, (as Courad. Pellicanus well explains it) in which that one people of God dwells, reduced, as he ſpeaks, in the whole multitude of the faithful into one Catholick Church. For they all acknowledge, from the greateſt to the leaſt, that one only omnipotent God, with no leſs devotion and affection, than Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, and Moſes did.

—— And to his people.] The whole world that believe in Chriſt, who are his faithful ſervants; whoſe blood he will avenge, Rev. xix. 2. and then ſet up his tabernacle with men, and dwell with them, and they ſhall be his people, and he will be their God, Rev. xx. 3. which we mention, becauſe this part of the prophecy reaches unto the laſt times, and is not yet all fulfilled.

Thus this famous ſong concludes, which, as the Jews reckon, conſiſts of ſeventy verſes, each of which contains two diſtinct and entire ſentences; and, as they fancy, are a compendium of the whole law of Moſes. Nay, ſome of them (ſuch are the idle conceits of this nation) think this hymn is ſo perfect a prophecy, that it contains in it the names of all the men in the world; which they undertake to find, and by that verſicle where it is, to tell what fortune he, whoſe name they ſeek, ſhall have in the world. Thus, inſtead of obſerving ſeriouſly what Moſes foretold would certainly befall themſelves, their ſuperſtition and hardneſs of heart have led them to vain conjectures concerning other men. See Wagenſeil upon Sota, p. 194, &c. where he ſaith, a Jew undertook to ſhew him his name in this ſong, which fell out in a verſe that ſignified proſperity to him. And, ſince him, Martinus Mauritius, in his book, de Sortitione Hebræorum, cap. 16. ſect. 3, 4, 5.

Ver. 45. And Moſes made an end of ſpeaking all theſe words to all Iſrael.] When he had made an end of reciting the foregoing ſong, he added what follows.

Ver. 46. And he ſaid unto them, ſet your hearts unto all the words which I teſtify among you this day.] Be ſedulous to enforce upon your ſelves the obſervation of all theſe things. For this expreſſion is a little more than letting them be in their heart, vi. 6. or laying them up in their heart, xi. 18. For they were ſo to retain the remembrance of them, as to attend unto them, and conſider them.

Ver. 47. For it is not a vain thing for you.] Ye ſhall not employ your diligence in this matter unprofitably. The Jews upon theſe words have founded a maxim, which Maimonides often mentions, "that every precept hath "its end and uſe; which tho' they do not appear to us, "are grounded upon ſtrong cauſes and reaſons." More Nevochim, p. 111. cap. 26. & 50. The deſign, for inſtance, of many ceremonial laws, cannot now be fully diſcerned, becauſe they were inſtituted directly contrary to the idolatrous rites of the Zabii; which are long ſince utterly aboliſhed, and but imperfectly recorded in thoſe ancient authors that treat of them.

——— Becauſe it is your life.] The means to make you an happy people. Here are two benefits, ſaith R. Iſaac, which are promiſed by the obſervation of this law, a ſpiritual and a corporal. The ſpiritual in theſe words, and the corporal in the next, ye ſhall prolong your days, &c. And he puts the ſpiritual firſt, tho' among all corporal bleſſings, this of long life be the chief, Chiſſuk Emuna, P. i. cap. 18

Ver. 48. And the Lord ſpake unto Moſes that ſelf ſame day.] Immediately after he had ended the foregoing ſong, and given them this admonition at the concluſion of it.

Ver. 49. Get thee up into this mountain Abarim.] Which he had pointed him unto before, and told him what he doth now, Numb. xxvii. 12.

—— Unto mount Nebo.] Abarim was a ridge of hills, whereof Nebo was one, ſee Numb. xxvii. 2.

—— Which is in the land of Moab, that is over-againſt Jericho.] This is a more particular deſcription of the ſituation of this mountain, than he gave before in the book of Numbers.

——— Behold the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Iſrael for a poſſeſſion.] Which he might eaſily ſee from the higheſt part of the mountain, called Piſgah, Deut. iii. 27.

Ver. 50. And die in the mount whither thou goeſt up.] After he had taken a view of the land every way.

——— And be gathered to thy people.] To Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob. This ſignifies, ſaith R. Iſaac, that he ſhould be aſſociated and joined to the ſouls of the juſt, who are called his people. For the people of Moſes were not buried in mount Abarim; and therefore he doth not ſpeak of gathering his body to their bodies, but of his ſoul to their ſouls, Chiſſuk Emuna, P. i. cap. 11.

Ver. 52. Yet thou ſhalt ſee the land before thee.] He had earneſtly begged of God that he might go over Jordan; but he denied him that favour, Deut. i. 37. iii. 25, 27. yet he was pleaſed to mitigate his puniſhment, by letting him enjoy a ſight of that good country, into which he might not enter.

—— But thou ſhalt not go thither unto the land which I gave the children of Iſrael.] By which the Iſraelites ſhould have learnt, that as Moſes left them ſhort of the promiſed land, and could not bring them into the poſſeſſion of it; ſo his law did not contain a perfect revelation of God's will, but they were to expect ſomething beyond it.

CHAP. XXXIII.

1 The Majeſty of God. 6 The bleſſings of the twelve tribes. 26 The excellency of Iſrael.

AND this is the bleſſing wherewith Moſes the man of God bleſſed the children of Iſrael before his death.

2 And he ſaid, The LORD came from Sinai, and roſe up from Seir unto them; he ſhined forth from mount Paran, and he came with ten thouſands of ſaints: from his right hand went a fiery law for them.

3 Yea, he loved the people; all his ſaints are in thy hand: and they ſat down at thy feet; every one ſhall receive of thy words.

4 Moſes commanded us a law: even the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob.

5 And he was king in Jeſhurun, when the heads of the people, and the tribes of Iſrael were gathered together.

6 ¶ Let Reuben live, and not die; and let not his men be few.

7 ¶ And this is the bleſſing of Judah; and he ſaid, Hear, LORD, the voice of Judah, and bring him unto his people: let his hands be ſufficient for him, and be thou an help to him from his enemies.

8 ¶ And of Levi he ſaid, Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one whom thou didſt prove at Maſſah, and with whom thou didſt ſtrive at the waters of Meribah;

9 Who ſaid unto his father, and to his mother, I have not ſeen him, neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor knew his own children: for they have obſerved thy word, and kept thy covenant.

10 They

10 They ſhall teach Jacob thy judgments, and Iſrael thy law: they ſhall put incenſe before thee, and whole-burnt-ſacrifice upon thine altar.

11 Bleſs, LORD, his ſubſtance, and accept the work of his hands: ſmite through the loins of them that riſe againſt him, and of them that hate him, that they riſe not again.

12 ¶ And of Benjamin he ſaid, The beloved of the LORD ſhall dwell in ſafety by him; and the LORD ſhall cover him all the day long, and he ſhall dwell between his ſhoulders.

13 ¶ And of Joſeph he ſaid, Bleſſed of the LORD be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath,

14 And for the precious fruits brought forth by the ſun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon,

15 And for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the laſting hills,

16 And for the precious things of the earth, and fulneſs thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the buſh: let the bleſſing come upon the head of Joſeph, and upon the top of the head of him that was ſeparated from his brethren.

17 His glory is like the firſtling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he ſhall puſh the people together, to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thouſands of Ephraim, and they are the thouſands of Manaſſeh.

18 ¶ And of Zebulun he ſaid, Rejoice, Zebulun, in thy going out; and Iſſachar, in thy tents.

19 They ſhall call the people unto the mountain, there they ſhall offer ſacrifices of righteouſneſs: for they ſhall ſuck of the abundance of the ſeas, and of treaſures hid in the ſand.

20 And of Gad he ſaid, Bleſſed be he that enlargeth Gad: he dwelleth as a lion, and teareth the arm with the crown of the head.

21 And he provided the firſt part for himſelf, becauſe there, in a portion of the law-giver was he ſeated; and he came with the heads of the people, he executed the juſtice of the LORD, and his judgments with Iſrael.

22 ¶ And of Dan he ſaid, Dan is a lions whelp: he ſhall leap from Baſhan.

23 ¶ And of Naphtali he ſaid, O Naphtali, ſatisfied with favour, and full with the bleſſing of the LORD: poſſeſs thou the weſt and the ſouth.

24 ¶ And of Aſher he ſaid, Let Aſher be bleſſed with children; let him be acceptable to his brethren, and let him dip his foot in oil.

25 Thy ſhoes ſhall be iron and braſs; and as thy days, ſo ſhall thy ſtrength be.

26 ¶ There is none like unto the God of Jeſhurun, who rideth upon the heaven in thy help, and in his excellency on the ſky.

27 The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlaſting arms: and he ſhall thruſt out the enemy from before thee, and ſhall ſay, Deſtroy them.

28 Iſrael then ſhall dwell in ſafety alone: the fountain of Jacob ſhall be upon a land of corn and wine, alſo his heavens ſhall drop down dew.

29 Happy art thou, O Iſrael: who is like unto thee, O people ſaved by the LORD, the ſhield of thy help, and who is the ſword of thy excellency! and thine enemies ſhall be found liars unto thee, and thou ſhalt tread upon their high places.

Ver. 1. And this is the bleſſing.] As Jacob bleſſed his children, at his departure out of the world, when God had begun to fulfill the promiſe to Abraham, of giving him a numerous offspring; ſo Moſes having ſeen them vaſtly increaſed, and ready to enter upon the land promiſed to them, Gen. xv. 18, &c. takes his farewel of them, with a bleſſing pronounced upon the people in general, and upon each tribe in particular: Which is in part prophetical, as the bleſſing of Jacob was, and delivered in the prophetic ſtile, which hath ſome difficulty and obſcurity in it; on purpoſe, perhaps, to excite their diligent ſtudy to enquire into the meaning. See Gen. xlix. 1. 3.

——— Wherewith Moſes the man of God.] Or, the prophet of the Lord, as Onkelos tranſlates it; for prophets are called men of God in the holy books, 1 Sam. ix. 6, 7, 8. 1 Kings xiii. 1. 1 Tim. vi. 11. 2 Tim. iii. 17. 2 Peter i. 21. becauſe in the exerciſe of their ſacred function, they did not deliver their own ſenſe, nor the ſenſe of other men, but the mind and will of God, who ſpake by them.

——— Bleſſed the children of Iſrael before his death.] Before he went up into mount Abarim to die, xxxii. 49. he prayed God to bleſs them, and alſo foretold their future ſtate and condition. Such had been the ancient cuſtom among the holy patriarchs, (as we learn from the example of Jacob) to admoniſh their poſterity, upon their dying beds, of ſuch things as they thought moſt imported them: For then they could not but be thought to ſpeak moſt ſincerely, and their words were apt to be entertained with greater reſpect, and preſerved in mind with greater care. Moſes therefore, their deliverer, leader, and law-giver, concludes his life in the ſame manner, and, its very likely, depoſited theſe dying words with them in writing.

Ver. 2. And he ſaid, the Lord came from Sinai.] In the firſt place, he endeavours to make them ſenſible of what God had done already for them; and the chief of all his benefits being the revelation of his mind and will to them, he commemorates that as a common bleſſing to them all, before he begins to ſpeak in particular to each tribe: For that is meant by the Lord came from Sinai, where he appeared in a moſt glorious manner, and from thence promulgated his law with the greateſt ſolemnity, Exod.

Exod. xx. And thus the Gentiles took an unwonted brightneſs in any place to be a token of the Ἐπιφάνεια, appearance or advent of ſome of their gods in that place. As alſo a great commotion in any place they took for another token of it. (See the illuſtrious Spanhemius, in his annotations upon Callimachus's hymn to Apollo, ver. 7.) which the Pagans ſeem to have learnt from this appearance of God on mount Sinai, and the quaking of that mountain, when God appeared on it.

—— And roſe up from Seir unto them, and ſhone forth from mount Paran.] There is no difficulty in the foregoing words, it being evident that God came down on mount Sinai, and thence delivered his commands to the Iſraelites, and eſpouſed them for his people; but how he roſe up to them from Seir, the country of Edom, and ſhone from Paran, the country of Iſhmael, is not ſo eaſy to be underſtood. The Jews indeed, who are wont to ſolve all difficulties, by inventing what they pleaſe, are not troubled to give an account of theſe words; which ſignify, they fancy, that the divine glory firſt reſided upon mount Seir, where God propounded his law to the children of Eſau; but they would not have it, becauſe they found theſe words in it, thou ſhalt not ſteal; ſo he came to Sinai, and gave it to the Iſraelites, who ſaid, All the words which the Lord hath ſaid, will we do, Exod. xxiv. 3. Thus the Jeruſalem Targum, and Pirke Elieſer, and ſome other more ancient authors, with this addition, that he offered the law to all the nations of the world, but they rejected it, becauſe it is written, thou ſhalt have none other gods but me. But this looks ſo like a fable, that ſome of themſelves are aſhamed of it, and have given a better ſenſe of the words, tho' we cannot ſay the true one. For thus Abraham Peritſol expounds them, "The "true law came out of Sinai to the Iſraelites, by "which the Edomites were ſo enlightned, that God "might be ſaid to riſe up to them alſo: And afterward "the celeſtial influence ſhone out of this law to the Iſh-"maelites, who were the better for it." Thus Conſtan. L'Empereur reports his ſenſe in his annotations upon Bava Kama, cap. 4. ſect. 3. where he endeavours to make out a plainer ſenſe of theſe words, in this manner: Tho' the mountain of Paran was nigher to Sinai than Seir was, and firſt occurred to thoſe who went out of Egypt; yet there was great reaſon to mention Seir before it, becauſe Moſes had reſpect to the order of their journies, which were ſo directed by divine providence, that fetching a long circuit, forward and backward, they ſhould come to Canaan. In all which turnings and windings they were marvelouſly preſerved and provided for, by the ſame good providence which conducted them. Of this Moſes here makes a thankful commemoration, how he led them from mount Sinai to the borders of the land of Canaan, toward mount Seir, (compare Deut. i. 19. with ii. 1. and Numb. xx. 14.) From whence, by reaſon of their infidelity, they were led back again in a long circuit, to the eaſt part of the land of Canaan. This may be one reaſon why theſe two places are mentioned together with Sinai, that God, who there appeared to them, was with them all the time they wandered about in the wilderneſs, till he brought them to the borders of Canaan, where they now were. And another may be, becauſe in mount Seir the brazen ſerpent was erected by God's order, for the cure of ſuch as were bitten by ſerpents, when they looked on it, which was an illuſtrious type of our bleſſed Saviour, and the ſalvation wrought by him, Numb. xx. 4, 9. And in the deſert to which Paran gave the name, (becauſe it overlooked the whole, tho' very large) they received the joyful news, that they ſhould march into Canaan: Or, as Chytræus underſtands it, in the wilderneſs of Paran the ſeventy elders received the ſpirit, to make them aſſiſtants to Moſes in the government, Numb. x. 12. xi. 24, &c. And here we may add, Moſes repeated his law to them, Deut. i. 1, 5. and ſeems in this verſe to follow a metaphor borrowed from the ſun, which firſt illuminates the air, and then riſes, and ſpreads abroad his beams, as God by degrees declared his preſence with his people, whitherſoever they went, firſt at mount Sinai, then at Seir, and laſt of all here, in the wilderneſs of Paran.

But it muſt be acknowledged, that theſe words may be interpreted in a more ſimple manner, they being but a farther amplification of what was ſaid in the firſt words, the Lord came from Sinai, when at the ſame time he roſe up from Seir, and ſhone forth from mount Paran. For theſe mountains were very near one another; or rather, parts of one and the ſame ridge of mountains; for Teman, (which is the ſame with Paran, Habak. iii. 3.) was near to Edom, whoſe chief city was Boſra, Amos i. 12. as that was near to Sinai.

The ignorance of the Mohammedans is much to be pitied, who out of this place imagine they have found as good an authority for the Koran, as there is for the law of Moſes, and for the Goſpel of Chriſt. For thus they interpret theſe words, "God gave the law from Sinai, and "the Goſpel from Seir," (which they would have to be the ſame with Galilee, which our Saviour much frequented) and the Koran, from mount Paran; which they fancy is a mountain not far from Mecca. But the laſt words of this verſe, for them, are ſufficient to confute theſe conceits; for they plainly ſhew that the whole verſe ſpeaks of the people of Iſrael.

—— And he came with ten thouſands of Saints.] Or, as our Mr. Mede thinks, it ſhould be tranſlated, "with "his holy ten thouſands," or myriads, that is, attended with an innumerable company of angels, who waited on him at the promulgation of the law. See Pſalm lxviii. 7. Dan. vii. 10. of which Enoch, perhaps, propheſied in part, Jude xiv. 15. And from hence it may be thought, that notion of the Jewiſh doctors, followed by St. Stephen and St. Paul, that the law was given by angels, had its origin, (Mede, book ii. p. 437.) that is, they attended upon God, as his miniſters, when he himſelf gave the law.

——From his right hand went a fiery law for them.] For the law of Moſes was given out of the midſt of fire, and therefore called, a fire of law, as the words are in the Hebrew, Exod. xix. 16, 18. Deut. iv. 11, 12. v. 22. 23, 24. The Cabaliſts (as Reuchlin obſerves) fancy, that God wrote the law in a globe of fire, and ſent it to them. But the Jeruſalem Targum is more ſober, and thus expounds it, "He ſtretched his right hand out of the midſt "of flames of fire, and gave the law unto his people." And Onkelos ſtill better, The law written with his right hand he gave us out of the midſt of fire. Or, as Campeg. Vitringa would have the latter part of this verſe tranſlated, "on his right hand a fire, and out of the fire a "law for them." The meaning being, that God came to mount Sinai with that fire; for, in ſcripture, "to be on "the right hand" of any one, is to accompany him, lib. 2. Obſerv. Sacr. cap. 4.

By the concluſion of this verſe, it is apparent, that the former part of it belongs entirely to God's mercy to the children of Iſrael, upon whom he beſtowed the law, in moſt illuſtrious tokens of his preſence. Which renders it highly probable, that his "riſing up from Seir upon them, "and ſhining from mount Paran," belong to the ſame matter, that is, the cloud, wherein he deſcended on Sinai, with a vaſt hoſt of angels, extended it ſelf ſo far, as to cover the neighbouring mountains of Seir and Paran. Tho' the meaning may be, as we have ſhewn, that he continued his preſence with them after they went from Sinai, thro' all their journies in the wilderneſs of Seir and Paran, till they came to the place where they now were.

Ver. 3. Yea, he loved the people.] All this was the effect of his love and kindneſs to the people of Iſrael, whom he owned for his ſon, and for his firſt-born, Exod. iv. 22. and therefore in a tender manner brought them out of Egypt, Exod. xix. 4. that he might inſtruct them in his laws.

—— All his ſaints are in thy hand.] Whereby he made them an holy nation, (as it there follows in Exod. xix. 5.) whom he took into his ſpecial care and moſt gracious protection, as this phraſe ſignifies in many places, Numb. iv. 28, 3. And Onkelos refers it to the mighty power, whereby he brought them out of Egypt. But it may have reſpect to God's preſervation and ſupport of them, when he gave the law in ſuch a terrible manner, that Moſes himſelf quaked, and yet none of them received any harm. As for the change of the perſon from his to thy, it is very frequent in this language, particularly in Dan. ix. 4.

—— And they ſat down at thy feet.] The firſt word (which we tranſlate, ſat down) being no where elſe found but here, and Iſaiah i. 5. where it plainly hath another ſenſe, hath occaſioned various interpretations of this ſentence.

ſentence. But moſt agree in this, of Sol. Jarchi, that as ſcholars ſat at the feet of the maſter round about him, while he taught them their leſſon, ſo the people encompaſſed the mount where God was, and heard his law, which he thence delivered. But it is a queſtion, whether there was ſuch a cuſtom of ſcholars in thoſe days; and the people did not ſit, but ſtood at the foot of the mount, Exod. xx. 18. Therefore Onkelos underſtands this of their ſitting down, or pitching their tents, where the glorious cloud that led them reſted, Numb. x. 12, 33.

——Every one ſhall receive of thy words.] This ſtill is commonly referred to the peoples receiving the law. But Onkelos thinks it hath reſpect to their journies "at the "commandment of the Lord," Numb. x 13. For ſo he interprets it, "They went forward according to thy word." And ſo the Jeruſalem Targum expounds theſe and the following words; "Behold they were led, and came to the "foot of his cloud, and went forward, and reſted accord-"ing to the command of his word." It takes in alſo the other ſenſe of the word Tucchu, (as it ſignifies ſmiting in Iſaiah i. 5.) in this manner, "Though he inflicted many "chaſtiſements upon them, yet they did not ceaſe, nor "deſiſt from the doctrine of the law."

Ver. 4. Moſes commanded us a law.] When he was about to depart from them he commanded them to obſerve that law which God had given them. This he did in this very book, chap. i. 3. v. 1. vi. 1. viii. 1, &c. He ſpeaks of himſelf in the third perſon, which is very uſual throughout all this book.

—— Even the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob.] As a peculiar bleſſing which God had beſtowed on them, and on their poſterity, above all other nations of the world, Deut. iv. 8. who, as they had not this law given to them, ſo they were not bound to obſerve it; as the Jews themſelves conclude from this very place. Nor did they force any body to embrace this law, when they made a conqueſt of a neighbouring country, but left them to their liberty, provided they would become proſelytes of the gate, that is, forſake idolatry, and keep the common precepts enjoyned to all mankind. Thus Maimonides interprets the word inheritance.

Ver. 5. And he was king in Jeſhurun.] Or, For he was king, that is, under God, the ſupreme ruler and governor of Iſrael; and therefore, in his name, and by his authority, required them to obſerve theſe laws. Which plainly ſhews him to have had the ſupreme power in all things, both civil and ſacred. Which is excellently expreſſed by our Mr. Thorndike, in his Review of the Rites of the Church, &c. p. 68. where he obſerves, "That the "Iſraelites being made a free people by the act of God, "bringing them out of Egypt, and entitling them to the "land of Canaan, upon the covenant of the law, had "Moſes not only for their prophet and their prieſt, (for "by him Aaron and his ſucceſſors were put into the "prieſthood, and the tabernacle, and all belonging to it, "were conſecrated) but alſo for their king, their law-"giver, their judge, and commander in chief of their "forces, under God, if not rather God by Moſes. For "we find, that after Moſes's deceaſe, either God, by "ſome extraordinary ſignification of his will and pleaſure, "ſtirred up ſome man in his ſtead for the time; or if there "was none ſuch, ruled their proceedings himſelf, by "Urim and Thummim, anſwering their demands, and "directing what to do, and what to follow, in all the "publick affairs that concerned the ſtate of that people. "Whereupon, when they required Samuel to make them "a king, he declared, it was not Samuel, but himſelf "whom they had rejected: Becauſe they rejected him "whom God had immediately ſet over them in his own "ſtead, by whoſe death the power returned to God, as "at the beginning."

Ver. 6. Let Reuben live, and not die, and let not his men be few.] In the laſt clauſe of this verſe, we repeat the word not (which is wanting in the Hebrew) without any neceſſity: For the words may be thus tranſlated exactly, "Let Reuben live, and not die, though his men be "few". Which ſeems to be a confirmation of the prophecy of Jacob, Gen. xlix. 4. "That he ſhould not excel, "and yet ſhould live, and not periſh," that is, be in ſome meaſure a flouriſhing tribe, tho' not ſo numerous as ſome others. And poſſibly it may be here ſuggeſted, that tho' they paſſed over Jordan before their brethren, to ſettle them there, (according to their engagement, Numb. xxxii. 27. Joſh. iv. 12, 13.) yet none of them ſhould periſh, but both they, and their wives and children, that ſtaid behind, ſhould be preſerved.

Ver. 7. And this is the bleſſing of Judah.] As much as to ſay, Judah ſhall be remarkably bleſſed. For theſe words [this is the bleſſing] are uſed of none of the reſt of the tribes, either of Reuben, which went before, or the others that follow. Here is no mention made of Simeon, (who was next to Reuben) becauſe that tribe was included in Judah, with whom their poſſeſſions were mixed, Joſh. xix. 1. and therefore went together to make expeditions, Judg. i. 3. Judah alſo is here mentioned before Levi, becauſe it was to be the royal tribe, according to the prophecy of Jacob; which Moſes was aſſured God would fulfil, and therefore prays as follows; "And he "ſaid, hear, Lord, the voice of Judah." Grant his petition, when he calls for help againſt his enemies. So Onkelos paraphraſes it, "Hear his prayer, when he goes "forth to war."

——And bring him unto his people.] Return him home in peace unto his people, as the ſame Onkelos expounds it.

—— Let his hands be ſufficient for him.] To avenge him of his enemies, as he alſo explains it.

—— And be thou an help to him from his enemies.] Suffer them not to prevail over him, but give him the victory, when he fights with them. So the Jeruſalem Targum paraphraſes theſe two laſt paſſages; "Let his hands "exerciſe revenge upon his enemies in battles, and do "thou ſupport and ſuſtain him againſt thoſe that hate "him". This was notoriouſly fulfilled in this tribe, which was the moſt valiant and ſucceſsful of all others. For, in all their wars, this tribe was the principal; and the ſafety of all the reſt ſeems to have depended upon this. See Judges i. 1, 2, &c. xx. 18. And as theſe places ſhew this was the moſt conſiderable tribe, before they had kings, ſo after that, it was able, together with Benjamin, to maintain its ground againſt the other ten tribes, and all other oppoſers.

Ver. 8. And of Levi he ſaid, let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one.] Continue in this tribe the high dignity of conſulting with thee, and receiving directions from thee, by the high-prieſt, concerning the publick ſafety. Or, as ſome take it, (becauſe Thummim is here ſet before Urim, which it is not in any other place) make them upright and faithful, as well as underſtanding and knowing, in the diſcharge of their duty. For though by holy one be principally meant the high-prieſt, who was in a peculiar manner anointed to be ſeparated to the ſervice of God, eſpecially in this part of it, to approach him with Urim and Thummim, (which gave Aaron the name of the Saint of the Lord, Pſalm cvi. 16,) yet it comprehends all the reſt of the prieſts and Levites, in conjunction with him; for they were all ſeparated unto the Lord, when their brethren apoſtatized to idolatry. Of which, Moſes takes notice in the next verſe, "Who ſaid unto his "father, &c. I have not ſeen him," &c. regarded, that is, no relation when they executed the commands of God againſt the worſhippers of the golden calf. See our learned Dr. Spencer, de Leg. Hebr. lib. iii. cap. 7. Diſſert. 7. where he treats alſo of theſe words, as they may be applied to our Lord Chriſt, the true holy one of God; who is, indeed, a prieſt for ever, holy, harmleſs, undefiled, ſeparate from ſinners, &c. Heb. vii, 26.

——Whom thou didſt prove at Maſſah.] Or, whom thou haſt thoroughly proved. For, the words in the Hebrew are, "Whom in proving thou didſt prove;" the ancient interpreters not taking Maſſah for the name of a place, as we do, but for trying and proving. And ſo, indeed, the words in the Hebrew ſeem to import; the particle beth, before Maſſah, being different from that before Meribah; [which is al,] though we tranſlate them both alike by the word at. And thus the Jeruſalem Targum paraphraſes, "Whom thou didſt prove, or try, and he "ſtood in the tryal"; that is, approved himſelf perfect or upright, as Onkelos expreſſes it. This procured that tribe a bleſſing from the Lord, Exod. xxxii. 26, 29. and brought them into "ſpecial grace and favour with "him," as the word we tranſlate, holy one, ſignifies. For it is not kadoth, but chaſid.

——And with whom thou didſt ſtrive at the waters of Meribah.] Tho' God did ſeverely chide and reprove Moſes and Aaron, (who were the heads of this tribe) when they were tried at the waters of ſtriſe, Numb. xx. 12, 13. Yet they did not forfeit their office by the offence they then committed: And therefore Moſes prays that the ſacerdotal dignity might ſtill continue in Aaron's poſterity.

Ver. 9. Who ſaid unto his father and to his mother, I have not ſeen him, neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor knew his own children.] This relates to the impartial execution of judgment by the Levites, upon the worſhippers of the golden calf, without reſpect of perſons, Exod. xxxii. 26, &c. And as ſome will have it, to Phinea's zeal, mentioned in Numb. xxv. But that it hath any reſpect to a more ancient judgment, given in the caſe of Judah and Thamar, (as the Jeruſalem Targum fancies) there is no ground to believe. See Selden lib. 2. de Synedr. cap. 8.

——For they have obſerved thy word, and kept thy covenant.] Exod. xxxii 28, 29. Abarbinel and others, make this to be the reaſon of what follows.

Ver. 10. They ſhall teach Jacob thy judgments, and Iſrael thy law.] Becauſe they were ſo upright, as to take no notice of their deareſt relations, in judgment, therefore they were intruſted with this office of teaching the people the ſtatutes of God, that is, deciding all controverſies which aroſe about any thing in the law. So the Jews expound it, and it is agreeable to what we read in the ſeventeenth chapter of this book, ver. 9, 10. and many other places, as Mr. Selden ſhews in the place forenamed, p. 372, &c. and our Mr. Thorndike in his religious aſſemblies, chap. 2. where he obſerves, the teaching here mentioned, conſiſted in declaring the meaning and obligation of the law, in matters doubtful, as is apparent from Levit. x. 8, 9, 10, 11. For tho' others might be members of their courts of judgment, yet they conſiſted chiefly of prieſts and Levites. As for teaching the people in their religious aſſemblies, that was not ſo much the office of the prieſts and Levites, as of the prophets: For tho' the prophets and diſciples of the prophets, were commonly prieſts and Levites, (who being moſt free from the care of eſtates and inheritances, and by their office, in his ceremonial ſervice, came neareſt to God of all other men, were moſt likely to be endued with an extraordinary degree of knowledge, and of the fear of God) yet it is certain, that the charge of teaching people in their aſſemblies belonged as well to thoſe prophets who were not prieſts and Levites, as to thoſe that were. And this was one reaſon, as Maimonides obſerves, why the tribe of Levi might have no inheritance in the land, that being free from the trouble of ploughing and ſowing, &c. they might wholly attend to the ſtudy of the law, and be able to teach Iſrael God's judgments. More Nevochim. P. III. cap. 33.

——They ſhall put incenſe before thee, and whole burnt-offerings upon thine altar.] This was the peculiar office and honour of the prieſts alone, to offer incenſe on the golden altar, and burnt-offerings on the brazen. The Jeruſalem Targum thus paraphraſes it, "They ſhall "put incenſe of precious ſpice before thee, to pacify "thine anger, and offer a moſt acceptable ſacrifice upon "thine altar."

Ver. 11. Bleſs, Lord, his ſubſtance.] The word we here render ſubſtance, is tranſlated wealth, viii. 17, 18. which conſiſted moſt in cattle, (they having no land to till) which he prays God to increaſe, that they might have ſufficient ſuſtenance for themſelves and their families. It is a ſtrange fancy of ſome of the Jews, that whoſoever offered incenſe grew rich, and therefore no prieſt was ſuffer'd to offer it more than once, that ſo riches might be derived to them all.

——And accept the work of his hands.] All their miniſtry at the altar, where the prieſts officiated; or about the tabernacle, of which the Levites had the care.

——Smite through the loins of them that riſe againſt him, and of them that hate him, that they riſe not again.] For they who were enemies to the prieſts and Levites, were enemies to religion, and all civil government; which was chiefly adminiſtred by them, as was before obſerved. See ch. xvii. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12.

Ver. 12. And of Benjamin he ſaid.] Benjamin is mentioned next to Levi, becauſe the temple, in which the prieſts officiated, was partly ſituated in his lot.

——The beloved of the Lord.] Or, being beloved of the Lord, as the LXX. interpret it, Ἠγαπημένῳ ὑπὸ Κυρίου.

——Shall dwell in ſafety by him.] That is, by the Lord: which ſignifies the ſtability of his portion, which had Jeruſalem, the holy city, in it, as we read, Joſh. xviii. 28. For tho' mount Sion was in the tribe of Judah, and the ſanctuary was likewiſe there, Pſalm lxxviii. 68. yet the city, wherein it ſtood, was not. Nay, the ancients think the altar of burnt-offering was in the tribe of Benjamin, as Kimchi obſerves upon that place before-mentioned in Joſhua. And there are reaſons to make one think, that Sion, in the place fore-named, and in others, is to be taken in a large ſenſe, comprehending mount Moriah alſo, (on which the temple was erected, 2 Chron. iii. 1.) which was in the tribe of Benjamin, and conſequently the temple was ſituated in the ſame tribe.

——And the Lord ſhall cover him all the day long.] The glory of the majeſtic preſence of the Lord ſhall be a ſhield over him (to defend him) continually; as the Jeruſalem Targum expounds it.

——And he ſhall dwell between his ſhoulders.] For "the divine Majeſty" (ſaith Onkelos) "ſhall dwell in his "country." It being in the temple, and the temple in the tribe of Benjamin, where it ſtood upon mount Moriah, as the head of a man doth upon his ſhoulders, as Dr. Lightfoot gloſſes in his Temple-Service, p. 145. edit. 1. Or the word we tranſlate here, ſhoulders, may ſignify ſides, as it is rendered in other places, Numb. xxxiv. 11. or borders. And nothing is more certain, than that the divine habitation was in the borders of Benjamin, whoſe lot extended to that of Judah at Jeruſalem; and was ſo united to it, that when the reſt fell off from Judah, the tribe of Benjamin always adhered to it.

This being the ſenſe which the ancient interpreters give of this verſe, and very agreeable to the words, we ſhall not trouble the reader with any other; but only mention a conceit of Conradus Pellicanus, who, "by the beloved of "the Lord," here underſtands David, who "dwelt in "ſafety by Benjamin," tho' the king of that tribe perſecuted him, for God covered and protected him continually from violence, &c. It is ſtrange that a man otherwiſe judicious, and well acquainted with the Jewiſh language, ſhould propound this as the beſt interpretation he could think of, when there is nothing of a bleſſing upon Benjamin contained in this paſſage.

Ver. 13. And of Joſeph he ſaid.] This tribe follows next, his lot falling near Benjamin, who lay between Judah and Joſeph.

——Bleſſed of the Lord be his land.] He foretels that this tribe ſhould be ſituated in a moſt plentiful country, and enriched by the divine bleſſing upon it.

——For the precious things of heaven.] Sending fruitful ſhowers from heaven.

——For the dew.] Together with the evening and morning dews, which are no leſs refreſhing to the earth than rain.

——And for the deep that coucheth beneath.] He means ſprings of water that burſt out of the bowels of the earth, for the uſe of man and beaſt.

Ver. 14. And for the precious fruits of the ſun.] Whoſe kindly heat brings them forth, and makes them grow to maturity.

——And for the precious things put forth by the moon.] For all things are plumped by the moon's cool and fattening moiſture in the night, which is digeſted by the ſun in the day: Or, this paſſage may relate to the ſeveral ſorts of fruit, which are produced every month. So Onkelos interprets it, "it produceth alſo ſweet fruits at the begin-"ning of every month." For the word Jerachim, in the Hebrew, being in the plural number, ſignifies moons, or months. And ſo the Jeruſalem Targum tranſlates it, in every new moon, which comprehends the whole month.

Ver. 15. And for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the laſting hills.] Such as mount Ephraim, and Samaria, and Baſhan, which were exceeding fruitful in grapes and olives, and ſuch like excellent fruit: And called ancient and laſting, becauſe they were coeval with the earth, and not caſt up by the art of men.

Ver.

Ver. 16. And for the precious things of the earth.] This ſeems to relate to their arable land, which he foretels ſhould bring forth great ſtore of all ſorts of corn.

The word Meged, which we tranſlate precious, is repeated five times in theſe three laſt verſes, ſignifying that which in its kind is moſt excellent, as that great man Ezekiel Spanhemius obſerves upon Callimachus's hymn to Diana, ver. 245. where mentioning ſeveral inſtruments of muſick among the Greeks, whoſe names were derived from the Hebrew, he thinks one, called Μάγαδις, (which was ἀρχαῖον ὄργανον, as Athenæus declares, but he could not tell whether a wind or ſtringed inſtrument) came from this Hebrew word Meged, for it was not of Greek original. And in Cant. iv. 13. this word is tranſlated pleaſant, as all muſick is; but that eſpecially which was made by this inſtrument Μάγαδις. For Plato, who took it for a ſtringed inſtrument, calls it πολυχορδώτατον; Anacreon ſaying he had one of twenty ſtrings, as Spanhemius notes upon the hymn in Delum, p. 472.

——And fulneſs thereof.] By the fulneſs of the earth, may be meant either the plenty and abundance of its fruits, or the ripeneſs thereof, as Bochart obſerves in his Canaan.

——— And for the good will of him that dwelt in the buſh.] That is, of God, whoſe Majeſty (as Onkelos paraphraſes) dwells in the heavens, and was revealed to Moſes in the buſh, Exod. iii. 2, 4. That is, the SCHECHINAH there appeared in a moſt glorious manner, and the Lord told Moſes he was there preſent, whoſe good will, which is the fountain of all bleſſings, (for to it they owed their deliverance out of Egypt, which God then promiſed to Moſes out of the buſh) Moſes wiſhed might be the peculiar portion of Joſeph.

——— Let the bleſſing come upon the head of Joſeph.] The word bleſſing is not in the Hebrew; but this being connected with the foregoing words, may be thought a prayer, that the good will of God, the fountain, as we ſaid, of all bleſſings, might reſt upon Joſeph. Or, as Onkelos tranſlates it, "Let all thoſe things" (before named) "come upon the head of Joſeph." And ſo the Jeruſalem Targum expounds it, "Let all thoſe bleſſings "come, and be made perfect upon the head of Joſeph."

———And upon the top of him, that was ſeparated from his brethren.] That is, ſaith the ſame Targum, "upon "him that was made ruler of all the land of Egypt, and "ſplendid in the honour given him by his brethren."

Ver. 17. His glory is like the firſtling of his bullock.] The ancients thought there was ſo much majeſty in the countenance of a bull, eſpecially of a young bullock in its prime, lifting up its head, that they made it an emblem of kingly power, as Bochart hath ſhewn out of ſeveral good authors, in his Hierozoicon, P. i. lib. ii. cap. 29. And accordingly it here ſignifies, that the tribe of Ephraim ſhould have royal authority eſtabliſhed in it. For he doth not compare the perſon of Joſeph to a young bullock, (though he was a goodly man, eminent for his beauty and comely proportion, Gen. xxxix. 6.) but the tribes which ſprang from him, as appears by the laſt words of this verſe; whoſe glory he here comparing to that of a young bullock, and the glory of this creature conſiſting in its ſtrength, the power of the tribes of Joſeph is hereby denoted; which was ſo great, that they were the chief ſupport of the kingdom of Iſrael, which began in Jeroboam, who was king of ten tribes; after whom, there followed a race of kings, till the captivity. There may be alſo ſome reſpect in theſe words unto Joſhua, the firſt governor of all the people, who was of the tribe of Ephraim; as of Manaſſeh were Jair, Jepthah and Gideon, who were famous men among the judges.

It is likewiſe remarkable, that Joſeph is here compared to the firſtling of a bullock, becauſe Reuben being ſet aſide for his inceſt, Joſeph had the right of primogeniture, in part, tranſlated unto him, 1 Chron. v. 1, 2. and, in conſequence of it, had a double portion in the land of Canaan.

It is to be noted likewiſe, that he is ſaid to be like unto the firſtling of his bullock, becauſe there were not more goodly bullocks any where, than in Baſhan, Amos iv. 1. which fell to the ſhare of ſome of the children of Manaſſeh, Joſh. xvii. 5.

There have been ſome great men, who from this place, and other conjectures, have fancied that Joſeph was worſhipped in Egypt after his death, under the form of an ox' by the name of Serapis; which conjecture Bochart has confuted in the fore-named book, cap. 34.

——— And his horns are like the horns of unicorns.] This is a farther deſcription of the power and ſtrength of the houſe of Joſeph: For an horn is every where an emblem of mighty power and force, and an unicorn (as we tranſlate the word reem) is ſuppoſed to be a very ſtrong and ſtately creature. But Bochart hath alledged a great number of particulars to prove, that reem is a ſort of wild goat in Arabia, as big as a deer, and of the ſame colour, which they now call Gazellas, P. I. Hierozoicon, lib. iii. cap. 27.

Some of theſe creatures were ſent, ſeveral years ago, to the French king, by the Divan of Tripoli; their horns were black, and ſhaped like thoſe of a goat, only they were round and pointed. But the fullneſs, ſtrength, and ſwiftneſs of this creature, together with its fierce untameable nature, induced Ludolphus (who at firſt was of Bochart's opinion) to conclude, upon ſecond thoughts, that the reem in ſcripture ſignifies the Rhinoceros, as the Vulgar Latin here tranſlates the word; ſee lib. i. Commentar. in Hiſtor. Æthiop. cap. 10. n. 74. which ſeems not ſo well to agree with theſe words of Moſes; which ſuppoſe the creature here ſpoken of to have two horns, (he uſing the plural number) with which the two tribes, deſcended from Joſeph, are very fitly compared. And ſo David mentions the horns of the reem, Pſalm xxii. 22. But whatſoever creature it was, princes and great men were frequently compared to it, as appears from Iſaiah xxxiv. 7. where the grandees (as we now ſpeak) of Edom are called unicorns, as in the following words they are compared to bullocks and bulls.

——With them he ſhall puſh the people together.] Throw down all that oppoſe him, particularly the Canaanites. "For theſe (ſaith the Jeruſalem Targum) are the great "men of the Amorites, whom Joſhua, the ſon of Nun, "ſlew; who was of the tribe of Ephraim; and the cap-"tains which Gideon, the ſon of Joaſh, ſlew; who was of "the tribe of Manaſſeh."

—— To the ends of the earth,] Of the land of Canaan.

——— And they are the ten thouſands of Ephraim, and they are the thouſands of Manaſſeh.] Theſe things ſhall be performed by the numerous armies of Ephraim and Manaſſeh; or theſe are the benedictions of theſe two tribes; the younger of which, he ſignifies, ſhould be more powerful than the elder, according to the prophecy of Jacob, Gen. xlviii. 19.

Ver. 18. And of Zebulun he ſaid, Rejoice Zebulun, in thy going out.] About their buſineſs, as the Jeruſalem Targum expounds it, that is, their merchandize; which they exerciſed upon the ſea of Geneſaret, where they were ſituated, and not far from the Mediterranean; in which, he prays they might have ſuch good ſucceſs, as to fill their hearts with joy. There are thoſe who underſtand this of their going out to war againſt their enemies, which is the expoſition of Onkelos. And ſo this phraſe is often uſed, particularly in Gen. xiv. 8. and the valour of this tribe is, upon one occaſion, celebrated in Judges v. 18. But Jacob's prophecy determines us rather to the other ſenſe, Gen. xlix. 13. where he repreſents this tribe as mariners, rather than ſoldiers. Though it muſt be acknowledged, that there were great numbers among them in David's time, who were expert warriors, 1 Chron. xii. 33. and that the Iſraelites generally were not addicted to traffic, the ſea-coaſt being poſſeſſed by the Philiſtines, and the Canaanites, except that part which belonged to this tribe.

——— And Iſſachar in thy tents.] The ſame Jeruſalem Targum expounds it, "Rejoice ye houſe of Iſſachar when "ye come into your ſchools": For this was a learned tribe, at leaſt in ſome ages, as appears from 1 Chron. xii. 32.

But Jacob's prophecy determines us rather to another ſenſe, which is, that they ſhould grow rich by feeding cattle, and by husbandry: For which, their country being very proper, they choſe rather that quiet kind of life, than merchandize. Though they were near neighbours to Zebulun, and for that reaſon, as well as becauſe they were brethren by the ſame mother, are here joined in one benediction. This ſeems alſo beſt to agree with the phraſe of rejoycing in their tents; in which they are ſaid anciently to dwell who fed cattle, Gen. iv. 10, And perhaps the learning that the children of Iſſachar are ſaid to have ac-

1 Chron. xii. 32. and which conſiſted in underſtanding the times, was nothing but their skill in the proper ſeaſons of ſowing, planting, and pruning, &c. to know what Iſrael ought to do in the management and improvement of their land; which was of great uſe eſpecially in that country.

Ver. 19. They ſhall call the people unto the mountain.] Here Moſes predicts, the houſe of God ſhould be ſet upon a mountain; unto which, he ſaith, Zebulun (for the latter end of the verſe ſhews he ſpeaks particularly of that tribe) ſhould invite the other tribes, by their forwardneſs and zeal, to go to worſhip God at the three great feſtivals. So the Jeruſalem Targum paraphraſes, "Behold, the "people of Zebulun ſhall be ready to go to the mount of "the holy houſe of the Lord." Or, by the people, perhaps are meant the Gentiles their neighbours, whom they ſhould endeavour to bring to the ſervice of the true God, which was eſpecially fulfilled when Chriſt came, Matth. iv. 15, 16.

——— There they ſhall offer ſacrifices of righteouſneſs.] Liberal ſacrifices, out of their honeſt gains by merchandize.

——— For they ſhall ſuck of the abundance of the ſeas.] Import abundance of various commodities, and grow rich by their traffic.

—— And of treaſures hid in the ſand.] This is a farther amplification of the ſame thing, relating particularly to their importation of gold, and ſilver, and precious ſtones, which are digged out of the earth. Some think it relates to the rich mines of this country; but of this we cannot find any proof.

Ver. 20. And of Gad he ſaid, bleſſed be he that enlargeth Gad.] That is, bleſſed be God, who hath allotted to him ſo large an inheritance; which he afterward alſo farther enlarged, as we read, 1 Chron. v. 18, 19, 20.

—— He dwelleth as a lion.] Lives ſecure and fearleſs, tho' encompaſſed with enemies, whom the Gadites tore to pieces, (as it here follows) when they offered to moleſt them. For this was a very warlike tribe, as we learn from 1 Chron. xii. 8. and therefore here compared to a lioneſs, ſo labi ſignifies, which equals a lion, if not exceeds him, in ſtrength and fierceneſs; as Bochart hath obſerved out of good authors, in his Hierozoicon, P. i. Lib. iii. cap. 20. And ſo Onkelos here tranſlates it, He dwelleth as a lioneſs. And the Jeruſalem Targum inſerts both, after this manner; He remains quiet, as a lion and a lioneſs; neither is there people or kingdom that ſhall ſtand before them.

——— And teareth the arm with the crown of the head.] Kills the princes with their kings, as Onkelos truly expounds it: For by arms are meant men of ſtrength and power; and by the crown of the head is properly to be underſtood the chief commander, ruler, or king. And therefore the LXX alſo tranſlate crown of the head by ἄρχοντα, prince, or ſupream governor.

Ver. 21. And he provided the firſt part for himſelf.] He firſt received his portion in the land which they conquered, as Onkelos expounds it. Which he is ſaid here to provide for himſelf, becauſe this tribe (with Reuben and part of Manaſſeh) deſired to be poſſeſſed of the country of Sion, which was accordingly given to them, Numb. xxxii. 1, 2, 33.

— Becauſe there, in a portion of the Law-giver.] Which Moſes, (who was their Law-giver) gave them by God's order, whereas the other nine tribes and a half, had theirs given them by Joſhua.

—— Was he ſeated.] The word in the Hebrew ſignifies hid, that is, protected, when, going to the war in Canaan, they left their wives, and children, and cattle, without any defence, but God's providence, according to the promiſe they made to Moſes, Numb. xxxvii. 16, 17, &c. What the Jeruſalem Targum, together with Onkelos, and ſeveral of the Rabbins, even Abarbinel himſelf, here ſay of Moſes being buried in this tribe (which they make the ſenſe of theſe words) we think is no more to the purpoſe, than what the Cabbaliſts obſerve upon this place, that in the bleſſing of Gad, the whole alphabet is found, becauſe Moſes, our maſter (ſaith Baal. Hatturim) was buried in his territory, who obſerved the law from Aleph to Tau, that is, from the beginning to the end.

——— And he came.] He ſpeaks of this as a thing already done, becauſe he certainly forſaw they would perform their engagement.

—— With the heads of the people.] With the chief commanders of the reſt of the tribes of Iſrael. Or, as the words may be tranſlated more literally, He came, the heads of the people, namely, the Gadites marched in the front, before the children of Iſrael. For ſo was the agreement between Moſes and them, as we read in Numb. xxxii. 17. that they ſhould go ready armed before the children of Iſrael, Of which engagement Joſhua reminds them when they were entering into Canaan, Joſh. i. 14. and they ſtood to it, ver. 16, 17.

—— He executed the juſtice of the Lord.] Upon the ſeven nations of Canaan, whom God commanded them to extirpate.

—— And his judgments with Iſrael.] Marching in the van of the Iſraelites to battle, till the whole country was ſubdued to them, Numb. xxxii. 21, 22, 29. Joſh. xxiii. 1, 2, 3. &c.

Ver. 22. And of Dan he ſaid, Dan is a lion's whelp.] Courageous as a young lion, according to Onkelos; and this prediction was moſt eminently verifyed in Sampſon, who was of this tribe, and whom the ſpirit of the Lord began to move in the camp of Dan, Judges xiii. 25.

—— He ſhall leap from Baſhan.] The tribe of Dan had no inheritance near Baſhan; but they are compared to the young lions of that place; for lions haunted mountains, Canticles iv. 8. and this mountain in particular was famous for them, and bred thoſe that were very fierce, which every one knows, leap upon their prey when they aſſault it, and faſten their nails and their teeth in it. So Bochart obſerves many ancient authors deſcribe them, P. i. Hierozoicon, Lib. iii. cap. 2. p. 789. And thus did the Danites on a ſudden leap from one end of Judæa to another, and ſeized on the city of Laiſh, near the fountain of Jordan, calling it by the name of Dan, as we read Judges xviii. 29.

Ver. 28. And of Naphtali he ſaid, O Naphtali, ſatisfied with favour.] That is, with the favour of God, which is explained in the next words.

—— And full with the bleſſing of the Lord.] The word full, as Maimonides obſerves, ſignifies that which is moſt perfect and abſolute in its kind, More Nevoch. P. i. cap. 19. Such was the country of Galilee, wherein this tribe had their poſſeſſion, which was πίων τε πᾶσα, καὶ εὐδοτῶ, &c. (as Joſephus ſpeaks, Lib. iii. de Bello Judaico, cap. 4.) fat throughout in all its parts, and very fertile, planted with all manner of trees, inſomuch, that it invited him to husbandry, who was averſe to labour, and by that means was entirely inhabited, and had no void place in all the country, &c.

—— Poſſeſs thou the weſt and the ſouth.] The ſame Joſephus repreſents this tribe as having poſſeſſed the eaſt and the north in the upper Galilee, Lib. v. Antiq. cap. 1. p. 142. which is directly contrary to what Moſes here declares; therefore Bochart in his Hierozoicon, P. i. Lib. iii. cap. 18. judiciouſly expounds theſe words of Moſes, not with reſpect to the whole land of Canaan, but to the Danites before mentioned. For the portion of Naphtali extended from the ſouth of the city called Dan, or Laiſh, to the ſea of Tiberias. And ſo the three Chaldee Paraphraſts expound the Hebrew word Jam, (which we tranſlate Weſt,) by the ſea of Tiberias, or Geneſaret, which is the ſame; for the Hebrews call great lakes by the name of ſeas. And by this ſea is not meant the Mediterranean, but the ſea of Galilee, or Tiberias, or Geneſaret; for by all theſe names it is called, as Mr. Selden obſerves in his Mare Cauſum, p. 21.

Ver. 24. And of Aſher he ſaid, Let Aſher be bleſſed with children.] With a numerous and beautiful iſſue.

—— Let him be acceptable to his brethren.] All the reſt of the Iſraelites ſhall court them for their goodly aſpect; or (as ſome rather think) he prophecies this tribe ſhould win the favour and affection of others, by their affability and obliging behaviour; for which Jacob predicts they ſhould be famous, Gen. xliv. 21.

—— And let him dip his foot in oil.] Be planted in a rich ſoil, full of olive trees, which ſhould make oil ſo plentiful, that they might not only waſh their faces, but their feet in it. Onkelos tranſlates it, He ſhall be nouriſhed with the delight of kings.

Ver.

Ver. 25. Thy ſhoes ſhall be iron and braſs.] Or, as the margin, under thy feet ſhall be iron; which hath induced ſome to think theſe minerals were dug out of Libanus, near to which lay the tribe of Aſher, who, according to this expoſition, trod upon a ſoil full of iron and braſs: But no author, as Bochart obſerves, mentions any ſuch thing as the braſs of Libanus; and therefore ſome underſtand by theſe expreſſions, the barbarous people who dwelt in Galilee of the Gentiles, and preſſed the Aſſerites, as an iron ſhoe, or fetters do the feet. But the Arabic here by Minal, which we tranſlate ſhoe, underſtands a bolt or bar, and renders this paſſage, thy bolts ſhall be iron and braſs. And ſo Kimchi expounding the words of Jonathan (who interprets it, thy habitation ſhall be as ſtrong, &c.) ſaith the meaning is, their country ſhould be as well fenced, as if it was ſhut up with brazen or iron walls; and R. Solomon to the ſame purpoſe: See Hierozoicon, P. ii. cap. 16. But the ſame Bochart acknowledges in his Phaleg, that Sarepta, which the Hebrews call Zarephath, 1 Kings xvii. 9.) a city of Sidon, had its name from the braſs and iron that was there melted, being in great plenty in that country, as the Hebrews gather from this bleſſing of the tribe of Aſher, (who were the inhabitants of thoſe places) iron and braſs are under thy ſhoe, as he there interprets it, Lib. iv. cap. 34. And ſo a very learned man long before him, David Chytræus, expounds theſe words, and adds this obſervation: "Nam Sidon & Sarepta, quæ "a metallis excoquendis nomen habet, in tribu Aſſer fu- "erunt. For Sidon and Sarepta, which had its name "from the melting of metals there, were in the tribe of "Aſher.

——And as thy days, ſo ſhall thy ſtrength be.] The ſame Chytræus expounds it, "All the time of their life, "they ſhould retain the ſame vigour of body and mind." Which ſeems to be the ſenſe of Onkelos, "As the days "of thy youth, ſo ſhall thy ſtrength be." And the Jeruſalem Targum more expreſly, "Such as they were in "the days of their youth, ſuch they ſhould be in their "old age." Or ſimply, theſe words ſignify, that this tribe ſhould grow ſtronger and ſtronger; which Hottinger ſeems to have aimed at, when he propounded this expoſition in his Smegma Orientale, cap. 7. As are thy days, ſo are thy riches and wealth. Maſius quite contrary upon Joſh. xix. 31. interprets theſe words to ſignify, that they ſhould have perpetual conflicts with the old inhabitants of the country: All which various interpretations proceed from the uncertain ſignification of the Hebrew word Daba, which we render ſtrength.

Ver. 26. There is none like unto the God of Jeſhurun.] Moſes having now bleſſed every particular tribe, concludes with this general demonſtration of their happineſs, that their God was not like the gods of other nations, but ſuper-eminent in all perfections; and therefore they muſt needs be bleſſed, while he condeſcended to be propitious to them, as their father, their keeper, their protector, avenger, and ſaviour from all their enemies.

——Who rideth upon the heavens in thy help.] Who commandeth in the heavens, as well as the earth; and ſends help and ſuccour to thee from thence, by thunder, lightning, and hail-ſtones, as we read he did in many places, Pſalm xviii. 8, 9. &c. lxviii. 33, 34, 35. "And "as he that rides upon an horſe, turns him this way, and "that way, as he pleaſeth, (they are the words of Mai- "monides in his More Nevochim, P. i. cap. 70.) ſo God "by his power and pleaſure commands the heavens, and "is not fixed to them, as the ſoul of them, (which was the "fooliſh opinion of the Zabii) but as the rider is far "more honourable and excellent than the beaſt on which "he ſits, and of a different ſpecies from it; ſo God is "repreſented by this metaphor (tho' but in a weak manner) "as ſeparate from the heavens, and of a more excellent "nature far tranſcending them, which are but the inſtru- "ments he uſes, to fulfill his will and pleaſure.

——And in his excellency on the ſky.] Or, as it may be tranſlated word for word, And in his magnificence, the clouds. From whence he ſends ſuch ſtorms and tempeſts as demonſtrate his power.

Ver. 27. The eternal God is thy refuge.] Or, dwelling place; to whom they might always betake themſelves for ſafety, and never fail of obtaining it, Pſalm xc. 1. In the Hebrew the words are, The eternal God is the habitation, or dwelling-place; from whence the Jews have framed this maxim, to preſerve all men from having low thoughts of God, as if he was contained in any thing, "God is the "place wherein the world dwells, and not the world the "place where God dwells." So Maimonides obſerves in the place above-named, out of Bereſchit Rabba.

——And underneath are the everlaſting arms.] To ſupport all thoſe, with an unwearied power and care, who commit themſelves unto him.

——And he ſhall thruſt out the enemy from before thee.] As Moſes had conducted them through the wilderneſs with an unwearied care, ſo he promiſes God would expel the Canaanites, and make room for them in their country.

——And ſhall ſay, deſtroy them.] Give the Iſraelites power, as well as authority to root them out. For to ſay, here, is as much as to do, and therefore ſignifies, executing their deſtruction.

Ver. 28. Iſrael then ſhall dwell in ſafety alone.] Live in quiet and peace, ſeparate from all other people. Or, the divine protection ſhall be ſufficient for their ſecurity. This, Raſi thinks, was fulfilled in the days of Solomon, 1 Kings iv. 25, But others of them think it is ſtill to be accompliſhed.

——The fountain of Jacob.] That is, his poſterity, who flowed from him as a river from a fountain, Iſaiah xlviii. 1. li. 1. Cocceius thinks theſe words ſhould be joined to the foregoing, in this manner, "Iſrael ſhall dwell "in ſafety alone by the fountain of Jacob," that is, by God. But tho' this may have ſome countenance from the ancient interpreters, (as we ſhall obſerve preſently) yet the other conſtruction is more generally received; there being the like expreſſion in Pſalm lxviii. 26. "Bleſs the "Lord in the congregation, from the fountain of Iſrael": Or, as it is in the margin, "Ye that be of the fountain "of Iſrael"; that is, are derived from him as your father.

——Shall be upon a land of corn and wine, alſo his heavens ſhall drop down dew.] In a fruitful country, upon which the heavens ſhall drop down refreſhing dews. Onkelos paraphraſes the whole thus: "Iſrael ſhall dwell ſe- "curely alone, according to the bleſſing wherewith Ja- "cob's father bleſſed them, in a land of corn," &c. And ſo the Jeruſalem Targum, (making more expreſs mention of the word fountain) "Iſrael ſhall dwell by himſelf ſe- "curely, from the fountain of benediction, wherewith "Jacob bleſſed them, in a land producing wine and oyl; "and the heavens above are commanded to ſend down "dews and rain upon them."

Ver. 29. Happy art thou, O Iſraël.] Moſes was not able farther to expreſs their happineſs, and therefore breaks out into admiration of it; exciting them thereby to be deeply ſenſible of it, and affected with it.

——Who is like unto thee.] Who had the Lord for their God, as he ſaid before, ver. 26, &c. and iv. 7, 8.

——People ſaved by the Lord.] Who have been redeemed by his mighty power. So the Jeruſalem Targum, "Whoſe redemption (we ſuppoſe out of Egypt is meant) "is from the preſence of the Lord". Who had preſerved them ever ſince, and would ſtill protect them, as it here follows.

This, according to R. Iſaac, (in Chiſſuk Emuna, P. i. cap. 18.) ſignifies the ſpiritual bleſſings God beſtowed on them. For true felicity, ſaith he, doth not conſiſt in victory over enemies, and plenty of corn, or ſuch like things, of which Moſes had ſpoken before in the preceding verſe, but in the ſalvation of the ſoul, of which no nation in the world was ſecure, but the Jews; which made Moſes, ſaith he, break out into theſe words, "O happy people, ſaved "by the Lord!" As much as to ſay, among all people, is there any ſaved like thee? This he ſaith, becauſe Chriſtians were wont to tell them, that they fixed their minds wholly on corporal felicity, which their law promiſed them; and therefore that Rabbi was induſtrious to draw a more exalted ſenſe from theſe words. And he accordingly lays ſo much ſtreſs upon them, that he repeats it again, a little after, That the ſalvation here promiſed is everlaſting. And yet his eyes could not be opened to ſee, that this ſalvation was to be brought to them by the Meſſiah: and that our Lord Jeſus is he, whoſe goſpel is as full of ſuch promiſes, as their law is of the promiſes of corn, and wine, and oyl.

——The ſhield of thy help.] To defend them from all the aſſaults of their enemies. Moſes adds this, ſaith the

1 Chron. xii. 32. and which conſiſted in underſtanding the times, was nothing but their skill in the proper ſeaſons of ſowing, planting, and pruning, &c. to know what Iſrael ought to do in the management and improvement of their land; which was of great uſe eſpecially in that country.

Ver. 19. They ſhall call the people unto the mountain.] Here Moſes predicts, the houſe of God ſhould be ſet upon a mountain; unto which, he ſaith, Zebulun (for the latter end of the verſe ſhews he ſpeaks particularly of that tribe) ſhould invite the other tribes, by their forwardneſs and zeal, to go to worſhip God at the three great feſtivals. So the Jeruſalem Targum paraphraſes, "Behold, the "people of Zebulun ſhall be ready to go to the mount of "the holy houſe of the Lord." Or, by the people, perhaps are meant the Gentiles their neighbours, whom they ſhould endeavour to bring to the ſervice of the true God, which was eſpecially fulfilled when Chriſt came, Matth. iv. 15, 16.

—— There they ſhall offer ſacrifices of righteouſneſs.] Liberal ſacrifices, out of their honeſt gains by merchandize.

—— For they ſhall ſuck of the abundance of the ſeas.] Import abundance of various commodities, and grow rich by their traffic.

—— And of treaſures hid in the ſand.] This is a farther amplification of the ſame thing, relating particularly to their importation of gold, and ſilver, and precious ſtones, which are digged out of the earth. Some think it relates to the rich mines of this country; but of this we cannot find any proof.

Ver. 20. And of Gad he ſaid, bleſſed be he that enlargeth Gad.] That is, bleſſed be God, who hath allotted to him ſo large an inheritance; which he afterward alſo farther enlarged, as we read, 1 Chron. v. 18, 19, 20.

—— He dwelleth as a lion.] Lives ſecure and fearleſs, tho' encompaſſed with enemies, whom the Gadites tore to pieces, (as it here follows) when they offered to moleſt them. For this was a very warlike tribe, as we learn from 1 Chron. xii. 8. and therefore here compared to a lioneſs, ſo labi ſignifies, which equals a lion, if not exceeds him, in ſtrength and fierceneſs; as Bochart hath obſerved out of good authors, in his Hierozoicon, P. i. Lib. iii. cap. 20. And ſo Onkelos here tranſlates it, He dwelleth as a lioneſs. And the Jeruſalem Targum inſerts both, after this manner; He remains quiet, as a lion and a lioneſs; neither is there people or kingdom that ſhall ſtand before them.

—— And teareth the arm with the crown of the head.] Kills the princes with their kings, as Onkelos truly expounds it: For by arms are meant men of ſtrength and power; and by the crown of the head is properly to be underſtood the chief commander, ruler, or king. And therefore the LXX alſo tranſlate crown of the head by ἀρχοντία, prince, or ſupream governor.

Ver. 21. And he provided the firſt part for himſelf.] He firſt received his portion in the land which they conquered, as Onkelos expounds it. Which he is ſaid here to provide for himſelf, becauſe this tribe (with Reuben and part of Manaſſeh) deſired to be poſſeſſed of the country of Sion, which was accordingly given to them, Numb. xxxii. 1, 2, 33.

— Becauſe there, in a portion of the Law-giver.] Which Moſes, (who was their Law-giver) gave them by God's order, whereas the other nine tribes and a half, had theirs given them by Joſhua.

—— Was he ſeated.] The word in the Hebrew ſignifies hid, that is, protected, when, going to the war in Canaan, they left their wives, and children, and cattle, without any defence, but God's providence, according to the promiſe they made to Moſes, Numb. xxxvii. 16, 17, &c. What the Jeruſalem Targum, together with Onkelos, and ſeveral of the Rabbins, even Abarbinel himſelf, here ſay of Moſes being buried in this tribe (which they make the ſenſe of theſe words) we think is no more to the purpoſe, than what the Cabbaliſts obſerve upon this place, that in the bleſſing of Gad, the whole alphabet is found, becauſe Moſes, our maſter (ſaith Baal. Hatturim) was buried in his territory, who obſerved the law from Aleph to Tau, that is, from the beginning to the end.

—— And he came.] He ſpeaks of this as a thing already done, becauſe he certainly forſaw they would perform their engagement.

—— With the heads of the people.] With the chief commanders of the reſt of the tribes of Iſrael. Or, as the words may be tranſlated more literally, He came, the heads of the people, namely, the Gadites marched in the front, before the children of Iſrael. For ſo was the agreement between Moſes and them, as we read in Numb. xxxii. 17. that they ſhould go ready armed before the children of Iſrael, Of which engagement Joſhua reminds them when they were entering into Canaan, Joſh. i. 14. and they ſtood to it, ver. 16, 17.

—— He executed the juſtice of the Lord.] Upon the ſeven nations of Canaan, whom God commanded them to extirpate.

—— And his judgments with Iſrael.] Marching in the van of the Iſraelites to battle, till the whole country was ſubdued to them, Numb. xxxii. 21, 22, 29. Joſh. xxiii. 1, 2, 3. &c.

Ver. 22. And of Dan he ſaid, Dan is a lion's whelp.] Courageous as a young lion, according to Onkelos; and this prediction was moſt eminently verifyed in Sampſon, who was of this tribe, and whom the ſpirit of the Lord began to move in the camp of Dan, Judges xiii. 25.

——Who is like unto thee.] Who had the Lord for their God, as he ſaid before, ver. 26, &c. and iv. 7, 8.

——People ſaved by the Lord.] Who have been redeemed by his mighty power. So the Jeruſalem Targum, "Whoſe redemption (we ſuppoſe out of Egypt is meant) "is from the preſence of the Lord". Who had preſerved them ever ſince, and would ſtill protect them, as it here follows.

This, according to R. Iſaac, (in Chiſſuk Emuna, P. i. cap. 18.) ſignifies the ſpiritual bleſſings God beſtowed on them. For true felicity, ſaith he, doth not conſiſt in victory over enemies, and plenty of corn, or ſuch like things, of which Moſes had ſpoken before in the preceding verſe, but in the ſalvation of the ſoul, of which no nation in the world was ſecure, but the Jews; which made Moſes, ſaith he, break out into theſe words, "O happy people, ſaved "by the Lord!" As much as to ſay, among all people, is there any ſaved like thee? This he ſaith, becauſe Chriſtians were wont to tell them, that they fixed their minds wholly on corporal felicity, which their law promiſed them; and therefore that Rabbi was induſtrious to draw a more exalted ſenſe from theſe words. And he accordingly lays ſo much ſtreſs upon them, that he repeats it again, a little after, That the ſalvation here promiſed is everlaſting. And yet his eyes could not be opened to ſee, that this ſalvation was to be brought to them by the Meſſiah: and that our Lord Jeſus is he, whoſe goſpel is as full of ſuch promiſes, as their law is of the promiſes of corn, and wine, and oyl.

——The ſhield of thy help.] To defend them from all the aſſaults of their enemies. Moſes adds this, ſaith the ſame R. Iſaac, to ſhew, that they to whom he promiſes ſpiritual bleſſings, are not thereby put out of hope of temporal; for the people that are ſaved by the Lord, have him alſo for their ſhield and their ſword, as it here follows.

—— And who is the ſword of thy excellency.] To cut their enemies in pieces, ſo that they ſhould glory and boaſt in magnificent victories over them. Or, as Onkelos tranſlates it, "From his preſence are all the victories of thy "valiant men."

—— And thine enemies ſhall be found liars unto thee.] Find themſelves deceived in all their vain hopes of ſaving themſelves, or moleſting the Iſraelites. Or, ſhould be ſo afraid of them, that with feigned ſtories they ſhould court their friendſhip, as the Gibeonites did. Or, more ſimply, ſhould ſubmit to them, though not heartily, yet out of fear; as this phraſe is uſed, Pſalm xviii. 44. lxvi. 3. and other places.

—— And thou ſhalt tread upon their high places.] Upon the necks of their kings, as both Onkelos and the Jeruſalem Targum underſtand it, taking Bamoth here for great men, in high ſtations. And thus Joſhua did, as we read, Joſhua x. 21. But this word commonly ſignifies, either ſtrong holds, or places of idolatrous worſhip, which neither their great men, nor their gods themſelves, ſhould be able to preſerve from ruin.

CHAP. XXXIV.

1 Moſes from mount Nebo vieweth the land. 5 He dieth there. 6 His burial. 7 His age. 8 Thirty days mourning for him. 9 Joſhua ſucceedeth him. 10 The praiſe of Moſes.

AND Moſes went up from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Piſgah, that is over-againſt Jericho: and the LORD ſhewed him all the land of Gilead, unto Dan.

2 And all Naphtali, and the land of Ephraim, and Manaſſeh, and all the land of Judah, unto the utmoſt ſea.

3 And the ſouth, and the plain of the valley of Jericho, the city of palm-trees, unto Zoar.

4 And the LORD ſaid unto him, This is the land which I ſware unto Abraham, unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob, ſaying, I will give it unto thy ſeed: I have cauſed thee to ſee it with thine eyes, but thou ſhalt not go over thither.

5 ¶ So Moſes the ſervant of the LORD died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the LORD.

6 ¶ And he buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over-againſt Beth-peor: but no man knoweth of his ſepulchre unto this day.

7 ¶ And Moſes was an hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated.

8 ¶ And the children of Iſrael wept for Moſes in the plains of Moab thirty days, ſo the days of weeping and mourning for Moſes were ended.

9 ¶ And Joſhua the ſon of Nun was full of the ſpirit of wiſdom; for Moſes had laid his hands upon him: and the children of Iſrael hearkened unto him, and did as the LORD commanded Moſes.

10 ¶ And there aroſe not a prophet ſince in Iſrael like unto Moſes, whom the LORD knew face to face:

11 In all the ſigns and the wonders which the LORD ſent him to do in the land of Egypt, to Pharaoh, and to all his ſervants, and to all his land.

12 And in all that mighty hand, and in all the great terrour which Moſes ſhewed in the ſight of all Iſrael.

Ver. 1. And Moſes went up from the plains of Moab, unto the mountain of Nebo to the top of Piſgah, that is over againſt Jericho.] After Moſes had thus preſcribed to the Iſraelites thoſe laws which were to regulate their future conduct, and had ſet over them a perſon who, both by his precepts and example, would encourage them to adhere inviolably to thoſe inſtitutions, he ſubmitted to the decree of death which had been denounced againſt him, and aſcended the mountain, from whence he was never to return.

Piſgah was the ſummit of Mount Nebo, which was over-againſt Jericho, a famous city on the other ſide of Jordan.

—— And the Lord ſhewed him all the land of Gilead unto Dan.] It was eaſy enough for a perſon, whoſe eye was not dim, to ſee the greateſt part of Paleſtine; nor was not neceſſary to have recourſe to a miracle, and to ſuppoſe, with ſome interpreters, that God ſtrengthen'd the ſight of Moſes after a ſupernatural manner, that he might extend it the farther. For the ſame reaſon we ought not to ſuppoſe, like ſome of the Jews, that God formed a map of the whole land of Canaan, that this law-giver might run it over the eaſier with his eye. But the words of the original muſt not be conſtrued ſtrictly, as if Moſes had exactly view'd every part of thoſe places which God ſhew'd to him God made him look toward the north, even to the foot of mount Libanus, and the confluence of the two rivers Jor and Dan, the ſprings of Jordan; and he ſhewed him the country of Gilead on the hither ſide of the ſame river, and which was to be the lot of the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and of half the tribe of Manaſſeh Then he cauſed him to turn his eyes to the other ſide of Jordan, and ſhewed him the northern part of Paleſtine, where was the country called Dan, after it was allotted to the tribe of that name: He made him look likewiſe toward the weſt of the promiſed land, and diſcover'd to him the ſhares that were to belong to the tribes of Naphtali and Ephraim, and to the other half tribe of Manaſſeh. He cauſed him to obſerve the ſouthern parts of Canaan, and all that vaſt tract of land which was to be poſſeſſed by the tribe of Judah, and which extended itſelf as far as the Mediterranean Sea, and the valley in which ſtood the city that bare the name of Jericho, that is to ſay, of the ſweet ſmell, becauſe of the great number of Palm-trees, which perfumed the air. Strabo ſays, it was ſurrounded with mountains abounding in this ſort of trees. This valley was ſituate on the ſouth ſide of the Dead Sea, where ſtood the city of Zoar.

Ver. 5. So Moſes, the ſervant of the Lord, died there in the land of Moab, according to the Word of the Lord.] The ſacred hiſtory relates ſome particular circumſtances concerning the death of Moſes, which could not be recorded by that great legiſlator. Under this head we place the name of Dan, given to a city which, at that time, was called Laiſh. It was near the ancient Paneades, which was rebuilt by Philip, the ſon of Herod the great, in honour to Caius Cæſar, and which for the ſame reaſon was called Cæſarea Philippi. In like manner the names of Naphtali, Ephraim, and Manaſſeh, could not be given to certain provinces in Paleſtine, before the tribes of that name had poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe ſettlements. Nor is it at all probable, that Moſes wrote his own encomium, any more than he gave an account of his death; and it is next to a demonſtration, that theſe words in the ſacred text, "No man knoweth of his ſepulchre unto this day," ver. 6. were not written till ſome conſiderable time after his death, the whole account of which was probably written by Samuel, who was a prophet, and wrote by divine authority what he found in the records which were left by Joſhua, and his ſucceſſors, who gave an account of the manner in which Moſes left the world, and of all ſucceeding tranſactions, till the end of the time of the judges.

Moſes is repreſented in this verſe, as dying in the land of Moab, "according to the word of the Lord"; in which words there is ſome ambiguity. The literal verſion of the Hebrew is, "upon the mouth of the Lord;" and it has given a pretext to ſome Jewiſh authors to believe, that the Deity himſelf "drew out the ſoul of Moſes by a kiſs." Not that they underſtand it in a groſs ſenſe, but only that Moſes died in an extaſy, and with the exceſs of that pleaſure he experienced in his converſation with God. They add, that Aaron and Moſes expired by the ſame kind of death; and quote, upon this occaſion, the words of Solomon's ſong, chap. i. 1. "Let him kiſs me with the kiſſes "of his mouth; for thy love is better than wine." But ſeveral texts of ſcripture juſtify our manner of tranſlating this.

Ver. 6. And he buried him.] There is ſome obſcurity in the Hebrew words, which our verſions expreſs by he buried him; for they may relate either to the word Lord, which goes before; in which ſenſe, God himſelf may be ſaid to have buried Moſes, either immediately, or by the miniſtry of angels, as Epiphanius thought, Hæreſ. ix. tom. 1. p. 28. It may likewiſe be taken impersonally, he was buried; and perhaps it will not be eaſy to determine which of theſe interpretations are beſt. Thoſe who eſpouſe the firſt, alledge for their juſtification, the words at the cloſe of this verſe, "No man knoweth of his ſepulchre "unto this day," and pretend, that if he had been interred by the Iſraelites, the ſacred hiſtory would have deſcribed his tomb as exactly as it has thoſe of the patriarchs. They even maintain, that God had a particular reaſon for concealing the ſepulchre of Moſes from the Iſraelites, namely, to prevent their paying ſuperſtitious honours to the remains of a man whoſe memory ought to be ſo dear and venerable to them. And, indeed, the breaking of the brazen ſerpent in pieces by Hezekiah, gives an air of plauſibility to this ſuppoſition. On the other hand, the advocates for the oppoſite opinion, eſtabliſh it upon the allegation that the Jews did not render religious honours to their great men, till ſeveral ages after the death of Moſes; to which they add, that there was no more reaſon to hide his tomb, than thoſe of Abraham and Jacob; from whence they conclude, that if the ſepulchre of Moſes has not been found, it muſt have proceeded from ſome particular circumſtance which the ſacred hiſtory has not mentioned; perhaps it was becauſe the Iſraelites were wholly employed at this time, in conquering the land of Canaan, after which they had ſighed for ſo many years.

——— In a valley in the land of Moab, over-againſt Beth-peor.] This valley was in the land of Sihon, king of the Amorites, who had taken it from the Moabites, as we formerly obſerved, and was now poſſeſſed by the Iſraelites. Beth-peor was part of the poſſeſſion of Reuben, and a place where the temple of Peor anciently ſtood; from whence it received its denomination. For this idol is not only called Baal-peor, but ſimply Peor, Joſh. xxii. 17. And as Beth-baal is the temple of Baal, ſo Beth-peor is the temple of Peor. We ſhall relate here, after Hornius, a piece of hiſtory, which will furniſh us with an inſtance of human credulity, if it ſhould not happen to illuſtrate what the ſcripture relates concerning the tomb of Moſes.

"In the year of our Lord 1655. certain Maronite "ſhepherds, who were feeding a flock of goats on the "mountains of Nebo and Abarim, having frequently obſerved, that ſome of thoſe creatures wandered from "their flock, and were abſent for the ſpace of two or "three days, and that upon their return, their hair was "ſcented with a ſweet ſmell, thought fit to examine the "matter more cloſely, as it ſeemed to be very extraordinary. With this view they traced their goats, till at "laſt they came to places that were full of precipices, "from whence they diſcerned a little vale. They then "advanced to it, and diſcovered a cave, out of which "proceeded a very agreeable odour; and in the middle of "it they found a tomb of ſtone, on which they perceived "ſome characters were engraven. The ſhepherds being "extremely ſurpriſed at the novelty of what they beheld, "and likewiſe obſerving what a fragrant ſcent was diffuſed "all over them, went away immediately to Mataxat, the "patriarch of the Maronites, who then reſided at the "monaſtery of St. Mary, on mount Libanus, and acquainted him with the whole affair. The ſweet and "peculiar odour, with which they were all perfumed, "inducing him the more readily to credit what they related, he ſent two of his monks back with them, one of "whom was Aben-Uſeph, a learned and diſcreet man. "Theſe eccleſiaſtics coming to the place which had been "deſcribed to them, found a monument, on which they "read in Hebrew letters, MOSES THE SERVANT "OF THE LORD. The patriarch, tranſported at ſuch "a wonderful diſcovery, requeſted of Morat, the baſha "of Damaſcus, that the keeping of this tomb might be "committed to him alone. But the Greeks and Armenians, as well as the monks of St. Francis, ſtrongly oppoſed him, and at laſt the Jews alſo: Upon which, as "they were not able to agree among themſelves, they all "endeavoured by their preſents to the Grand Vizier, and "the Mufti, at court, to appropriate to themſelves the "ſuperintendence of this ſepulchre, which they verily believed was that of Moſes, and which the Jews inſiſted, "ought chiefly to belong to them. They repreſented, "that nothing could be more glorious, among all the titles of the Grand Signior, than that of being the maſter "and poſſeſſor of three ſuch renowned ſepulchres, as that "of Mohammed at Mecca, that of Jeſus Chriſt at Jeruſalem, and that of Moſes on mount Nebo. The Jeſuits "however defeated by their intrigues all the endeavours "of the other candidates; and by their bribes procured "an order, that the tomb, and the way which led to it, "ſhould be cloſed up: They even obtained a law, which "prohibited any one to approach that monument, on "pain of death. In the mean time, thoſe very Jeſuits, "acting in concert with the Druſes, formed a deſign to "ſteal away the body of Moſes, imagining they ſhould "thereby acquire a new degree of holineſs, as well as "immenſe wealth, to their order. But having after much "pains and difficulty opened the tomb, they found it "empty both of the corpſe, and reliques of that prophet."

Theſe pleaſing dreams vaniſhed almoſt aſſoon as they were formed; for a learned Rabbin proved, that the body which had been depoſited in that ſepulchre was not their ancient legiſlator, but a Jew of the ſame name; and Wagenſeil fancies, it was Moſes Maimonides. But Bartolocci has endeavoured to deſtroy that conjecture, by refuting the ſtory on which it was founded, and is induſtrious to prove, that Hornius ſuffered himſelf to be deceived by ſome impoſtor, and that there never was ſuch a perſon among the Jews, as the doctor called Jakun Ben-gad, which is the name given to him who undeceived thoſe that fancied they had found the tomb of Moſes.

The Jews have endeavoured to determine the month and day when Moſes died, and declare that this event happened on the ſeventh day of the laſt month, which they call Adar, and that it was forty years after the departure of the Iſraelites out of Egypt. Some Chriſtians have entertained the ſame opinion, but the great Uſher thinks he has demonſtrated in his Annales, that Moſes died the firſt day, and not the ſeventh, of that month; and this calculation nearly correſponds with that of Torniel.

We have now conſidered all that the ſacred hiſtory relates concerning the death of Moſes, to which St. Jude has added one circumſtance, and the Jews, according to their cuſtom, have amply ſupplied the ſilence of the ſcripture on that ſubject.

The intention of St. Jude was to perſuade the Chriſtians of his time, to avoid the pernicious examples of ſome heretics (probably ſome ſeditious Jews) who deſpiſed dominions and ſpake evil of dignities, Jude ver. 8. To induce therefore the Chriſtians to perform the duties he recommends to their practice, he tells them, that Michael the archangel, when, contending with the devil, he diſputed about the body of Moſes, durſt not bring againſt him a railing accuſation, but ſaid, the Lord rebuke thee.

We

We cannot ſide with any of the interpreters in the different opinions they have entertained of this paſſage, without violating the rule we have purſued through the courſe of this work, and to which we ſhall ſtrictly adhere in the ſequel, namely, not to propoſe any thing as fully proved, if it be not really ſo. We ſhall therefore content ourſelves with ſetting forth thoſe opinions hiſtorically before our readers.

Some explain theſe words of St. Jude literally; others aſſign to them an allegorical meaning.

Thoſe who give them a literal expoſition maintain, that there is a ſubordination among the bleſſed ſpirits, and that Michael is an angel of a ſuperior order. This poſition is not deſtitute of probability, tho' we have ſufficient reaſon to oppoſe ſuch as take upon them to decide wherein the ſubordination ſtrictly conſiſts, and who have been ſo preſumptuous as to point out the ſeveral degrees and ranks that each angel has a prerogative to hold. The Rabbins, and the counterfeit Dionyſius the Areopagite, have diſtinguiſhed themſelves by the bold deciſions they have made in this matter. However, if there be a ſubordination among the good angels, we may reaſonably ſuppoſe the ſame with reſpect to the apoſtate ſpirits, and the ſcriptures mention the devil and his angels, Matt. xxv. 41. Rev. xii. 7.

Thoſe who underſtand the words of St. Jude in a literal ſenſe, pretend there was a real controverſy between the prince of the good, and the chief of the bad angels, in conſequence of which they inſiſt, that the words of St. Jude are parallel with this text of St. Peter, The angels which are greater in power and might, bring not railing accuſation againſt them before the Lord, 2 Pet. ii. 11. Origen mentions a book known in his time by the title of The aſcenſion of Moſes; and the Rabbins cite another, which they call The words of the days of Moſes. Aben Ezra, however, gives us a notion of it not much to its diſadvantage, but it poſſibly might contain ſome truths blended with many fables. The apoſtles may perhaps have borrowed out of ſome of thoſe treatiſes, what has been related concerning the conteſt between the archangel and the devil, whether it be that they gave any credit to that narration, or only alledged it to ſuch perſons as believed it to be true. 'Tis certain, that this is not the only inſtance, in which the ſacred writers have had recourſe to arguments of this nature, and they quote books which would have been utterly unknown to us without their citations. Hitherto thoſe who are advocates for the literal ſenſe of the text in St. Jude, follow the ſame principle; but when they proceed to determine the end and deſign of this diſpute, they entertain different ſentiments.

Some have thought, that the devil endeavoured to ſieze upon the ſoul of this great lawgiver, which he pretended was his due, becauſe he had murdered an Egyptian.

Some of the fathers have affirmed, that the devil was jealous of the honour Moſes was about to receive in his interment by angels, or leſt his ſoul and body ſhould be taken up into heaven; and that this was the ſubject of his controverſy with the archangel.

A modern author, known by the name of John Erneſt Gerhar, is of opinion, that the aim of the devil was to prevent the body of Moſes from being depoſited on the mountain of Nebo, through an apprehenſion that it would ſilence the oracle of Baal-peor.

Mr. Jenkins advances another notion, in his vaſt comment on the epiſtle of St. Jude, namely, that the devil had an inclination to diſcover the place where Moſes was buried, that he might have an opportunity of tempting the Iſraelites to worſhip, not the body, but the ſoul of their hero. The Heathens undoubtedly adored the ſouls of their gods, at the place where their monuments were erected; and the Cretans, in particular, profeſſed an extraordinary veneration for Jupiter, becauſe he was buried in their iſland. Lactantius reproaches them for believing that their great god was dead in one place, and alive in another, and that he had, at the ſame time, a temple and a tomb. Jenkins obſerves farther, that the Pagans taught, that the ſouls of thoſe whom they deified, dwelt near the places where their bodies were interred, and that it was there they pronounced their oracles. He likewiſe ſuppoſes, that the Jews themſelves were not untainted with theſe ſuperſtitions, and to confirm his ſuppoſition, he quotes theſe words of the prophet: Should not a people ſeek unto their God? for the living to the dead? Iſa. viii. 19. In this ſenſe he explains this paſſage of the Pſalmiſt, They joined themſelves to Baal Peor; and ate the ſacrifices of the dead, Pſalm cvi. 28. and inſiſts that theſe ſacrifices were the ſame that were offered on the tombs of the falſe gods. To which he adds, that if the Jews had known where Moſes was buried, they might have been tempted to have rendered him divine honours in the ſame place, and would have prayed to him for his direction with reſpect to their future conduct. He then ſhews by experience, how neceſſary the precaution was of concealing the ſepulchre of ſo venerable a man, ſince he was conſidered as a god in Arabia, and his images were the objects of divine adoration. As Epiphanius has obſerved Tom. Hæres. LV. p. 469 This comment of Jenkins we ſhall neither embrace nor reject, but ſhall think it ſufficient to illuſtrate what he advances concerning the Theology of the Heathens, with relation to the ſouls of deified perſons, by the following obſervation of Madam Dacier, in her notes upon the Odyſſey of Homer. Lib. 20. p. 242. Namely, thus "The Egyptians believed, that after the "ſeparation of the ſoul from the mortal body there was "yet another ſeparation of two parts of the ſoul itſelf, "that is, of the intellect, or underſtanding, which Homer "calls Φρὴν, and of that fine and ſubtil body where- "with the intellect was cloathed, and which the ſame "poet calls the Εἴδωλον, or image; and that the intellect "is conſigned to heaven, but the image to hell." The Heathens fancied that this fine and ſubtil body, with which the underſtanding was inveſted, hovered ſometimes about the graves or burying places in which the groſs bodies of the dead were depoſited.

We ſhall now proceed to thoſe Interpreters who explain the text of St. Jude in an allegorical manner. Thoſe perſons think, that we ought to underſtand by the body of Moſes, not his carcaſs, but that body of laws which were given to the Jews by his miniſtration; agreeably to which opinion, they affirm, that the text of St. Jude is only a quotation from Zechariah, who declares he ſaw, "Joſhua "the high prieſt, ſtanding before the angel of the Lord, "and Satan ſtanding at his right hand to reſiſt him. And "the Lord ſaid unto Satan, the Lord rebuke thee O Satan, "even the Lord that hath choſen Jeruſalem rebuke thee." Zechar. iii. 1. 2. Now this Joſhua, according to the interpreters we quote, repreſents in Zechariah, what St. Jude means by the body of Moſes. The end of the prophets viſion, ſay they, was to ſhew the efforts which the devil made, in order to croſs the re-eſtabliſhment of the Jews, after the captivity, and the manner in which he was oppoſed by the angel of the Lord. This, continue they, was what St. Jude intended, when he ſaid, that "Michael the archangel diſputed with the devil about the "body of Moſes."

This explanation is not very different from that of ſome learned men, who by the body of Moſes underſtand, not the body of his laws, but the ſynagogue. In this ſenſe the chriſtian church is frequently ſtiled the body of Chriſt; and St. Ignatius ſpeaking of the reſtoration of the Syrian churches, congratulates the faithful of Smyrna, upon the re-eſtabliſhment of one of their bodies. Ignat. Epiſt. ad Eccles. Smyrnæ, in Tom. xv. Biblioth. Patr. p. 30.

Other interpreters aſſign to this paſſage of St. Jude, and that of Zechariah, a ſenſe which is ſtill more allegorical. They obſerve that the ſcripture mentions no more than one archangel, whom they ſuppoſe was Jeſus Chriſt; and that he is therefore called, the archangel of the Lord, and the Lord himſelf, by the prophet Zechariah; and that St. Jude, for the ſame reaſon calls him Michael, the ſignification of which name is, Who is like to thee O God? a name which by no means comports with a meer creature. According to this hypotheſis, Joſhua is introduced by the prophet as covered with impurity, in order to repreſent the crimes of men, who had violated the laws, engraven upon their hearts, and promulgated by Moſes. Satan diſputes with Joſhua, that is, the devil ſollicits the condemnation of men: from whence he is called the accuſer, in the revelations. The angel of the Lord pleads for the high prieſt, which is as much as to ſay, that Jeſus Chriſt intercedes for all mankind.

The objectors againſt this comment, ask what reſpect could be due from the angel of the Lord to the devil? and in in what ſenſe could St. Jude ſay of Jeſus Chriſt, " that he " durſt not bring a railing accuſation againſt him?" But the interpreters who eſpouſe this explanation are not diſconcerted by the objection, for they reply, that the words of St. Jude, durſt not bring againſt him a railing accuſation, may be rendered, he would not pronounce ſentence. This they pretend to prove from other texts of ſcripture; beſide which they affirm, that the prophet and the apoſtle had the ſame view, which was to extol the patience and meekneſs of Chriſt, who would not oppoſe the injurious language of the devil, with any expreſſions denoting his reſentment, tho' he might juſtly have ſo done.

Theſe are the chief opinions of expoſitors, with reference to the text of St. Jude, and it may poſſibly be more eaſy to refute them all, than to advance any which would not be liable to objections. We however can't avoid giving ſome preference to the notion of Le Clerc, according to whom, St. Jude oppoſes the pretences of certain Jews (perhaps the followers of Judas the Gaulonite) who held, " that no " obedience was to be rendered to pagan magiſtrates." To reſtrain this wild conceit, the apoſtle quotes to them the paſſage in Zechariah, which Le Clerc explains to this effect; Joſhua the high prieſt is contradicted by Satan; the word Satan is collective, and ſignifies generally an adverſary. So it is to be underſtood in Pſalm, cix. ver. 6. In the prophecy of Zechariah, it denotes the governors whom the kings of Perſia ſet over the provinces ſituate on the weſt of Euphrates, and it appears by the ſacred hiſtory, that thoſe governors violently oppoſed the re-eſtabliſhment of the Jews. The angel of the Lord eſpouſes the part of the oppreſſed, but ſtill regarding the dignity of the oppreſſors. He accordingly refers the enemies of the Jews to the judgment of God, inſtead of judging them himſelf, and only ſays to them, may the Lord defeat your deſigns. Now the Roman magiſtrates were in relation to the Jews who lived in the time of St. Jude, the ſame as the Perſians, with reſpect to thoſe Jews who were contemporary with Zechariah.

This comment appears to us more ſimple and natural than that of Dr. Hammond, who thinks that St. Jude cenſures the Gnoſtics for deſpiſing the eccleſiaſtical powers. We alſo prefer it to that of Dr. Whitby, who is of opinion, that the heritics here meant by St. Jude, were the Nicolaitans; and that the dominions and dignities which he charges them with deſpiſing, were the angels, to whom indeed they paid religious honours, but at the ſame time aſcribed them to unworthy actions.

We have one ſcruple, however, with relation to the opinion of Le Clerc. It ſeems to us, that it cannot be denied that St. Jude underſtood by him whom he calls the devil, that great enemy to mankind, on whom we uſually beſtow that appellation; and we queſtion whether one ſingle inſtance can be produced from ſcripture, in which this word will bear any other ſignification. But if the text of St. Jude be a quotation from that of Zechariah, as we own, is not to be doubted, Satan muſt imply the ſame thing in the ſtile of the prophet, as the devil does in the language of the apoſtle. Nay it even ſeems, that we may adopt all that is eſſential in the explanation of Le Clerc, without adhering to the ſenſe he appropriates to the word Satan: we will venture at one gueſs upon the paſſage of of Zechariah, and that of St. Jude.

When God revealed any event to the ancient prophets, he communicated to them in a viſion, thoſe objects which had ſome analogy or reſemblance, to the thing he intended they ſhould know. It is not neceſſary, in order to explain theſe viſions, to refer every term grammatically, or literally to the event it adumbrates; 'tis enough if that which is offered to the mind, relates to the main end for which the viſion was imparted. We ſhall produce but one example, tho' ſuch a one as bears a great ſimilitude to the ſubject before us. St John informs us in his Revelations, Chap. xii. ver. 1. that he ſaw a great wonder in heaven, a woman in the pains of childbirth, and a dragon that ſtood prepared to devour the offſpring ſhe was on the point of bringing into the world; and that Michael and his angels fought with the devil, and defeated him. It is not neceſſary to inquire nicely, what was the event repreſented by this viſion? and we content our ſelves with this general obſervation, that the deſign of the holy ſpirit was to make St. John comprehend, that the Chriſtians were to ſuſtain a ſevere perſecution, during which, ſome extraordinary aſſiſtance from heaven ſhould interpoſe, and prevent their ſinking under the efforts of their enemies. In this viſion the dragon and his angels are indeed an emblem or type of the enemies of the church, and yet St. John ſpeaks of a dragon. It is not neceſſary, for the illuſtration of theſe ideas, that the word Dragon, ſhould be a collective term, literally importing, the enemies of the church; 'tis enough that a viſion, in which a monſter ſtood ready to devour a child, of which its mother was about to be delivered, is proper to repreſent what we have already intimated, namely, that the Chriſtians ſhould ſuffer a violent perſecution, during which heaven it ſelf would interpoſe in an extraordinary manner with its aid, to prevent their ſuccumbing under the rage of their adverſaries. In like manner God was pleaſed to make the Jews underſtand, after their return from the captivity, that the Perſians would raiſe great obſtacles againſt their re-eſtabliſhment. He imparts a viſion to Zechariah, and cauſes him to ſee Joſhua accuſed by the devil, and an angel of the Lord pleading the cauſe of the high prieſt, againſt all the attempts of ſo formidable a foe. This viſion anſwers its deſign, tho' Satan, in the text of the prophet, does not grammatically import the Perſians, who were profeſſed enemies to the Jews. St. Jude quotes this paſſage, and in making uſe of the word Devil, explains what Zechariah means by that of Satan; and perhaps what theſe two inſpired writers have advanced upon this occaſion, has furniſhed a pretext to ſome impoſtors for forging thoſe apochyphal works which we mentioned above; there being no one critic who has yet been able to prove that they exiſted at the time of St. Jude.

The Jews relate in their myſtical comments upon the Pentateuch, that " Samael, the wicked angel, and prince " of the devils, was ſo impatient to ſee the death of Moſes, " that he counted every day an hour; and never left off " crying, when will he die? when will that happy minute " come? then will I go down and ſeize upon his ſoul." They pretend, that David had his eye upon this event, when he ſaid, " The wicked watcheth the righteous, and " ſeeketh to ſlay him." Pſalm xxxvii. 22. They add, that Michael check'd theſe tranſports of the devil, and ſaid to him, " how, thou wretch! ſhalt thou rejoyce in ſuch a " manner as this, whilſt I am diſſolving in tears?" And that he thereupon quoted to him theſe words of one of the prophets; " Rejoice not againſt me, O mine enemy: when " I fall, I ſhall ariſe; when I ſit in darkneſs, the Lord ſhall " be a light unto me." Mic. vii. 8. I fell indeed, when Moſes died, but I roſe again when Joſhua ſucceeded him, and brought the Jews into the land of Canaan. Several of the Jews fancy likewiſe, that the devil has they know not what preſidence over the death of every man: and we ſhall cite an odd paſſage out of one of their books to that purpoſe: " The angel of death is full of eyes, and when any perſon " is upon the point of giving up his ſoul, this angel ſtands " at the bed-ſide with a naked ſword, at the end of which " hangs a drop of gall; which aſſoon as the dying perſon " perceives, he opens his mouth, and the devil cauſes " this fatal drop to fall into it."

We have likewiſe another work, of which Gilbert Gaulmin has given us the tranſlation and a comment, without mentioning the time or the author of the original. The modern Rabbins have been conſulted upon this ſubject, and they are perſuaded, that this book was a production of latter ages, and little valued by the Jews. Moſes is there repreſented as making bitter complaints of the neceſſity impoſed upon him, of dying. God enumerates to him the examples of all the moſt illuſtrious perſons of the church, who had undergone the ſame deſtiny. Moſes finds ſome fault or other in every one of them, which rendered them worthy of death. God reproaches Moſes with the diſtruſt he ſhewed in the wilderneſs of Zin; Moſes anſwers, that God is ſo good to pardon other men their ſins two or three times over, and asks, why he may not be forgiven one fault only? God tells him, he had been guilty of more than one, for he refuſed to go to Pharaoh. Moſes endeavours to juſtify himſelf, but God will not hear him. Then he covers himſelf with ſackcloth and aſhes, and offers up five hundred and fifteen prayers, which were ſo efficacious as to ſhake heaven and earth, inſomuch that he fancied the world was drawing to an end. But yet all this was ineffectual. Then Moſes begs of God to grant him one of his children for a ſucceſſor. He aſſembles the people; he explains the law to them in ſeventy languages; he fancies that the cauſe of his death is, that God ſuſpects he envys Joſhua; wherefore to prevent any ſuch ſuſpicion, he pays him all thoſe honours which any one would render to a maſter: he riſes always at midnight, knocks at Joſhua's door, performs ſeveral domeſtic offices as his ſervant; and before all the congregation diveſts himſelf of his rays or horns, and puts them upon the head of his ſucceſſor. But this ceremony is interrupted by a voice from heaven, and Moſes is warn'd, that the time of his death draws near. Hereupon he melts into tears, and begs of God, by the power of his great name Jehovah, that he might be turned into a bird, and fly about in the air; or into a fiſh, that he may ſwim in the waters of Jordan; he propoſes to ſtay, on this ſide of that river, with the tribes who had received their portion there. At length the fatal hour arrives. God orders Gabriel, Michael, and Zinghiel, to receive the ſoul of Moſes. They refuſe to accept that commiſſion. God gives it then to Samael, who advanced his ſword to ſlay him, but was affrighted at the rays that proceeded from his eyes. Samael returns to the charge: Moſes drives him back with the rod, on which was inſcribed the name JEHOVAH, and thruſts out his eyes with it. Then God commands Moſes to fold his hands, laying them on his breaſt, and to ſhut his eyes. Upon which he calls out the ſoul, which made a fine encomium upon that body where it had reſided for the ſpace of one hundred and twenty years, and deſired ſhe might continue united to it ſtill. God promiſes to place her on a Seraphic throne, and carries her away with a kiſs. It is not neceſſary to cite any more of theſe Rabbinical dreams: we will therefore conclude our annotations on this book with the juſt encomium of this legiſlator, and trace the picture of his virtues, by collecting into theſe laſt periods the principal ſtroke of his life.

Providence raiſed him up in a time of oppreſſion, that he might become an example to the whole world of thoſe virtues which oppreſſion only can cauſe to ſhine out. It was only by a ſeries of miracles that he eſcaped the fatal effects of that bloody edict which condemned all the male children of the Hebrews to die, aſſoon as they enter'd into the world. And that which is yet more remarkable, and which ſhews how Providence mocks the deſigns of men, was, that he owed, in ſome meaſure, his preſervation to thoſe very perſons who ſought his deſtruction; and they themſelves formed that genius, and cultivated thoſe great talents, which qualified him to be the deliverer of that nation they were labouring to extirpate.

Scarce did he arrive at that age, in which men determine what kind of life they will lead, when he found himſelf called to a choice, which the fire of his paſſions ſeemed not like to ſuffer him to heſitate about, no, not for a moment. Being urged to chuſe between his religion and his fortune, he raiſed himſelf above his age, above his paſſions, and in ſome ſort above human nature, and ſacrificed his fortune to his religion. He reſolved to ſhare the miſeries of an oppreſſed people, in order to ſerve that God, who watches over his children, even at the time that he ſeems to have abandoned them to oppreſſion. He knew nothing equal to God's favour; he conſidered it as infinitely preferable to that of his king; nay, even to the hopes of inheriting the throne and crown; and according to the expreſſion of St. Paul, Heb. xi. 26. he eſteemed the reproach of Chriſt greater riches than the treaſures of Egypt.

He was not only contented to ſhare the fate of an unhappy people, but reſolved alſo to ſtop the courſe of their calamities: He could not prevail upon himſelf to be a ſimple ſpectator of the tyranny exerciſed upon his brethren, but became an avenger of the wrongs they ſuſtained; and ſeeing one of the rigid officers tormenting an Iſraelite, he ſlew the oppreſſor, and by that action expoſed himſelf to the utmoſt ſeverity of the laws of Egypt againſt murderers.

Prudence obliged him to fly from the puniſhment that was prepared for him; he accordingly retired into the country of Midian, where he experienced the effects of that wonderful Providence, which accompanied him during the whole courſe of his life. Not being able to perform the functions of an hero, he exerciſed thoſe of a philoſopher, and employed the tranquillity which he taſted in this retirement, in meditations on the greatneſs of God; or rather, it was there he had thoſe intimate communications with that Divine Being, who had choſen him to lay the firſt foundations of revealed religion, that were to ſupply the defects of natural religion, diſ-figured and darken'd by the paſſions and prejudices of mankind. He wrote the book of Geneſis, by which he furniſhed men with powerful arms againſt idolatry; and combated two of the moſt extravagant errors, that ever infeſted mankind, namely, that of the plurality of gods, and that which aſcribed imperfections to the Deity. To both of which, he oppoſed the doctrine of the unity of a perfect Being.

That God, whoſe exiſtence and attributes he preach'd, appeared to him after a manner entirely miraculous upon mount Horeb, where he gave him the glorious, but formidable commiſſion to oppoſe Pharaoh, and check the torrent of thoſe perſecutions he inflicted on the Iſraelites. He was authorized to ſupport his arguments by wonders, and to compel the whole kingdom of Egypt to attone for the barbarities they exerciſed againſt a people, whom God had choſen for the objects of his moſt tender love, and of his moſt illuſtrious miracles.

Moſes declined accepting this commiſſion, more out of humility than obſtinacy; ſince he could not perſwade himſelf, that at the age of fourſcore years, and amidſt the diſadvantage he ſuſtained, by an ungraceful impediment in his ſpeech, he was a proper perſon to ſpeak to a king, or to overturn a monarchy. He however at laſt ſubmitted to the divine command, and entered upon the ſcene of glory that was opened to him.

Upon his arrival in Egypt, he preſented himſelf to Pharaoh, whom he firſt intreated to diſmiſs the Iſraelites from ſervitude; but finding his prayers unavailing, he had then recourſe to threatnings, and at laſt brought down upon Egypt the moſt dreadful plagues that can poſſibly be imagined. He at laſt marched out of that kingdom at the head of thoſe people, who had long groaned under the weight of their calamities; but inſtead of conducting them from that country without any moleſtation, he was ſoon purſued by the Egyptian tyrant, who hung like a tempeſt upon his rear: His paſſage was likewiſe obſtructed by a chain of impaſſable mountains, and the waters of the Red-ſea. In this emergency he ſtruck the waves of that ſea, and they immediately obeyed the orders of a man whom God, if we may uſe the expreſſion, had made the truſtee of his power. And the waters were then a wall unto the children of Iſrael, on the right hand, and on the left, Exod. xiv. 29. Moſes arrived in the wilderneſs, and by a concourſe of miracles, ſaw the ſame waters which divided to make him a paſſage, cloſe again to ſwallow up Pharaoh, his army, and his whole court.

When he was thus delivered, in all appearance, from his moſt formidable enemies, he found himſelf engaged with thoſe who were yet more dangerous, we mean, his own people. All that a ſervile education could produce of mean and baſe, all that miſtaken minds could conceive of odd and abſurd, all that the moſt corrupted hearts could entertain of cowardice, ingratitude, and perfidiouſneſs, abounded in the children of Iſrael. With ſuch a nation as this, was Moſes compelled to live and converſe in a horrid wilderneſs, ſtruggling with hunger and thirſt, and a general want of all good things. At the very ſame time that he bore the brunt of all the madneſs and rage of the Iſraelites, he interceeded with God to ſpare them. He found himſelf one while under a neceſſity of defending the cauſe of God before this ſtiff-necked people, and at another time to plead their cauſe before an offended God, who declared he would no longer have any regard for a ſociety of men always ready to affront him, and always mixing among his worſhip, that of the moſt infamous idols among the Gentiles.

Sometimes Moſes prevailed ſo far as to calm the wrath of God, and the extravagancies of the people: But it was frequently impoſſible to reſtrain their fury by all the bounds he endeavoured to oppoſe againſt it. Divine juſtice then reſumed its rights, and ſmote the Iſraelites with the ſevereſt ſtrokes.

But the moſt terrible puniſhments had no more efficacy to bring them to their duty, than the moſt tender admonitions. And as if Moſes was reſponſible for the evils they drew upon themſelves by the repetitions of their crimes, they threatned to ſtone him; and propoſed the election of another general, who might lead them back to that Egypt from whence God brought them with a ſtrong hand, and with a ſtretched out arm, Pſalm cxxxvi. 12. They preferred a ſhameful ſlavery to the miraculous direction which guided them through the wilderneſs, and to the kingdoms which God had promiſed them.

In theſe cruel exerciſes of his patience, Moſes paſt forty whole years, and at length brought the remainder of the people even to the borders of the land of promiſe. Did ever any man ſee ſo ſingular a life? Was ever Hero ſignalized by ſo many exploits?

If we enter into a greater detail of his behaviour, we ſhall ſee all kind of virtues ſhining forth in him.

What magnanimity! witneſs his command of armies; witneſs the crown of Egypt, which he deſpiſed when it interfered with the good of religion.

What conſtancy! witneſs thoſe repeated ſummons, and brisk anſwers he made to Pharaoh, Exod. x. 1, 9. &c. Thus ſaith the Lord,—let my people go.—We will go with our young, and with our old, with our ſons, and with our daughters, with our flocks, and with our herds,—There ſhall not a hoof be left behind.—Thou haſt ſpoken well, I will ſee thy face again no more.

What zeal and fervency! witneſs thoſe hands lifted up to heaven, when Iſrael fought againſt Amalek. Witneſs thoſe ardent prayers in favour of the Iſraelites, Exod. xxxii. 11, 12. &c. Lord, why doth thy wrath wax hot againſt thy people, which thou haſt brought forth out of the land of Egypt, with great power, and with a mighty hand? Wherefore ſhould the Egyptians ſpeak and ſay, For miſchief did he bring them out, to ſlay them in the mountains, and to conſume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil againſt thy people. Remember Abraham, Iſaac, and Iſrael, thy ſervants.

What love and charity! witneſs theſe noble expreſſions; Oh, this people have ſinned a great ſin—Yet now if thou wilt, forgive their ſin: and if not, blot me, I pray thee out of the book which thou haſt written Exod. xxxii. 31, 32.

What gentleneſs and ſweetneſs of temper! witneſs what is ſaid of him Numb. xii. 3. The man Moſes was very meek, above all the men that were upon the face of the earth.

How deſirous to ſeek for grace and truth at the fountain-head! Witneſs what he himſelf ſays to God; "If thy "preſence go not with me, carry us not up hence," Exod. xxxiii. 15. And again, "I beſeech thee ſhew me thy glory," ver. 18.

How zealous for God's glory! Witneſs the tables of the law broken at the ſight of a people who had render'd themſelves altogether unworthy of ſuch tender inſtances of the Divine Love. Witneſs alſo the rigorous order he gave the Levites, Exod. xxxii. 37. "Put every man his ſword by his ſide, "and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the "camp, and ſlay every man his brother, and every man his "companion, and every man his neighbour." Witneſs ſtill that ſelf-denying anſwer he return'd to Joſhua, who was afraid leſt the gifts and talents of Eldad and Medad ſhould eclipſe the glory of his maſter, Numb. ii. 29. "Envieſt thou for my ſake? "Would God that all the Lord's people were Prophets," and that the Lord would put his ſpirit upon them!

What perſeverance! Witneſs that ſong, by which he ended both his miniſtry and life.

But was there ever any virtue that has not been ſullied with ſome ſpots? Moſes had likewiſe his. Nevertheleſs, where can we find a life ſo long, and diverſified with ſo many circumſtances, which was attended with ſo few faults? Even thoſe of which he was guilty, ſeem in ſome ſort to be virtues: Their darkneſs would not ſtrike us ſo much, if the reſt of his life had not been bright and luminous. His backwardneſs, and delaying for a while to go to Egypt, when God commanded him, his unwillingneſs to adminiſter the ſacrament of circumciſion to his child, out of human conſiderations, his perſuaſion that it was not conſiſtent with divine juſtice, that God ſhould cauſe water to come out of a rock miraculouſly, to gratify a murmuring people; his ſtriking the rock with ſeveral blows; rather out of indignation to the rebels, than diſtruſt of a merciful God; theſe are faults, 'tis true, and ſuch faults as are deſerving of death, if God ſhould rigorouſly exact his rights; but in regard to human infirmities, they are faults worthy of compaſſion.

Now if it ſhould be thought there is any thing hyperbolical or extravagant in this encomium of Moſes, we can ſtill add to thoſe glorious features we have been tracing, one which is infinitely more noble than the reſt, and which has been deſcribed by him who is the true diſtributer of glory; in a word, God himſelf has drawn the character of this excellent Law-giver, and placed him above all the praiſes we are capable of beſtowing on him, ver. 10, 11, &c. of this chapter. "There aroſe not a prophet ſince in "Iſrael like unto Moſes, whom the Lord knew face to "face: In all the ſigns and the wonders which the Lord "ſent him to do in the land of Egypt, to Pharaoh, "and to all his ſervants, and to all his land, and in all "that mighty hand, and in all the great terror which "Moſes ſhewed in the ſight of all Iſrael."

The End of the Fifth Book of MOSES called DEUTERONOMY.

Critical

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS

On the BOOK of

J O S H U A.

The ARGUMENT.

The Title of this book is not to be conſidered as a demonſtration that it was written by Joſhua, as the five foregoing were by Moſes, but only that it contains an hiſtorical account of the actions performed by that great leader. There are arguments, however, to prove that Joſhua was really the author of this book: For though Grotius, and many other modern writers, together with ſome of the ancients, have imagined they diſcovered reaſons in the book it ſelf againſt this opinion; yet the ancient Talmudiſts aſcribe it to him, being principally induced thereunto by the words in verſe 26. of the laſt chapter of this book, which we cannot ſay are an evident proof that Joſhua was its author, for thoſe words may relate only to the covenant mentioned in that chapter. But they declare expreſsly, in Bava Bathra, cap. i. "Joſhua wrote his "own book, and the eight laſt verſes of the law;" and then, concerning the five laſt verſes of this book, they write in this manner; Eleazar wrote the 29th verſe, &c. of the xxvith chapter, as Phineas did verſe 33. And there are men of excellent learning, who have undertaken to anſwer all that can be objected to this; (particularly Daniel Huetius, in his Demonſtratio Evang. Propoſ. iv.) which objections we ſhall conſider in their proper places, where they ſeem to ariſe in this book.

The Jews reckon it among the firſt prophets, (as they are called) tho' it contains only an hiſtory of what paſſed till the death of Joſhua; which, in all probability, he would not neglect to record, that every tribe and family might have an unqueſtionable title to their inheritance, under his own hand, and that all poſterity might ſee the promiſes made to them by Moſes, were moſt punctually accompliſhed in every particular that related to their proſperity, and that in a ſhort time; for this book contains the hiſtory of the Iſraelites, from the death of Moſes to that of Joſhua, that is, as ſome compute, for the ſpace of ſeventeen years, or rather, near twenty-ſeven years, as will be evident by what we ſhall obſerve on the 10th verſe of the 14th chapter of this book.

The whole book of Joſhua may be divided into three parts: For the twelve firſt chapters record the great and miraculous victories obtained by Joſhua under the influence of the divine bleſſing. From the thirteenth chapter to the twenty-ſecond, the diviſion and allotment of the land among the tribes of Iſrael is very particularly ſet down; and laſtly, here is recited the ſolemn permiſſion given by Joſhua to the two tribes and a half to return to their ſtation and inheritance, which had been formerly conſigned to them on the other ſide of Jordan; as likewiſe the pious and earneſt exhortation of Joſhua to all the people, together with the hiſtory of his death.

CHAP. I.

1 The LORD appointeth Joſhua to ſucceed Moſes. 3 The borders of the promiſed land. 5, 9. God promiſeth to aſſiſt Joſhua. 8 He giveth him inſtructions. 10 He prepareth the people to paſs over Jordan. 12 Joſhua putteth the two tribes and half in mind of their promiſe to Moſes. 16 They promiſe him fealty.

NOW after the death of Moſes the ſervant of the LORD, it came to paſs, that the LORD ſpake unto Joſhua the ſon of Nun, Moſes miniſter, ſaying,

2 Moſes my ſervant is dead; now therefore ariſe, go over this Jordan, thou, and all this people, unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Iſrael.

3 Every place that the ſole of your foot ſhall tread upon, that have I given unto you, as I ſaid unto Moſes.

4 From the wilderneſs and this Lebanon, even unto the great river the river Euphrates, all the land of the Hittites, and unto the great ſea toward the going down of the ſun, ſhall be your coaſt.

5 There ſhall not any man be able to ſtand before thee all the days of thy life: as I was with Moſes, ſo I will be with thee: I will not fail thee, nor forſake thee.

6 Be ſtrong and of a good courage: for unto this people ſhalt thou divide for an inheritance the land which I ſware unto their fathers to give them.

7 Only be thou ſtrong and very courageous, that thou mayeſt obſerve to do according to all the law which Moſes my ſervant commanded thee: turn not from it to the right hand or to the left, that thou mayeſt proſper whitherſoever thou goeſt.

8 This book of the law ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou ſhalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayeſt obſerve to do according to all that is written therein: for then thou ſhalt make thy way proſperous, and then thou ſhalt have good ſucceſs.

9 Have not I commanded thee? Be ſtrong and of a good courage, be not afraid, neither be thou diſmayed: for the LORD thy God is with thee whitherſoever thou goeſt.

10 ¶ Then Joſhua commanded the officers of the people, ſaying,

11 Paſs through the hoſt, and command the people, ſaying, Prepare you victuals: for within three days ye ſhall paſs over this Jordan, to go in to poſſeſs the land which the LORD your God giveth you to poſſeſs it.

12 ¶ And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to half the tribe of Manaſſeh, ſpake Joſhua, ſaying,

13 Remember the word which Moſes the ſervant of the LORD commanded you, ſaying, The LORD your God hath given you reſt, and hath given you this land:

14 Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle ſhall remain in the land which Moſes gave you on this ſide Jordan; but ye ſhall paſs before your brethren armed, all the mighty men of valour, and help them:

15 Until the LORD have given your brethren reſt, as he hath given you, and they alſo have poſſeſſed the land which the LORD your God giveth them: then ye ſhall return unto the land of your poſſeſſion, and enjoy it, which Moſes the LORDS ſervant gave you on this ſide Jordan toward the ſun-riſing.

16 ¶ And they anſwered Joſhua, ſaying, All that thou commandeſt us we will do, and whitherſoever thou ſendeſt us we will go.

17 According as we hearkened unto Moſes in all things, ſo will we hearken unto thee: only the LORD thy God be with thee, as he was with Moſes.

18 Whoſoever he be that doth rebel againſt thy commandment, and will not hearken unto thy words, in all that thou commandeſt him, he ſhall be put to death: only be ſtrong and of a good courage.

Ver. 1. Now after the death of Moſes, the ſervant of the Lord, it came to paſs, that the Lord ſpake unto Joſhua the ſon of Nun, Moſes miniſter, ſaying,] The Iſraelitiſh camp continued at Shittim, near the river Jordan, and in ſight of the land of Canaan, during the days of mourning for Moſes, and the people, whom a forty years wandering in the wilderneſs, under a diſcipline intermixed with the greateſt tenderneſs and ſeverity, had rendered more tractable, and more ſenſible of God's paternal care, were only waiting for the ſignal for paſſing over Jordan; when their new general received freſh and repeated promiſes of the divine aſſiſtance in the conqueſt of the promiſed land. Nothing leſs than ſuch an aſſurance could indeed have ſupported Joſhua's courage in ſo arduous a task. He was now ninety-three years of age, and had been trained up under Moſes, one third part at leaſt of that time, ſo that he wanted neither experience nor ſagacity to foreſee all the difficulties he was to encounter with. He ſaw himſelf, indeed, at the head of ſix hundred thouſand fighting men, but, at the ſame time, his army was clogged with a vaſt multitude of old men, women, and children, beſide ſervants, cattle, and other incumbrances. The very firſt ſtep he was to take, was the croſſing a large river; in which expedition, he knew himſelf equally expoſed to the arms of thoſe he went to attack, and thoſe whom he left behind. The nations he was to ſubdue were naturally warlike, of a gigantic ſtature and ſtrength, their towns well fortified by nature and art, their forces and intereſt united by the ſtrongeſt ties and alliances; they had all along taken the alarm, and made the greateſt preparations againſt him, reſolving either to obſtruct his conqueſt, or loſe their lives in the defence of their country.

This was the ſituation of the Canaanites, and of Joſhua's affairs, when he received the divine ſignal to prepare for the glorious conqueſt of the promiſed land. The Deity commands him to lead the people over Jordan, in order to poſſeſs the land of Canaan; promiſes to bleſs the progreſs of his arms; and animates him with the aſſurance, that he ſhould divide to the Iſraelites the inheritance which God had ſworn "unto their fathers to give them," ver. 6.

Ver. 8. This book of the law.] The original of which was preſerved in the ſanctuary; from whence God now uttered his will to Joſhua.

——— Shall not depart out of thy mouth.] He was to read it continually, that he might inſtruct others, and be thereby an example to all future governors and kings, according to the law, Deut. xvii. 18, 19. By which it is evident, that Joſhua had a copy of the law; which was written and extant in his time.

——— But thou ſhalt meditate therein day and night.] His other weighty employments were not to hinder him from pondering as well as reading, the law of God; becauſe it was to be the rule by which he was to conduct himſelf, in all his private tranſactions, and publick adminiſtrations.

——— That thou mayeſt obſerve to do according to all that is written therein.] Which was not poſſible, without the ſerious and attentive conſideration before-mentioned.

——— For then thou ſhalt make thy way proſperous, and then thou ſhalt have good ſucceſs.] Or, do wiſely. Prudence and proſperity go together; but no prudence is comparable to a ſtrict obſervance of the laws of God, upon which the felicity of kingdoms and ſtates depends.

Ver. 10. Then Joſhua commanded the officers of the people, Saying.] We have often obſerved, that as SCHOPHETIM were judges, who heard cauſes in their courts, and pronounced ſentence; ſo SCHOTERIM were inferiour officers belonging to the court, who ſummoned the people to attend, and executed the ſentence: For after Moſes had mentioned (Deut. i. 15.) the chief of their tribes, captains over thouſands, and hundreds, and fifties, and tens, he at laſt mentions theſe officers among their tribes; who were employed, it appears by this place, in the camp, as well as in the courts of juſtice.

Ver. 11. For within three days, Ye ſhall paſs over this Jordan.] Which was not ſo far from Shittim, where they now lay, but they could ſee it.

——— To go in to poſſeſs the land, which the Lord your God giveth you to poſſeſs it.] He conſtantly remembers them of their donation from God; both to ſtrengthen their faith, and excite their thankfulneſs. For they got not the land in poſſeſſion by their own ſword, neither did their arm ſave them; but his right hand, &c.

Ver. 12. And to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to half the tribe of Manaſſeh ſpake Joſhua, Saying.] Here he begins to act according to the command of Moſes, as God beſo e directed him, ver. 7, 8. For Moſes had given this charge to the Reubenites, &c. when he gave them their poſſeſſion on this ſide Jordan, Numb. xxxii. 20, 21, &c. and put them in mind of it again, Deut. iii. 18, &c.

Ver. 13. Remember the word which Moſes the ſervant of the Lord commanded you, Saying.] It is very obſervable, how gently, and not imperiouſly, Joſhua exerciſes his authority, at his firſt entrance upon this office. For he only reminds them of what Moſes required from them, and leaves them to reflect upon the promiſe they made to him.

——— The Lord your God hath given you reſt, and hath given you this land.] That is, actually beſtowed upon them a country to ſettle in. For here their wives, and children, and cattle remained (with a ſufficient number of perſons to look after them) when they marched into Canaan, as it follows in the next verſe.

Ver. 14. Your wives, your little ones, and your cattle, ſhall remain in the land which Moſes gave you on this ſide Jordan; but ye ſhall paſs before your brethren armed.] March in the front of them, to ſhew their forwardneſs to bring them into the ſame happy condition with themſelves.

——— All the mighty men of valour, and help them.] Such as Joſhua thought fit to ſelect, for it is evident they did not all go over; but only forty thouſand of them, iv. 13. The reſt, tho' fit for war, were left to defend their wives, childern, and flocks, while thoſe mighty men of valour went to aſſiſt their brethren.

Ver. 16. And they anſwered Joſhua, ſaying, All that thou commandeſt us, we will do, and whitherſoever thou ſendeſt us, we will go.] It is likely, this was the anſwer not only of the Reubenites, Gadites, and Manaſſites, but of all the reſt of the tribes: Before whom, Joſhua put theſe two tribes and an half in mind of their duty: Which they all engage to perform exactly; theſe words containing a full recognition of Joſhua's authority, and their abſolute ſubmiſſion to it.

Ver. 17. According as we hearkened unto Moſes in all things, ſo will we hearken unto thee.] There they acknowledge his authority to be equal to that of Moſes, who was undoubtedly ſet over them by God; as they now own Joſhua to be.

——— Only the Lord thy God be with thee as he was with Moſes.] Theſe words are not a reſtriction of their obedience, which did not depend upon his ſucceſſes; but a ſolemn prayer to God, of whom they deſired no other governor than Joſhua, that he would make him as victorious as Moſes was. Therefore ſome tranſlate the words, not "only, but may the Lord thy God, &c. or ſince the "Lord thy God hath promiſed to be with thee. The Targum paraphraſes theſe words, Only let the word of the Lord thy God be thy helper, as he was to Moſes.

Ver. 18. Whoſoever he be that doth rebel againſt thy commandment, and will not hearken unto thy words in all that thou commandeſt him, he ſhall be put to death.] This ſeems to be the voice of all the people, and the elders, or a decree made by the elders, as the Jews underſtand it: Who looking upon Joſhua to be a king as Moſes was, extend this to all the kings of Iſrael in following times. So Guil. Schickard obſerves out of Maimonides in his Miſchpat Hammeleck, cap. iv. Theor. xiv. p. 101. But it ſhould rather be ſaid, that Joſhua was a king and prophet as Moſes was; and the law, as Ruſi obſerves, ordered him to be put to death that tranſgreſſed the orders of Moſes, and of a prophet.

——— Only be ſtrong and of a good courage.] He had the greater reaſon to be courageous, ſince they reſolved, as one man, to ſtand by him, and never to diſobey him. And therefore the word rak, which we render only; ſhould rather be tranſlated therefore, as it plainly ſignifies, chap. xiii. 6. where, ſpeaking of the land that remained to be poſſeſſed, God promiſes to drive out the inhabitants, and therefore bids Joſhua to divide it to the Iſraelites for an inheritance.

CHAP. II.

1 Rahab receiveth and concealeth the two ſpies ſent from Shittim. 8 The covenant between her and them. 23 Their return and relation.

AND Joſhua the ſon of Nun ſent out of Shittim two men, to ſpy ſecretly, ſaying, Go view the land, even Jericho: and they went, and came into an harlots houſe, named Rahab, and lodged there.

2 And it was told the king of Jericho, ſaying, Behold, there came men in hither to night, of the children of Iſrael, to ſearch out the country.

3 And the king of Jericho ſent unto Rahab, ſaying, Bring forth the men that are come to thee, which are entred into thine houſe: for they be come to ſearch out all the country.

4 And the woman took the two men, and hid them, and ſaid thus, There came men unto me, but I wiſt not whence they were:

5 And it came to paſs about the time of ſhutting of the gate, when it was dark, that the men went out: whither the men went, I wot not: purſue after them quickly, for ye ſhall overtake them.

6 But ſhe had brought them up to the roof of the houſe, and hid them with the ſtalks of flax, which ſhe had laid in order upon the roof.

7 And the men purſued after them the way to Jordan, unto the fords: and aſſoon as they which purſued after them were gone out, they ſhut the gate.

8 ¶ And before they were laid down, ſhe came up unto them upon the roof;

9 And ſhe ſaid unto the men, I know that the LORD hath given you the land, and that your terrour is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land faint becauſe of you.

10 For we have heard how the LORD dried up the water of the Red-ſea for you, when you came out of Egypt; and what you did unto the two kings of the Amorites that were on the other ſide Jordan, Sihon and Og, whom ye utterly deſtroyed.

11 And aſſoon as we had heard theſe things, our hearts did melt, neither did there remain any more courage in any man, becauſe of you: for the LORD your God he is God in heaven above, and in earth beneath.

12 Now therefore, I pray you, ſwear unto me by the LORD, ſince I have ſhewed you kindneſs, that ye will alſo ſhew kindneſs unto my fathers houſe; and give me a true token:

13 And that ye will ſave alive my father, and my mother, and my brethren, and my ſiſters, and all that they have, and deliver our lives from death,

14 And the men anſwered her, Our life for yours, if ye utter not this our buſineſs. And it ſhall be when the LORD hath given us the land, that we will deal kindly and truly with thee.

15 Then ſhe let them down by a cord through the window: for her houſe was upon the town-wall, and ſhe dwelt upon the wall.

16 And ſhe ſaid unto them, Get you to the mountain, leſt the purſuers meet you; and hide yourſelves there three days, until the purſuers be returned: and afterward may ye go your way.

17 And the men ſaid unto her, We will be blameleſs of this thine oath which thou haſt made us ſwear.

18 Behold, when we come into the land, thou ſhalt bind this line of ſcarlet thread in the window, which thou didſt let us down by: and thou ſhalt bring thy father, and thy mother, and thy brethren, and all thy fathers houſhold home unto thee.

19 And it ſhall be, that whoſoever ſhall go out of the doors of thy houſe into the ſtreet, his blood ſhall be upon his head, and we will be guiltleſs: and whoſoever ſhall be with thee in the houſe, his blood ſhall be on our head, if any hand be upon him.

20 And if thou utter this our buſineſs, then we will be quit of thine oath which thou haſt made us to ſwear.

21 And ſhe ſaid, According unto your words, ſo be it. And ſhe ſent them away, and they departed: and ſhe bound the ſcarlet line in the window.

22 And they went, and came unto the mountain, and abode there three days, until the purſuers were returned. And the purſuers ſought them throughout all the way, but found them not.

23 ¶ So the two men returned, and deſcended from the mountain, and paſſed over, and came to Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and told him all things that befel them;

24 And they ſaid unto Joſhua, Truly the LORD hath delivered into our hands all the land; for even all the inhabitants of the country do faint becauſe of us.

Ver. 2. And Joſhua the ſon of Nun ſent] Or had ſent, before the directions given to the officers, mentioned in the preceding chapter, ver. 10, 11. which beſt agrees with the 22d verſe of this chapter, and the reſt of the hiſtorical narration.

——— Out of Shittim.] Called alſo Abel Shittim, Numb. xxxiii. 49. and which was in the plains of Moab, where Iſrael now lay, Deut. xxxiv. 1.

——— Two men.] Joſhua did not ſend a greater number, as Moſes had formerly done, partly becauſe the people of Canaan were now more alarmed than in the time of Moſes, and conſequently more ſuſpicious of all ſtrangers; and partly becauſe theſe two ſpies were not to view the whole land, but only an inconſiderable part of it. It is evident, that Joſhua did not employ theſe ſpies out of any diſtruſt as the people did, Deut i. and it is moſt probable, he had God's command and direction in it, for the encouragement of himſelf and his army in the preſent enterprize.

——— To ſpy ſecretly.] So that none were privy to this proceeding among the Iſraelites, but Joſhua. The word ſecretly ſeems added by way of oppoſition to the like action, Deut. i. where it was with the peoples privity, and upon their motion; and therefore an account was given not only to Moſes, but likewiſe to the congregation, whereas it was here given to none but Joſhua, ver. 23. which was a good precaution to prevent the inconveniency veniency which might poſſibly have ariſen, if their report had been doubtful or diſcouraging.

—— Saying, go view the land.] Not the whole country of Canaan, but only that part of it which lay about Jericho, whoſe fortifications they were to obſerve, with the approaches to it, and the ſtrength it poſſeſſed.

—— And they went and came into an harlots houſe, named Rahab] We cannot ſee any convincing reaſon why Rahab ſhould be repreſented as an harlot, by moſt verſions as well as ours, when a more favourable appellative may be deduced from the original word Zonah, which if it ſometimes denotes an harlot, does likewiſes as frequently ſignify an inn-keeper, or one who ſells proviſions, for it is derived from the root Zon, which ſignifies to give food, and is the feminine participle active of that verb. In this expoſition of the word, we have followed the chaldee paraphraſe where it is rendered Pundakitha, which is plainly the Greek word Πανδοχία, and imports that ſhe kept a houſe of public reception. The moſt learned Jews likewiſe paraphraſe the word Zonah, by Mokereth-mazon, a ſeller of proviſions, and Kimchi allows, that it may be rendered either way; to which we may add that the Septuagint, and after them St. James, have made uſe of the Greek word πόρνη, which is capable of both ſignifications, namely, of a victualler, or a harlot, as Junius hath fully proved, (in Epiſt. Jacob. ii. 25.) And indeed, as the word in its primitive ſenſe doth properly ſignify the former, it is not unlikely that the freedoms which thoſe kind of women were wont to allow to their cuſtomers, might give birth to the latter ſignification, and, from an hoſteſs or a victualler, come in time to ſignify a harlot. But as it doth not appear by the text that Rahab did ever proſtitute herſelf in that manner, but rather the contrary, the faith which ſhe expreſſed in God, and her behaviour to his two ſervants, might well deſerve to have the moſt favourable conſtruction put upon her profeſſion. To which we may add, that it is not likely that Salmon who was a prince of the houſe of Judah, and one of the anceſtors of the Meſſiah, would, or indeed could, afterward lawfully have married her if ſhe had been ſuch a public woman.

However, we do not pretend to enter into a ſcrutiny, how far her hoſpitality to her two gueſts was blameable or praiſe-worthy, or how far ſhe was guilty of betraying her country, much leſs ſhall we take upon us to juſtify the falſhood ſhe related to the king's officers, as ſome have done with more zeal than diſcretion. But thus much may be ſaid in her behalf, ſetting aſide even her faith, for which ſhe is commended in the goſpel, that if ſhe had heard of the overthrow of Pharaoh, Sihon, and Og: the king of Jericho could not be ignorant of it, it was therefore as natural for her to be terrified with it, and provide for her ſafety, as it was for him to make a brave reſiſtance, or periſh in the attempt. To this we may add, that if what the ſcripture ſeems to intimate plainly enough, be true, that Joſhua was obliged to offer peace, before he made uſe of the ſword, againſt any of the Canaanitiſh nations, it was lawful for her, or any other ſubject, to accept it, as it was glorious for a monarch to refuſe it: At leaſt, we think that the refuſal of ſuch advantageous terms from an irreſiſtible conqueror, at the risk of being all maſſacred by him, for the ſake of a king, who, for ought that appears to the contrary, might be but a petty tyrant, and of a people whom fear had render'd incapable of making a defence, when perhaps the difference between, being under the natural monarch, if he was really ſuch, or under the conqueror, was either inconſiderable, or it may be, on the ſide of the latter: Such a refuſal, we ſay, would have been an inſtance of patriotiſm, that could hardly be expected from a Canaanite, much leſs from ſuch a young inn-keeper as Rahab muſt have been, to have been the mother of Boaz above thirty years after, as Junius has fully ſhewn in the place above quoted.

The ſpies had not been long at the houſe of Rahab, before a ſtrict ſearch was made after them by order of the alarmed king of Jericho. Their fear, however, was ſoon diſpell'd by their hoſpitable hoſteſs, who ſent away the ſearchers, by telling them out of her window, that two ſtrangers had indeed refreſhed themſelves at her houſe, but that they were gone ſince, about ſun-ſet, and might be eaſily taken, if cloſely purſu'd. Their backs were no ſooner turned, than ſhe went to the two ſpies, to whom, the freely owned the panic dread which had ſeized not only that city, but all the land of Canaan, at the news of what the God of Iſrael had done in favour of their nation, both at the Red-ſea, and againſt thoſe kingdoms which they had ſo lately conquer'd. To this ſhe added, that being fully perſuaded that he was the only true God, againſt whoſe decrees, all oppoſition would be not only vain, but dangerous, ſhe was now ready to ſave them from their imminent danger, provided they would ſwear to preſerve her and her family, when they became maſters of the city. An offer ſo generous and unexpected, joined to ſo candid a confeſſion, could not deſerve a leſs reward; and the two ſpies, who, in the condition they were in, would have purchaſed their ſafety upon terms much harder, were not long before they gave her all the deſired aſſurance, that not only ſhe and her family, but all that were found in her houſe at the taking of the city, ſhould be exempted from the common ruin. She kept them concealed the remaining part of the time, under ſome hempen ſtocks, and about midnight let them down by a rope out of one of her back windows, which was contiguous to the city wall, after ſhe had charged them to keep themſelves concealed in ſome cliff of the neighbouring mountains for two or three days, till their purſuers were returned home. Before they took their leave, they agreed that ſhe ſhould hang a ſcarlet line out of her window, which ſhould be a ſignal to them, and a ſafeguard to her houſe. The riſk they had ſuſtained put a ſtop to their further progreſs; and what they had learned at Jericho, made it as needleſs as dangerous; ſo that, having happily eſcaped all farther diſcovery, they returned to their camp on the third day, and related to Joſhua all that had happened to them.

CHAP. III.

1 Joſhua cometh to Jordan. 2 The officers inſtruct the people for the paſſage. 7 The LORD encourageth Joſhua. 9 Joſhua encourageth the people. 14 The waters of Jordan are divided.

AND Joſhua roſe early in the morning, and they removed from Shittim, and came to Jordan, he and all the children of Iſrael, and lodged there before they paſſed over.

2 And it came to paſs after three days, that the officers went through the hoſt;

3 And they commanded the people, ſaying, When ye ſee the ark of the covenant of the LORD your God, and the prieſts the Levites bearing it, then ye ſhall remove from your place, and go after it.

4 Yet there ſhall be a ſpace between you and it, about two thouſand cubits by meaſure: come not near unto it, that ye may know the way by which ye muſt go: for ye have not paſſed this way heretofore.

5 And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Sanctify yourſelves: for to-morrow the LORD will do wonders among you.

6 And Joſhua ſpake unto the prieſts, ſaying, Take up the ark of the covenant, and paſs over before the people. And they took up the ark of the covenant, and went before the people.

7 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, This day will I begin to magnify thee in the the ſight of all Iſrael, that they may know that as I was with Moſes, ſo I will be with thee.

8 And thou ſhalt command the prieſts that bear the ark of the covenant, ſaying, When ye are come to the brink of the water of Jordan, ye ſhall ſtand ſtill in Jordan.

9 ¶ And Joſhua ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, Come hither, and hear the words of the LORD your God.

10 And Joſhua ſaid, Hereby ye ſhall know that the living God is among you, and that he will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Hivites, and the Perizzites, and the Girgaſhites, and the Amorites, and the Jebuſites.

11 Behold, the ark of the covenant of the LORD of all the earth paſſeth over before you into Jordan.

12 Now therefore take ye twelve men out of the tribes of Iſrael, out of every tribe a man.

13 And it ſhall come to paſs, aſſoon as the ſoles of the feet of the prieſts that bear the ark of the LORD, the Lord of all the earth, ſhall reſt in the waters of Jordan, that the waters of Jordan ſhall be cut off from the waters that come down from above: and they ſhall ſtand upon an heap.

14 ¶ And it came to paſs when the people removed from their tents, to paſs over Jordan, and the prieſts bearing the ark of the covenant before the people;

15 And as they that bear the ark were come unto Jordan, and the feet of the prieſts that bare the ark were dipped in the brim of the water (for Jordan overfloweth all his banks all the time of harveſt)

16 That the waters which came down from above, ſtood and roſe up upon an heap very far from the city Adam, that is beſide Zaretan: and thoſe that came down toward the ſea of the plain, even the ſalt-ſea, failed, and were cut off: and the people paſſed over right againſt Jericho.

17 And the prieſts that bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, ſtood firm on dry ground in the midſt of Jordan, and all the Iſraelites paſſed over on dry ground, until all the people were paſſed clean over Jordan.

Ver. 1. And Joſhua roſe early in the morning, &c.] The conſternation which the ſpies told him was diffuſed through the whole land of Canaan, was univerſally conſidered as a ſure omen of their future ſucceſs; and Joſhua failed not to improve it, by aſſuring them that it was God himſelf who had injected ſuch a terror among their enemies, and that they had now nothing to do, but to fight valiantly under his banner and protection. He then reminded the two tribes and a half of their former promiſe of aſſiſting their brethren in the conqueſt of the land, and they on their part as readily promiſed to obey his orders at the peril of their lives. However, as thoſe tribes compoſed an army of above an hundred thouſand fighting men, Joſhua contented himſelf with leſs than one half, and left the reſt to defend their new poſſeſſions and families. After this he cauſed it to be proclaimed through the camp, that they ſhould paſs over Jordan within three days, during which time they ſhould furniſh themſelves with proviſions, ſince the manna was to ceaſe aſſoon as they had ſet foot on the other ſhore, and had taſted the bread of that country, as it actually did: Joſhua then gave the ſignal for marching from Shittim to the neighbouring ſhore of that river. Aſſoon as they were encamped there, Joſhua ſent and communicated to every tribe the order that was to be obſerved in this ſolemn march. The prieſts bearing the ark were to begin the proceſſion, and aſſoon as their feet, touching the water, had opened a miraculous way to them, each tribe was to follow in the ſame order as they had obſerved in all their marches, keeping however the awful diſtance preſcribed of two thouſand cubits, from that ſacred ſymbol of the Divine Preſence, while thoſe who bore it were to continue in the middle of the river, till the whole hoſt of Iſrael had got ſafe to the other ſhore.

To inſpire the people ſtill with a greater regard for this wonderful paſſage, they were commanded to ſanctify themſelves, as had been formerly done upon ſuch ſolemn occaſions, by waſhing their cloaths, avoiding all impurities, and abſtaining from matrimonial intercourſe, on the eve of their march. He charged likewiſe every tribe to ſend a man to him, to be ready to execute ſuch orders as he ſhould give them on the morrow; which was no ſooner come, than the prieſts began their march toward the river, and the people prepared to follow them in two columns, one above, and the other below the ark. This march happened on a Friday, on the tenth day of the firſt month Niſan, which anſwers to our thirtieth of April, and was the day on which the lamb was to be choſen, and ſet by for the paſſover; about which time the waters of Jordan being uſually ſwelled by the melting of the ſnows of Libanus, and other neighbouring mountains, ſeldom or never failed to overflow its banks. As ſoon therefore as the prieſts, who ſupported the ark, had touched the extremity of it with their feet, God, who had promiſed to ſignalize their new general here, in as miraculous a manner as he had done their old one at the Red-ſea, cauſed the waters of the river from above to go back, and riſe up in heaps far beyond the city of Adam, which is beſide that of Zaretan, whilſt thoſe below continuing their courſe toward the ſea of the Plain, otherwiſe called, the Salt, or Dead-ſea, opened a paſſage of about ſixteen or eighteen miles in breadth to the Iſraelites, till they were all got ſafe to the other ſide.

The city of Zaretan, which we juſt now mentioned, was afterward called Zaredathah; it belonged to the tribe of Ephraim, and became famous for the fine copper-works which Hiram caſt there for the temple of Solomon, 2 Chron. iv. 17. As for the city of Adam, though ſome geographers place it upon the Dead-ſea, that is, below the place where the waters divided themſelves, (Cellar. Geogr. Antiq. lib. iii. c. 13.) it is plain from the text, that it was above it toward Scythopolis; ſo that if the place where they croſſed was about Bethabara, where John baptized, as ſome think (vide Calm. Comm. in Joſh. & Hiſt. V. T.) the waters muſt have floated the country to the extent of near ſixty miles. What adds therefore ſtill to the miracle is, firſt, that none of thoſe cities that were ſituate along the ſhore, where the waters roſe up to ſuch a height, were drowned, or even hurt as we can find: and, ſecondly, that the inhabitants of Jericho, right over againſt whom the Iſraelites croſſed the river, did not make ſome bold attempt to have diſputed a paſs of ſuch conſequence, and obſtructed their croſſing; all which can only be attributed to the ſame miraculous power which kept the waters ſuſpended.

CHAP. IV.

1 Twelve men are appointed to take twelve ſtones for a memorial out of Jordan. 9 Twelve other ſtones are ſet up in the midſt of Jordan. 10, 19 The people paſs over. 14 God magnifieth Joſhua. 20 The twelve ſtones are pitched in Gilgal.

AND it came to paſs when all the people were clean paſſed over Jordan, that the LORD ſpake unto Joſhua, ſaying,

2 Take you twelve men out of the people, out of every tribe a man,

3 And command you them, ſaying, Take you hence out of the midſt of Jordan, out of the place where the prieſts feet ſtood firm, twelve ſtones, and ye ſhall carry them over with you, and leave them in the lodging-place where you ſhall lodge this night.

4 Then Joſhua called the twelve men, whom he had prepared of the children of Iſrael, out of every tribe a man.

5 And Joſhua ſaid unto them, Paſs over before the ark of the LORD your God into the midſt of Jordan, and take ye up every man of you a ſtone upon his ſhoulder, according unto the number of the tribes of the children of Iſrael:

6 That this may be a ſign among you, that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, ſaying, What mean you by theſe ſtones?

7 Then ye ſhall anſwer them, That the waters of Jordan were cut off before the ark of the covenant of the LORD, when it paſſed over Jordan, the waters of Jordan were cut off: and theſe ſtones ſhall be for a memorial unto the children of Iſrael for ever.

8 And the children of Iſrael did ſo as Joſhua commanded, and took up twelve ſtones out of the midſt of Jordan, as the LORD ſpake unto Joſhua, according to the number of the tribes of the children of Iſrael, and carried them over with them unto the place where they lodged, and laid them down there.

9 And Joſhua ſet up twelve ſtones in the midſt of Jordan, in the place where the feet of the prieſts which bare the ark of the covenant ſtood: and they are there unto this day.

10 ¶ For the prieſts which bare the ark, ſtood in the midſt of Jordan, until every thing was finiſhed that the LORD commanded Joſhua to ſpeak unto the people, according to all that Moſes commanded Joſhua: and the people haſted and paſſed over.

11 And it came to paſs when all the people were clean paſſed over, that the ark of the LORD paſſed over, and the prieſts in the preſence of the people.

12 And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and half the tribe of Manaſſeh, paſſed over armed before the children of Iſrael, as Moſes ſpake unto them:

13 About forty thouſand prepared for war, paſſed over before the LORD unto battle, to the plains of Jericho.

14 ¶ On that day the LORD magnified Joſhua in the ſight of all Iſrael, and they feared him as they feared Moſes, all the days of his life.

15 And the LORD ſpake unto Joſhua, ſaying,

16 Command the prieſts that bear the ark of the teſtimony, that they come up out of Jordan.

17 Joſhua therefore commanded the prieſts, ſaying, Come ye up out of Jordan.

18 And it came to paſs when the prieſts that bear the ark of the covenant of the LORD, were come out of the mids of Jordan, and the ſoles of the prieſts feet were lift up unto the dry land, that the waters of Jordan returned unto their place, and flowed over all his banks, as they did before.

19 ¶ And the people came up out of Jordan, on the tenth day of the firſt month, and encamped in Gilgal, in the eaſt-border of Jericho.

20 ¶ And thoſe twelve ſtones which they took out of Jordan, did Joſhua pitch in Gilgal.

21 And he ſpake unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, When your children ſhall ask their fathers in time to come, ſaying, What mean theſe ſtones?

22 Then ye ſhall let your children know, ſaying, Iſrael came over this Jordan on dry land.

23 For the LORD your God dried up the waters of Jordan from before you, until ye were paſſed over, as the LORD your God did to the Red ſea, which he dried up from before us, until we were gone over:

24 That all the people of the earth might know the hand of the LORD, that it is mighty: that ye might fear the LORD your God for ever.

Ver-

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs, when all the people were clean paſſed over Jordan, that the Lord ſpake unto Joſhua, ſaying.] This great leader went, in all probablity, to return thanks to God, for the wonderful mercy the Iſraelites had experienced, and then the Divine Being unfolded his mind to him.

Ver. 2. Take you twelve men out of the people, out of every tribe a man.] He bids him now call together the twelve men formerly choſen, iii. 12.

Ver. 3. And command you them.] We ſuppoſe Joſhua had ſome of the elders, or heads of the tribes, that joined with him in this office.

—— Saying, take you hence out of the midſt of Jordan.] Which continued perfectly dry for ſome time after they were all gone over; that is, till the prieſts removed from thence.

—— Out of the place where the prieſts feet ſtood firm, twelve ſtones.] Some underſtand this ſo preciſely, as if they were to take them from under the very ſoles of the prieſts feet, which is not probable; but only near the place where they ſtood. For the prieſts did not ſtir a ſtep from the place where they firſt ſtood; and therefore none can tell how they ſhould take theſe ſtones from under their feet, and place others in their room while they remained ſtanding fixed in the ſame place.

—— And ye ſhall carry them over with you.] In the ſight of all the people, to make the miracle more known among them all.

—— And leave them in the lodging-place, where you ſhall lodge this night.] As a monument of this miraculous work of God; which remained ever after in Gilgal; the place where they lodged that night, ver. 19, 20.

Ver. 4. Then Joſhua called the twelve men, &c.] Joſhua cauſed theſe men, whom he had directed to wait about him, to take up twelve other ſtones from the bottom of the river, and to erect a monument with them on the ſhore; which was no ſooner done, than the prieſts had orders to march with the ark, and leave the waters to retake their uſual courſe. Joſhua, who by this time was in as high eſteem with the people as Moſes had been before, failed not to charge them to tranſmit to their poſterity the occaſion and meaning of theſe two monuments, both which, if we may believe Euſebius and others, were to be ſeen many centuries after.

Ver. 9. —— And they are there unto this day.] From hence, not only ſuch men as Mr. Hobbs, but Maſius, and Grotius, and ſeveral others have argued, that this book was not written by Joſhua, but by ſome perſon who lived at a great diſtance from his time, as theſe words, they fancy, import. But this is a meer imagination, for as Joſhua wrote this book in his old age, or at leaſt then added his laſt hand to it, (as it is probable he did) he might as well uſe theſe words, as one who had lived ſeveral years after. And at this rate of arguing (as Huetius obſerves) Moſes muſt not be the author of the book of Deuteronomy, (where he ſpeaks in the ſame ſtile, chap. x. 5. xi. 4.) nor St. Matthew the author of the goſpel, which he wrote not many years after our Saviour's death; who uſes the very ſame words. chap. xxvii. 8. xxviii. 21. See Demonſt. Evang. Propos. iv. cap. xxiv.

Ver. 10. For the prieſts that bare the ark ſtood in the midſt of Jordan.] It is remarkable in this whole relation, that when the prieſts are mentioned, theſe words are ſtill added, that bare the ark, or the ark of the covenant, (both in this chapter, ver. 9, 16, 18, and in the foregoing ver. 13, 14, 15, 17.) to ſhew that this miracle was not to be aſcribed to them, but to the power of the Lord, unto whom they miniſtred.

—— Until every thing was finiſhed, that the Lord commanded Joſhua to ſpeak unto the people.] Concerning the taking up of the twelve ſtones, and placing others in their room; and all that preceded concerning their paſſing over the river, which it is likely he exhorted them to do chearfully.

—— According to all that Moſes commanded Joſhua.] We do not read that Moſes gave any particular directions about the foregoing matters; therefore the meaning is, that Joſhua ſtrenuouſly executed all that God ordered, as Moſes had admoniſhed him, Deut. iii. 28. and other places.

—— And the people haſted, and paſſed over.] This doth not refer to all the people, as if they went a ſwift pace over the river, out of fear of the waters overwhelming them, (as ſome think) but to ſuch as remained ſtill behind the ark, to attend its motions, who now ſeeing all that Joſhua commmanded was finiſhed, made haſte to get over the river, as their brethren had done before them. It is ſaid, indeed, ver. 1. that when all the people were clean paſſed over, Joſhua gave order about the twelve ſtones: but the meaning is, when the main body of the people was gone over: for it appears by the next verſe, that they had not all entirely paſſed over until now.

Ver. 11. And it came to paſs when all the people were clean paſſed over.] So that none were remaining in the plains of Moab, from hence they came.

—— That the ark of the Lord paſſed over, and the prieſts.] They who went firſt into the river, came laſt out: It being by the power of the Lord, whoſe ark the prieſts ſupported, that the courſe of the river was ſtopped, and a way made for all the people to paſs over.

—— In the preſence of the people.] Who beheld the water ſtanding ſtill on a heap, while the ark was in the river; but come tumbling down, when it was gone. Which demonſtrated that it was God's preſence with them, to which alone they owed this miraculous mercy.

Ver. 12. And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and half the tribe of Manaſſeh, paſſed over, armed, before the children of Iſrael, as Moſes ſpake unto them.] They were the firſt who paſſed over, (according to their engagement, Numb. xxxiii. 20, 21, 27. of which Joſhua had put them in mind, i. 13.) ready to encounter any enemy that might have oppoſed their landing.

Ver. 13. About forty thouſand prepared for war.] Or, ready armed (as it is in the margin) and prepared to fight, in caſe they met with any oppoſition. It is obſervable, that in the laſt muſter, made not long ago, of thoſe who were fit for war in their ſeveral tribes, there were above forty thouſand in the tribe of Reuben alone; and above fifty thouſand in that of Manaſſeh, Numb. xxvi. 7. 34. And therefore it is likely Joſhua drew out this number only of choſen men; and left all the reſt to look after their families and flocks, —— Paſſed over before the Lord unto battle.] Being paſſed over the river, they ſtood in battle array before the ark; at the diſtance, we ſuppoſe, of two thouſand cubits.

—— To the plains of Jericho.] Where it might be ſuppoſed the people of Jericho would have encamped, to oppoſe their paſſage.

Ver. 14. On that day the Lord magnified Joſhua in the ſight of all Iſrael.] As he promiſed, chap. iii. 7.

—— And they feared him, as they feared Moſes, all the days of his life.] This wonder gained him the ſame reſpect and reverence, as the dividing the Red-Sea had procured to Moſes, Exod. xiv. 31.

Ver. 15. And the Lord ſpake unto Joſhua, ſaying] All this affair was tranſacted purely by the Divine direction.

Ver. 16. Command the prieſts that bear the ark of the teſtimony, that they come up out of Jordan.] The midſt of which river, where they ſtood, being the loweſt and deepeſt part of it, they are properly ſaid to come up when they left that ſtation.

Ver. 17. Joſhua therefore commanded the prieſts, ſaying, come ye up out of Jordan.] Where they waited for the Divine order, and did not move till they received it.

Ver. 18. And it came to paſs, when the prieſts that bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, were come up out of the mids of Jordan, and the ſoles of the prieſts feet were lift up unto the dry land.] Where the waters of Jordan, when it overflowed moſt were never wont to come.

——That the waters of Jordan returned unto their place.] The channel was filled again by the deſcent of the waters. Which for ſome time had ſtood heaped up, and continued immoveable; but now were let looſe to keep their ancient courſe.

—— And flowed all his banks, as they did before.] Which was done, it is likely, by a gradual deſcent of the water, and not by the tumbling down of that great heap all at once.

Ver. 19. And the people came up out of Jordan on the tenthday of the firſt month.] In which they came out of Egypt, upon the 15th day of it. So that there wanted juſt five days of forty years ſince their departure from thence.

—— And encamped in Gilgal.] A place render'd famous by their firſt encampment there; where they ſeem to have continued for ſeveral years, during the wars of Canaan.

Canaan. Here alſo they were circumciſed, (from whence the place had its name, ver. 9.) and celebrated the firſt Paſſover; the tabernacle and the ark remaining here, as long as the Iſraelites kept their ſtation in this place. See ix. 6. x. 6, 43. xiv. 6. which was, we ſuppoſe, till the war was ended; and they had alſo begun to divide the land. See xiv. 6. After which the tabernacle was fixed in Shiloh, chap xviii. 1. xxii. 9, 12. Tho' Gilgal ſtill continued a famous place, as appears from Judges ii. 1. 1 Sam. xi. 14, 15. xiii. 4, &c.

——In the eaſt border of Jericho.] That is, between Jordan, which lay behind them, and Jericho, which lay before them.

Ver. 20. And thoſe twelve ſtones, which they took out of Jordan, did Joſhua pitch in Gilgal.] We are not told in what form they were pitched; whether they remained ſingle and diſtinct, or, as Joſephus will have it, joined together in the form of an altar. It ſeems to agree beſt with the end and intention of them, if we conceive them to have been ſet down ſingle, but in ſome order, (ſuppoſe three in a row) repreſenting, like ſo many little pillars, the twelve tribes of Iſrael; who paſſing over Jordan on dry ground, a man out of each tribe was ordered to bring a ſtone, and place them here, for a perpetual memorial, ver. 7. of what God had done for them. For ſtones, every one knows, eſpecially ſome ſorts of them, are of a very durable nature, and therefore uſed by all nations, in the monuments they have made to perpetuate the memory of perſons and things. Inſomuch, that if it be true which Procopius reports, in his ſecond book De Bello Vandalico, concerning the two pillars erected by the Canaanites, who fled into Africa from the arms of Joſhua, with an inſcription ſignifying their expulſion by him, we conclude it to have been done in imitation of theſe ſtones, whereby Joſhua preſerved the memory of that miraculous paſſage which was opened to him, preparatory to their expulſion.

The remaining part of this chapter needs no explication.

CHAP. V.

1 The Canaanites are afraid. 2 Joſhua reneweth circumciſion. 10 The Paſſover is kept at Gilgal. 12 Manna ceaſeth. 13 An angel appeareth to Joſhua.

AND it came to paſs when all the kings of the Amorites, which were on the ſide of Jordan weſt-ward, and all the kings of the Canaanites, which were by the ſea, heard that the LORD had dried up the waters of Jordan from before the children of Iſrael, until we were paſſed over, that their heart melted; neither was there ſpirit in them any more, becauſe of the children of Iſrael.

2 ¶ At that time the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Make thee ſharp knives, and circumciſe again the children of Iſrael the ſecond time.

3 And Joſhua made him ſharp knives, and circumciſed the children of Iſrael at the hill of the fore-ſkins.

4 And this is the cauſe why Joſhua did circumciſe: All the people that came out of Egypt, that were males, even all the men of war died in the wilderneſs by the way after they came out of Egypt.

5 Now all the people that came out were circumciſed; but all the people that were born in the wilderneſs by the way, as they came forth out of Egypt, them they had not circumciſed.

6 For the children of Iſrael walked forty years in the wilderneſs, till all the people that were men of war, which came out of Egypt, were conſumed, becauſe they obeyed not the voice of the LORD: unto whom the LORD ſware that he would not ſhew them the land which the LORD ſware unto their fathers that he would give us, a land that floweth with milk and honey.

7 And their children, whom he raiſed up in their ſtead, them Joſhua circumciſed: for they were uncircumciſed, becauſe they had not circumciſed them by the way.

8 And it came to paſs when they had done circumciſing all the people, that they abode in their places in the camp, till they were whole.

9 And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, This day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you: wherefore the name of the place is called Gilgal unto this day.

10 ¶ And the children of Iſrael encamped in Gilgal, and kept the paſſover on the fourteenth day of the month at even in the plains of Jericho.

11 And they did eat of the old corn of the land on the morrow after the paſſover unleavened cakes, and parched corn in the ſelf-ſame day.

12 ¶ And the manna ceaſed on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land, neither had the children of Iſrael manna any more, but they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year.

13 ¶ And it came to paſs when Joſhua was by Jericho, that he lift up his eyes and looked, and behold there ſtood a man over againſt him, with his ſword drawn in his hand: and Joſhua went unto him, and ſaid unto him, Art thou for us, or for our adverſaries?

14 And he ſaid, Nay, but as captain of the hoſt of the LORD am I now come. And Joſhua fell on his face to the earth, and did worſhip, and ſaid unto him, What ſaith my Lord unto his ſervant!

15 And the captain of the LORD's hoſt ſaid unto Joſhua, Looſe thy ſhoe from off thy foot, for the place whereon thou ſtandeſt, is holy: and Joſhua did ſo.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs, when all the kings of the Amorites.] Theſe were the principal inhabitants, and the moſt valuable in all the country, as hath been formerly obſerved.

——— Which were on the ſide of Jordan weſtward.] This ſeems to be added, to ſhew that, beſide the two kings of the Amorites, Sihon, and Og, whom they had already ſubdued on the other ſide of Jordan, eaſtward; there were other kings of the ſame nation on that ſide of Jordan, where the Iſraelites now were. And it is not improbable, that theſe kings commanded the Hittites, Hivites, and Jebuſites, as well as the Amorites.

——— And all the kings of the Canaanites, which were by the ſea.] That is, the Mediterranean, where the people, properly called Canaanites, dwelt, tho' there were colonies of them ſpread in other places. The Seventy here call them βασιλεῖς τ῀ Φοινίκης, the kings of Phœnicia: For upon that ſea were the principal cities of the ancient Phœnicians, namely, Tyre and Sidon. But tho' the people, who inhabited the ſea-coaſt, were peculiarly called by this name of Phœnicians, yet they were ſo powerful, that the whole country was called χώρα τ῀ Φοινίκων, the country of the Phœnicians; as the Seventy call the land of Canaan, ver. 12. of this chapter.

——— Heard that the Lord had dried up the waters of Jordan from before the children of Iſrael, until we were paſſed over.] This ſounds like the language of Joſhua, or of ſome other perſon then preſent, when this wonder was wrought; which aſtoniſhed thoſe who lived in the remoteſt parts of the country; and little thought of an invaſion on that ſide, (which, it is likely, made them not draw any forces that way) imagining the river, eſpecially when it overflowed all its banks, was a ſufficient ſecurity to them on that frontier.

——— That their hearts melted; neither was there ſpirit in them any more, becauſe of the children of Iſrael.] They quite loſt their courage, which began to fail them before, as we read, chap. ii. ver. 11. Or, as the LXX expound it, "their underſtanding failed them;" and they were in ſuch a conſternation, that none knew what to adviſe for their ſafety. In which, the providence of God is much to be obſerved, that by theſe means the Iſraelites were circumciſed (as it here follows;) whereas, if the people of Canaan had been couragious and watchful, they had taken them at a great advantage, if they had then fallen upon them; but God had intimidated their minds, and would not permit them to accompliſh any ſuch purpoſe. The Iſraelites had leiſure alſo, without any diſturbance, to celebrate the paſſover, ver. 10.

Ver. 2. At that time the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua make thee ſharp knives, &c.] The feaſt of the paſſover now approached, unto which no uncircumciſed perſon was to be admitted under the ſevereſt penalties; and yet at leaſt two thirds of the men were ſo. That ceremony had been intermitted during their forty years wandering, ſo that all who had been circumciſed, beſide Joſhua and Caleb, were only thoſe who were under twenty years of age at the rebellion of Cadeſh Barnea; all the reſt were dead in the wilderneſs: It was therefore neceſſary before all things, that it ſhould be renewed out of hand; wherefore Joſhua was commanded to have it immediately performed. The circumſtance of time was altogether favourable for ſuch an operation; and their miraculous paſſage over Jordan had diffuſed ſuch a univerſal dread among their enemies, that they now had no cauſe to apprehend being ſurpriſed by them, as the Schechemites had been by Simeon and Levi. Beſide, it was God who commanded, and to whom they had all the reaſon in the world to commit their ſafety; ſo that his orders were chearfully and punctually obeyed: The ſharp ſtones which they made uſe of being more proper for the ceremony than knives or razors made of metal, as being leſs apt to cauſe inflammations, occaſioned their being ſooner healed, and conſequently in a condition to celebrate the paſſover, at the appointed time, as it was accordingly done; and God, highly pleaſed with their obedience, told them that he had now "removed or rolled "away from them the reproach of Egypt," that is, according to ſome, he did no longer look upon them as uncircumciſed Egyptians, but as his own people, in memory of which, the place was called Gilgal, or Rolling. ver. 9.

This ſecond verſe has puzzled ſeveral commentators, and even St Jerom, as great an Hebraiſt as he was, to find out what this circumciſion was, that was performed a ſecond time. The generality of the Jews affirm, that they had been circumciſed in the wilderneſs, but that one of the three parts of the ceremony, namely, the puſhing quite back the remainder of the skin, after the fore-part was cut off, had been omitted during thoſe forty years, becauſe it put the infant to too much pain and agony. And, that it was this operation which Joſhua cauſed to be performed, and which being as troubleſome as the other two, is therefore here called a ſecond circumciſion. Another learned Jew, having taken upon him to prove, from the words of Jeremiah, "I will puniſh the circumciſed that has a fore-skin," cap. ix. 25. (for ſo he reads it,) that it was poſſible to bring the fore-skin again by art: ſome have thought that the Iſraelites had done ſo during their abode in the wilderneſs, for which they were order'd to be circumciſed afreſh. Thoſe Chriſtians, who have embraced this notion, pretend to back it by the words of St. Paul, 1 Cor. vii. 18. "If any "man be called, being uncircumciſed, μὴ ἐπισπάσθω, let "him not get a fore-skin again;" or, as we render it, "Let "him not become uncircumciſed." To confute which, St. Jerom has taken a great deal of pains to prove, tho' perhaps without any reaſon, that this prepuce can never be recovered, when cut off; and conſequently that the circumciſion, mentioned in Joſhua, muſt be underſtood of the circumciſion of the heart, and to have been performed with a ſpiritual knife. The truth is, this good father, tho' the moſt learned of all who bear that name, was ſo fond of the virginal, and ſo prepoſſeſſed againſt a matrimonial ſtate, that he has wreſted theſe words, together with thoſe of the Apoſtle, and a vaſt number more out of the Old and New Teſtament, in favour of his own opinion, right or wrong, and wrote with ſuch an air of triumph, and with ſo much heat againſt his oppoſers, that when he became ſenſible of it, he made no difficulty to cenſure himſelf for it in a pathetic apology, which is, perhaps, the fineſt piece of oratory that ever he penn'd, and may well atone for his indiſcreet zeal in favour of celibacy. However, all the difficulty in the words before us ariſes from the miſunderſtanding the idiom of the original, and would have been eaſily removed, if they had been tranſlated or paraphraſed thus: ——Let, the ceremony of, circumciſion, which has been ſo long diſcontinued, be renewed, or, ſet on foot once more.

Ver. 9. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, this day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you.] It is commonly thought, that by the reproach of Egypt, is meant nothing elſe but uncircumciſion, with which the Iſraelites always reproached other people, particularly the Egyptians, among whom they had long dwelt, and with whom they were beſt acquainted. But our learned Dr. Spencer thinks, the reproach of Egypt, is the ſlavery to which they had been there long ſubject, but now were fully declared a free people, by receiving the mark of the ſeed of Abraham, and being made heirs of the promiſed land.

This he very often repeats, Lib. 1. de Leg. Hebr. Ritual. cap. iv. p. 44, 51, 55. And no doubt Joſhua now choſe, immediately upon their entrance into the land of Canaan, to cauſe them to be circumciſed, not only as a token they peculiarly belonged to God, but to oblige them to be careful to obſerve all the divine laws, many of which could not, and others were not, obſerved in the wilderneſs, but were now to be regularly practiſed, becauſe they held the land of Canaan by this tenure. To this purpoſe alſo Theodoret diſcourſes, in his queſtions upon this book: They were now made lords of the promiſed land, who were lately ſlaves in Egypt; for they could not be the legitimate children of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and heirs of the promiſes made to them, till they were circumciſed. Ralbag hath another notion of it: That the Egyptians ſeeing the Iſraelites wander ſo long as they did in the wilderneſs, reproached and flouted them as if they were brought thither to be deſtroyed, and not to poſſeſs the land of Canaan; from which reproaches God now delivered them, when he aſſured them, by enjoining their circumciſion, that they ſhould ſhortly enjoy that country which God promiſed; but which no uncircumciſed perſon might inherit: But the firſt is the plaineſt and moſt unconſtrained ſenſe.

——— Wherefore the name of the place is called Gilgal unto this day.] This was the firſt original of the name, which this place had ever after: for Galal, in Hebrew, from whence this word comes, ſignifies to remove, take away, or devolve. And ſo here the LXX tranſlate the word Gallothi, (I have rolled away) by ἀφεῖλον, and the vulgar Latin, by Abſtuli, (I have taken away;) which makes it ſtrange that Joſephus ſhould ſay, (Lib. V. Antiq. Cap. I.) that this word

Gilgal ſignifies liberty, whom Theodoret follows; as if this place was ſo called, becauſe now they found themſelves perfectly freed from the Egyptians, and from all the troubles they endured in the wilderneſs.

—— Unto this day.] Theſe words are alledged by ſome againſt Joſhua's being the author of this book; to which an anſwer hath been given, chap. iv. 9.

Ver. 10. And the children of Iſrael encamped in Gilgal] Continued their camp there, as they were enjoined, ver. 8.

—— And kept the Paſſover.] Which was the ſecond Paſſover that had been kept ſince its firſt inſtitution, the firſt being obſerved the ſecond year after their coming out of Egypt at mount Sinai; after which it had been diſcontinued for the ſpace of thirty-nine years, becauſe many of the people were uncircumciſed.

—— On the fourteenth day of the month at even.] According to the command of God, Exod. xii. 6.

—— In the plains of Jericho.] Where the tabernacle was in the midſt of their camp, unto which they brought their lamb, for it could be ſacrificed no where elſe, Deut. xvi. 2. And therefore hither the Reubenites, and Gadites, and Manaſſites, on the other ſide Jordan, came to offer this ſacrifice; which was eaſier for them, than it was in after-times to go up to Jeruſalem.

Ver. 11. And they did eat of the old corn of the land.] Which the people of the country had left in their barns, when they fled into Jericho, and other ſtrong holds.

—— The morrow after the paſſover.] There is a great diſpute among the Jews, whether this were the fifteenth day of the month, which was properly called the next day after the Paſſover, or, as others take it, the ſixteenth day, which was the ſolemn ſabbath kept on the firſt day of unleavened bread, Lev. xxiii. 10, 11. when they were to wave the ſheaf of the firſt-fruits before the Lord: The former are in the right.

—— Unleavened cakes.] That is, they kept the feaſt of unleavened bread, which was diſtinct from the Paſſover, as has been formerly obſerved.

—— And parched corn in the ſelf-ſame day.] This was new corn, which was growing that year they enter'd into Canaan, of which it was not lawful to eat, till they had offered the ſheaf before-mentioned, Lev. xxiii. 14. and therefore it is made an argument by ſome, that it was the ſixteenth day of this month when this corn was parched.

Ver. 12. And the manna ceaſed on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land, neither had the children of Iſrael manna any more.] Becauſe they had no need of it, as Kimchi and others interpret it, being ſupplied by the ſtore of old corn which they found in the land of Canaan, and by what was growing upon the ground.

—But they did eat of the fruit of the land of Canaan that year.] After they had offered the ſheaf before-mentioned, Lev. xxiii. 11. So that manna ceaſed on the 16th or 17th day of the firſt month, having continued with them forty years wanting about a month. So R. Bechai truly interprets theſe words, Exod. xvi. 35. not to ſignify forty years compleat, but near forty years; for it began to fall on the fifteenth day of the ſecond month, and ceaſed on the 16th or 17th day of the firſt month of the fortieth year after they came out of Egypt; and therefore, to ſhew that they were not to expound thoſe words, "They did eat Manna "forty years," in a ſtrict and preciſe ſenſe, Moſes immediately adds, "until they came to a land inhabited; "they did eat Manna until they came to the borders of "the land of Canaan;" which was exactly fulfilled, Gilgal being on the borders of the land, where the Manna now ceaſed; but it continued till that time, tho' they came to a land inhabited, when they conquered the kingdoms of Sihon and Og.

Ver. 13. And it came to paſs when Joſhua was by Jericho.] After he had performed theſe ſolemn rites of circumciſion, and the Paſſover, Joſhua went to take a view of Jericho, and to obſerve, as is cuſtomary for generals, the approaches to it.

—— That he lift up his eyes and looked.] Theſe words ſignify a ſudden apparition of a perſon to him; for ſo this phraſe is uſed, when ſomething new and unexpected preſents itſelf, as one is intent upon ſomething elſe, Gen. xviii. 1. Dan. x. 5.

—— And behold, there ſtood a man before him.] Whom he took to be a man.

—— With his ſword drawn in his hand over-againſt him.] He ſeemed to be a ſoldier, or rather a great commander, and ſtood directly oppoſite to him.

—— And Joſhua went unto him.] Such was his undaunted courage, with which God had inſpired him.

—— And ſaid unto him, art thou for us, or for our adverſaries?] He demands of him, whether he came to help the Iſraelites, or the people of Canaan; for whom (it appears by the anſwer) Joſhua ſuſpected he came to fight.

Ver. 14. And he ſaid, nay] That is, I am not on the ſide of your adverſaries.

—— But as captain (or prince) of the hoſt of the Lord am I now come.] By the hoſt of the Lord, is here meant the whole body of the people of Iſrael, whom the Lord himſelf led forth out of Egypt, as his army (ſee Exod. xii. 41.) and now appeared in this manner, that he might ſhew he would ſtill conduct them, as their chief commander and leader, by whom they ſhould be victorious over their enemies: For tho' many take this to have been a created angel (Michael, ſuppoſe, the chief of them) yet it is evident that Joſhua did not think him ſo to be, for he fell down and worſhipped him, as we read in the words following.

—— And Joſhua fell on his face to the earth.] With the profoundeſt reverence.

—— And did worſhip.] Which he durſt not have given (for God alone is to be adored) if he had not taken him to be the divine WORD that was come to fight for them. So the Chaldee paraphraſe, upon Joſh. x. 42. "It "was the WORD of the Lord that fought for them," according to God's promiſe, i. 9, 17. This the learned Dr. Alix, ſhews was the judgment of the ancient Jewiſh church, and it is moſt certain was the judgment of the ancient Chriſtians, particularly of Juſtin Martyr, Euſebius, and Theodoret. See Valeſius, in his annotations upon Euſebius's eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, Lib. 1. cap. 2. p. 7. And therefore the great Uſher, fears not to ſay in his annals, Jeſus Dominus noſter, princeps militiæ patris ſui, Jeſu typico ad Jerichuntem gladio ſtricto apparens, promittit ſe populum defenſurum; that is, Jeſus our Lord, the prince of his father's hoſt, appearing to him who was a type of him at Jericho, with a drawn ſword, promiſed to be the defender of his people: Where he ſeems, by the captain of the Lord's hoſt, to underſtand our Lord, who commands angels themſelves; for they are ſometimes called the hoſt of heaven, 1 Kings xxii. 19. Luke ii. 13. And it may very well be thought the meaning here.

—— And ſaid unto him, what ſaith my Lord unto his ſervant?] Joſhua was poſſeſſed with ſo deep a ſenſe of the greatneſs of this perſon, that he humbly deſires to receive his commands, and he would obey them.

Ver. 15. And the captain of the Lord's hoſt ſaid unto Joſhua, looſe thy ſhoe from off thy foot, for the place where thou ſtandeſt is holy.] This is the fulleſt evidence that can be given of the divinity of this perſon who appeared to him; and was ſo far from reproving him for rendering him too much honour, that he commanded to him to do much more; for that which he here requires, is the higheſt acknowledgment of a divine preſence that was uſed among the Eaſtern nations. And, conſidering that theſe are the very ſame words which were ſpoken to Moſes, Exod. iii. 2, 3. we learn the reaſon why God commanded this to Joſhua; which was, for ſtrengthening of his faith, that as now he was placed in Moſes his ſtead, ſo God would be with him, as he had been with Moſes. And thus Joh. a Coch diſcourſes very reaſonably upon the Gemara of the Sanhedrin, Cap. 6. N. 3. "This angel, who ſuffered him-"ſelf to be worſhipped, and by whoſe preſence the place "where he appeared was ſanctified, ſo that Joſhua was "commanded to put off his ſhoes, no doubt was he whom "all the angels in heaven worſhip."

CHAP. VI.

1 Jericho is ſhut up. 3 God inſtructeth Joſhua how to beſiege it. 12 The city is compaſſed. 17 It muſt be accurſed. 20 The walls fall down. 22 Rahab is ſaved. 26 The builder of Jericho is curſed.

NOW Jericho was ſtraitly ſhut up, becauſe of the children of Iſrael: none went out, and none came in.

2 And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, See, I have given into thine hand Jericho, and the king thereof, and the mighty men of valour.

3 And ye ſhall compaſs the city, all ye men of war, and go round about the city once: thus ſhalt thou do ſix days.

4 And ſeven prieſts ſhall bear before the ark ſeven trumpets of rams horns: and the ſeventh day ye ſhall compaſs the city ſeven times, and the prieſts ſhall blow with the trumpets.

5 And it ſhall come to paſs that when they make a long blaſt with the rams horn, and when ye hear the ſound of the trumpet, all the people ſhall ſhout with a great ſhout: and the wall of the city ſhall fall down flat, and the people ſhall aſcend up every man ſtraight before him.

6 ¶ And Joſhua the ſon of Nun called the prieſts, and ſaid unto them, Take up the ark of the covenant, and let ſeven prieſts bear ſeven trumpets of rams horns before the ark of the LORD.

7 And he ſaid unto the people, Paſs on, and compaſs the city, and let him that is armed paſs on before the ark of the LORD.

8 ¶ And it came to paſs when Joſhua had ſpoken unto the people, that the ſeven prieſts bearing the ſeven trumpets of rams horns, paſſed on before the LORD, and blew with the trumpets: and the ark of the covenant of the LORD followed them.

9 ¶ And the armed men went before the prieſts that blew with the trumpets, and the rere-ward came after the ark, the prieſts going on and blowing with the trumpets.

10 And Joſhua had commanded the people, ſaying, Ye ſhall not ſhout, nor make any noiſe with your voice, neither ſhall any word proceed out of your mouth, until the day I bid you ſhout, then ſhall ye ſhout.

11 So the ark of the LORD compaſſed the city, going about it once: and they came into the camp, and lodged in the camp.

12 ¶ And Joſhua roſe early in the morning, and the prieſts took up the ark of the LORD.

13 And ſeven prieſts bearing ſeven trumpets of rams horns before the ark of the LORD, went on continually, and blew with the trumpets: and the armed men went before them, but the rere-ward came after the ark of the LORD, the prieſts going on, and blowing with the trumpets.

14 And the ſecond day they compaſſed the city once, and returned into the camp: ſo they did ſix days.

15 And it came to paſs on the ſeventh day, that they roſe early about the dawning of the day, and compaſſed the city after the ſame manner, ſeven times: only on that day they compaſſed the city ſeven times.

16 And it came to paſs at the ſeventh time, when the prieſts blew with the trumpets, Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Shout, for the LORD hath given you the city.

17 ¶ And the city ſhall be accurſed, even it and all that are therein, to the LORD: only Rahab the harlot ſhall live, ſhe and all that are with her in the houſe, becauſe ſhe hid the meſſengers that we ſent.

18 And you, in any wiſe keep your ſelves from the accurſed thing, leſt ye make your ſelves accurſed when ye take of the accurſed thing, and make the camp of Iſrael a curſe, and trouble it.

19 But all the ſilver and gold, and veſſels of braſs, and iron, are conſecrated unto the LORD: they ſhall come into the treaſury of the LORD.

20 So the people ſhouted when the prieſts blew with the trumpets: and it came to paſs when the people heard the ſound of the trumpet, and the people ſhouted with a great ſhout, that the wall fell down flat, ſo that the people went up into the city, every man ſtraight before him, and they took the city.

21 And they utterly deſtroyed all that was in the city, both man and woman, young and old, and ox, and ſheep, and aſs with the edge of the ſword.

22 But Joſhua had ſaid unto the two men that had ſpied out the country, Go into the harlots houſe, and bring out thence the woman, and all that ſhe hath, as ye ſware unto her.

23 And the young men that were ſpies, went in, and brought out Rahab, and her father, father, and her mother, and her brethren, and all that ſhe had: and they brought out all her kindred, and left them without the camp of Iſrael.

24 And they burnt the city with fire, and all that was therein: only the ſilver and the gold, and the veſſels of braſs and of iron, they put into the treaſury of the houſe of the LORD.

25 And Joſhua ſaved Rahab the harlot alive, and her fathers houſhold, and all that ſhe had; and ſhe dwelleth in Iſrael even unto this day: becauſe ſhe hid the meſſengers which Joſhua ſent to ſpy out Jericho.

26 ¶ And Joſhua adjured them at that time, ſaying, curſed be the man before the LORD, that riſeth up and buildeth this city Jericho: he ſhall lay the foundation thereof in his firſt-born, and in his youngeſt ſon ſhall he ſet up the gates of it.

27 So the LORD was with Joſhua, and his fame was noiſed throughout all the country.

Ver. 1. Now Jericho was ſtraitly ſhut up, &c.] The news of what Moſes had tranſacted on the other ſide of Jordan againſt Sihon and Og, kings of the Amorites, created, as we may naturally ſuppoſe, great aſtoniſhment and conſternation in the minds of the Canaanites, of every denomination. Jericho was the firſt place which felt the fury of the fated exciſion, being diſmantled, in the manner recorded in this chapter, by the ſhouts of the Iſraelites, the ſound of ſeven rams horns, and the circumvection of the ark of the covenant.

Ver. 2. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, ſee I have given into thine hand Jericho, &c.] Nothing could be more wiſely ordered than the miraculous manner of taking the city, agreeably to the directions given by the Deity to Joſhua from this to the end of the fifth verſe. Since it would not only ſignalize the firſt conqueſt of the Iſraelites in the land of Canaan, but would likewiſe infuſe ſuch a terror into its inhabitants, as might either induce them more readily to accept the terms of peace that were offered, antecedent to any hoſtilities, or, at the worſt, to ſave their own lives, by timely abandoning the country to the conquerors.

The city of Jericho, into which great numbers out of the neighbouring villages had retired, ſome to aſſiſt in its defence, others to ſave themſelves, had been cloſely ſhut up by order of the king, who commanded in it in perſon, no man being ſuffered to go in or out of it: On the ſeventh day, which was the Sabbath, the circumvection of the ark was repeated ſeven times, with the uſual ſolemnity; the prieſts ſounding with the rams horns, and attended by the ſame guard of armed men marching before and after it, as they had done, during the firſt ſix days. The whole proceſſion, as we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, kept at ſuch a diſtance from the walls as to be out of the reach of their ſhot, whilſt the beſieged, whoſe skill in military affairs made them think it impoſſible for a city to be taken by marches of ſuch an odd appearance, might probably conclude that the Iſraelites were only exhibiting an aukward ſhew of their ſtrength. However, as ſoon as the ſeventh round was ended, the ſound of the trumpets was accompanied with an univerſal ſhout of the beſiegers, and this was immediately ſucceeded by the fall of the city-wall, ver. 20. and every man there mounted the breach before him. Their firſt care was to convey Rahab, (who had been ſo hoſpitable to the two ſpies,) and all her family, out of the city, ver. 22. and when they were all conducted to a place of ſecurity, the Iſraelites deſtroyed all the men, women, children, and cattle, that were found in the city; after which, having ſeized upon all the gold, ſilver, braſs, and other metals, they ſet the city on fire, and levell'd it to the ground. Joſhua then pronounced a prophetic curſe, ver. 26. on the man who ſhould afterward attempt to rebuild that city; declaring, that any ſuch perſon ſhould "lay the foundation thereof in his firſt-"born, and in his youngeſt ſon, ſhould he ſet up the gates "of it:" By which the Jews underſtand, that all his children ſhould die an untimely death before he had compleated his work; and this prediction was literally fulfilled above five hundred and fifty years after, by Hiel, the Bethelite, who laid the foundation of it in his eldeſt ſon Abiram, and ſet up its gates in his youngeſt ſon Segub, 1 Kings xvi. 34.

Such was the fatal end of Jericho, which is called by the name of the city of Palm Trees, Deut. xxxiv. 3. on account of the great number of them that grew in the circumjacent plain. To which Joſephus adds, that not only the tree from which the celebrated balm of Gilead flow'd, but likewiſe ſeveral other odoriferous trees grew in that neighbourhood, and from whoſe fragrancy the city it ſelf is ſuppoſed to have been named Jericho, which, in the original ſignifies, odour. This, however, muſt not be literally underſtood, as if there had been no city of that name, from Joſhua to Hiel, ſince we read of the city of Palm-trees in the time of Eglon, Judg. iii. 13. and of Jericho, in the days of David, for there it was that he ordered his ambaſſadors to continue, till their beards, which had been cut off by Hanun, king of Ammon, were grown again, 2 Sam. x. 4, 5. Joſephus likewiſe informs us, the New Jericho was rebuilt not upon the ſame ſpot, where the old city ſtood, the ruins of which, he declares, were to be ſeen in his time, but at a ſmall diſtance from it. However, after Hiel had ventured to rebuild the old town, it was inhabited without any ſcruple, and, in proceſs of time, became famous on many accounts. Here the prophet ſweetened the waters of the ſpring that ſupplied it and the neighbouring country; and here Herod erected a ſumptuous palace: It likewiſe became the dwelling-place of Zaccheus, and was at laſt honoured with the preſence of the divine Jeſus, who vouchſafed to render it the ſcene of ſome of his miracles.

Rahab, and her family, had a place aſſigned them out of the Iſraelitiſh camp, and ſhe was ſoon after incorporated into their community, by her embracing the Jewiſh religion, and her marriage to Salmon, head of the tribe of Judah, as we have already intimated in another place; but whether the reſt of her kindred conducted themſelves by her example, or not, is neither certain, nor of much conſequence.

The Jews inform us, that Joſhua was very doubtful whether the promiſe which the two ſpies had made to Rahab was lawful or not, and that he could not ratify it till he had firſt conſulted Eleazer the ſovereign Pontif, and the ſeventy elders, who not only pronounced ſentence in her favour, but declared her worthy of a greater reward than ſhe had ſtipulated for herſelf. Upon which, aſſoon as ſhe had accompliſhed the days of her purification without the camp, on account of her being a Gentile, ſhe was admitted a proſelyte, and ſoon after eſpouſed to Salmon, the ſon of Naaſhon, and great-grandfather of David. A Romiſh chronologiſt affirms, upon the authority of the Jewiſh Rabbies, that Joſhua married her; (Genebr. Chronol.) from whence another writer of the ſame church has inferred, that it was a grand-daughter of hers of the ſame name, who was afterward married to Salmon; (Berruy. hiſt. de Peup. de Dieu. Age, iii. l. 1.) but as we cannot ſee any foundation for either of theſe notions, we have choſen to follow the majority of chronologers, and particularly the great Uſher, who affirms, that it was this Rahab whom Salmon eſpouſed. (Uſh. ann. p. 26.) However, as it is forbidden by the 112th negative precept of Moſes, to contract the leaſt affinity with any of the ſeven nations there mentioned (Deut. vii. 1. &c.) the Jews affirm her to have been of ſome other nation, and only an inhabitant of Jericho, which is not at all improbable.

Achan and all his Family and Cattle stoned and burnt

CHAP. VII.

1 The Iſraelites are ſmitten at Ai. 6 Joſhua's complaint. 10 God inſtructeth him what to do. 16 Achan is taken by the lot. 19 His confeſſion. 22 He and all he had are deſtroyed in the valley of Achor.

BUT the children of Iſrael committed a treſpaſs in the accurſed thing: for Achan the ſon of Carmi, the ſon of Zabdi, the ſon of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, took of the accurſed thing: and the anger of the LORD was kindled againſt the children of Iſrael.

2 And Joſhua ſent men from Jericho to Ai, which is beſide Beth-aven, on the eaſt ſide of Beth-el, and ſpake unto them, ſaying, Go up and view the country. And the men went up and viewed Ai.

3 And they returned to Joſhua, and ſaid unto him, Let not all the people go up: but let about two or three thouſand men go up and ſmite Ai, and make not all the people to labour thither; for they are but few.

4 So there went up thither of the people about three thouſand men, and they fled before the men of Ai.

5 And the men of Ai ſmote of them about thirty and ſix men: for they chaſed them from before the gate even unto Shebarim, and ſmote them in the going down: wherefore the hearts of the people melted, and became as water.

6 ¶ And Joſhua rent his clothes, and fell to the earth upon his face, before the ark of the LORD, until the even-tide, he and the elders of Iſrael, and put duſt upon their heads.

7 And Joſhua ſaid, Alas, O Lord GOD, wherefore haſt thou at all brought this people over Jordan, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to deſtroy us? would to God we had been content, and dwelt on the other ſide Jordan.

8 O Lord, what ſhall I ſay, when Iſrael turneth their backs before their enemies!

9 For the Canaanites, and all the inhabitants of the land ſhall hear of it, and ſhall environ us round, and cut off our name from the earth: and what wilt thou do unto thy great name?

10 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Get thee up, wherefore lieſt thou thus upon thy face?

11 Iſrael hath ſinned, and they have alſo tranſgreſſed my covenant which I commanded them: for they have even taken of the accurſed thing, and have alſo ſtolen, and diſſembled alſo, and they have put it even amongſt their own ſtuff.

12 Therefore the children of Iſrael could not ſtand before their enemies, but turned their backs before their enemies, becauſe they were accurſed: neither will I be with you any more, except ye deſtroy the accurſed from amongſt you.

13 Up, ſanctify the people, and ſay, Sanctify your ſelves againſt to-morrow: for thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, There is an accurſed thing in the midſt of thee, O Iſrael: thou canſt not ſtand before thine enemies, until ye take away the accurſed thing from among you.

14 In the morning therefore ye ſhall be brought according to your tribes: and it ſhall be that the tribe which the LORD taketh, ſhall come according to the families thereof; and the family which the LORD ſhall take, ſhall come by houſholds; and the houſhold which the LORD ſhall take, ſhall come man by man.

15 And it ſhall be, that he that is taken with the accurſed thing, ſhall be burnt with fire, he and all that he hath: becauſe he hath tranſgreſſed the covenant of the LORD, and becauſe he hath wrought folly in Iſrael.

16 ¶ So Joſhua roſe up early in the morning, and brought Iſrael by their tribes; and the tribe of Judah was taken:

17 And he brought the family of Judah; and he took the family of the Zarhites: and he brought the family of the Zarhites man by man; and Zabdi was taken:

18 And he brought his houſhold man by man; and Achan the ſon of Carmi, the ſon of Zabdi, the ſon of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah, was taken.

19 And Joſhua ſaid unto Achan, My ſon, give, I pray thee, glory to the LORD God of Iſrael, and make confeſſion unto him: and tell me now what thou haſt done, hide it not from me.

20 And Achan anſwered Joſhua, and ſaid, Indeed I have ſinned againſt the LORD God of Iſrael, and thus and thus have I done.

21 When I ſaw among the ſpoils a goodly Babyloniſh garment, and two hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and a wedge of gold of fifty ſhekels weight, then I coveted them, and took them, and behold, they are hid in the earth, in the midſt of my tent, and the ſilver under it.

22 ¶ So Joſhua ſent meſſengers, and they ran unto the tent, and behold, it was hid in his tent, and the ſilver under it.

23 And they took them out of the midſt of the tent, and brought them unto Joſhua, and unto all the children of Iſrael, and laid them out before the LORD.

24 And Joſhua, and all Iſrael with him, took Achan the ſon of Zerah, and the ſilver, and the garment, and the wedge of gold, and his ſons, and his daughters, and his oxen, and his aſſes, and his ſheep, and his tent, and all that he had: and they brought them unto the valley of Achor.

25 And Joſhua ſaid, Why haſt thou troubled us? the LORD ſhall trouble thee this day. And all Iſrael ſtoned him with ſtones, and burned them with fire, after they had ſtoned them with ſtones.

26 And they raiſed over him a great heap of ſtones, unto this day: So the LORD turned from the fierceneſs of his anger: wherefore the name of that place was called, The valley of Achor, unto this day.

Ver. 1. But the children of Iſrael.] That is, one among them. Which is an uſual form of ſpeech in the holy ſcriptures, to aſcribe that to many indefinitely, wherein one alone is concerned.

—— Committed a treſpaſs in the accurſed thing.] Offended God, by purloining to his own uſe ſome of the ſpoils which were devoted to deſtruction, or appropriated to God's treaſury, with a curſe upon him who meddled with them.

——— For Achan the ſon of Carmi.] Who is called Achar, in 1 Chron. ii.7. becauſe he having troubled Iſrael, (as the word achar ſignifies) ver. 25. of this chapter, it is likely that, in after-times, they turned his name into Achar, inſtead of Achan.

—— The ſon of Zabdi.] Who is called Zimri, 1Chron. ii. 6.

—— The ſon of Zerah, of the tribe of Judah.] For, we find, Zerah was the ſon of Judah, and came with him into Egypt, when he was very young; for we read of no children he had, Gen. xlvi. 12. And if we ſuppoſe him to have begotten Zabdi, when he was ſeventy years old, and allow as many years before Zabdi begat Carmi, and as many before Carmi begat Achan, we may make account (with Bonfrerius) that Achan was now about fifty years old; an age wherein many men begin to be more covetous than they were in their youth.

—Took of the accurſed thing.] What it was, he himſelf confeſſeth, ver. 21.

———And the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt the children of Iſrael.] The ſin of one member of the body provoked the Divine Majeſty to expreſs his diſpleaſure againſt them all, which they deſerved upon other accounts, that they might be awakened to find out, and to puniſh him, who had brought them into great danger.

This preface is made to this chapter, to ſhew whence the ill ſucceſs they had at Ai proceeded.

Ver.2. And Joſhua ſent men from Jericho to Ai.] Call'd Hai in Abraham's time, Gen. xii. 8. Which Joſhua, we ſuppoſe, had ſummoned to ſurrender, according to the precept in Deut. xx. 10. but they had refuſed. It was a city about three miles diſtant from Jericho, as the Jews ſay in Semoth Rabbah; which Maſius takes to ſignify three leagues.

—Which is beſide Beth-aven.] Whether Beth-aven here ſignifies a city, or a wilderneſs, is uncertain. See chap. xviii. 12.

— On the eaſt ſide of Beth-el.] A place which was but one league from Ai, as Maſius computes, and lay weſtward of it, Gen. xii. 8. for the war was carried on from the eaſt, where Jericho was, to the weſtern parts of the country. It was called Beth-aven in future times, by way of reproach, when the golden calves were ſet up in it, which made it not a houſe of God, as Beth-el ſignifies, but an houſe of idolatry, which is the import of Beth-aven. But it is plain from hence, theſe were two diſtinct places.

— And ſpake unto them, ſaying, Go up, and view the country; and the men went up, and viewed Ai.] How it lay, and how it was fortified, &c. And it ſ ems to have been ſeated in the hilly country, and belonged to the Amorites, ver. 7.

Ver. 3. And they returned unto Joſhua, and ſaid unto him, Let not all the people go up: but let about two or three thouſand men go up, and ſmite Ai, &c.] They thought this number would be ſufficient, becauſe, as it follows in the end of the verſe, they were but few; and therefore they would not have all Iſrael put to the trouble of marching thither. In which counſel a good providence of God interpoſed; for if the flight of three thouſand men put the Iſraelites into ſuch a conſternation, as we read, ver. 5, 6. what would their condition have been, if all the people had been defeated! as would have been the caſe, if they had attacked Ai, while this guilt remained among them.

Ver. 4 So there went up thither of the people about three thouſand men; and they fled before the men of Ai.] Who ſeeing ſo ſmall a number, came out, and engaged the Iſraelites; whoſe courage quite failed them, ſo that they ſeem not to have ſtruck a ſtroke, but immediately ran away. For God, to whom they owed all their valour and victories, had then deſerted them.

Ver. 5. And the men of Ai ſmote of them about thirty and ſix men.] Of the hindmoſt of them, it is moſt likely, who could not run away ſo faſt as the reſt.

— For they chaſed them from before the gate.] Of the city of Ai.

—Unto Shebarim.] A place, we ſuppoſe, between Ai and Jericho; which the Targum thinks had its name from the rout of the Iſraelites there.

—— And ſmote them in the going down.] Till they came to the plains of Jericho. For Ai ſtanding on a hill, there was a deſcent from thence thither.

— Wherefore the hearts of the people melted.] As wax doth before the fire, Pſalm lxviii. 2. or as ice before the ſun.

—— And became as water.] Weak and wavering, in uncertain reſolutions; not knowing what to do.

Ver. 6. And Joſhua rent his clothes.] As the manner was, when they were afflicted with grief at any great calamity, or the commiſſion of any extraordinary crime. Which cuſtom was very ancient, Gen. xxxvii. 34. xliv.13. and continued in the times of the prophets; who make it a crime that men did not rend their clothes, when grievous ſins were committed.

——And fell to the earth upon his face.] To make his ſupplication to God for mercy.

———Before the ark of the Lord.] Not in the ſanctuary, but with his face toward it; in imitation of which, the Præcentor in the Jewiſh ſynagogue, at this day, falls down before the cheſt, wherein they keep the book of the Law, when he takes it out to read; as Buxtorf obſerves, in his Synag. Judaica. And on ſolemn faſt-days, as the Miſna relates, ſuch proſtrations were uſual.

———Until the even-tide.] Continued all day in faſting and prayer to God.

——— He and the elders of Iſrael.] Who rent their clothes, we ſuppoſe, as he had done; and then preſented themſelves, in this mournful manner, before God, to implore his mercy.

———And put duſt upon their heads.] Which was ſtill an higher expreſſion of great grief, and of a deep ſenſe of their unworthineſs to be relieved. This practice was very uſual in this nation, (1 Sam. iv. 12. 2 Sam. i. 2, &c.) and was imitated by the Gentiles; as we ſee in the example of the Ninevites, Jonah iii. 6. and of Achilles, who bewailed the death of Patroclus, by throwing duſt on his head, head, and lying down in the duſt, as Homer deſcribes it, in Iliad Σ. ver. 23, 24.

Ver. 7. And Joſhua ſaid, Alas, O Lord God.] A form of ſpeech, dolefully bewailing their forlorn condition: Which did not unbecome ſo great a captain as Joſhua was; for the moſt generous ſpirits have the moſt tender ſenſe of humanity, as Arius Montanus excellently diſcourſes upon this place.

——Wherefore haſt thou at all brought this people over Jordan, to deliver us into the hands of the Amorites to deſtroy us?] This is not a ſinful expoſtulation with God, (for Joſhua is not reprehended for it, but graciouſly inſtructed) but only a confeſſion of his ignorance, why God ſhould accompliſh ſuch wonders for them as he had done, and now ſuffer them to fall into the hands of thoſe enemies, whom they had conquered on the other ſide of Jordan. And it is, as if he had ſaid, I am confounded in my thoughts, being unable to underſtand why, &c. and conſequently he deſired to be informed of the reaſon of this change in his providence.

——Would to God we had been content, and dwelt on the other ſide Jordan.] As far as he could apprehend, they had better have reſted ſatisfy'd with what they had in poſſeſſion, than be thus defeated in their attempt to acquire more.

Ver. 8. O Lord, what ſhall I ſay?] What courſe ſhall I take? Or, how ſhall I anſwer the reproaches of our inſulting enemies?

—When Iſrael turneth their backs before their enemies?] What hope is there of conquering them, or preſerving our ſelves?

Ver. 9. For the Canaanites, and all the inhabitants of the land, ſhall hear of it.] They who are at the greateſt diſtance, by the ſea-ſide, will hear the report of our defeat; which will ſoon be ſpread over the whole country.

——And ſhall inviron us round.] Be encouraged thereby to gather all their forces together, and ſurround us.

——And cut off our name from the earth.] Utterly deſtroy us.

——And what wilt thou do unto thy great name?] And, which was worſe, God would loſe the glory of all the miracles he had wrought, and be thought unable to accompliſh what he had begun to do for his people. This argument Moſes had formerly preſſed, Exod. xxxii. 12. Numb. xiv. 16. Deut. ix. 28. and God himſelf, in the ſong which he commanded Moſes to teach the people, makes uſe of it, Deut. xxxii. 26, 27.

Ver. 10. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, Get thee up; Wherefore lieſt thou thus upon thy face?] Theſe words are not a reproof, but a gracious anſwer to his prayers; for, when a perſon who ſupplicates a prince is commanded to riſe from his knees, it is a token of acceptance.

Ver. 11. Iſrael hath ſinned.] See ver. 1.

——And they have alſo tranſgreſſed my covenant which I commanded them.] They had promiſed obedience to all God's commands, Exod. xxiv. 7. and aſſured Joſhua, they would do whatſoever he ordered them, chap. i. 16, 17, 18. And this was a late command delivered by him from God, that they ſhould not meddle with any thing devoted to God, with a ſolemn curſe.

——For they have even taken of the accurſed thing.] That which belongs to me, ver. 1.

——And have alſo ſtolen, and diſſembled alſo.] Not only purloined that which God reſerved to himſelf, but denied it after the fact was done. For, as we ſuppoſe, Joſhua, after the deſtruction of Jericho, had made enquiry whether the ſilver and gold, &c. were brought into the treaſury, and whether they had deſtroyed all other things, as God commanded; and they all anſwered, that they had.

——And they have put it even amongſt their own ſtaff.] To conceal it from diſcovery: Or, it is an expreſſion of his impudent tranſgreſſion of God's command, in converting it immediately to his own private uſe. For in this verſe the crime is aggravated in a gradual manner, in that Achan had not only ſinned, but againſt the covenant they had ſolemnly made with God; and that in a matter of great importance, in which he had lately laid his injunctions upon them; having not only taken to himſelf what belonged to God, but done it by way of ſtealth, as if he could not ſee it; and likewiſe denied the doing of it; and perſiſted in the ſin, by mixing what he had ſtolen with his own proper goods.

Ver. 12. Therefore the children of Iſrael could not ſtand before their enemies, but turned their backs before their enemies, becauſe they were accurſed.] By having a man among them, who was fallen under the curſe of God.

——Neither will I be with you any more, except ye deſtroy the accurſed from amongſt you.] Theſe words ſhew, that only one man among them was accurſed, tho' they all ſuffered for it; and were to continue to ſuffer, till he had been deſtroyed. For now that they knew there had been ſuch a crime committed among them, they had been as guilty as Achan, if they had not puniſhed it.

Ver. 13. Up.] He was not ſtill lying on the ground, for God had bid him riſe before; and he, we ſuppoſe, had obeyed him: But this is a word whereby he quickens him to make all the ſpeed he could, to do as he now directed him.

——Sanctify the people.] Call upon them to ſanctify themſelves; as it here follows.

——And ſay, Sanctify your ſelves.] As they did when they were to meet the Lord at mount Sinai, Exod. xix. 10, &c. and as they were lately commanded to do, when he led them over Jordan, chap. iii. 5. For now they were to appear before his majeſty, that an inquiſition might be made, who he was that had been guilty of this foul crime.

—To-morrow.] For he would not have the guilt remain any longer upon them.

——For thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, There is an accurſed thing in the midſt of thee, O Iſrael.] He ſpeaks in this ſtyle, both to awaken them to ſanctify themſelves; and alſo to appear before the Lord next morning.

——Thou canſt not ſtand before thine enemies, until ye take away the curſed thing from among you.] Both the perſon who had violated the Anathema; and the thing he had purloined.

Ver. 14. In the morning therefore ye ſhall be brought.] Before the Lord.

——According to your tribes.] Some principal perſons of every tribe, repreſenting the reſt, were ſet before the Lord.

——And it ſhall be, that the tribe which the Lord taketh, ſhall come according to the families thereof; and the family which the Lord ſhall take, ſhall come by houſholds; and the houſhold which the Lord ſhall take, ſhall come man by man.] How the lots in this inquiſition were caſt, is neither plain from ſcripture, nor agreed about by commentators, though we have a great many inſtances of their being uſed to diſcover guilty perſons, not only by the Jews, as in this caſe, and the caſe of Saul, 2 Sam. xiv. 38, &c. but by other nations, as we find by the hiſtory of Jonah; and for ſeveral other purpoſes, bad as well as good. As to the manner in which the ceremony it ſelf was performed, except the calling of the tribes one after another, till it came to the right, and ſo down to the inferior branches of each family, till they came at laſt to ſingle perſons, as in the two caſes above-mentioned, except this we have nothing certain about it. Joſephus only ſays, that it was done before the high-prieſt, and ſeventy elders. To this other Jews add, that they were made to paſs before the ark, and that the high-prieſt was directed by the Urim to pitch upon the right tribe, family, &c. However that be, the lawfulneſs of this way of caſting lots cannot be denied, ſince it was not only countenanced, if not preſcribed, by God, but afterwards practiſed even by the Apoſtles, though the heatheniſh ſuperſtitions, which were afterwards intermixed with this method of inquiſition, and vile purpoſes, to which it has been proſtituted, may poſſibly have rendered it exceeding dangerous, if not altogether criminal. Joſhua loſt no time, and having caſt lots from the tribes to the families, Achan, the ſon of Carmi, of the tribe of Judah, was found to be the ſacrilegious perſon.

Ver. 19. And Joſhua ſaid unto Achan, My ſon.] All great minds are full of tenderneſs and compaſſion; and nothing more unbecomes a prince, than violent paſſion: Which Joſhua was ſo far from expreſſing on this occaſion, that he ſpeaks to him with the greateſt mildneſs imaginable.

——Give, I pray thee, glory to the Lord God of Iſrael.] The Samaritan chronicle paraphraſes this not amiſs; "Lift up thine eyes to the king of heaven and "earth,

" earth, and acknowledge that nothing can be hid from " him; who knows the greateſt ſecrets."

——— And make confeſſion unto him, and tell me now what thou haſt done.] Openly confeſs thy guilt; and relate to me what it is, that thou haſt converted to thine own uſe.

——— Hide it not from me.] Who thou ſeeſt have God at hand, to diſcover that which none of us know but thy ſelf.

Ver. 20. And Achan anſwered Joſhua, and ſaid, indeed I have ſinned againſt the Lord God of Iſrael.] Which the Samaritan chronicle thus expreſſes; " I acknowledge that " I have grievouſly ſinned before God, who knows all ſe- " cret and hidden things." For I have prevaricated againſt the covenant of God, and againſt his ambaſſador.

Ver. 21. When I ſaw among the ſpoils a goodly Babyloniſh garment.] There are a great many opinions about this garment; which Bochart moſt probably judges to have been a various garment, as the LXX. tranſlate it; that is, of divers colours, wherein were ſeveral figures, either woven, or wrought with a needle; for which ſort of work Babylon was famous, inſomuch that they were called painted garments; which made a moſt glorious ſhew. Achan therefore was tempted by the luſtre of this, to reſerve it for his own uſe, or perhaps for ſale; for they bore an immenſe price.

——— And two hundred ſhekels of ſilver.] Which were equal to an hundred German dollars, as Maſius obſerves.

——— And a wedge of gold.] In the Hebrew, a tongue; for it had that ſhape.

——— Of fifty ſhekels weight.] This may be underſtood in two ſenſes; either that it was worth ſo many ſhekels in value, that is, fifty dollars; or, that it weighed as much as fifty ſhekels, that is, three hundred dollars. The laſt ſenſe Maſius thinks moſt probable.

— Then I coveted them, and took them] To his own uſe, when he ſhould have brought them into God's treaſury, James i. 15.

——— And behold, they are hid in the earth, in the midſt of my tent.] 'Till he could have time to diſpoſe of them to his beſt advantage.

——— And the ſilver under it.] The ſilver was immediately under the Babyloniſh garment, and the gold under that: For both ſilver and gold are here meant, tho' one only is mentioned.

The law againſt ſacrilege condemning the tranſgreſſor to the flames, and God commanding the perſon here guilty to be puniſhed in that manner, the Jews affirm, that Achan was actually burnt; and whereas it is ſaid, ver. 25. that he was ſtoned, they think it to have been done accidentally by the people, who were ſo highly provoked, that they could not forbear caſting ſtones at him, as he was led to execution. However, their large comment on this place obſerves, judiciouſly enough, that he was alſo guilty of the breach of the ſabbath, becauſe it was on that day that Jericho was taken; and therefore, that as he had been guilty of a double crime, ſacrilege, and ſabbath-breaking, ſo he received the double puniſhment preſcribed, ſtoning and burning. The Jews add, that the place where the three thouſand men were routed by the men of Ai, was called Shebarim, breaches or defeats, from the defeat which they received there; as Achor was, from the grief which Achan cauſed them.

CHAP. VIII.

1 God encourageth Joſhua. 3 The ſtratagem whereby Ai was taken. 29 The king thereof is hanged. 30 Joſhua buildeth an altar, 32 writeth the law on ſtones, 33 propoundeth bleſſings and curſings.

AND the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Fear not, neither be thou diſmayed: take all the people of war with thee, and ariſe, go up to Ai: ſee, I have given into thy hand the king of Ai, and his people, and his city, and his land.

2 And thou ſhalt do to Ai, and her king, as thou didſt unto Jericho and her king: only the ſpoil thereof, and the cattle thereof ſhall ye take for a prey unto your ſelves: lay thee an ambuſh for the city, behind it.

3 ¶ So Joſhua aroſe and all the people of war, to go up againſt Ai: and Joſhua choſe out thirty thouſand mighty men of valour, and ſent them away by night.

4 And he commanded them ſaying, Behold, ye ſhall lie in wait againſt the city, even behind the city: go not very far from the city, but be ye all ready.

5 And I, and all the people that are with me, will approach unto the city: and it ſhall come to paſs when they come out againſt us, as at the firſt, that we will flee before them.

6 (For they will come out after us) till we have drawn them from the city; for they will ſay, They flee before us, as at the firſt: therefore we will flee before them.

7 Then ye ſhall riſe up from the ambuſh, and ſeize upon the city: for the LORD your God will deliver it into your hand.

8 And it ſhall be when ye have taken the city, that ye ſhall ſet the city on fire: according to the commandment of the LORD ſhall ye do. See, I have commanded you.

9 ¶ Joſhua therefore ſent them forth; and they went to lie in ambuſh, and abode between Beth-el and Ai, on the weſt-ſide of Ai: but Joſhua lodged that night among the people.

10 And Joſhua roſe up early in the morning, and numbered the people, and went up, he and the elders of Iſrael, before the people to Ai.

11 And all the people, even the people of war that were with him, went up, and drew nigh, and came before the city, and pitched on the north-ſide of Ai: now there was a valley between them and Ai.

12 And he took about five thouſand men, and ſet them to lie in ambuſh between Beth-el and Ai, on the weſt-ſide of the city.

13 And when they had ſet the people, even all the hoſt that was on the north of the city, and their liers in wait on the weſt of the city: Joſhua went that night into the midſt of the valley.

14 ¶ And it came to paſs when the king of Ai ſaw it, that they haſted and roſe up early, and the men of the city went out againſt againſt Iſrael to battle, he, and all his people, at a time appointed before the plain; but he wiſt not that there were liers in ambuſh againſt him behind the city.

15 And Joſhua and all Iſrael made as if they were beaten before them, and fled by the way of the wilderneſs.

16 And all the people that were in Ai, were called together to purſue after them: and they purſued after Joſhua, and were drawn away from the city.

17 And there was not a man left in Ai, or Beth-el, that went not out after Iſrael: and they left the city open, and purſued after Iſrael.

18 And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Stretch out the ſpear that is in thy hand, toward Ai; for I will give it into thine hand. And Joſhua ſtretched out the ſpear that he had in his hand, toward the city.

19 And the ambuſh aroſe quickly out of their place, and they ran as ſoon as he had ſtretched out his hand: and they entered into the city, and took it, and haſted, and ſet the city on fire.

20 And when the men of Ai looked behind them, they ſaw, and behold, the ſmoke of the city aſcended up to heaven, and they had no power to flee this way or that way: and the people that fled to the wilderneſs turned back upon the purſuers.

21 And when Joſhua and all Iſrael ſaw that the ambuſh had taken the city, and that the ſmoke of the city aſcended, then they turned again, and ſlew the men of Ai.

22 And the other iſſued out of the city againſt them, ſo they were in the midſt of Iſrael, ſome on this ſide, and ſome on that ſide: and they ſmote them, ſo that they let none of them remain, or eſcape.

23 And the king of Ai they took alive, and brought him to Joſhua.

24 And it came to paſs, when Iſrael had made an end of ſlaying all the inhabitants of Ai, in the field, in the wilderneſs wherein they chaſed them, and when they were all fallen on the edge of the ſword, until they were conſumed, that all the Iſraelites returned unto Ai, and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword.

25 And ſo it was, that all that fell that day, both of men and women, were twelve thouſand, even all the men of Ai.

26 For Joſhua drew not his hand back wherewith he ſtretched out the ſpear, until he had utterly deſtroyed all the inhabitants of Ai.

27 Only the cattle and the ſpoil of that city, Iſrael took for a prey unto themſelves, according unto the word of the LORD, which he commanded Joſhua.

28 And Joſhua burnt Ai, and made it an heap for ever, even a deſolation unto this day.

29 And the king of Ai he hanged on a tree until even-tide: and as ſoon as the ſun was down, Joſhua commanded that they ſhould take his carcaſe down from the tree, and caſt it at the entring of the gate of the city, and raiſe thereon a great heap of ſtones that remaineth unto this day.

30 ¶ Then Joſhua built an altar unto the LORD God of Iſrael in mount Ebal.

31 As Moſes the ſervant of the LORD commanded the children of Iſrael, as it is written in the book of the law of Moſes, an altar of whole ſtones, over which no man hath lift up any iron: and they offered thereon burnt-offerings unto the LORD, and ſacrificed peace-offerings.

32 And he wrote there upon the ſtones a copy of the law of Moſes, which he wrote in the preſence of the children of Iſrael.

33 And all Iſrael, and their elders, and officers, and their judges, ſtood on this ſide the ark, and on that ſide, before the prieſts the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, as well the ſtranger, as he that was born among them; half of them over-againſt mount Gerizzim, and half of them over-againſt mount Ebal: as Moſes the ſervant of the LORD had commanded before, that they ſhould bleſs the people of Iſrael.

34 And afterward he read all the words of the law, the bleſſings and curſings, according to all that is written in the book of the law.

35 There was not a word of all that Moſes commanded, which Joſhua read not before all the congregation of Iſrael, with the women, and the little ones, and the ſtrangers that were converſant among them.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua.] Who, it is likely, now conſulted God about their progreſs in this war: which he had not done before, chap. vii. 2. being ſufficiently authoriſed by what God had often ſaid to him, and by their ſucceſs againſt Jericho: But this late defeat before Ai might make him think it neceſſary to take advice of the Divine Majeſty, before he attempted any thing farther.

—Fear not, neither be thou diſmayed.] Becauſe of the late ill ſucceſs; of which he now knew the cauſe; which was removed.

——Take all the people of war with thee.] This order may ſeem ſtrange, ſince the people themſelves thought two or three thouſand were ſufficient, if God were with them. But God would have them all to ſhare in the ſpoil of Ai; that they who had obeyed him, in abſtaining from laying their hands on any thing in Jericho, might be now rewarded for it, by the prey of this city, as it follows in the next verſe.

——And ariſe, go up to Ai.] Which, it appears by this, was in the hill-country.

——I have given into thy hand the king of Ai, and his people, and his city, and his land.] God bids him be confident of a compleat victory, as if he had already won it.

Ver. 2. And thou ſhalt do to Ai and her king, as thou didſt to Jericho and her king.] Only with ſuch a difference as follows in the next verſe.

——Only the ſpoil thereof, and the cattle thereof, ſhall ye take for a prey unto yourſelves.] None of the ſilver or gold, or any thing elſe, was ſeparated to God's uſe, nor order'd to be deſtroyed; but they were to enjoy it all entirely themſelves.

——Lay thee an ambuſh for the city behind it.] On the weſt of it; for they were now in Gilgal, which lay eaſtward.

Ver. 3. So Joſhua aroſe, and all the people of war, to go up againſt Ai.] The king of Ai apprehended, that Joſhua intended to beſiege him, but knew nothing of the ſtratagem and ambuſcades which had been concerted to ruin him, and deſtroy his city. He ſaw Joſhua appear before his walls, with no very formidable force, and immediately reſolved to encounter him; which he no ſooner offered to do, than the Iſraelites turned their backs, and fled with much ſeeming precipitation. The king of Ai, conceiving that he had now a favourable opportunity to defeat the Iſraelites as effectually as he could deſire, ordered all his forces to quit the city, and join him in the purſuit of the enemy, whoſe flight he little thought was no more than a counterfeit. The city being now left deſtitute of defence, and this being made known to a party of Iſraelites who lay in ambuſh, they immediately roſe up, ſeized upon the city, and ſet the out-skirts of it on fire. The king of Ai, turning his head, ſaw the ſmoke of his city aſcending up to heaven; and, in the midſt of his conſternation, likewiſe beheld the enemy ſtop ſhort, and face about upon him. His return to the city was intercepted by thoſe who had ſet it on fire, and were now advancing to aſſiſt in cutting him off. The men of Ai, perceiving therefore that their city muſt inevitably periſh, and that they were to be attacked on all ſides, were entirely diſpirited with fear, and they all fell by the edge of the ſword, except their king, who was taken alive, and led to Joſhua. After this ſlaughter of their army, their city was viſited by the Iſraelites, and there the ſcene of blood was acted over again upon the women, and thoſe who were found in and about the city; ſo that 12000 perſons were ſlain that day, and the fated city was now turned into a deſolate heap, as it ever afterward continued. The captive king was hung upon a tree till the evening, when this body was taken down, and toſſed into what had been the gate-way of the city, where he had uſed to ſit in judgment perhaps, and buried under an heap of ſtones, which were thrown on him: So ended the kingdom of Ai.

Ver. 30. Then Joſhua built an altar unto the Lord God of Iſrael in mount Ebal.] If this mount lay between Ai and Beth-el, (as Gerardus Mercator endeavours to prove by many arguments) then this altar, we may well think, was built immediately after the taking of Ai, as ſoon as the Iſraelites came into poſſeſſion of this mount: For they look'd upon themſelves, no doubt, as obliged to fulfill the command of God, given them by Moſes, as ſoon as it was poſſible. But the ſcripture plainly deſcribes this mount Ebal, as near Shechem, for there was only a valley between Ebal and Gerizzim, from whence Jotham ſpake to the men of Shechem, Judg. ix. 7. which was a great way diſtant from Ai. And therefore we muſt ſuppoſe that which is here related, not to have been done till they had the country about Shechem.

Ver. 31. As Moſes, the ſervant of the Lord, commanded the children of Iſrael.] Deut. xi. 29, 30. xxvii. 2, &c. See in thoſe places.

——As it is written in the book of the law of Moſes, an altar of whole ſtones, over which no man hath lift up any iron.] The altar was built according to the direction given by God, in the foregoing law of his, Exod. xx. 25. and repeated in Deut. xxvii. 5, 6. See there.

——And they offered thereon burnt-offerings unto the Lord, and ſacrificed peace-offerings.] For now they renewed their covenant with God the third time.

Ver. 32. And he wrote there upon the ſtones a copy of the law of Moſes, which he wrote in the preſence of the children of Iſrael.] It is a great queſtion what it was he wrote upon theſe ſtones. Some fancy, all the five books of Moſes; others, only the book of Deuteronomy; which is more likely than the other; but too long for theſe ſtones to contain, or for him to write, in the preſence of all Iſrael. Others, therefore, think only the ten commandments, or a compendium of the law of Moſes; or, perhaps, the bleſſings, and curſings: But Fortunatus Scacchus, with ſome probability, conjectures, that he only wrote the words of the covenant, by which the children of Iſrael acknowledged they held the land of Canaan, of God, as their great Lord; upon condition they obſerved his laws, to which they and their poſterity were obliged. And this he principally grounds upon theſe words, Deut. xxvii. 3. Thou ſhalt write upon them all the words of this law. Where the Hebrew word Hazoth (This) he thinks hath a particular reſpect to what he is ſpeaking of; namely, their going over Jordan to poſſeſs the land which God gave them, upon condition they obſerved his ſtatutes.

Ver. 33. And all Iſrael, and their elders, and officers, and their judges, ſtood on this ſide of the ark, and on that ſide.] With their faces toward the ark.

——Before the prieſts the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord.] Who were to pronounce the bleſſings and the curſings preſcribed by the law. See Deut. xxvii. 24.

——As well the ſtranger, as he that was born among them.] For the law made no diſtinction between them, Levit. xix. 34.

——Half of them over-againſt mount Gerizzim, and half of them over againſt mount Ebal, as Moſes the ſervant of the Lord had commanded before.] In Deut. xxvii. 12, 13. See there.

——That they ſhould bleſs the people of Iſrael.] There were curſings, as well as bleſſings pronounced: But the intent of curſing was, that they might avoid thoſe ſins againſt which they were denounced; and thereby obtain a bleſſing.

Ver. 34. And afterward he read all the words of the law, the bleſſings and the curſings, according to all that is written in the book of the law.] Namely, in Deut. xxvii. ver. 15, 16, 17, 18, &c. The word afterward is not be neglected, which imports, that after the building of the altar, and the offering ſacrifices thereon, and writing the law on the ſtones, and diſpoſing the people in their place about the ark, then he read the law to them. Which was likely to be heard with the greater attention, when they were thus prepared to receive it, and had ſolemnly worſhipped God, and owned his authority.

Ver. 35. There was not a word of all that Moſes commanded, which Joſhua read not before all the congregation of Iſrael.] Namely, all that Moſes directed in Deut. xxvii. or, as others will have it, the whole book of Deuteronomy, wherein theſe bleſſings and curſings are contained. See Deut. xxxi. 13.

——With the women, and the little ones, and the ſtrangers that were converſant among them.] By the ſtrangers here mentioned (and in ver. 33.) are to be underſtood ſuch as were proſelytes to their religion; and had undertaken to obſerve this law, as well as themſelves; and therefore were to be made acquainted with it. And that they might be moved to have the greater regard to it, Joſhua himſelf, their chief governor, read it to them. So ſome of the Jews underſtand it; after the prieſts had read the bleſſings and curſings, then Joſhua read all the commanding and forbidding precepts in the law.

CHAP. IX.

1 The kings combine againſt Iſrael. 3 The Gibeonites by craft obtain a league. 16 For which they are condemned to perpetual bondage.

AND it came to paſs, when all the kings which were on this ſide Jordan, in the hills, and in the valleys, and in all the coaſts of the great ſea over-againſt Lebanon, the Hittite, and the Amorite, the Canaanite, the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebuſite heard thereof;

2 That they gathered themſelves together to fight with Joſhua, and with Iſrael, with one accord.

3 ¶ And when the inhabitants of Gibeon heard what Joſhua had done unto Jericho, and to Ai,

4 They did work wilily, and went and made as if they had been ambaſſadors, and took old ſacks upon their aſſes, and wine-bottles, old, and rent, and bound up,

5 And old ſhoes, and clouted upon their feet, and old garments upon them, and all the bread of their proviſion was dry and mouldy.

6 And they went to Joſhua unto the camp at Gilgal, and ſaid unto him, and to the men of Iſrael, We be come from a far country: now therefore make ye a league with us.

7 And the men of Iſrael ſaid unto the Hivites, Peradventure ye dwell among us, and how ſhall we make a league with you?

8 And they ſaid unto Joſhua, We are thy ſervants. And Joſhua ſaid unto them, Who are ye? and from whence come ye?

9 And they ſaid unto him, From a very far country thy ſervants are come, becauſe of the name of the LORD thy God: for we have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt,

10 And all that he did to the two kings of the Amorites, that were beyond Jordan, to Sihon king of Heſhbon, and to Og king of Baſhan, which was at Aſhtaroth.

11 Wherefore our elders, and all the inhabitants of our country, ſpake to us, ſaying, Take victuals with you for the journey, and go to meet them, and ſay unto them, We are your ſervants: therefore now make ye a league with us.

12 This our bread we took hot for our proviſion out of our houſes, on the day we came forth to go unto you; but now behold it is dry, and it is mouldy:

13 And theſe bottles of wine, which we filled, were new, and behold, they be rent: and theſe our garments and our ſhoes are become old, by reaſon of the very long journey.

14 And the men took of their victuals, and asked not counſel at the mouth of the LORD.

15 And Joſhua made peace with them, and made a league with them, to let them live: and the princes of the congregation ſware unto them.

16 And it came to paſs at the end of three days, after they had made a league with them, that they heard that they were their neighbours; and that they dwelt among them.

17 And the children of Iſrael journeyed, and came unto their cities on the third day: now their cities were Gibeon, and Chephirah, and Beeroth, and Kirjath-jearim.

18 And the children of Iſrael ſmote them not, becauſe the princes of the congregation had ſworn unto them by the LORD God of Iſrael: and all the congregation murmured againſt the princes.

19 But all the princes ſaid unto all the congregation, We have ſworn unto them by the LORD God of Iſrael: now therefore we may not touch them.

20 This we will do to them; we will even let them live, leſt wrath be upon us, becauſe of the oath which we ſware unto them.

21 And the princes ſaid unto them, Let them live (but let them be hewers of wood, and drawers of water unto all the congregation) as the princes had promiſed them.

22 ¶ And Joſhua called for them, and he ſpake unto them, ſaying, Wherefore have ye beguiled us, ſaying, We are very far from you; when ye dwell among us?

23 Now therefore ye are curſed, and there ſhall none of you be freed from being bond-men, and hewers of wood, and drawers of water for the houſe of my God.

24 And they anſwered Joſhua, and ſaid, Becauſe it was certainly told thy ſervants, how that the LORD thy God commanded his ſervant Moſes, to give you all the land, and to deſtroy all the inhabitants of the land from before you, therefore we were ſore afraid of our lives becauſe of you, and have done this thing.

25 And now behold, we are in thine hand: as it ſeemeth good and right unto thee to do unto us, do.

26 And ſo did he unto them, and delivered them out of the hand of the children of Iſrael, that they ſlew them not.

27 And Joſhua made them that day hewers of wood, and drawers of water for the congregation, and for the altar of the LORD, even unto this day, in the place which he ſhould chuſe.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs, when all the kings which were on this ſide Jordan ——— heard thereof.] The greateſt part of the country was now riſing up in arms againſt Joſhua; but Gibeon, a city of the Hivites, far ſtronger, and more conſiderable than Ai, and renowned for the courage of its citizens, heard what had been done to the kingdoms of Jericho and Ai, and trembled; and the inhabitants, deſpairing to be able to withſtand, by meer ſtrength, the torrent which was now broke into their country, reſolved to try what art could accompliſh in ſo dangerous a conjuncture; and accordingly came to the reſolution of ſending to Joſhua ſome ambaſſadors, who ſhould be dreſſed in old tattered garments, and accommodated with no other proviſions than dry mouldy bread, and old rent wine-skins. All this they contrived, that their ambaſſadors might ſeem to come from ſome very remote country. With this ſordid equipage they ſet out for Joſhua's camp in Gilgal; where, being arrived, they told him, they were come from a very diſtant country to ſollicit his friendſhip; and being queſtioned as to their ſincerity, they anſwered equivocally; and being ſtill further preſſed upon the point, they replyed, with great ſubmiſſion, That they actually came from a very remote land; and that the fame of the Lord God, and what he had done for Iſrael in Egypt; and ſince then, by the deſtruction of thoſe mighty kings of Sihon and Og, had been the inducements which brought them ſo far from home, being ſent by the unanimous votes of all their countrymen, that they might make their homage, and deſire to be admitted into a league with Iſrael; and as a proof that in all they had ſaid they had confined themſelves to ſtrict truth, they produced their dry and mouldy bread, which they averred they had taken hot out of their houſes the day they ſet out; our bottles of wine, ſaid they, were new, and ſee how they are rent; our garments and ſhoes were the ſame, but they are worn out by reaſon of our very long journey. In all this they acted their parts with the utmoſt cunning and prevarication; and, being too eaſily believed, gained their point, by perſuading Joſhua and the Iſraelites to make a league with them.

Thus did they over-reach their enemies, and thereby ſave their lives. At the end of three days their whole artifice was diſcovered; but then they valued it not, having brought the Iſraelites under a ſolemn engagement to protect them as friends: but, in the concluſion, they fared not ſo well, as they (perhaps) expected, being condemned to be hewers of wood, and drawers of water; that is, to be ſlaves, or very little better.

CHAP. X.

1 Five kings war againſt Gibeon. 6 Joſhua reſcueth it. 10 God fighteth againſt them with hail-ſtones. 12 The ſun and moon ſtand ſtill at the word of Joſhua. 16 The five kings are mured in a cave. 22 They are brought forth, 24 Scornfully uſed, 26 And hanged. 28 Seven kings more are conquered. 43 Joſhua returneth to Gilgal.

NOW it came to paſs, when Adonizedek king of Jeruſalem had heard how Joſhua had taken Ai, and had utterly deſtroyed it (as he had done to Jericho and her king, ſo he had done to Ai and her king) and how the inhabitants of Gibeon had made peace with Iſrael, and were among them;

2 That they feared greatly, becauſe Gibeon was a great city, as one of the royal cities, and becauſe it was greater than Ai, and all the men thereof were mighty.

3 Wherefore Adoni-zedek king of Jeruſalem, ſent unto Hoham king of Hebron, and unto Piram king of Jarmuth, and unto Japhia king of Lachiſh, and unto Debir king of Eglon, ſaying,

4 Come up unto me, and help me, that we may ſmite Gibeon: for it hath made peace with Joſhua, and with the children of Iſrael.

5 Therefore the five kings of the Amorites, the king of Jeruſalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachiſh, the king of Eglon, gathered themſelves together, and went up, they and all their hoſts, and encamped before Gibeon, and made war againſt it.

6 ¶ And the men of Gibeon ſent unto Joſhua to the camp to Gilgal, ſaying, Slack not thy hand from thy ſervants; come up to us quickly, and ſave us, and help us: for all the kings of the Amorites that dwell in the mountains, are gathered together againſt us.

7 So Joſhua aſcended from Gilgal, he and all the people of war with him, and all the mighty men of valour.

8 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Fear them not: for I have delivered them into thine hand; there ſhall not a man of them ſtand before thee.

9 Joſhua therefore came unto them ſuddenly, and went up from Gilgal all night.

10 And the LORD diſcomfited them before Iſrael, and ſlew them with a great ſlaughter at Gibeon, and chaſed them along the way that goeth up to Beth-horon, and ſmote them to Azekah, and unto Makkedah.

11 And it came to paſs as they fled from before Iſrael, and were in the going down to Beth-horon, that the LORD caſt down great ſtones from heaven upon them unto Azekah, and they died: they were more which died with hailſtones, than they whom the children of Iſrael ſlew with the ſword.

12 ¶ Then ſpake Joſhua to the LORD, in the day when the LORD delivered up the the Amorites before the children of Iſrael, and he ſaid in the ſight of Iſrael, Sun, ſtand thou ſtill upon Gibeon, and thou moon in the valley of Ajalon.

13 And the ſun ſtood ſtill, and the moon ſtayed, until the people had avenged themſelves upon their enemies. Is not this written in the book of Jaſher? ſo the ſun ſtood ſtill in the midſt of heaven, and haſted not to go down about a whole day.

14 And there was no day like that, before it or after it, that the LORD hearkned unto the voice of a man: for the LORD fought for Iſrael.

15 ¶ And Joſhua returned, and all Iſrael with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.

16 But theſe five kings fled, and hid themſelves in a cave at Makkedah.

17 And it was told Joſhua, ſaying, The five kings are found hid in a cave at Makkedah.

18 And Joſhua ſaid, Roll great ſtones upon the mouth of the cave, and ſet men by it for to keep them.

19 And ſtay you not, but purſue after your enemies, and ſmite the hindmoſt of them, ſuffer them not to enter into their cities: for the LORD your God hath delivered them unto your hand.

20 And it came to paſs when Joſhua and the children of Iſrael had made an end of ſlaying them with a very great ſlaughter, till they were conſumed, that the reſt which remained of them, entred into fenced cities.

21 And all the people returned to the camp to Joſhua at Makkedah in peace: none moved his tongue againſt any of the children of Iſrael.

22 Then ſaid Joſhua, Open the mouth of the cave, and bring out thoſe five kings unto me out of the cave.

23 And they did ſo, and brought forth thoſe five kings unto him out of the cave, the king of Jeruſalem, the king of Hebron, the king of Jarmuth, the king of Lachiſh, and the king of Eglon.

24 And it came to paſs when they brought out thoſe kings unto Joſhua, that Joſhua called for all the men of Iſrael, and ſaid unto the captains of the men of war, which went with him, Come near, put your feet upon the necks of theſe kings. And they came near, and put their feet upon the necks of them.

25 And Joſhua ſaid unto them, Fear not nor be diſmayed, be ſtrong and of good courage: for thus ſhall the LORD do to all your enemies againſt whom ye fight.

26 And afterward Joſhua ſmote them, and ſlew them, and hanged them on five trees: and they were hanging upon the trees until the evening.

27 And it came to paſs at the time of the going down of the ſun, that Joſhua commanded, and they took them down off the trees, and caſt them into the cave wherein they had been hid, and laid great ſtones in the caves mouth, which remain until this very day.

28 ¶ And that day Joſhua took Makkedah, and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and the king thereof he utterly deſtroyed, them, and all the ſouls that were therein, he let none remain: and he did to the king of Makkedah, as he did unto the king of Jericho.

29 Then Joſhua paſſed from Makkedah, and all Iſrael with him, unto Libnah, and fought againſt Libnah.

30 And the LORD delivered it alſo, and the king thereof, into the hand of Iſrael, and he ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and all the ſouls that were therein: he let none remain in it, but did unto the king thereof, as he did unto the king of Jericho.

31 ¶ And Joſhua paſſed from Libnah, and all Iſrael with him, unto Lachiſh, and encamped againſt it, and fought againſt it.

32 And the LORD delivered Lachiſh, into the hand of Iſrael, which took it on the ſecond day, and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and all the ſouls that were therein, according to all that he had done to Libnah.

33 ¶ Then Horam king of Gezer, came up to help Lachiſh; and Joſhua ſmote him and his people, until he had left him none remaining.

34 ¶ And from Lachiſh, Joſhua paſſed unto Eglon, and all Iſrael with him, and they encamped againſt it, and fought againſt it.

35 And they took it on that day, and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and all the ſouls that were therein he utterly deſtroyed that day, according to all that he had done to Lachiſh.

36 And Joſhua went up from Eglon, and all Iſrael with him, unto Hebron, and and they fought againſt it.

37 And they took it, and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof, and all the ſouls that were therein: he left none remaining (according to all that he had done to Eglon) but deſtroyed it utterly, and all the ſouls that were therein.

38 ¶ And Joſhua returned, and all Iſrael with him to Debir, and fought againſt it.

39 And he took it, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof, and they ſmote them with the edge of the ſword, and utterly deſtroyed all the ſouls that were therein, he left none remaining: as he had done to Hebron, ſo he did to Debir, and to the king thereof, as he had done alſo to Libnah, and to her king.

40 ¶ So Joſhua ſmote all the country of the hills, and of the ſouth, and of the vale, and of the ſprings, and all their kings: he left none remaining, but utterly deſtroyed all that breathed, as the LORD God of Iſrael commanded.

41 And Joſhua ſmote them from Kadeſh-barnea, even unto Gaza, and all the country of Goſhen, even unto Gibeon.

42 And all theſe kings and their land did Joſhua take at one time: becauſe the LORD God of Iſrael fought for Iſrael.

43 And Joſhua returned, and all Iſrael with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.

Ver. 1. Now it came to paſs, when Adonizedek king of Jeruſalem.] Who ſeems to have been the moſt potent prince in Canaan, and carried in his name an honourable title, which had been anciently given to the kings of this place; who had been famous for doing juſtice. For, it is probable, that ever ſince Melchiſedeck, who was king of Salem, and truly king of righteouſneſs, as his name ſignified: They affected this title, though they did not always anſwer their character: For this Adonizedek (whoſe name imports the Lord of Righteouſneſs) had none of the virtues which were ſo eminent in Melchiſedeck.

——King of Jeruſalem.] It is thought by ſome, that this city held the name of Salem, which they ſuppoſe it had in Abraham's time, till the Iſraelites came into the land of Canaan; and then they called it Jeruſalem, when they firſt took poſſeſſion of it. Which they did not ſo fully, but that ſtill the Jebuſites dwelt there with the children of Benjamin, (ſee Judges i. 8, 21.) who were ſo weak, that the Jebuſites, in time, recovered it wholly to themſelves, and expelled the Benjamites; ſee Judges xix. 10. where it is called Jebus; though the other name is alſo acknowledged; becauſe the Iſraelites called it Jeruſalem, while the Jebuſites, having prevailed, called it Jebus.

——Had heard how Joſhua had taken Ai.] By which means, the Iſraelites were come nearer to him, than when they took Jericho.

When this prince therefore heard how Ai had been utterly deſtroyed, and what was worſe to the common cauſe, that the Gibeonites had ſubmitted to Joſhua, he was divided betwixt diſdain and fear. But, reſolving to make an example of the Gibeonites, thereby to deter others from following ſo pernicious and ſo inglorious an example, he called in Hoham, king of Hebron; Piram, king of Jarmuth; Japhia, king of Lachiſh; and Debir, king of Eglon; (all which cities afterward belonged to the tribe of Judah, as appears from the following part of this book) to join him to fight againſt Gibeon; and, accordingly, they all went againſt it, and beſieged it. The inhabitants, in this diſtreſs, diſpatched notice to Joſhua of what was befallen them, and begged his ſpeedy ſuccour, to reſcue them from their enraged countrymen. The effect of this was, that the five kings, as they were beſieging the city, were furiouſly aſſaulted by Joſhua; ſo that they were obliged to riſe from before it, and make off in great confuſion.

Ver. 11. And it came to paſs, as they fled from before Iſrael, and were in the going down to Beth-horon,] Which was ſeated on the ſide of a hill, and ſeems to have taken its name from the wonderful ſtorm, here mentioned: For, Beth-horon, ſignifies as much as the houſe or place of fury or anger.

——That the Lord caſt down great ſtones from heaven upon them.] It is plain, that if we admit the Divine authority of this book, we cannot but look upon this tranſaction as altogether ſupernatural, and of the number of thoſe many which God was pleaſed to work in favour of the Iſraelites; it will be therefore needleſs to dwell long upon this enquiry, how far this ſtorm of hail-ſtones that preceded the victory obtained by the Iſraelites was ſo or not?

However, though we have ventured to give it the name of hail, not ſo much in compliance with the modern taſte, as becauſe the original is capable of that ſenſe, without any great violence done to it; yet it is plain to thoſe who underſtand it, that the moſt natural one is, that it was a ſhower of real ſtones. The text literally runs thus, And the Lord cauſed great ſtones to fall, or to be caſt, upon them, and many more died by the Abne habarad, the hail-ſtones, than by the ſword; and it is this laſt expreſſion that made the Septuagint, and, after them, Joſephus and the author of Eccleſiaſticus, chap. xlvi. 6. to underſtand them of a real hail of more than ordinary bigneſs, in which there is nothing but what is agreeable enough to the genius of the tongue. But on the other hand it is certain, that it is ſo far from being the obvious meaning of it, that the word Hail ſeems rather to be uſed here to expreſs the vaſt quantity, bigneſs, vehemence and execution of thoſe ſtones which then fell; and the expreſſion of flying and falling as thick as hail is not only common to all the ancient, but likewiſe retained in moſt modern languages; for which reaſon ſeveral learned men have underſtood it of a miraculous ſhower of real ſtones, as being the moſt eaſy and natural meaning of the text.

The misfortune is, that men, who are more ſcrupulous than learned, are apt to run themſelves into greater difficulties, than thoſe they endeavour to avoid; and whilſt they take ſuch care to ſcreen themſelves from the ſuſpicion of being over credulous, eſpecially in caſes which carry the appearance of a miracle, they not only call in queſtion the moſt pregnant teſtimonies of the like facts in prophane hiſtory, both ancient and modern, but likewiſe caſt diſtant reflections on the divine hiſtorian, and thoſe inſpired writers who have mentioned the ſame facts after him, as if they had deſignedly made choice of ſuch terms in recording them, as would make them appear more ſuper-natural than they really were. For if nothing had fallen on the Canaanites but a common ſhower of hail, in which no circumſtance had been extraordinary but the ſize, why muſt they be ſuppoſed to have exaggerated it at any ſuch rate?

The two learned critics, Grotius and Le Clerc, who uſed to go hand in hand before, have here taken a ſeparate tract: The former believes them to have been real ſtones, becauſe he finds many parallel inſtances of it in prophane hiſtory; and it is indeed no more than what has been fully proved by ſeveral eminent authors on that ſide the queſtion. However, Le Clerc has not ſcrupled to affirm, that it was nothing elſe than a large ſhower of Hail; and has the aſſurance to call teſtimonies alledged out of hiſtory, mere forgeries, and the endeavours of ſome authors to account for it in a natural way, trifling and not worth confuting. How eaſy he would have found the task, had he gone ſeriouſly about it, will be beſt known by an impartial view of the teſtimonies themſelves, and of what has been urged to prove the poſſibility of the thing from natural cauſes.

As

As to the firſt, we hope our readers will think it ſufficient for our purpoſe, to inſtance in two or three of the moſt pregnant and unqueſtionable facts recorded in ancient hiſtory, and corroborate them with ſome few of a more recent date, but too authentic to be ſo eaſily eluded: And if the latter are of ſuch a nature as to lead us to an eaſy diſcovery of their cauſe, we ſhall not be at a loſs for a ſufficient ground to admit the poſſibility, if not the reality of the former. It is no wonder, that they who lived in the early ages of the world, ſhould conſider a ſhower of great ſtones as too miraculous to be credited without ocular demonſtration. Such prodigies happen ſo ſeldom, that we find the Romans, above a thouſand years after Joſhua's time, very backward to believe the report of that which fell upon the mountain Alba, in the reign of Tullus Hoſtilius, ſucceſſor to Numa Pompilius, till they had it confirmed by thoſe whom they ſent thither on purpoſe to examine it, who brought them word that the fact was not only true, but that thoſe ſtones had fallen from the skies in the ſame manner as hail, that is, they were driven down by the wind (T. Liv. 1. dec. 1.) They became, in time, more familiar, and leſs queſtioned, eſpecially after that remarkable one which fell upon the ſame mountain, which the ſame author tells us laſted two whole days, lib. 25, 30, and 34. The ſame, or ſomething like it, is affirmed to have been ſeen at Rome, Capua, Lavinium, and ſo many other places in Italy, by ſo many authentic authors, that we cannot ſee how they can with any modeſty be called in queſtion, Vid. & de Bell. Afric. c. 47. Aman. Bell. Civit. lib. 4. Auguſt. de Civit. lib. 3. c. 32.

To theſe various inſtances, of which the authors quoted above, have given us ſeveral other particulars, ſuch as that thoſe ſtones, which fell in that prodigious manner, were ſometimes red-hot, and, at other times, cold; ſometimes like hard clods of earth, and ſometimes like ſand or duſt. We might add what is likewiſe recorded by others of equal credit, of ſtones that have been obſerved to be carried for ſome conſiderable time in the air, and thence fallen with great violence upon the earth. Such was that which is mentioned by Plutarch (in Vita Lyſandri) to have fallen in Thrace into the river Argos, which Anaxagoras fancied to have fallen from the ſun, (vid. Diog. in Anaxag. & Not. Menag. in Laert.) and which the author, from whom the former has it, (Damachus apud Plut. ubi ſupra) tells us was obſerved to fly about in the air like a luminous cloud, about the ſpace of ſeventy-five days, during which time, ſeveral ſplinters did now and then break off, and fly about like wandering ſtars before they fell down: The main ſtone it ſelf was of ſuch prodigious bigneſs, that Pythagoras could by no means think with Ariſtotle, Meteorolog. lib. 1. cap. 7. that it had been broken off from ſome rock, and carried up into the air by a vehement wind; becauſe, as he juſtly obſerves, it would have been impoſſible for it to have been ſo long ſuſpended there, as Damachus affirms it was. Pliny, who tells us, that it was ſtill carefully preſerved in his time, ſays, that it was magnitudine vehis, of the bigneſs of a four-wheel'd cart, or rather of a loaded waggon, of a dark burnt colour. Such was that likewiſe which is recorded to have fallen in Alſace, in the midſt of a ſtorm of hail, in November 29, 1630, (Geſner. & Anſ. de Boot. Hiſt. Lapid. & Gem.) which Calmet declares he had ſeen at the great church of Anxiſſem, where it is ſtill preſerved, and is like a large dark flint, whoſe ſurface has been ſplintered by the fire, and weighs near three hundred pounds. Of the ſame nature were thoſe which count Marcellin relates to have fallen in Thrace, A. D. 1452, and ſeveral others. For if ſuch prodigious ſtones could either be engendered in the air, or carried up thither by the force of vehement winds, or of ſubterraneous fires, the like may be more reaſonably ſuppoſed of thoſe which fell upon the Canaanites, which had nothing ſo extraordinary either in their ſize, appearance, or effects.

We might here alſo take notice of ſome other kinds of ſtony ſhowers, mentioned by ancient and modern authors, and which are ſtill more natural, as being occaſioned either by vehement hurricanes, earthquakes, or ſubterranean fires. Of the firſt ſort were thoſe that fell upon and routed the Perſians when they attempted to plunder the temple of Delphos, and are affirmed by other travellers to be very frequent in ſome parts of America. (vide Coreal and Fuilleee's Voyages.) Thoſe that fell upon the Gauls, upon the like attempt, are attributed to a vehement hurricane, by Pauſanias, (lib. 1.) but to an earthquake by Juſtin. (lib. 24.) The laſt ſort is that which is cauſed by volcanoes and ſubterraneous fires; and theſe are ſo well known, that we ſhall mention but two remarkable inſtances, of a very late date, namely, that which preceded the ſurprizing emerſion of the Iſle of Santorino out of the Archipelago, in the year 1707. concerning which we have the following account: That a dreadful noiſe had been heard for ſeveral days, like that of thunder, or of great guns, during which, volleys of ſtones all on fire were ſeen to riſe out of the ſea, and to fly quite out of ſight, like ſo many rockets; and then fall into the ſea again about five miles from the place where they were thrown up. All this while the air was filled with a thick ſulphureous ſmoke, mixed with cinders, which with much difficulty diſperſed, and fell in ſuch abundance, that the neighbouring countries were covered with the ſume, and ſmall ſtones that fell with it. Something like this is what Montfaucon tells us happened in Italy, near the village of Tripergola, where, after ſeveral terrible ſhocks and earthquakes, during which the air was darkned, and the ground covered with ſtones and duſt, which kept pouring down from the ſky, for the ſpace of two days, a mountain was obſerved to have reared it ſelf in the midſt of the lake Lucrino; this happened according to our author, in the year, 1538. Vid. Montfaucon's Diar. Ital.

The reader may find ſeveral other inſtances of the like, and perhaps of a more ſurprizing nature, in ſome of the authors above mentioned, which we forbear to dwell upon; and ſhall only add at preſent, a remark or two on the poſſibility of ſome ſort of ſtones, different from thoſe of hail, being ingendered in the air. How common hail is formed in the clouds is too well known to want any explanation: That duſt, ſand, earth, and other ſuch materials, may be carried up a conſiderable height into the air by a ſtrong whirlwind, is no more that what is commonly obſerved; here then we need but ſuppoſe that theſe, mingling themſelves with other exhalations, whether ſulphureous, bituminous, oily, vitrioline, and with the moiſture of the clouds, are there conglomerated, and hardened by their own weight, by the preſſure of the air and clouds, and thence fall down when they can be no longer ſupported.

Of this nature ſeem to have been thoſe which an author of credit (Gardan. de Variet. lib. 15. c. 72.) tells us did fall in the neighbourhood of Abdua, to the number of twelve hundred, which he ſays were of the colour of ruſty iron, ſmooth and hard, and of a ſulphureous ſmell, not unlike in all theſe reſpects to thoſe which are commonly called thunder-ſtones or bolts. Theſe (he adds) were obſerved to fall from a vehement whirlwind, which appeared like an atmoſphere of fire, and were ſo large and heavy, that one of them weighed ſix ſcore, and another ſixty pounds.

To all this we may add, that theſe ſhowers of ſtones were ſo far from being queſtioned either by the Greeks or Romans, that they were looked upon both by them, and other leſs polite nations, as ominous; for which reaſon they always conſulted the oracles, or endeavoured to avert the impending danger by ſacrifices, and other religious rites, which are reported to have laſted nine days, (Alex. ab Alex. Genial Dier. lib. 5. cap. 27.) inſomuch, that theſe kinds of heatheniſh expiations have induced ſome Chriſtians to believe that the devil was the author both of theſe prodigious ſhowers, and of the ſuperſtitious rites that were uſed to avert them, in order to confirm mankind in their idolatry. But as ſuch overſtrained notions need not be confuted in the preſent age, we ſhall cloſe this annotation, and the ſubject of it, with obſerving, that it is not unlikely, that the fabulous ſtory of Hercules obtaining ſuch a ſhower of ſtones from Jupiter, to cruſh thoſe enemies, which his arm and valour could not overcome, (Mela lib. 2. Gall. Narbon. Plin. lib. 5. Æſchyl. ap. Strab. lib. 4.) might owe its birth to this we are upon. It is certain, that the poets have joined in the character of that fabulous hero, ſeveral characters and exploits, which they have taken from thoſe of Moſes, Joſhua, Sampſon, and other Jewiſh worthies: (Grot. de Verit. Huet. Demonſt. Evang.) What make it very probable that this tempeſt of ſtones is of that number, is, that thoſe enemies, againſt whom Hercules is ſaid to have procured it, are called the ſons of Neptune, which expreſſion, being diveſted of the fable, properly ſignifies any people that traffic by ſea, and is very applicable to the Phœnicians, and their neighbours the Canaanites. But this we ſubmit to the reader.

Ver.

Ver. 12. Then ſpake Joſhua to the Lord in the day when the Lord delivered up the Amorites before the children of Iſrael, and he ſaid in the ſight of Iſrael, Sun, ſtand thou ſtill upon Gibeon, and thou Moon, in the valley of Ajalon.] We need not tell our readers how many, otherwiſe learned men, of the Chriſtians have ſcrupled to fall in with the Copernican ſyſtem, in this and many other countries free from the inquiſition, upon a miſtaken notion that it is point blank contrary to ſeveral expreſs teſtimonies of Holy Writ, among which this of the ſun and moon ſtanding ſtill is ſtrenuouſly urged by them; whilſt others, from a contrary principle, have been induced to queſtion its Divine authority, becauſe it favoured ſo abſurd a ſyſtem as that of Ptolemy is now allowed and proved to be. It was, doubtleſs, this laſt error which gave occaſion to thoſe two prophane ſayings, reported of that great philoſopher, Alphonſo king of Naples, That if the ſyſtem of the earth's ſtanding ſtill were true, the whole univerſe was but a bungling piece of mechaniſm; and that if he had been admitted into God's council at the creation, he could have ſaved him a world of trouble (Vide Bacon's Apophthegms.)

Now it is plain that theſe two extremes might have been eaſily avoided by two very obvious obſervations, namely, firſt, that the expreſſions here made uſe of, ſun ſtand ſtill upon Gibeon, &c. are figurative, and incapable of a literal ſenſe.

The words literally run thus: Sun be thou ſilent in, or upon, Gibeon, and thou moon in the valley of Ajalon. And in the next verſe it is ſaid, that they ſtood ſtill accordingly. Now it is plain, that thoſe two luminaries were neither in, upon, or even over theſe places in any other than a relative ſenſe, and that they had a different ſituation with reſpect to thoſe that were one mile eaſt or weſt of the place where Joſhua ſtood. We may venture to add, that it was impertinent to make the moon ſtand ſtill with the ſun, upon any other ſuppoſition, than that Joſhua had the ſolar ſyſtem in his thoughts when he uſed theſe expreſſions, becauſe the preſence of the moon was uſeleſs to him as long as he had that of the ſun; but if he only prayed that their light might continue till he had accompliſhed his conqueſt, which is certainly all he meant, he could not but know, that, upon the earth's ſtanding ſtill, both the ſun and the moon, and all the reſt, muſt ſeem to do ſo. It is plain our incomparable philoſopher, Sir Iſaac Newton, who was ſufficiently maſter of the Hebrew, was not diſconcerted by theſe, or any ſuch popular phraſes, from purſuing his favourite ſyſtem, though no man paid a greater deference to the authority of the ſcriptures than he did; and that he thought it ſufficient that the effect was the ſame, whether the ſun or the earth were ſuppoſed to be ſtopped in their career.

If it be asked, how it was poſſible for the earth to reſiſt, for ſo many hours, the impulſe of the circumambient fluid of the Carteſians, or the attraction and gravitation of the Newtonian Syſtem, or of whatever other mover that hurries it along, without cauſing an univerſal ſtop in the whole ſyſtem? Beſide, that the objection will be equally ſtrong, if not ſtronger, in the other hypotheſis, of the ſun ſtanding ſtill; it may be anſwered, that the fact being altogether preternatural, we need but ſuppoſe a ſufficient power to have diverted that impulſe from the earth, and directed it to glide on each ſide it, and then all the reſt might eaſily keep on their motion, tho' this ſtood ſtill all the while. However, we do not pretend to anſwer all the objections that have been raiſed againſt the poſſibility of this miracle from principles, which, for ought we know, have no foundation, but in the heads of thoſe who firſt invented them: We think it enough to ſay, that the ſupreme author of nature, who firſt gave motion to matter, and whoſe will appointed the laws of it, can neither ſuſpend or diſpenſe with them, whenever his own glory, or any wiſe ends of his providence, make it neceſſary or expedient. To doubt of this, is to deny the truth of all miracles; and we think ſuch a vein of ſcepticiſm unworthy of any anſwer.

The ſecond obſervation is, that the ſyſtem, which places the earth immoveable in the center, and ſuppoſes the ſun, moon, and ſtars, to turn round it, was the moſt univerſally received, the moſt adapted to vulgar capacities, and the freeſt from ſeeming difficulties, becauſe moſt agreeable to common appearances and obſervations; and that the groſs Iſraelites were ſo uſed to it, that had Moſes, Joſhua, or any other inſpired writer, known any thing of the ſolar ſyſtem, yet it would have been improper, if not dangerous, to have ſo much as hinted at it. However, theſe conſiderations, tho' obvious and reaſonable, have been ſo far from being univerſally admitted, that a great number of authors, both Jews and Chriſtians, have ranſack'd their brains, to find out more ſatisfactory ſolutions, tho' with ſo little circumſpection and ſucceſs, that they have rather multiplied than removed the difficulties they endeavoured to avoid.

Among the firſt, ſome have affirmed, that the motion of the luminaries was only abated in its velocity, as that of a coach is, from its full ſpeed to a ſlower pace. This they gather from the expreſſion in the 13th verſe of this chapter, So the ſun ſtood ſtill in the midſt of heaven, and haſted not to go down about a whole day. But whether or no they thought it eaſier to retard, than wholly to ſuſpend the motion of thoſe heavenly bodies, ſure it is, that neither of theſe effects could be accompliſhed but by a ſupernatural power. The ſame may be ſaid of what ſome rabbies affirm, that God ſubſtituted ſome meteor, or body of light; or that he retained the moon above the horizon, to ſupply the abſence of the ſun; but all theſe are modeſt perſons, compared with the learned Maimonides, who inſiſts, that all the miracle of this great tranſaction conſiſted in a bare wiſh or prayer of Joſhua, that the ſun might not go down, till he had obtained a compleat conqueſt, and in God's granting his requeſt, not by ſtopping the ſun's career during ſo many hours, as we underſtand it, but by enabling that general, and his army, to perform as much execution in one, as would have reaſonably taken up two days, More Nevoch. part 2. c. 39. After this, we need not wonder, if Spinoſa, the laſt among the Jews we ſhall mention on this occaſion, has ſtill improved upon Maimonides, and quite removed the difficulty, as he imagined, by denying the miracle, and attributing the extraordinary length of that day to the bare refraction of the ſolar rays by the ſky, which was more than ordinarily charged with hail, but which the people miſtook for the diſcontinuance of the ſun's motion. According to him, Iſaiah was no better a philoſopher than Joſhua, when he attributed the change that was wrought upon the dial of Ahaz, to the retrogreſſion of the ſun, rather than to a refraction of it from ſome cloud, (Tract. Theologo Politic. c. 2.)

We very much queſtion, whether any of theſe critics, eſpecially the two laſt, would ever have been thought worth anſwering, or even mentioning, had they not been ſo cloſely followed by ſome very learned Chriſtians, Proteſtants as well as Romaniſts. We ſhall only take notice of three of the moſt eminent among them, namely, Grotius, Peirerius, and Le Clerc, whoſe ſentiments, as well as what has been offered in their confutation, we ſhall now repreſent with as much brevity as the ſubject will allow.

As for Grotius, tho' he did not think it impoſſible, that God ſhould ſuſpend the courſe of the ſun, or make it appear upon our horizon after it is ſet, yet he is ſo far from granting this to be the real fact, that he thinks its not being mentioned, among other things of leſs moment, in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, is a ſtrong argument againſt it: and therefore what is ſaid in this chapter, That the Lord hearkened unto the voice of a man, ver. 14. he thinks, with Maimonides, means no more, than that God, at the requeſt of Joſhua, granted him as much time and diſpatch, as was neceſſary for acquiring a compleat victory, Comm. in Joſh. x. 14.

The misfortune, however, is, that the argument will hold equally againſt ſeveral other miraculous tranſactions, which are likewiſe omitted by the apoſtle, tho' expreſly recorded in Holy Writ, ſuch as the plagues of Egypt, together with all the wonders wrought by Moſes in the wilderneſs, the miraculous paſſage over Jordan, and many other events altogether as extraordinary. The author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews does not ſpeak a word of the conqueſt of Canaan, or mention Joſhua among his worthies, tho' his character be ſo vaſtly ſuperior to that of Gideon, Jephtha, and others, who are enumerated in that place. Beſide, it is plain, the deſign of that chapter was only to give ſome few remarkable inſtances of the wonderful power of faith; but to have collected all that is recorded with relation to that ſubject, would have enlarged it beyond the bulk of the whole epiſtle; and to have been too curious in the choice of them, eſpecially to thoſe of his nation, who knew theſe particulars as well as himſelf, would have been too affected, and have ſavoured too much of art and human wiſdom, which was always profeſſedly avoided by the inſpired writers. See Luke xxi. 15. 1 Cor. i. 17, 21, 27. 2 Cor. i. 12. to which many other paſſages of ſcripture might be added.

Under this head, we may rank another objection, namely, the ſilence of all the ancient hiſtorians, which, it is urged, could never have been ſo univerſal, had ſuch a memorable tranſaction ever happened.

But it ought to be remembred, that this event is vaſtly previous to any profane writer, either extant or quoted; ſo that it was eaſy for the remembrance, or even the monuments of it, if any ſuch there were, to be loſt among a prodigious multitude of others, during the long and dark interval, between it, and the moſt ancient authors among the Pagans. If light, however, may be allowed to be deduced out of darkneſs, whence could the poets derive the notion, of their demi-gods and heroes having the power of lengthening days and nights, as beſt ſerved either their warlike or amorous deſigns, but, moſt likely, from this wonderful event? How came Jupiter, for inſtance, to be ſuppoſed to have ſpun out the night he paſſed with Alcmena, to twice its natural duration? Or Minerva to have done the ſame in favour of Ulyſſes, while he was ſacrificing his rivals to his revenge, and making himſelf known to his wife? (Hom. Odyſſ. xxiii. ver. 242, 243.) and many others of the like nature. (vide Bacon. Syren. Huet. Demonſtr. Evangel. Calmet. Diſſert. & al.) But tho' we were incapable of producing any thing out of prophane hiſtory to confirm this fact, yet would this be no fair argument againſt the truth of it, or the veracity of the ſacred writer, abſtracting even from his divine authority, if we judge of him with the ſame candour we afford any other hiſtorian.

Peirerius, who affected an extraordinary skill in accounting for all ſcriptural miracles in a natural way, ſuppoſes, contrary to all reaſon, as well as the evident meaning of the ſacred text, that Joſhua only wiſhed for a longer day, about the time of the ſun's ſetting; upon which the land of Paleſtine, or perhaps the territories only about Gibeon, were enlightned by a kind of twilight, or a corruſcation which had ſome ſimilitude to our Aurora Borealis, and which continuing long enough to anſwer the purpoſe of Joſhua, was miſtaken by him for the ſun, tho' that luminary was actually ſet as uſual; and made him and his army fancy that day to have been longer than any other, by all that interval. But here the queſtion is not, how far theſe parelia, or mock ſuns, can ſupply the place of the real one, but whether the hiſtorian's account can be capable of ſuch a forced interpretation? The text declares expreſly, that the ſun ſtood ſtill in the mid-heaven, at the prayer of Joſhua; and that his more than uſual continuance above the horizon, or rather, in the ſame ſituation, made that a longer day, than was ever known before or ſince, ver. 13, 14. The words in the original ſignify, in the midſt of heaven, or in the mid-heaven, which is always underſtood, both by aſtronomers and the vulgar, to intimate the place where the ſun is at noon, and that it haſted not to go down, or, literally, to decline toward its ſetting during one whole day. What follows in ver. 14. that no day was ever like it, either before or ſince, is a plain confirmation of what we advance. However, as theſe authors ſeem to rely but little on the authority of the ſacred text, whatever they pretend to the contrary, it may not be amiſs to make ſome attempt to confute them in their own way, by ſhewing, that their ſuppoſition of the ſun's being near ſetting, when Joſhua ſuſpended its motion, makes againſt their favourite hypotheſis, and leaves Joſhua not time enough for all the work which he is recorded to have accompliſhed on that day.

It is expreſly declared, that the army marched all that night from Gilgal, and came early in the morning to Gibeon, where Joſhua engaged and defeated the enemy, put them to flight, and purſued them from the aſcent of Bethoron to Azekah and Makkedah; and that as they were marching down the deſcent of Bethoron, the ſtorm of hail fell upon them, after which Joſhua commanded the ſun to ſtand ſtill in Gibeon, and the moon in Ajalon. All this might be tranſacted eaſily enough, before the ſun had paſſed the meridian, and the ſituation of theſe two laſt places makes it evident, it muſt have been about that time of the day. From the Bethoron here mentioned, or lowet Bethoron, Joſhua purſued them to Azekah and Makkedah, which could not be leſs than twelve or fourteen miles, according to St. Jerom, who places the former at nine, and the latter at eight miles northward of Eleuteropolis. (Vide Epitaph. Paulæ, & loc. Hebr.) There Joſhua is informed, that the five kings had concealed themſelves in a cave, upon which he orders the mouth of it to be cloſed up with ſtones, and then continues his purſuit of the fugitive army, till part of the enemies is deſtroyed, and the reſt fled into fenced cities, and then returns to Makkedah. Here again he cauſes the mouth of the cave to be opened, and the five kings to be hanged till ſun-ſet, and then to be taken down, and buried in the ſame cave. Can an army which had marched all the night, and fought all the day, be ſuppoſed to have purſued their enemies ſo many miles, kill'd them all the way they went, then to march back to Makkedah, and execute and bury the five kings with ſuch ſolemnity, after ſun-ſet, and by the help of a refracted light? And if ſo, what ſun was that which they ſaw ſetting, when they took the kings down? How much leſs probable is it ſtill, that they ſhould have compleated all this before the ſetting of the real ſun? The reader may farther conceive, how much the ſituation of Gibeon and Ajalon is incompatible with the ſuppoſition we have been oppoſing, from the maps and geography with which we intend to illuſtrate this work, in due time.

Suppoſing then for once, the whole army of the Iſraelites to have been ſo little acquainted with theſe pretended lights already mentioned, as to have fancied the ſun was ſtill above the horizon, could they poſſibly have been ſo ſtupid, as not to know the uſual poſition of that great luminary at noon, from that of his ſetting? But ſhould we ſuppoſe even this, muſt they not have been undeceived, either by ſeeing it riſe the next morning at the uſual time, or by the concurring teſtimony of other people, who had ſeen it riſe and ſet as at other times? And if they were undeceived, is it probable that they would have tranſmitted an account of this event in ſuch terms, as muſt of neceſſity betray either their want of common ſenſe, or, which is worſe, of common honeſty? Laſtly, was it poſſible for Peirerius, or any of his admirers, if they really believed this book of Joſhua to be divinely inſpired, to ſuppoſe that the Holy Ghoſt would have ſuffered the Hebrew general, not only to have continued under ſuch a deluſion, but even to have tranſmitted it to poſterity with the divine ſtamp upon it?

The laſt perſon we propoſe to mention under this head, is the famous Monſieur Le Clerc, who has not only embraced the ſentiments of Peirerius and Grotius, but has endeavoured to corroborate them with new reaſons; the two firſt of which are taken from Joſhua's expreſſion, Sun, ſtand ſtill upon Gibeon, which can admit of none but a figurative ſenſe; and from the literal one, being contrary to the received ſolar ſyſtem. We have already ſhewn, that they prove nothing on either ſide of the queſtion; but he goes farther, and declares, that Providence is too ſparing of miracles, to beſtow ſo ſignal a one, as the overturning the whole order of nature, in favour of ſo inconſiderable a circumſtance, as the defeat of a Canaanitiſh army in one day, rather than in two. To this it is added, that Joſhua's prayer was too unreaſonable for God to grant, in the ſtrict ſenſe wherein it is commonly underſtood, ſince the next day might have ſufficed as well, without lengthening this at the expence of ſo great a miracle. The Jews indeed ſay, that the reaſon why this day was extended beyond its natural portion of time, was becauſe the next was the ſabbath; which would have favoured the Canaanites with an opportunity either of rallying or eſcaping. (Rabbin in Sedar Olam. Vide Munſt. in loc.) But, beſide that we have nothing but their mere word for this aſſertion, it is evident from their own confeſſion, that it was not always unlawful for them to do execution on the ſabbath, ſince Jericho was ſo lately taken on that day. Some Chriſtians however declare, that it was on a ſabbath that the ſun ſtood ſtill. (Serrar. Bonfrer. De Lyr. in loc.) The learned Uſher ſays nothing of the particular day, or even the month, in which this event happened, but only ſuppoſes it to have been toward the latter end of the year. (Annal. p. 26.)

But are not the above-mentioned ſuppoſitions of Le Clerc very preſumptuous, and may not ſuch a bold way of reaſoning, againſt the plaineſt facts recorded in ſcripture, prove the fatal ſource of endleſs errors and infidelity? And will it not be equally prevalent againſt all the other miracles, wrought from the time of Moſes to that of Chriſt himſelf? Why were ſo many performed in Egypt, when Pharaoh might have been ſoftened into complacency on much eaſier terms? Why muſt the Red-ſea, or the Jordan, be miraculouſly divided, when the former might have been coaſted, and the latter forded, at a much eaſier rate? In a word, why did the bleſſed Jeſus, and his faithful diſciples, work ſuch a variety of miracles, when one or two, of an extraordinary nature, well known and atteſted, were ſufficient to prove the Divine miſſion of thoſe who performed them? Well might Job ſay, Vain man would be wiſe, chap. xi. 12.

The ſame Le Clerc ſuppoſes the account of this great tranſaction, that we have been conſidering, to have been taken from the book of Jaſher, or the upright, which, like other poetical works, eſpecially thoſe that are written in the Oriental tongues, are too hyperbolical to admit of a literal conſtruction, and cannot be rightly underſtood, unleſs they be reduced to the utmoſt degree below that ſenſe. We ſhall not trouble ourſelves with examining, how unreaſonable the ſuppoſition of ſuch inconſiſtent and unnatural hyperboles is, and eſpecially of their being afterward cloſely followed by an inſpired hiſtorian, whoſe ſtyle is every-where elſe repreſented in the other extreme: It will be ſufficient to obſerve, that all this is affirmed gratuitouſly, and without any reaſonable foundation. For who told Grotius, or Le Clerc, that the book of Jaſher was a poetical performance, abounding with ſuch hyperbolical flights? Sure it is, that no mention is made of it any where but in this place, and in 2 Sam. i. 18. and theſe paſſages would rather incline one to believe it to have been a hiſtory of Hebrew worthies, written and continued by ſeveral hands, and at different periods. The Jews indeed underſtand by Jaſher, or righteous, Moſes himſelf, and ſuppoſe this book to be the Pentateuch, in which are contained ſeveral promiſes of the wonders God was to accompliſh in favour of his people. (Vide Munſt. in loc.) But as this perſuaſion reſults from a ſuperſtitious unwillingneſs in them, to own that any inſpired book could be loſt, they are not followed by any Chriſtians. However that be, M. Le Clerc has taken the pains to verſify the two places in queſtion, by the tranſpoſition of ſome words, in order to make it appear at leaſt probable, that the author of the book of Joſhua, in quoting them out of that of Jaſher, had only reduced them to hiſtorical proſe by the contrary tranſpoſition.

But here we beg leave to obſerve, that it is at leaſt a very bold aſſumption to ſay, that a writer, who barely appeals to another for the truth of any ſingle inſtance, has taken the whole from him. The moſt that can be fairly concluded from ſuch an appeal is, that the fact is equally affirmed by both, either in the ſame or equivalent terms; but ſuch as an honeſt hiſtorian would never have uſed, if he had entertained the leaſt ſuſpicion of their being ſo monſtrouſly exaggerated by poetic rhapſody; and that all which was meant by thoſe expreſſions, of the ſun and moon ſtanding ſtill in the mid-heaven, and of that day being thereby ſo miraculouſly lengthened, was no more than that there remained ſo much light after their ſetting, occaſioned by ſome unuſual refraction, as made the whole army think theſe luminaries to be ſtill above the horizon.

As to what Le Clerc adds, that it is more probable, that Joſhua ſhould pray for a longer day, when he perceived the ſun juſt going to leave him, than when it was in its meridian; tho' it carries a plauſible appearance of reaſon, yet can it by no means conclude againſt a poſitive text, corroborated with other circumſtances equally ſtrong on the other ſide. Joſhua might have his reaſons for what he did, tho' they are not recorded, nor we able to gueſs at them. He was an old experienced general, eager for a compleat victory, which alone could ſave his new allies from the impending ruin, and able no doubt to compute what time it would take to accompliſh it; ſo that his fear of loſing any part of it might make him pray, that the day might be thus prolonged, till he had gained an entire conqueſt. But after all, where is the unreaſonableneſs of ſuppoſing, that God, who deſigned to ſignalize the action of this day, by one of the greateſt miracles that ever was wrought, did himſelf inſpire the Hebrew general with that wiſh or prayer, which otherwiſe, perhaps, would never have come into his head?

But here it is further objected, that the occaſion was of too little importance to deſerve ſo ſignal a miracle, ſince it was only giving one inconſiderable nation an advantage over another, for which the next day might have been altogether as effectual: But, beſide that this ſeems to ſet limits to the divine wiſdom and power, Le Clerc ſeems not to have examined the caſe thoroughly; for which reaſon we beg leave to do it for him, and to ſet it in a fairer light, by reminding the reader, that this battle was not fought offenſively but defenſively on Iſrael's ſide, and in order to ſave a people, whom they had ſolemnly taken under their protection, from being utterly deſtroyed upon that very account. The Gibeonites, as a free people, had a right to take all proper meaſures for their ſafety, ſo that Joſhua could not but look upon the confederacy formed againſt them as cruel and unjuſt, and conſequently that it would have been baſe and diſhonourable in him to have refuſed them the deſired ſuccour. To this we may add, that the honour of God himſelf was concerned in the preſervation of his new-made proſelytes, whoſe alliance with the Iſraelites had been ratified in his name, by the mouth of his high-prieſt. Upon theſe conſiderations Joſhua loſes no time, but marches all that night to their aſſiſtance, and on the next day God is pleaſed to reward his faithfulneſs and zeal by a miraculous victory, which not only ſaves the oppreſſed by the total defeat of the oppreſſors, but makes at once the whole land of Canaan ſenſible, that a mightier God was on Iſrael's ſide, than any that was worſhipped there, ſince he had ſuſpended the courſe of the ſun and moon, the two grand deities of thoſe idolatrous nations. Had Iſrael's ſword alone gained the conqueſt, it would have been imputed to their valour and ſtrength; and had nothing more remarkable happened in it, than the ſhower of ſtones or large hail, it might have been thought owing to chance, or, at beſt, been only known in that neighbourhood; whereas the ſtopping of the two great luminaries in the heighth of their career, thus univerſally felt, could not but convince thoſe unhappy people, that the gods which they truſted to were ſubject to that of Iſrael, as well as prove a moſt powerful diſſuaſion to the latter, from falling into the idolatries of the former.

What ſhews this laſt to be more than a bare conjecture is, that noble zeal which the nine tribes and a half expreſſed ſome years after, againſt their brethren, on the other ſide Jordan, when they ſuſpected them to have ſet up an altar there, with an idolatrous intent.

Some other objections urged againſt our ſide of the queſtion, ſuch as the intolerable heat to which Joſhua's army muſt have been expoſed, had the ſun continued ſo long over their heads, the neceſſity there was of their ſtopping to refreſh themſelves with ſome ſuſtenance, and laſtly, that had Joſhua wrought a miracle, which ſo far exceeded thoſe of Moſes, he would have been greater than he; theſe, we ſay, would hardly be worth mentioning, were it not to ſhew, to what ſtrange ſhifts a favourite notion or ſyſtem will drive men of the greateſt learning. For, firſt, the exceſſive heat of a vertical ſun might be allayed by interpoſing clouds and refreſhing winds: none certainly ought to be more ready to grant this ſuppoſition, than they who think, not that this day was longer, but that more execution was done in it than uſual.

We may likewiſe add, that the effects of ſuch a violent heat, as is here ſuppoſed, might be nothing ſo dreadful or fatal as is pretended, eſpecially to a people inured to it from their infancy, as the Iſraelites had been, during the ſpace of forty years. Hiſtory furniſhes us with inſtances enough of marches and battles, in as hot regions and ſeaſons at leaſt, tho' thoſe exceſſive heats were nothing ſo natural to the armies that were expoſed to them. Even theſe more northern climates have ſometimes endured ſuch a degree of ſultry weather, during ſome weeks ſucceſſively, as came little ſhort of that of the torrid zone, without any of thoſe ill conſequences, which are urged by ſuch as deny the miracle we have been endeavouring to eſtabliſh.

As

As to the pretended neceſſity the Iſraelites were under of ſtopping to refreſh themſelves with food, we need not inform our readers, that nothing is more common in ſuch exigencies as theſe, than for the ſoldiers, who generally carry their proviſion about them, to refreſh themſelves with it as they march. The laſt thing objected, that ſuch a miracle would make Joſhua a greater man than Moſes, contrary to ſome expreſs texts in ſcripture, is too jejune to deſerve an anſwer. Moſes and Joſhua were both inſtruments in the hands of God, to whoſe glory alone the greatneſs of the miracle redounds, without adding any preference to the one over the other, ſince one miracle cannot be ſaid to be greater than another, with reſpect to an Almighty power.

It is plain then, if we admit the Divine authority of this book, we cannot but look upon this tranſaction as altogether ſupernatural, and of the number of thoſe many which God was pleaſed to work in favour of the Iſraelites.

Ver. 16. But theſe five kings fled, and hid themſelves in a cave at Makkedah.] The five kings ſeeing nothing but deſtruction and deſolation before their eyes, made the beſt of their way to a cave near the city of Makkedah, the only glimpſe of hope they had left. Happily, as they thought, they reached this aſylum, but were ſome how or other diſcovered to be there; and information thereof being carried to Joſhua, they ſoon ſaw the mouth of the cave cloſed up with great ſtones: And under this diſmal confinement did they remain till the action of this miraculous day was concluded, when being viſited and dragged out, they were thrown before the congregation of Iſrael, the chiefs of whom trod on necks: After which they were all put to death, and their dead bodies hung on a tree; till the ſetting of the ſun, when they were taken down and toſſed into the mouth of the cave, which was again filled up with great ſtones, as a monument of their fall and unhappy end. This was the fate of the five confederate kings, while ſome of their ſubjects were ſo fortunate as to retire into certain fenced cities, and to eſcape for the preſent.

Ver. 29. Then Joſhua paſſed from Makkedah.] This only ſignifies what was their next expedition, for it is likely they refreſhed themſelves a while, before they left this place.

——— And all Iſrael with him.] All whom he brought along with him, to the relief of Gibeon. See ver 7.

——— Unto Libnah.] A city which fell to the ſhare of the tribe of Judah, in the diviſion of the land, xv. 42. and was one of the cities conſigned to the prieſts, xxi. 13. 1 Chron. vi. 57.

——— And fought againſt Libnah.] Laid ſiege to it, and planted their batteries againſt it.

Ver. And the Lord delivered it alſo, and the king thereof, into the hand of Iſrael.] They made an eaſy conqueſt of it, becauſe God gave it up into their hand.

——— And he ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and all the ſouls that were therein, &c.] Theſe are the ſame words, whereby the deſtruction of Makkedah is deſcribed, ver. 28. For both theſe cities favoured the five kings before mentioned, and therefore (as Pellicanus thinks) were utterly deſtroyed, not only by the command of God, but by the right of war. But the command of God was the only ground, as it is expreſſed ver. 40.

Ver. 31. And Joſhua paſſed from Libnah, and all Iſrael with him, unto Lachiſh.] Another city which fell to the tribe of Judah, xv. 39. and was not far from Libnah.

——— And encamped againſt it, and fought againſt it.] This, it ſeems, was a ſtronger city than either of the former; for there is no mention of an encampment againſt them, before the Iſraelites began their aſſault.

Ver. 32. And the Lord delivered Lachiſh into the hand of Iſrael.] The ſacred hiſtorian doth not add, and the king thereof, as he did with reſpect to Makkedah and Libnah, ver. 28, 30. becauſe he was one of the five kings whom Joſhua had lately hanged, and they had not, it's likely, ſet a new one on his throne, ver. 23.

——— Which took it on the ſecond day.] After they began the ſiege; or, the ſecond day after the taking of Makkedah and Libnah: But the former is moſt probable, becauſe the encampment againſt it, implies that the Iſraelites ſpent ſome time before it, ——— And ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, &c.] Theſe words, and the following, are the very ſame with what is before related of the two forenamed cities; only it is not added, he let none remain; which is to be ſuppoſed.

Ver. 33. Then Horam king of Gezer came up to help Lachiſh.] This was a city afterward in the tribe of Ephraim, xvi. 10. belonging to the Levites, xxi. 21. and not far from Gibeon, as may be conjectured from 1 Chron. xiv. 16.

——— And Joſhua ſmote him and his people, until he had left him none remaining.] If he deſtroyed his city at this time, he returned to Lachiſh; and it is probable, he ſent forth a detachment to fight Horam and his army, which detachment, having routed them, deſtroyed alſo their city, and then continued the ſiege of Lachiſh.

Ver. 34. And from Lachiſh, Joſhua paſſed unto Eglon.] Which alſo belonged afterward to Judah, xv. 39. and ſeems to have been as conſiderable as Lachiſh; for it follows, that they encamped againſt it, and fought againſt it, as they had done againſt the other. Their king was one of the five, who was killed and hanged before, ver. 23.

Ver. 25. And they took it on that day.] The ſame day they ſet down before it, for none came to their relief, as Horam did to aſſiſt Lachiſh, which may be one reaſon that city was not taken till the ſecond day, ver. 32.

——— And ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, &c.] The ſame was ſaid of the forenamed cities; and theſe words, he utterly deſtroyed all, that were therein in the ſame day, have the ſame import with this expreſſion, he let none remain.

——— And Joſhua went up from Eglon, and all Iſrael with him, unto Hebron, and they fought againſt it.] Hebron was likewiſe a city of Judah, ch. xv. 54. and ſeated in the mountainous country, as the former were in the plain; which is the reaſon Joſhua is ſaid to go up to it from Eglon,

Ver. 37. And they took it, and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and the king thereof.] Their former king was one of the five whom Joſhua had lately killed and hanged, but it ſeems they had now ſet up a new ſovereign, their city being of great note, ſince it had other cities depending on it, as appears by the next words.

——— And all the cities thereof.] It was not only one of the royal cities, which had others ſubject to it (as Gibeon had, which was a kind of royalty) but its power was likewiſe very extenſive, for the words in this part of the verſe import, that there were many cities ſubordinate to its juriſdiction.

——— And all the ſouls that were therein, he left none remaining, &c.] Caleb was very inſtrumental in this conqueſt, and ſignalized himſelf in a peculiar manner, by driving out the three ſons of Anak, xv. 13, 14. who were ſlain there, Judges i. 10. Thus we muſt underſtand this hiſtory, or elſe ſay, as ſome do, either that Joſhua only took the city, and deſtroyed it, but could not make himſelf maſter of the citadel, on the ſummit of the mountain (which ſeems to be contrary to the real fact, for we read in the next chapter ver. 21, 22. that he cut off the Anakims from the mountains, &c. or that, after he had deſtroyed it, as is here related, the Anakims came from Gaza and other cities of the Philiſtines, whither they now fled, and peopled it anew; but were expelled again by Caleb, as ſome underſtand, xiv. 12. See Judges i. 19.

Ver. 38. And Joſhua returned, and all Iſrael with him, to Debir, and fought againſt it,] Joſhua had not been there before, but having advanced as far ſouth and weſt as he thought expedient, (even as far as Gaza, which was in the weſtern coaſt, ver. 41.) he turned his courſe toward the camp at Gilgal, which was now north eaſt from him, and in his march thither took Debir, which was alſo a city of Judah, xv. 49. and one of the cities of the prieſts, xxi. 15. 1 Chron. vi. 58. called alſo Kiriath-Sepher, and Kiriath-Sanna.

Ver. 39. And he took it, and the king thereof, and all the cities thereof, &c.] We may gather from hence, that it was a great city like Hebron, in the conqueſt of which Othniel, the brother of Caleb, was very inſtrumental; and therefore it was conſigned to him as a donation, chap. xv. 15, 16, 17. and Judges i. 11.

Ver. 40. So Joſhua ſmote all the country of the hills, and of the ſouth, and of the vales, and of the ſprings, and all their kings.] This hiſtory has not enumerated all the cities, ties that were taken by Joſhua, and only declares in ſhort, that he ſubdued the whole country that lay ſouth and weſt, (as it is explained in the next verſe) of whatſoever ſort it was, both the hilly and the low country.

——He left none remaining, but utterly deſtroyed all that breathed.] This account muſt be reſtrained to the inhabitants, for the Iſraelites preſerved their cattle, as a booty to which they deemed themſelves intituled.

——As the Lord God of Iſrael commanded.] This is added as a juſtification of the Iſraelites from all imputation of barbarity and injuſtice, ſince they only executed a divine ſentence againſt the people, for their abominable wickedneſs, Lev. xviii. 24, 25. wherewith the Iſraelites would have been in danger of being infected, if they had not extirpated the inhabitants of this country.

Ver. 41. And Joſhua ſmote them from Kadeſh-barnea.] Which was in the ſouth of Canaan, as appears from Numb. xxxiv. 4. and chap. xv. of this book, ver. 3. where it is mentioned as belonging to the tribe of Judah.

——Even unto Gaza.] A city of the Philiſtines, in the ſouth-weſt part of Canaan.

——And all the country of Goſhen.] There was a city in the tribe of Judah of this name, and which, like Hebron, was ſituated in the mountains, in the ſouthern part of the country, chap. xv. 51. from which city the adjacent region was called the country of Goſhen. This tract was enriched with excellent paſture lands, and plenteous ſtreams, like that country in Egypt of the ſame denomination, and thence was called Goſhen, as Pellicanus conjectures; becauſe the Hebrew word geſhem ſignifies copious ſhowers which impart fertility to the earth.

—Even unto Gibeon.] Which was in the more northerly part of the country. And therefore as the former account ſpecified the conqueſts of Joſhua from the ſouth to the weſt; ſo here his conqueſts from the ſouth to the north are related.

Ver. 42. All theſe kings, and their land, did Joſhua take at one time.] That is, in one expedition.

——Becauſe the Lord God of Iſrael fought for Iſrael.] Which render'd their conqueſt eaſy and expeditious. The Targum hath it, The Lord God of Iſrael, by his Word, fought for Iſrael, that is, by him who appeared to Joſhua as the captain of the Lord's hoſt.

Ver. 43. And Joſhua returned, and Iſrael with him, unto the camp to Gilgal.] The great Uſher thinks, that this war with the five kings, who came againſt Gibeon, &c. concluded this memorable year. In the former part of which Moſes conquered the kingdoms of Sihon and Og, on the other ſide of Jordan; and in the latter part of it, Joſhua ſubdued a conſiderable tract of the land of Canaan; and in the middle of it the manna ceaſed, and they ate of the fruit of the country. So that in the autumn of this year they began to ſow, and conſequently, from this time, they likewiſe began to number their ſabbatical years. But the learned Dr. Alix thought this was contrary to the opinion of the ancient Jews, who ſuppoſed, that the firſt year of the Semitah was the fourteenth after their entrance into Canaan. For the land muſt have been divided previous to its cultivation; and ſo the ſabbath of the land muſt have been ſeven years after the partition of it among the Iſraelites.

CHAP. XI.

1 Divers kings overcome at the waters of Merom. 10 Hazor is taken and burnt. 16 All the country taken by Joſhua. 21 The Anakims cut off.

AND it came to paſs when Jabin king of Hazor had heard thoſe things, that he ſent to Jobab king of Madon, and to the king of Shimrom, and to the king of Achſhaph,

2 And to the kings that were on the north of the mountains, and of the plains, ſouth of Cinneroth, and in the valley, and in the borders of Dor, on the weſt;

3 And to the Canaanite on the eaſt, and on the weſt, and to the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, and the Jebuſite in the mountains, and to the Hivite under Hermon, in the land of Mizpeh.

4 And they went out, they and all their hoſts with them, much people, even as the ſand that is upon the ſea-ſhore in multitude, with horſes and chariots very many.

5 And when all theſe kings were met together, they came and pitched together at the waters of Merom, to fight againſt Iſrael.

6 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Joſhua, Be not afraid becauſe of them: for to-morrow about this time will I deliver them up all ſlain before Iſrael: thou ſhalt hough their horſes, and burn their chariots with fire.

7 So Joſhua came, and all the people of war with him, againſt them by the waters of Merom ſuddenly, and they fell upon them.

8 And the LORD delivered them into the hand of Iſrael, who ſmote them, and chaſed them unto great Zidon, and unto Miſrephoth-maim, and unto the valley of Miſpeh eaſtward, and they ſmote them, until they left them none remaining.

9 And Joſhua did unto them as the LORD bade him: he houghed their horſes, and burnt their chariots with fire.

10 ¶ And Joſhua at that time turned back and took Hazor, and ſmote the king thereof with the ſword: for Hazor beforetime was the head of all thoſe kingdoms.

11 And they ſmote all the ſouls that were therein with the edge of the ſword, utterly deſtroying them: there was not any left to breathe; and he burnt Hazor with fire.

12 And all the cities of thoſe kings, and all the kings of them did Joſhua take, and ſmote them with the edge of the ſword, and he utterly deſtroyed them, as Moſes the ſervant of the LORD commanded.

13 But as for the cities that ſtood ſtill in their ſtrength, Iſrael burned none of them, ſave Hazor only; that did Joſhua burn.

14 And all the ſpoil of theſe cities, and the cattel, the children of Iſrael took for a prey unto themſelves: but every man they ſmote with the edge of the ſword, until they had deſtroyed them, neither left they any to breathe.

15 ¶ As the LORD commanded Moſes his ſervant, ſo did Moſes command Joſhua, and and ſo did Joſhua: he left nothing undone of all that the LORD commanded Moſes.

16 So Joſhua took all that land, the hills, and all the ſouth country, and all the land of Goſhen, and the valley, and the plain, and the mountain of Iſrael, and the valley of the ſame:

17 Even from the mount Halak, that goeth up to Seir, even unto Baal-gad in the valley of Lebanon, under mount Hermon: and all their kings he took, and ſmote them, and ſlew them.

18 Joſhua made war a long time with all thoſe kings.

19 There was not a city that made peace with the children of Iſrael, ſave the Hivites the inhabitants of Gibeon: all other they took in battle.

20 For it was of the LORD to harden their hearts, that they ſhould come againſt Iſrael in battle, that he might deſtroy them utterly, and that they might have no favour, but that he might deſtroy them, as the LORD commanded Moſes.

21 ¶ And at that time came Joſhua, and cut off the Anakims from the mountains, from Hebron, from Debir, from Anab, and from all the mountains of Judah, and from all the mountains of Iſrael: Joſhua deſtroyed them utterly with their cities.

22 There was none of the Anakims left in the land of the children of Iſrael: only in Gaza, in Gath, and in Aſhdod, there remained.

23 So Joſhua took the whole land, according to all that the LORD ſaid unto Moſes, and Joſhua gave it for an inheritance unto Iſrael, according to their diviſions by their tribes. And the land reſted from war.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs, that when Jabin king of Hazor, &c.] This city was the metropolis of the northern part of Canaan, ver. 10. and fell to the ſhare of the tribe of Naphtali, in the diviſion of the land, chap. xix. 36. Jabin was the name of the king of the Canaanites in this part of the country, in future times.

——Heard of theſe things.] Received intelligence of the ill ſucceſs which attended the five kings, who intended to carry their vengeance againſt Gibeon, and was likewiſe informed, that Makkedah, Libnah, Lachiſh, Eglon, Hebron, and Debir, had been ſubverted, and all their inhabitants put to the ſword; and again, that Horam king of Gezer, and his whole force, had periſhed in attempting to relieve Lachiſh: Such a crowd of calamities made him reſolve to raiſe all the tribes of the Canaanites, to withſtand the deſtruction which ſo imminently threatned them all.

——That he ſent to Jobab king of Madon.] This is the name of a place we read of no where but here, but was undoubtedly ſubject to Hazor, as the reſt were.

——And to the king of Shimron.] A place afterward in the tribe of Zebulon, near the country of Naphtali, chap. xix. 15.

——And to the king of Achſhaph.] In the tribe of Aſher, chap. xix. 25. Theſe two laſt places Arias Montanus thinks were more remote from Hazor than Madon; and lay toward the ſouth, near mount Tabor. The inhabitants of theſe territories were the only ſouthern people that remained after the five kings were deſtroyed. But toward the north, and the eaſt, and the weſt, many were ſtill left, whom Jabin now aſſembled together.

Ver. 2. And to the kings that were in the north of the mountains.] Or in the mountainous country near Libanus, for that was in the north part of Canaan.

——And in the plains ſouth of Cinneroth.] In the flat country which lay ſouth of the lake called in after-times Geneſaret.

——And in the valley.] Some think the ſacred hiſtorian means that pleaſant valley between mount Hermon and mount Gilboa, called the valley of Jezreel.

——And the borders of Dor.] A city with a country belonging to it, in the tribe of Manaſſeh, chap. xvii. 11.

——On the weſt.] Upon the midland ſea; where Joſephus mentions, in his ſecond book againſt Appion, a city called Dora, near mount Carmel.

Ver. 3. And to the Canaanite on the eaſt, and on the weſt.] Some of this people lived in the eaſt, near Jordan, and others of them in the weſt, near the Mediterranean ſea.

——And to the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite.] There were other Amorites ſcattered up and down the country, beſide thoſe who were ſubject to the five kings mentioned in the preceding chapter, ver 5. who were all now aſſembled by Jabin, together with the reſt of the Hittites and Perizzites, who were in ſeveral parts of the country, that they might form as powerful an army as could be raiſed.

——And the Jebuſite in the mountain.] About Jeruſalem, where they kept a ſtrong hold, till the time of David; as the Perizzites lived in other mountainous and woody countries.

——And to the Hivite under Hermon.] This was a mountain in the north-eaſt part of the country, where ſome Hivites were ſettled, as others were about Gibeon. That Hermon was eaſterly, appears from Pſalm lxxxix. 12. whence it is that the Hivites are called Kadmonites, that is, Eaſterlings, Gen. xv. 19.

——In the land of Mizpeh.] There were ſeveral cities of this name; one in the tribe of Judah, chap. xv. 38. another belonging to Benjamin, chap. xviii. 26. and two more beyond Jordan, in the land of Gilead; one in the tribe of Gad, the other in the tribe of Manaſſeh, or very near it; which gave name to the adjacent country, and ſeems to be here intended.

All theſe kings confederated together againſt Iſrael; their forces, as the ſacred hiſtorian obſerves, ver. 4. were as the ſand on the ſea-ſhore for multitude, and were very ſtrong in horſe and chariots; a formidable enemy for Joſhua and his people to deal with, ſince they were unprovided of both thoſe military advantages.

Ver. 5. And when all theſe kings were met together, they came and pitched together at the waters of Merom, &c.] Being thus united they encamped near the waters of Merom, ſince called the lake Samachonitis, from the abundance of fiſh with which it was ſtocked: for Samachon, or Semechon, in the Arabic language ſignifies a fiſh. The ſacred hiſtorian here calls this lake, the waters of Merom, that is, the upper waters: for the lake itſelf was near the fountain of Jordan, which river flowed thro' the lake of Tiberias, and diſcharged its ſtreams into the lake Aſphaltites, or the Dead-ſea. With reſpect to which waters, theſe were called the upper, they being lower. And here the confederated forces encamped, preferably to any other place, ſince they were under the juriſdiction of Jabin, who had aſſembled them together. For Hazor, where he reign'd, was ſituated on this lake, as Joſephus obſerves, Antiq. lib. 5. cap. 6.

Ver. 6. And the Lord ſaid unto Joſhua, Be not afraid of them.] Some collect from hence, even Joſephus himſelf, that Joſhua was greatly intimidated, when he heard that ſuch a numerous and martial army was advancing againſt him. But we cannot think it probable, that this great leader, after ſo many late aſſurances, and ſignal demonſtrations, as God had given him of his Divine Preſence with him in this war, ſhould be capable of this unmanly paſſion. Theſe words therefore were ſpoken to him, that he might animate the people, whoſe hearts were apt to fail them, when they beheld ſuch formidable enemies.

———For to-morrow about this time, I will deliver them up all ſlain before Iſrael.] The LXX tranſlate it τεθραυμένους, put to flight. Which agrees with what follows; for it is certain they were not all ſlain, ſince many of them fled, and the Iſraelites purſued them: And therefore other copies of the Septuagint have it τετρωμένους, wounded; that is, they were ſo broken and ſhatter'd, that they in effect were all dead men.

——— Thou ſhalt hough their horſes.] Cut their hamſtrings, and thereby render them incapable of future ſervice.

—— And burn their chariots with fire.] That they might no more be employed in war, no not by the Iſraelites themſelves.

Ver. 7. And Joſhua came, and all the people of war with him, againſt them, to the waters of Merom, ſuddenly, &c.] While the confederates continued in the ſtation they had choſen, and were conſulting with reſpect to the future operations of the war, Joſhua aſſaulted them by ſurpriſe, drove them out of their camp, and broke them into as many diſtinct bodies, perhaps, as they were tribes, many of which made a precipitate retreat toward their reſpective countries, but the main body of them ſeem to have fled toward the great Zidon, ver. 8. a large and famous city in thoſe days, built (as Joſephus conjectures) by the eldeſt ſon of Canaan, from whom it derived its name. See Gen x. 15. It was ſituated in the north-weſt part of Canaan, on the ſea-coaſt.

Joſhua not only chaſed the fugitives to great Zidon, but likewiſe to Mizrepoth-maim, which is thought by ſome to have been a place famous for hot waters, which we think it needleſs to examine, and ſhall therefore only offer a probable conjecture from chap. xiii. 6. that it was a place in the country of Zidon, where ſalt was made.

Theſe ſcattered forces were alſo purſued unto the valley of Mizpeh eaſtward. (See ver. 3.) This ſignifies, that in their confuſion, ſome of them fled weſtward to Zidon, and Mizrephoth-maim, and others eaſtward, toward Mizpeh.

Ver. 9. And Joſhua did unto them as the Lord bade him; he houghed their horſes, and burnt their chariots with fire.] We do not read, as Kimchi obſerves upon this place, of any horſes and chariots, which the five kings, mentioned in the foregoing chapter, brought into the field; becauſe they went only to beſiege Gibeon, and hoped to take it preſently by aſſault, in which there could be no uſe of horſes and chariots, which they did not want, no more than theſe kings, who abounded in them, and placed their principal confidence in their horſemen and chariots: Which was the reaſon God commanded Joſhua to hough their horſes; that is, to cut the nerves and ſinews in their hams, which Joſephus tranſlates ἀχρήστους ποιεῖν, to make them uſeleſs and unprofitable: For God would not have his people place their ſafety and ſecurity in theſe, but in him alone, as good people always did, Pſalm xx. 7. Accordingly, when David had conquered Hadadezar, and taken from him a great number of horſes and chariots, he diſabled all the horſes, after the example of Joſhua (as if God intended by him to teach all future rulers of his people what to do) reſerving only as many as would ſerve for an hundred chariots, 2 Sam. viii. 4. And Schickard obſerves out of the Jewiſh authors, that they were wont thus to enervate all the horſes they found in the king's ſtables after his death, that they might not be of uſe to his ſucceſſor.

Ver. 10 And Joſhua at that time turned back, and took Hazor.] Which was in the eaſtern part of the country, upon the lake before mentioned.

——— And ſmote the king thereof with the ſword.] This was one reaſon, it is likely, why he made haſte to inveſt Hazor, becauſe the king thereof, who was the chief author of this war, had eſcaped out of the battle, and thought to defend himſelf there.

——— For Hazor before-time was the head of all thoſe kingdoms.] Not of all the kingdoms of Canaan, but of all thoſe mentioned in the beginning of this chapter. Which was another reaſon why Joſhua fell upon it at this time, that by taking the moſt conſiderable city of this part of Canaan, all the reſt might be diſheartened to hold out againſt him.

Ver. 11. ——— And he burnt Hazor with fire.] Which the Canaanites afterward rebuilt, and poſſeſſed it for ſome time, another king of the ſame name reigning in it, Judges iv. 2. For the kings of this city were called Jabin in many ſucceſſions, as the Egyptian kings were called Pharaoh, and the kings of the Philiſtines, Abimelech, &c.

Ver. 12. And all the cities of thoſe kings, and all the kings of them, did Joſhua take.] Namely thoſe mentioned ver. 2, 3. whom Jabin drew into confederacy with him, and perhaps were his dependants.

Ver. 13. But as for the cities that ſtood ſtill in their ſtrength.] The Hebrew words al thillam (which we tranſlate in their ſtrength.) Literally ſignify on their heap, as is noted in the margin of our Bibles, that is, were ſeated in an eminent place, and therefore of greater ſtrength than thoſe that ſtood in the plain. Thus Bochart interprets it in his Canaan, Lib. 1. cap. 29. from whence he thinks came the name of Thelaſſar, 2 Kings xix. 12. and of Thelabib, Ezek. iii. 15. and thus we obſerve the prophet Jeremiah ſpeaks, xxx. 18. Jeruſalem ſhall be built on her own heap, or high hill. But the meaning may be, according to our tranſlation, the cities whoſe walls were not battered down in the taking of them.

——— Iſrael burned none of them.] Becauſe they intended to dwell in them, and would not be at the charge and pains of building new walls for their ſafety.

——— Save Hazor only, that did Joſhua burn.] Becauſe it was the capital city, and began this war againſt them; and being laid deſolate and depopulated by the Iſraelites, the Canaanites took their opportunity to rebuild it, and ſettle themſelves there again.

Ver. 14. And all the ſpoil of theſe cities, and the cattle, the children of Iſrael took for a prey unto themſelves.] As the Lord allowed them to do at Ai, viii. 2.

——But every man they ſmote with the edge of the ſword, until they had deſtroyed them, &c.] Becauſe God had often commanded theſe nations ſhould be extirpated for their abominable wickedneſs, leſt the Iſraelites ſhould be drawn in to imitate them in their odious impurities.

Ver. 15. As the Lord commanded Moſes his ſervant.] Exod. xxxiv. 11, 12, &c.

——— So did Moſes command Joſhua.] Numb. xxvi 19. Deut. xxxi. 7.

—— And ſo did Joſhua, he left nothing undone of all that the Lord commanded Moſes.] Which is a demonſtration that Moſes left in writing what we read the Lord commanded in the foregoing books, and that they were not written (as ſome pretend) in latter times: For it would have been impoſſible for Joſhua to have executed every thing which had been commanded by Moſes, unleſs he had had the book of the law before him for his direction. But ſo deſirous are ſome men to weaken the authority of theſe Sacred Books, that from hence they argue that this of Joſhua could not be written by himſelf, but by ſome other author; becauſe he gives himſelf this high commendation. So the author of Theolog. Polit. who by the ſame reaſon might have rejected St. Paul's Epiſtles as none of his, and Cæſar's Commentaries; for both of them relate the virtues of their reſpective authors, and the noble actions they performed.

Ver. 16. And Joſhua took all that land, the hills and all the ſouth country, and all the land of Goſhen, and the valley, and the plain.] This is a deſcription of his whole conqueſt, as appears from x. 40.

— And the mountain of Iſrael.] It is very uncertain what place this was, but many think it probable to be Beth-el, where God appeared to Jacob as he went to Padan-Aram, and promiſed to give him this land, Gen. xxviii. 12, 13. and where he dwelt, by God's direction, after he came to Padan-Aram, where God appeared to him again, and repeated the ſame promiſe, and changed his name from Jacob to Iſrael, Gen. xxxv. 1, 9, 10, &c.

——— And the valley of the ſame.] Belonging to the ſame mountain. But Pellicanus thinks the ſingular number is put for the plural; and thus explains the whole verſe. The land of Iſrael was partly in the hill-country, partly in the ſouth, toward Egypt, partly in the plain near the great ſea, and the ſea of Sodom, and the ſpring of Jordan, near Tabor in Galilee. And moreover, the mountains of Iſrael were the two Carmels, Hermon, Gilead, Libanus, thoſe about Jeruſalem, and many other.

Ver.

Ver. 17. Even from the mount Halak.] Or, the ſtony mountain, as Bochart interprets it, Canaan, lib. 1. cap. 5.

——That goeth up to Seir.] Which was the bounds of the country of Edom.

——Even unto Baal Gad, in the valley of Lebanon, under mount Hermon.] As the preceding words expreſs the bounds of Joſhua's conqueſt ſouthward; ſo hither they extended northward. And this ſeems to be a deſcription of the length of the country which he took from the king of Hazor, and all thoſe who joined with him, as archbiſhop Uſher underſtands it.

Ver. 18. Joſhua made war a long time with thoſe kings.] No loſſes, though ever ſo grievous, could, for a conſiderable time, break the hearts of the Canaanites; they ſtood their ground, and roſe up ſo thick and ſo faſt one after another, that they kept Joſhua employed ſix years, And, in the end, great numbers are ſuppoſed to have left their country, and travelling towards Afric, to have ſettled themſelves there at laſt, erecting a monument in memory of the calamities which had driven them from their native place. In their way thither, they are ſuppoſed to have ſeized on the lower Egypt, where they erected a monarchy, which ſubſiſted under ſeveral of their own kings; but being at laſt over-powered, were forced, ſome of them, farther weſtward into Afric: And thus are they made out to have been the Phœnician paſtors who lorded it ſo long, and ſo rigorouſly over Egypt.

Ver. 19. There was not a city that made peace with the children of Iſrael.] This is the reaſon why the war continued ſo long, becauſe there was but one city that ſurrendered on ſuch terms as had been offered them; but all the reſt obſtinately refuſed to ſubmit to Joſhua.

——— Save the Hivites, the inhabitants of Gibeon.] Who, if they had truly diſcovered who they were, (which out of fear they concealed) and ſollicited for peace, they might have obtained it on ſuch conditions as were propoſed to all.

Ver. 20. For it was of the Lord to harden their hearts, that they ſhould come againſt Iſrael in battle.] Being a people obſtinately wicked, God ordered things ſo in his providence, that they were emboldened, (notwithſtanding they had heard the wonders that were certainly wrought for Iſrael) to fight with them By which it appears, the Gibeonites were a better ſort of people, who conſidered what God had accompliſhed in favour of the Iſraelites.

——— That he might deſtroy them utterly, and that they might have no favour.] Which they might have obtained, if they had not been ſo raſh as to imagine they could withſtand thoſe, before whom the river Jordan fled, and the walls of Jericho fell down flat.

Ver. 21. And at that time.] That is, in the war before-mentioned, and perhaps in the concluſion of it; after Joſhua had left none to oppoſe him in other places, but only in thoſe mountainous countries, which were of difficult acceſs.

——Came Joſhua.] Either from the Camp at Gilgal, or from deſtroying the kings, and their countries, of which mention is made in this chapter.

———And cut off the Anakims.] Who were a diſtinct people (Arias Montanus thinks) from the Canaanites; of a fierce, cruel, and tyrannical diſpoſition, and who oppreſſed all their neighbours.

——— From the mountains.] Where they had ſettled, and ſtrongly fortified themſelves: Which cauſed Joſhua to let them alone till he had compleated his other conqueſts.

——— From Hebron.] Called alſo Kiriath-Arba, the city of Arba, who was a great man among the Anakims. See Bochart, in his Canaan, lib. 1. cap. 1. P. 363.

——From Debir.] Called alſo Kiriath-Sepher.

———From Anab.] This, as well as the two forenamed cities, fell to the tribe of Judah, chap. xv. 50.

——And from all the mountains of Judah.] All the mountainous country, that fell afterward by lot to that tribe.

——— And from all the mountains of Iſrael.] All the mountainous country, that was in the reſt of the tribe of Iſrael, where theſe people, it is likely, fled for ſafety.

Joſhua deſtroyed them utterly, with their cities.] Which it ſeems they had in thoſe mountainous countries of Iſrael; beſide Hebron, Debir, and Anab, in the tribe of Judah.

Ver. 22. There were none of the Anakims left in the land of the children of Iſrael.] Joſhua rooted them out of the whole country which the Iſraelites conquered.

———Only in Gaza, in Gath, and in Aſhdod, there remained.] Theſe were three cities of the Philiſtines, unto which either ſome of them eſcaped and there took ſhelter, or they had been there from ancient time, and the Iſraelites could not yet expel them. For they did not poſſeſs themſelves of the country of the Philiſtines till the time of David; when we find ſome of theſe giants ſtill there; particularly in Gath. But that there were any of them in Aſcalon, the famous Bochart ſhews to be an error, lib. 1. Canaan, cap. 1.

Ver. 23. So Joſhua took the whole land.] Which either the Canaanites, or the Anakims poſſeſſed; that is, ſubdued it ſo, that none roſe up againſt him, though many places were not yet in the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites. See chap. xiii. 1, 2, &c. For which were many reaſons; one of which was, becauſe the Iſraelites were not yet ſo many as to be able to people the whole country, and keep the beaſts of the field from multiplying upon them, Exodus xxiii. 29. And two more reaſons are added, Judges iii. 1, 4.

——— According to all that the Lord ſaid unto Moſes.] Deut. xxxi. 7, 8.

——— And Joſhua gave it for an inheritance unto Iſrael.] Deut. iii. 28.

——— According to their diviſions by their tribes.] Numb. xxvi. 53. Numb. xxxiii. 54.

——— And the land reſted from war.] None of the lords of the Philiſtines, or any other, preſumed to give any diſturbance to the Iſraelites in their poſſeſſions; but they enjoyed them quietly. And thereby had liberty to make a diviſion of the country; which God ordered them to go about, chap. xiii.

Now began the ſeventh year from the time the Iſraelites firſt ploughed and ſowed in the land; and therefore was the firſt ſabbatical year that they obſerved after Joſhua had brought them to their reſt in the land of Promiſe. An emblem (as our great Uſher obſerves) of that eternal Sabbatiſm, or Reſt, unto which the true Jeſus will bring his people, Heb. iv. 8, 9. And from this time they were to reckon, unto their Jubilee, mentioned, Levit. xxv 8, 13. But that was not from their entrance into Canaan, but from the ſeventh year after the diviſion of the land.

CHAP. XII.

1 The two kings whoſe countries Moſes took and diſpoſed of. 7 The one and thirty kings on the other ſide Jordan which Joſhua ſmote.

NOW theſe are the kings of the land which the children of Iſrael ſmote, and poſſeſſed their land on the other ſide Jordan toward the riſing of the ſun: from the river of Arnon, unto mount Hermon, and all the plain on the eaſt.

2 Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt in Heſhbon, and ruled from Aroer, which is upon the bank of the river Arnon, and from the middle of the river, and from half Gilead even unto the river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon:

3 And from the plain to the ſea of Cinneroth on the eaſt, and unto the ſea of the plain, even the ſalt-ſea on the eaſt, the way to Beth-jeſhimoth: and from the ſouth, under Aſhdoth-piſgah.

4 And the coaſt of Og king of Baſhan, which was of the remnant of the giants, that dwelt at Aſhtaroth, and at Edrei,

5 And

5 And reigned in mount Hermon, and in Salcah, and in all Bashan, unto the border of the Geshurites, and the Maachathites, and half Gilead, the border of Sihon king of Heshbon.

6 Them did Moses the servant of the LORD, and the children of Israel smite, and Moses the servant of the LORD gave it for a possession unto the Reubenites, and Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh.

7 ¶ And these are the kings of the country which Joshua and the children of Israel smote on this side Jordan on the west, from Baal-gad in the valley of Lebanon, even unto the mount Halak, that goeth up to Seir, which Joshua gave unto the tribes of Israel for a possession, according to their divisions:

8 In the mountains, and in the valleys, and in the plains, and in the springs, and in the wilderness, and in the south-country: the Hittites, the Amorites, and the Canaanites, the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites.

9 ¶ The king of Jericho, one: the king of Ai, which is beside Beth-el, one:

10 The king of Jerusalem, one: the king of Hebron, one:

11 The king of Jarmuth, one: the king of Lachish, one:

12 The king of Eglon, one: the king of Gezer, one:

13 The king of Debir, one: the king of Geder, one:

14 The king of Hormah, one: the king of Arad, one:

15 The king of Libnah, one: the king of Adullam, one:

16 The king of Makkedah, one: the king of Beth-el, one:

17 The king of Tappuah, one: the king of Hepher, one:

18 The king of Aphek, one: the king of Lasharon, one:

19 The king of Madon, one: the king of Hazor, one:

20 The king of Shimron-meron, one: the king of Achshaph, one:

21 The king of Tannach, one: the king of Megiddo, one:

22 The king of Kedesh, one: the king of Jokneam of Carmel, one:

23 The king of Dor, in the coast of Dor, one: the king of the nations of Gilgal, one:

24 The king of Tirzah, one: all the kings thirty and one.

Ver. 1. Now these are the kings of the land, which the children of Israel smote, and possessed their land.] Before the sacred historian gives an account of the division of the land, he thinks fit to lay before every one's eyes, as in a table, the land they had conquered; which was to be divided.

——— On the other side Jordan, toward the rising of the sun.] There they began their conquests, before they passed over Jordan.

——From the river Arnon unto mount Hermon.] So the bounds of this conquest are described by Moses, Deut. iii. 8. iv. 48.

———And all the plain on the east.] That is, on the east of Jordan, Deut. i. 1. called the Plain of Moab, Deut. xxxiv. 1.

Ver. 2. Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt in Heshbon.] He was the first king whose land they conquered and possessed. See Numb. xxi.

———And ruled from Aroer, which is upon the bank of the river Arnon.] See Numb. xxi. 24.

———And From the middle of the river.] In which stood the city called Aroer: For Ar never was in the hands of Sihon; but his kingdom was bounded by it, on that side. See Deut. ii. 36. iii. 16.

——And from half Gilead.] In the Hebrew, and half of Gilead; there being nothing to answer to the word from; which being left out, the sense is plain, that half of the country of Gilead belonged to Sihon, as the other half did to Og, ver. 5.

——— Even unto the river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon.] Thus his country is constantly described; particularly in Numb. xxi. 24. Deut. iii. 16.

Ver. 3. And from the plain, &c.] There is nothing answering to the word from in the Hebrew; which may most clearly be translated, and the plain: And so the LXX only retaining the word araba, which we translate, plain. This was another part of Sihon's country, a great plain, which lay eastward of the sea of Cinneroth, and the Salt-sea; by which it was bounded on the west.

——The way to Beth-jeshimoth.] Which, by the next words, is thought to have lain towards the south.

——— And from the south, under Ashdod-Pisgah.] The meaning seems to be, that on the south it was bounded by Ashdod-Pisgah.

Ver. 4. And the coast of Og king of Bashan.] The next conquest they made was of the kingdom of Og, who was of the remnant of the giants. See Deut. iii. 11.

——— That dwelt at Ashtaroth and at Edrei.] See Deut. i. 4. Some would infer from this place, and from chap. xiii. 12. that Og had two royal seats, one at Ashtaroth, another at Edrei; and that he lived sometimes in the one, and sometimes in the other.

Ver. 5. And reigned in mount Hermon.] At the foot of which some other people lived, who were conquer'd by Joshua, chap. xi. 17.

———And in Salcah.] This was one of Og's cities, in that part of his kingdom, which was next to Hermon, as some conjecture from chap. xiii. 2. But others think it was in the southern part of this country, possessed afterward by the Gadites; which they gather from 1 Chron. vi. 11, 12, 16.

——— And in all Bashan, unto the border, &c.] See an account of this, and of all that follows in this verse, Deut. iii. 13, 14.

Ver. 6. Them did Moses the servant of the Lord, and the children of Israel smite.] These two kings were conquer'd by Moses, before they came into Canaan, Numb. xxi.

———And Moses the servant of the Lord gave it for a possession unto the Reubenites, and Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh.] See Numb. xxxii. and Deut. iii. 12. xiii. 8. Moses is called the servant of the Lord twice in this verse, to make the Israelites sensible, that this war against the two kings before-named, was made by Divine authority, and that their land was afterward given to the Reubenites, &c. by the same authority.

Ver. 7. And these are the kings.] They that follow in the rest of the chapter.

——— Of the country, which Joshua and the children of Israel smote on this side Jordan.] In the late wars, before-mentioned in this book.

——On

—On the weſt.] Weſtward of Jordan.

——From Baal-gad, in the valley of Lebanon, even unto the mount Halak, that goeth up to Seir.] Theſe were the northern and ſouthern bounds of the country of theſe kings. See chap. xi. 17.

——Which Joſhua gave unto the tribes of Iſrael for a poſſeſſion, according to their diviſions.] Unto the reſt of the tribes, who had not their ſhare on the other ſide of Jordan, chap. xi. 33.

Ver. 8. In the mountains, and in the valleys, and in the plains.] This is a deſcription of the condition of the country; in which valleys and plains differ only in this, that the former were ſuch as lay between mountains, and the latter, the flat country, which was remote from the mountains.

—And in the ſprings.] Which commonly guſh out at the foot of mountains.

——And in the wilderneſs, and in the ſouth country.] Theſe are joined together, becauſe their wilderneſſes were ſoutherly, in the hotteſt and drieſt part of the land: But we are not to ſuppoſe, that the wilderneſſes were countries without people, but only ſuch as were thinly inhabited, in compariſon with other parts of the land. For we read of houſes and towns in the wilderneſs, 1 Kings xi. 34. ix. 18.

——The Hittites, the Amorites, and the Canaanites, &c.] This paſſage may relate either to the kings, or the countries, already mentioned.

Ver. 9. The king of Jericho, one.] He is firſt mentioned, becauſe firſt conquered.

—The king of Ai.] He was the next.

——Which is beſide Beth-el, one.] The people of which place came to aſſiſt the king of Ai, and were conquer'd at the ſame time, chap. viii. 17.

Ver. 10. The king of Jeruſalem, one.] Who was the next that oppoſed Joſhua, and therefore next mentioned, chap. x. 1.

——The king of Hebron, one.] He, and the three next, the kings of Jarmuth, Lachiſh, and Eglon, ver. 11, 12. joined with the king of Jeruſalem, and were vanquiſh'd at the ſame time.

Ver. 12. The king of Gezer, one.] He came out to help Lachiſh, and was ſmitten at the ſame time, chap. x. 33.

Ver. 13. The king of Debir, one.] Mentioned, chap. x. 38.

——The king of Geder, one.] We read not of him before, but find ſeveral towns in the tribe of Judah, of much the ſame name, viz. Gederah, Gederath, Gederothaim, and Geder, chap. xv. 36, 41, 56. 2 Chron. xxviii. 18. All which, as Bochart obſerves, have their name, a ſepimento, from the fence that was about them, Lib. 1. Canaan, c. 36.

Ver. 14. The king of Hormah, one; the king of Arad, one.] We have no mention of theſe kings before; but we know that Hormah was a city in the tribe of Judah, chap. xv. 30. Judges i. 17. 1 Sam xxx. 30. and afterward given to Simeon, Joſh. xix. 4. Arad alſo was a place in the tribe of Judah, as appears by the ſtory in Judges, chap. i. 16.

Ver. 15. The king of Libnah, one.] Mentioned before, chap. x. 29.

—The king of Adullam, one.] This was a city in the ſame tribe of Judah, chap. xv. 35. 1 Sam. xxii. 1.

Ver. 16. The king of Makkedah, one.] See chap. x. 26.

——The king of Beth-el, one.] We read not of any king here before; but it ſeems there was one, depending upon Ai, chap. viii. 17.

Ver. 17. The king of Tappuah, one.] There were two cities of this name, one in the tribe of Judah, chap. xv. 34. the other in the tribe of Ephraim, chap. xvii. 8. It is probable, the latter is here meant, becauſe the king of it is mentioned next to the king of Beth-el, which was in the confines of Benjamin and Ephraim. And immediately follows the king of Hepher; which was a place not far off, in the tribe of Zebulon.

——The king of Hepher, one.] We read of the land of Hepher, in 1 Kings iv. 10. which St. Jerom ſaith was in the tribe of Zebulon, near Sephorim, or Diocæſarea.

Ver. 18. The king of Aphek, one.] There were two Apheks in this country, which Joſhua conquer'd; one in the tribe of Judah, chap. xiii. 53. 1 Sam. ix. 1. xxix. 1. another in the tribe of Aſher, Joſh. xix. 53. which of them is here intended, cannot be certainly determined.

The king of Laſharon, one.] This place is never named any where elſe in ſcripture. But we take it for Saron, (as the vulgar Latin here doth, leaving out the firſt ſyllable) which was a city near Lydda, as we learn from Acts ix. 35. And the country about it was very pleaſant and fruitful, Iſaiah xxxiii. 9. xxxv. 2. There was another Saron alſo on the other ſide of Jordan in the eaſt, in the country of the Gadites, 1 Chron. v. 16. of which ſome think the prophet Iſaiah ſpeaks, lxv. 10.

Ver. 19. The king of Madon, one; the king of Hazor, one.] Both theſe are mentioned before, as conquer'd by Joſhua, xi. 1.

Ver. 20. The king of Shimron-meron, one; the king of Achſhaph, one.] Theſe two are mentioned in the ſame place, chap. xi. 1. And Shimron was in the tribe of Zebulon, and Achſhaph in the tribe of Aſher, chap. xix. 15, 25. The former hath the addition of Meron to it in this place, to diſtinguiſh it from ſome other Shimron, which ſome think was in the tribe of Ephraim, called Shomeron, or Samaria.

Ver. 21. The king of Taanach, one.] A city given to the tribe of Manaſſeh, chap. xvii. 11. and in the confines of Zebulon. It belonged to the Levites, chap. xxi. 25. But the old inhabitants were not expelled out of it, Judges i. 27.

——The king of Megiddo, one.] This city fell to the ſame tribe, as we read in the ſame place, and was near the river Kiſhon, as may be gathered from Judges v. 19. The Canaanites were not driven out of this city, Judges i. 27.

Ver. 22. The king of Kedeſh, one.] There were two cities called Kedeſh or Kadiſh, one in the tribe of Judah, chap. xv. 23. the other in the tribe of Naphtali, chap. xix. 37. The latter is here meant; for it was a fenced city, as we read there; but the other was of no note.

——The king of Jokneam of Carmel, one.] A city in the tribe of Zebulon, at the bottom of mount Carmel, near the river Belus, chap. xix. 11. and one of the cities of the Levites, chap. xxi. 34. It had its name from its delightful ſituation, as Bochart conjectures, Lib. 1. Canaan, cap. 28.

Ver. 23. The king of Dor, in the coaſt of Dor, one.] A city in the lot of the tribe of Manaſſeh, chap. xvii. 11. which had a large territory belonging to it, called after its name: For it was a royal city, and one of the moſt ancient in Phœnicia, as Bochart obſerves. So ſtrong alſo, that the Iſraelites could not get poſſeſſion of it (or could not keep out the ancient inhabitants) when it fell to the portion of Manaſſeh, Judges i. 27. Nor could Antiochus Sidetes, in future times, take it, though he laid ſiege to it with a very great army; Canaan, lib. 1. cap. 41.

——The king of the nations of Gilgal, one.] This Gilgal is not the place where Joſhua encamped when he came over Jordan; for there was no city there, nor any king of that country, but the king of Jericho. That place alſo had its name from the circumciſion of the Iſraelites there, ver. 9. We have no mention, indeed, of any other Gilgal in ſcripture; but St. Jerom ſays, in his time, there was a place called Gelgel, about ſix miles from Antipatris, which was near the ſea, not far from Joppa. Hither, it is likely, merchants from ſeveral countries reſorted; and thence was the chief ruler there called, the king of the nations of Gilgal. Some finding mention of Galilee of the nations, fancy that it is the place here meant. But that name, for ſome part of Galilee, was not known in the days of Joſhua, being occaſioned by Solomon's giving Hiram twenty towns in this country, 1 Kings ix. 11.

Ver. 24. The king of Tirzah, one.] It is not certain in what part of the country this city was; but, it is very probable, in the lot of the tribe of Ephraim. For Jeroboam, (who was of this tribe) and his ſucceſſors, made it the royal ſeat, till the building of Samaria, 1 Kings xiv. 17 xvi. 23, 24.

——All the kings, thirty and one.] Some cannot believe, that in ſo ſmall a country there were ſo many kings. But they ſhould conſider, that theſe kings were only petty princes, or lords of cities; which had a few villages depending on them, the inhabitants of which were their tenants. This appears by ver. 9. where we read of the king of Beth-el; which was so small a place, that he, and the king of Ai, joined together, and had but twelve thousand subjects, chap. viii. 25. For kingdoms were anciently very small in their beginning. To which we may add, that Cæsar, in the fifth book of his commentaries, mentions four kings in the county of Kent alone: How many then were there in all Britain? For, it appears by Tacitus, that the Silures, and the Brigantes, had their own kings also. And Cæsar informs us, that in France there were as many kings as princes! and so it was in Spain, as Livy writes. And Vopiscus, in the life of the emperor Probus, relates, that when he was in Germany, Reguli novem ex diversis gentibus, &c. "nine petty kings came "from divers nations, and threw themselves at his feet," as he himself wrote to the senate of Rome, in a letter which is there recorded. In which he calls them, novem reges, nine kings.

CHAP. XIII.

1 The bounds of the land not yet conquered. 8 The inheritance of the two tribes and half. 14, 33 The Lord and his sacrifices are the inheritance of Levi. 15 The bounds of the inheritance of Reuben. 22 Balaam slain. 24 The bounds of the inheritance of Gad, 29 And of the half tribe of Manasseh.

NOW Joshua was old and stricken in years; and the LORD said unto him, Thou art old and stricken in years, and there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed.

2 This is the land that yet remaineth: all the borders of the Philistines, and all Geshuri,

3 From Sihor, which is before Egypt, even unto the borders of Ekron northward, which is counted to the Canaanite: five lords of the Philistines; the Gazathites, and the Ashdothites, the Eshkalonites, the Gittites, and the Ekronites; also the Avites.

4 From the south, all the land of the Canaanites, and Mearah that is beside the Sidonians, unto Aphek, to the borders of the Amorites:

5 And the land of the Giblites, and all Lebanon toward the sun-rising, from Baal-gad under mount Hermon, unto the entring into Hamath.

6 All the inhabitants of the hill-country from Lebanon unto Misrephoth-maim, and all the Sidonians, them will I drive out from before the children of Israel: only divide thou it by lot unto the Israelites for an inheritance, as I have commanded thee.

7 Now therefore, divide this land for an inheritance unto the nine tribes, and the half tribe of Manasseh,

8 With whom the Reubenites, and the Gadites have received their inheritance, which Moses gave them, beyond Jordan eastward, even as Moses the servant of the LORD gave them:

9 From Aroer that is upon the bank of the river Arnon, and the city that is in the midst of the river, and all the plain of Medeba unto Dibon:

10 And all the cities of Sihon king of the Amorites, which reigned in Heshbon, unto the border of the children of Ammon:

11 And Gilead, and the border of the Geshurites, and Maachathites, and all mount Hermon, and all Bashan unto Salcah:

12 All the kingdom of Og in Bashan, which reigned in Ashtaroth and in Edrei, who remained of the remnant of the giants: for these did Moses smite and cast them out.

13 Nevertheless, the children of Israel expelled not the Geshurites nor the Maachathites: but the Geshurites and the Maachathites dwell among the Israelites unto this day.

14 Only unto the tribe of Levi he gave none inheritance; the sacrifices of the LORD God of Israel made by fire, are their inheritance, as he said unto them.

15 ¶ And Moses gave unto the tribe of the children of Reuben, inheritance according to their families:

16 And their coast was from Aroer that is on the bank of the river Arnon, and the city that is in the midst of the river, and all the plain by Medeba:

17 Heshbon and all her cities that are in the plain; Dibon, and Bamoth-baal, and Beth-baal-meon.

18 And Jahaza, and Kedemoth, and Mephaath,

19 And Kirjathaim, and Sibmath, and Zareth-shahar, in the mount of the valley,

20 And Beth-peor, and Ashdoth-pisgah, and Beth-jeshimoth,

21 And all the cities of the plain, and all the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, which reigned in Heshbon, whom Moses smote with the princes of Midian, Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, which were dukes of Sihon, dwelling in the country.

22 ¶ Balaam also the son of Beor the sooth-sayer did the children of Israel slay with the sword, among them that were slain by them.

23 And the border of the children of Reuben, was Jordan, and the border thereof. This was the inheritance of the children of Reuben, after their families, the cities, and the villages thereof.

24 And

24 And Moſes gave inheritance unto the tribe of Gad, even unto the children of Gad according to their families:

25 And their coaſt was Jazer, and all the cities of Gilead, and half the land of the children of Ammon, unto Aroer that is before Rabbah:

26 And from Heſhbon unto Ramath-mizpeh, and Betonim: and from Mahanaim unto the border of Debir:

27 And in the valley, Beth-aram, and Beth-nimrah, and Succoth, and Zaphon, the reſt of the kingdom of Sihon king of Heſhbon, Jordan and his border, even unto the edge of the ſea of Cinnereth, on the other ſide Jordan eaſt-ward.

28 This is the inheritance of the children of Gad, after their families, the cities, and their villages.

29 ¶ And Moſes gave inheritance unto the half tribe of Manaſſeh: and this was the poſſeſſion of the half tribe of the children of Manaſſeh, by their families.

30 And their coaſt was from Mahanaim, all Baſhan, all the kingdom of Og king of Baſhan, and all the towns of Jair which are in Baſhan, threeſcore cities:

31 And half Gilead, and Aſhtaroth, and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Baſhan, were pertaining unto the children of Machir the ſon of Manaſſeh, even to the one half of the children of Machir by their families.

32 Theſe are the countries which Moſes did diſtribute for inheritance in the plains of Moab, on the other ſide Jordan by Jericho eaſt-ward.

33 But unto the tribe of Levi Moſes gave not any inheritance: the LORD God of Iſrael was their inheritance, as he ſaid unto them.

Ver. 1. Now Joſhua was old and ſtricken in years.] To what age he was advanced, we cannot determine, becauſe we do not know how old he was when the Iſraelites came out of Egypt. Some think he was three and forty at that time, and then he was fourſcore and three when they came into Canaan: And now, it may be gathered from probable conjectures, that he wanted not much of an hundred.

——— And the Lord ſaid unto him, Thou art old and ſtricken in years, and there remaineth yet very much land to be poſſeſſed.] Which, in his declining age, he could not hope to live to conquer.

Ver. 2. This is the land that yet remaineth.] To be ſubdued hereafter.

———All the borders of the Philiſtines.] Who lay in the ſouth-weſt part of Canaan, near the ſea.

——— And all Geſhuri.] Which was a city, and a country, in the north-eaſt, not far from Hermon, belonging to the lot of the tribe of Manaſſeh. See Deut. iii. 14.

Ver. 3. From Sihor, which is before Egypt.] The ſacred hiſtorian deſcribes more largely the borders of the Philiſtines, whoſe country extended along the ſea-coaſt, ſouth and north; from Sihor, which was a little ſtream from one of the branches of the Nile; whereby Paleſtine was bounded on that ſide. See Gen. xv. 18. and Voſſius de Orig. & Progr. Idolol. lib. 2. cap. 74.

——— Even unto the borders of Ekron northward.] Ekron was a famous city among the Philiſtines, where Baal-zebub was worſhipped, called in the New Teſtament, the prince of the devils, (or dæmons) becauſe he was the principal God of the people of Paleſtine. This city was given to the tribe of Judah at firſt, chap. xv. 45. afterward to the tribe of Dan, chap. xix. though neither of them could obtain the poſſeſſion of it.

——Which is counted to the Canaanite.] For the Philiſtines were not the original inhabitants of this country, which belonged to the off-ſpring of Canaan, the youngeſt ſon of Ham; whereas the Philiſtines were deſcended from Mizraim, his ſecond ſon; who expelled the Avites out of this country, as we read, Deut. ii. 23.

——— Five lords of the Philiſtines.] The country inhabited by this people, was under the government of five lords, as they are conſtantly called in Scripture; in the Hebrew, Seraim, or Seranaim; which ſeems to be an ancient Phœnician word (the ſame with Sarim) for a ruler of a province, or city. The LXX call them Σατραπαι, and the Vulgar Latin, reguli, petty princes. But they are never called melakim, kings, in ſcripture, as the reſt of the princes of Canaan are. Which inclines us to think, that their government was not ſo abſolute, as that of the reſt of the kings of Canaan. Only we read in future times, that Achiſh was king of Gath; having, it ſeems, in the time of David, made himſelf more abſolute than the former lords of that place.

———The Gazathites, and the Aſhdothites, the Eſhkalonites, the Gittites, and the Ekronites.] Theſe people had their names from the five principal cities of this country, where they inhabited; which are commonly known.

———Alſo the Avites.] Theſe were a people mixed with them, being a remnant of the ancient inhabitants of this country. But there was no diſtinct lord of them, there being but five in all. Some have confounded them with the Hivites; but their name is quite different in the Hebrew, and ſo is their country. For the Hivites lived in Hermon in the north; and theſe here in the weſt. From whence, though they were driven by the Caphtorites, (Deut. ii. 23.) yet, ſome of them, it ſeems, remained; as ſeveral of the Canaanites did, when the Iſraelites diſpoſſeſſed them of their country. Bochart thinks they were not the off-ſpring of Canaan; but it is manifeſt they inhabited part of the country belonging to them: For Sidon was the firſt-born of Canaan, who was ſettled on that coaſt; and the border of the Canaanites is ſaid to be from thence unto Gaza, Gen. x. 19.

Ver. 4. From the ſouth.] Of the Philiſtines country.

——— All the land of the Canaanites.] All that tract of land which belonged to the people properly called Canaanites, who lived upon the ſea-coaſt.

——— And Mearah.] We find no mention of the place elſewhere: Some tranſlate it, a cave.

——— That is beſide the Sidonians.] Who were in the northern point of that ſea-coaſt.

———Unto Aphek.] There were two cities of this name; but it is moſt reaſonable here to underſtand that in the tribe of Aſher; and though Joſhua had its king ſlain, he had not taken his country.

——— To the borders of the Amorites.] Who were in theſe parts: For they being a mighty people, had diſperſed themſelves, not only in the eaſt, and in the ſouth, but in theſe northern regions.

Ver. 5. And the land of the Giblites.] A people inhabiting a city called Gebal, and the country about it, near Tyre and Sidon; as appears from Ezekiel xxvii. 9. and in 1 Kings v. 18. they are mentioned as ſtone-cutters ſent by Hiram, king of Tyre, to king Solomon.

———And all Lebanon toward the ſun-riſing.] They extended their conqueſts thus far, chap. xi. 17. but could not ſubdue the eaſtern part of this country.

———From Baal-Gad under mount Hermon, unto the entering into Hamath.] Concerning Baal-Gad, ſee chap. xi. 17. and concerning the entering into Hamath, Numbers xxxiv. 8.

Ver. 6. All the inhabitants of the hill-country.] In the northern parts of the land.

—From

—— From Lebanon.] This shews what hilly country is here meant.

——Unto Misrephath-maim.] A place before-mentioned, chap. xi. 8. Some render it hot waters, or baths. For sharaph, signifies to burn; and maim, is waters. And we may add, there are those who think they were lime-kilns, others, glass-furnaces; but, most likely, salt-pits.

——And all the Sidonians.] Who were near the inhabitants of Libanus, westward upon the sea.

— Them will I drive out from before the children of Israel.] If they persisted constant in God's worship and service; which they did not; and therefore we never read, that the Sidonians were conquered by the Israelites; and the people of Lebanon were only made tributaries in the days of David and Solomon.

—Only] Or rather therefore, as the work rak sometimes signifies.

—— Divide thou it by lot unto the Israelites for an inheritance.] Though the enemy be not yet driven out, yet, since I have promised to expel them, assign all the fore-mentioned countries to the children of Israel by lot, as the inheritance I have bestowed upon them: Which gave them a strong assurance they should have all this land; both because God had given it to them for an inheritance, and ordered it to be divided by lot.

—— As I have commanded thee.] Or, as I now command thee, and give thee authority to do.

Ver. 7. Now therefore, divide this land for an inheritance unto the nine tribes, and the half tribe of Manasseh.] Both that which was conquered, and that which remained unconquered, was to be divided, that every tribe might know what belonged to them, by God's gift; and be encouraged to attempt the conquest of it, when they were able; and be preserved from entering into any covenant or society with those, who kept their inheritance from them; and likewise hinder the unconquered people from joining their forces together to recover their country, the Israelites inhabiting the cities and fields that lay between them.

Ver. 8. With whom.] That is, with the other half of the tribe before-mentioned.

—— The Reubenites, and the Gadites have received their inheritance, which Moses gave them, beyond Jordan eastward.] Numb. xxxii. 33, &c.

——— Even as Moses the servant of the Lord gave them.] Which he did by the Divine command, and therefore they were not to be disturbed in their possession. Deut. iii. 18.

Here the words of God to Joshua, ver. 1. end; and in the next verse the writer of this book begins to describe the country which God ordered to be given to the forenamed two tribes and an half, that there might be no future dispute about this division; but it might be held as good, as that which was made by Lot among the rest of the tribes.

Ver. 9. From Aroer that is upon the bank of the river Arnon, and the city that is in the midst of the river.] See chap. xii. 2. and Deut. iii. 16.

—— And all the plain of Medeba unto Dibon.] These are two cities, which the Amorites took from the Moabites, (as we read, Numb. xxi. 30.) and the Israelites took from them when they conquered Sihon their king. The former of them was in the portion of the Reubenites; the other, of the Gadites: And when the ten tribes were carried captive, they returned into the possession of the Moabites again. For Isaiah speaks of them as belonging to Moab, chap. xv. 2. and so doth Jeremiah, chap. xlviii. 22. The plain of Medeba seems to be the same with the plain of Moab.

Ver. 10. And all the cities of Sihon king of the Amorites, which reigned in Heshbon, unto the border of the children of Ammon.] See Numb. xxi. 24, 25, &c.

Ver. 11. And Gilead, and the border of the Geshurites, and Maachathites.] Geshur and Maacha were two cities near mount Hermon, in the extreme bounds of this country northward; whose inhabitants the Israelites could not drive out, (ver. 13.) and yet their land was divided among them.

——— And all mount Hermon, and all Bashan, unto Salcah.] See all this verse explained, xii. 5. To which we shall only add, that Maacah was in the tribe of Manasseh, and is the city which Ptolemy calls Epicæros. Which name the Chaldee Paraphrast uses both here, and xii. 4, 5. and Deut. iii. 14. instead of Maacha; as Bochart observes, lib. 2. Phaleg. cap. 6.

Ver. 12. All the kingdom of Og in Bashan, which reigned in Ashtaroth and in Edrei, who remained of the remnant of the giants.] See xii. 4. and Deut. iii. 11.

——— For these did Moses smite, and cast them out.] These Raphaim (which we translate giants) were perfectly conquered, and rooted out by Moses. They were smitten in Abraham's time, by Chedorlaomer, Gen. xiv. 5. but recovered so much strength, that their country, when Moses conquered it, was called the land of giants, Deut. iii. 13.

Ver. 13. Nevertheless, the children of Israel expelled not the Geshurites, nor the Maachathites.] See ver. 2.

——— But the Geshurites and the Maachathites dwell among the Israelites until this day.] For Joshua growing old, ver. 1. made no further conquest, but left this people unsubdued, as Moses also had done.

Ver. 14. Only unto the tribe of Levi he gave none inheritance.] For the tythes of the whole country were instead of their portion in land, Deut. xviii. 2. And this is set down here by Joshua, as formerly by Moses, to shew that they had as an indisputable a right to the tythes, as their brethren had to the land.

——— The sacrifices of the Lord God of Israel, made by fire, are their inheritance.] That is, the inheritance of the priests; for the whole tribe of Levi had nothing to do with them. See Numb. xviii. where the portion of the priests and Levites is exactly set down. And see ver. 33. of this chapter, and xiv. 3. xviii. 7.

——— As he said unto them.] See Numb. xviii. 20; 21. where this is distinctly said, both with respect to the priests and to the Levites.

Ver. 15. And Moses gave unto the tribe of the children of Reuben, inheritance, according to their families.] Having said in general what Moses gave to the two tribes and an half, the sacred historian proceeds to set down in particular, what share each of them had in this country: That so, they might no more differ among themselves about their respective portions, than the nine tribes and half might controvert that affair with them all. And first, mention is made of what part of the land was given to Reuben, which was divided into as many portions as they had families.

Ver. 16. And their coast was from Aroer, that is, on the bank of the river Arnon.] See ver. 9. Aroer itself was in the tribe of Gad, Numb. xxxii. 34. unto which the portion of the Reubenites extended.

Ver. 17. Hetsbon, and all the cities that are in the plain.] Namely, the plain before-mentioned, ver. 9.

——— Dibon.] It is said plainly in Numb. xxxii. 34. that it belonged to the Gadites; for it was, as Masius well judges, in the confines of both tribes, and so was inhabited by both. Which is to be said also of Heshbon, here ascribed to the Reubenites, but in xxi. 39. is said to be a city of the Levites in the tribe of Gad. And so we read also in 1 Chron. vi. ult. And this is still more evident; for Heshbon, which in this verse is reckoned to the Reubenites, in the 26th verse of this very chapter is said to be given to the tribe of Gad, which is a demonstration they shared it between them.

—— And Bamoth-baal, and Beth-baal-meon.] We read of Bamoth not far from this country, Numb. xxi. 19. but no where else of Bamoth-baal, which, it is probable, was some high place where Baal was worshipped; for we read of high places in this country, Numb. xxi. 28. We find mention of Baal-meon in many places, particularly Numb. xxxii. 38. where it is said to be given to this tribe. And the addition of Beth to it signifies, there was some house, that is, temple, of Baal, in this place.

Ver. 18. And Jahaza.] Here they fought with Sihon. See Numb. xxi. 23.

—— And Kedemoth.] From whence Moses sent friendly messengers to Sihon, to desire a peaceable passage through his country, Deut. iii. 26.

——And Mephaath.] This, with the two foregoing, were Levitical cities in the tribe of Reuben, chap. xxi. 36, 37. 1 Chron. vi. 78, 79.

Ver. 19 And Kiriathaim and Sibmah.] These two are mentioned in Numb. xxxii. 37, 38. as given to the Reubenites.

— And

—And Zareth-ſhahar.] We do not read of this city any where elſe.

—In the mount of the valley.] In the mount which overlooked the great plain before-mentioned; which may be ſuppoſed to be one of the mountains of Abarim, where this city, and perhaps the two former, were ſeated.

Ver. 20. And Beth-peor.] It ſeems to have had its name from the impure idol, which was there worſhipped by the Moabites, Numb. xxv. 3, 5. See Deut. xxxiv. 6.

—And Aſhdod-piſgah, and Beth-jeſhimoth] See chap. xii. 3.

Ver. 21. And all the cities of the plain.] As well as thoſe mentioned in the mountain which overlooked it, ver. 19.

—And all the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites.] That is, all the forementioned places belonging to the kingdom of Sihon. But they had not all his kingdom aſſigned to them, for it was ſhared between them and the Gadites, as appears from ver. 27.

—Whom Moſes ſmote with the princes of Midian.] Not in the war with Sihon, mentioned Numb. xxi. but in another war after that, undertaken by a particular command of God, Numb. xxxi.

—Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba]. Who are mentioned as kill'd in that war, Numb. xxxi. 8.

—Which were dukes of Sihon.] This is the reaſon why they are here mentioned, becauſe, tho' they lived in Midian, yet they were tributaries to Sihon; and, it is likely, aſſiſted him in his war with Iſrael, in which tho' they then eſcaped, yet afterward they were ſlain by them.

—Dwelling in the country] It is uncertain, whether the ſacred hiſtorian means, that Sihon had given them ſome place in his country to inhabit, (that they might be ready on all occaſions to aſſiſt him with their forces) or, that they were placed in the country of Midian; whereas ſome of that people were unſettled, and moved from place to place, like the ancient Nomades. However it was, they were ſuch great men in Midian, that they are called kings, Numb. xxxi. 8. as here they are called princes; but much inferior to Sihon, whom they ſerved only as great commanders under him. So our tranſlators, we ſuppoſe, underſtood it, which made them render the Hebrew word neſiche by the Engliſh word dukes, which we elſewhere tranſlate nobles, Pſalm lxxxiii. 13.

Ver. 22. Balaam alſo the ſon of Beor the ſoothſayer.] He had been a prophet, but degenerated into a ſoothſayer or diviner, (ſee Numb. xxii. 5, 6, 7, 8.) and became a prophet again for the ſake of Iſrael.

— Did the children of Iſrael ſlay with a ſword, among them that were ſlain by them.] It is hard to give an account why Balaam is here mentioned, unleſs we ſuppoſe him to have adviſed Sihon, and thoſe dukes who joined him, to undertake the war; as it is certain he counſelled the Midianites to draw-in the Iſraelites to commit idolatry, Numb. xxv. 7.

Ver. 23. And the border of the children of Reuben was Jordan, and the border thereof.] This river was the boundary of their country weſtward.

Ver. 24. And Moſes gave inheritance unto the tribe of Gad, &c.] As he had done to the Reubenites, ver. 15.

Ver. 25. And their coaſt was Jazer.] See Numb. xxi. 32. and xxxii. 35.

—And all the cities of Gilead.] Which lay next to Jazer: For half of Gilead was conſigned to the children of Manaſſeh, ver. 31.

—And half of the land of the children of Ammon.] The children of Iſrael took nothing from them, but were expreſly forbidden to meddle with their country, Deut. ii. 19. The hiſtorian ſpeaks therefore of that part of their country, which Sihon had taken from them; (as he did part of the Moabites country, Numb. xxi. 26.) and the Iſraelites, having vanquiſhed Sihon, juſtly poſſeſſed from Arnon to Jabbok; as Jephthah repreſents to the Ammonites, when they demanded this land as belonging to them; after the Iſraelites had enjoyed it near three hundred years, Judges xi. 13, 22, &c.

— Unto Aroer.] This was the bounds of that country taken from the Ammonites by Sihon, from Aroer unto Jabbok; for Aroer was ſeated upon Arnon beforementioned.

—That is before Rabbah.] Over-againſt Rabbah, the chief city of the Ammonites country, and ſituated in the north part of it, as Aroer was in the ſouth.

Ver. 26. And from Heſhbon.] See ver. 17.

— Unto Ramath-Mizpeh.] The ſame with Ramath-Gilead, of which we read, chap. xx. 8. and in many other places. It ſeems to be the ſame place which is called Mizpeh of Gilead, where Jephthah the Gileadite lived, Judges xi. 29, 34.

—And Betonim.] We know no more of this place, than that it was, in all probability, a city in the north part of this tribe, as Ramath-Gilead was, and Heſhbon in the ſouth.

— And from Mahanaim.] This was a city built in that place where Jacob ſaw the camps of angels, Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. It was not far from the river Jabbok, as appears from that chapter, ver. 22. This city was very conſiderable in after-times; Iſhboſheth, who reigned over Iſrael after Saul, having his reſidence here; and David making ſome ſtay here where he fled from Abſalom, 2 Sam. ii. 8, 12. xvii. 27. It was one of the Levitical cities, xxi. 37.

— Unto the border of Debir.] There was another city of this name in the tribe of Judah, chap. xv. 15, 49. But this was (as St. Jerom and Euſebius tell us) a city of the Ammonites upon Jordan.

Ver. 27. And in the valley, Beth-aram, and Beth-nimrah.] The Sacred Hiſtorian, having mentioned the frontier places, proceeds now to particularize thoſe cities which were in the midſt of the country. And theſe two are mentioned, Numb. xxxii. 36. The latter of which, here called Beth-nimrah (Domus Pardorum, as Bochart interprets it) is ſimply called Nimrah in the third verſe of that chapter. And the waters of Nimrim (Iſa. xv. 6.) ſeem to have been in the ſame place; which, as Moſes and Joſhua declare, belonged to the Gadites; but Iſaiah and Jeremiah call it a city of the Moabites. Who in the days of thoſe prophets, after the ten tribes were carried into captivity, recovered thoſe places.

— And Succoth.] Which was the place where Jacob fixed, after he had paſſed over Jabbok, in his return from Padan-aram, Gen. xxxiii. 17.

— And Zaphon.] A place which, according to St. Jerom, was ſituated on the bank of Jordan.

— The reſt of the kingdom of Sihon king of Heſhbon.] Namely, all but that which was given to the Reubenites.

— Jordan and his border.] For inſtance, the country bordering upon Jordan.

— Even unto the edge of the ſea of Cinnereth, on the other ſide Jordan eaſtward.] To the extreme part of the lake, in after-times called Geneſareth; where the river Jordan iſſued out of it on the ſouth-eaſt.

Ver. 28. This is the inheritance of the children of Gad, after their families, the cities, and their villages.] Which are not all named, but they were in the region here deſcribed.

Ver. 29. And Moſes gave inheritance unto the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, &c.] The country which they conquered on the other ſide Jordan, being too large for the Reubenites and Gadites alone, Moſes beſtowed what follows upon the half-tribe of Manaſſeh; who did not deſire it, (as far as we can find.) See Numb. xxxii. 1, 2. but were thought fit to be joined with the other two tribes, becauſe they were very numerous, Numb. xxvi 34. and, it is likely, had great ſtore of cattle, as the other had.

Ver. 30. And their coaſt was from Mahanaim.] Mentioned before, ver. 26.

— All Baſhan, all the kingdom of Og, king of Baſhan.] This kingdom conſiſted of three parts, (Deut. iii. 13.) half of Gilead; together with Baſhan, and the region of Argob: All which are ſometimes comprehended under the name of Baſhan, becauſe it was the principal part of the kingdom of Og.

— And all the towns of Jair, which are in Baſhan.] This is an explication of what went before; for theſe towns were in the fore-named kingdom of Baſhan, and not diſtinct from it. Why they are called the towns of Jair, Moſes gives an account, Numb. xxxii. 4.

— Threeſcore cities.] Which were in the region of Argob, as we read, Deut. iii. 4, 14.

Ver. 31. And half Gilead.] The other half, that was not given to the Gadites, ver. 25. This alſo is but an explication of what was ſaid at the firſt; for Gilead was not diſtinct from the kingdom of Og, king of Baſhan, but a part of it.

——— And Aſhtaroth, and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Baſhan.] Royal cities, as is commonly thought, from chap. xii. 4.

———Were pertaining unto the children of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh.] All the poſterity of Manaſſeh came from Machir; for he had no other ſon beſide him, Numb. xxxii. 29. unto whoſe children, that is, to one half of them, (as it is explained in the following words) this part of that kingdom was given, Deut. iii. 15.

——— Even to one half of the children of Machir, by their families.] Among whom Jair and his poſterity had the honour to be reckoned, tho' he was of the tribe of Judah; but he proved ſo inſtrumental in conquering this country, that he had his inheritance given him here, 1 Chron. ii. 21, &c. Numb. xxxiv. 41, 42.

Ver. 33. Theſe are the countries which Moſes did diſtribute for inheritance in the plains of Moab, on the other ſide Jordan, by Jericho, eaſtward.] Which countries, with their bounds and limits, are thus particularly deſcribed, that every tribe might reſt ſatisfied with God's appointment, and not invade the territories of their brethren.

Ver. 33. But unto the tribe of Levi, Moſes gave not any inheritance: The Lord God of Iſrael was their inheritance, as he ſaid unto them.] This had been intimated before in this very chapter, ver. 14. and is repeated, chap. xiv, 3, 4. and xviii. 7. which frequent repetition was for the honour of this tribe; and that the people might have the greater regard to them, and care of them.

CHAP. XIV.

1 The nine tribes and a half are to have their inheritance by lot. 6 Caleb by privilege obtaineth Hebron.

AND theſe are the countries which the children of Iſrael inherited in the land of Canaan, which Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſun of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael diſtributed for inheritance unto them.

2 By lot was their inheritance, as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moſes, for the nine tribes, and for the half-tribe.

3 For Moſes had given the inheritance of two tribes, and an half-tribe, on the other ſide Jordan: but unto the Levites he gave none inheritance among them.

4 For the children of Joſeph were two tribes, Manaſſeh and Ephraim: therefore they gave no part unto the Levites in the land, ſave cities to dwell in, with their ſuburbs for their cattle, and for their ſubſtance.

5 As the LORD commanded Moſes, ſo the children of Iſrael did, and they divided the land.

6 ¶ Then the children of Judah came unto Joſhua in Gilgal: and Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite, ſaid unto him, Thou knoweſt the thing that the LORD ſaid unto Moſes the man of God, concerning me and thee, in Kadeſh-barnea.

7 Forty years old was I when Moſes the ſervant of the LORD ſent me from Kadeſh-barnea, to eſpy out the land; and I brought him word again, as it was in mine heart.

8 Nevertheleſs, my brethren that went up with me, made the heart of the people melt: but I wholly followed the LORD my God.

9 And Moſes ſware on that day, ſaying, Surely the land whereon thy feet have troden, ſhall be thine inheritance, and thy childrens for ever: becauſe thou haſt wholly followed the LORD my God.

10 And now behold, the LORD hath kept me alive, as he ſaid, theſe forty and five years, even ſince the LORD ſpake this word unto Moſes, while the children of Iſrael wandered in the wilderneſs: and now lo, I am this day fourſcore and five years old.

11 As yet I am as ſtrong this day, as I was in the day that Moſes ſent me: as my ſtrength was then, even ſo is my ſtrength now, for war, both to go out, and to come in.

12 Now therefore give me this mountain, whereof the LORD ſpake in that day (for thou heardſt in that day how the Anakims were there, and that the cities were great and fenced) if ſo be the LORD will be with me, then I ſhall be able to drive them out, as the LORD ſaid.

13 And Joſhua bleſſed him, and gave unto Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, Hebron for an inheritance.

14 Hebron therefore became the inheritance of Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite, unto this day: becauſe that he wholly followed the LORD God of Iſrael.

15 And the name of Hebron before was Kirjath-arba, which Arba was a great man among the Anakims. And the land had reſt from war.

Ver. 1. And theſe are the countries.] Namely, Thoſe mentioned in the fifteenth, ſixteenth, and the following chapters; for this chapter is but a kind of preface to the diviſion of the land.

——— Which the children of Iſrael inhabited in the land of Canaan.] Which was now conquered by Joſhua; as that of Sihon and Og had been by Moſes.

———Which Eleazar the Prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael diſtributed for inheritance unto them.] According to the command given by God to Moſes, Numb. xxxiv. 17, 18. where the names of the twelve heads of the tribes, or the princes (as they were called) are ſet down, ver. 19, 20, &c.

Ver.

Ver. 2. By lot was their inheritance.] To take away all occaſion of controverſy, the matter being determined by God.

—— As the Lord commanded by the hand of Moſes.] Numb. xxvi. 55, 56. xxxiii. 54.

— For the nine tribes, and for the half-tribe.] Who were to be provided for in the land of Canaan, as the other had been on the farther ſide of Jordan.

Ver. 3. For Moſes had given the inheritance of two tribes and an half-tribe, on the other ſide Jordan.] This ſeems expreſſive of a ſtrong faith, which the nine tribes and a half had in the promiſe of God; that they were contented to ſee their brethren in actual poſſeſſion of their inheritance; when they themſelves were only in hopes of their portion.

—— But unto the Levites, he gave no inheritance among them.] Neither on this ſide Jordan, nor on the other; as was ſaid before, xiii. 33. and mentioned here again for the reaſon following.

Ver. 4. For the children of Joſeph were two tribes, Manaſſeh and Ephraim.] The privilege of the firſt-born was transfered from Reuben to Joſeph (1 Chron. v. 1, 2.) from whoſe two ſons ſprung two tribes: So that there were ſtill twelve tribes, without reckoning Levi for one, Gen. xlviii. 5, 6.

—— Therefore they gave no part unto the Levites in the land.] Becauſe the children of Joſeph ſucceeded in their room, as the Vulgar Latin tranſlates the foregoing words; that is, to make up the number of twelve tribes.

—— Save cities to dwell in.] Not for a poſſeſſion, as Pellicanus obſerves, but only for an habitation: For they could not ſell them, as their brethren might their poſſeſſions.

—— With their ſuburbs, for their cattle, and for their ſubſtance.] See Numb. xxxv. 2, 3.

Ver. 5. As the Lord commanded Moſes, ſo the children of Iſrael did.] That is, aſſigned them cities and ſuburbs, chap. xxi. 1, 2, &c.

—— And they divided the land.] That is, when Eleazar, Joſhua, and the princes had divided it.

Ver. 6. Then the children of Judah.] Before they went to caſt lots for the diviſion of the land, ſome of the children of Judah interpoſed in the behalf of Caleb; coming along with him, we ſuppoſe, as witneſſes to the truth of what he alledged.

—— Came unto Joſhua in Gilgal.] Where the tabernacle as yet was; for Joſhua had not removed his camp from thence; and, accordingly, here the diviſion of the land began to be made; though it was finiſhed at Shiloh, as we read chap. xviii.

—— And Caleb, the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite, ſaid unto him.] This ſhews that he was the principal perſon concerned in this addreſs to Joſhua; though the reſt, perhaps, who came along with him, were not only witneſſes to the truth of his pretenſions, but came to deſire Joſhua to begin the diviſion of the land; the tribe of Judah, now the Reubenites were provided for, being the eldeſt of thoſe that wanted their portion. Among whom, Caleb was not only a conſiderable perſon, but one of thoſe princes who were appointed by God to aſſiſt in the diviſion of the land, Numb. xxxiv. 19. and therefore would not be a judge in his own caſe, but deſired to have it ſettled before by Joſhua, the ſupreme governor of God's people. Why he is called the Kenezite, is not eaſy to reſolve; nor is it certain, whether Caleb or Jephunneh be called the Kenezite. But it comes to the ſame, whether the one or the other be ſo called; and the Hebrew words will bear either conſtruction; yet St. Jerom, and the LXX, take it to belong to Caleb, ſome of whoſe anceſtors were called Kenez; which was certainly a name very common in their family; ſee chap. xv. 17. and Judges i. 13. And there is no improbability in it, that Kenez was the father of Jephunneh, from whence both he and his ſon were called Kenezites.

—— Thou knoweſt the thing that the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, the Man of God.] Caleb gives Moſes this title, that what had been order'd by that legiſlator might be thought of greater authority, namely, a Divine Command.

——Concerning me and thee, in Kadeſh-barnea.] Which he was confident Joſhua could not but remember, being concerned in it as well as himſelf. See Numb. xiv. 24, 30, 38.

Ver. 7. Forty years old was I when Moſes the ſervant of the Lord ſent me from Kadeſh-barnea, to eſpy out the land.] Caleb mentions this circumſtance, partly to ſhew that Moſes took care to ſend people of ſome experience, able to make obſervations, and judge aright; as well as in their full ſtrength of body, and in a capacity to travel and take pains. Such, it is probable, were all the reſt, as well as he; men grown up every way to maturity, both of judgment, and bodily vigour.

—— And I brought him word again, as it was in mine heart.] Deliver'd my true opinion freely and ſincerely, without either fear or flattery, Numb. xiii. 30.

Ver. 8. Nevertheleſs, my brethren that went up with me, made the heart of the people melt.] Numb. xiii. 31, 32. xiv. 1, &c. which did not diſcourage Caleb from ſpeaking the truth.

—— But I wholly followed the Lord my God.] This teſtimony God himſelf gave him, Numb. xiv. 24. which he might therefore mention without any breach of modeſty, it being the ground of his preſent petition.

Ver. 9. And Moſes ſware on that day, ſaying, Surely, the land whereon thy feet have trodden, ſhall be thine inheritance, and thy childrens for ever, becauſe thou haſt wholly followed the Lord my God.] See Deut. i. 34, 35, 36. This was firſt pronounced by God himſelf, and that with an oath, Numb. xiv. 21, 24. Some think his treading on it with his feet, was his taking poſſeſſion, and being admitted the owner of that land; according to the preſent notion of civil lawyers, who will have poſſeſſio to be as much as pedis poſitio. But this is only a modern conceit.

Ver. 10. And now, behold, the Lord hath kept me alive, as he ſaid, theſe forty and five years.] Thus far the Deity had fulfilled his promiſe, in preſerving Caleb alive till the country was conquer'd, wherein he promis'd him a certain portion; ſo that he wanted only actual poſſeſſion of it.

—— Even ſince the Lord ſpake this word unto Moſes while the children of Iſrael wandered in the wilderneſs.] Which was thirty and eight years.

——And now, lo, I am this day fourſcore and five years old.] It ſeems then that ſeven years were paſs'd ſince they came into Canaan, before they began to divide the land; which was not till a year after the war was ended. See chap. xi. 18. As for the time that follow'd, between the compleat diviſion of the land, and the death of Joſhua, it is not ſet down in this book; nor have we any paſſage in it from whence any probable conjecture can be formed about it, but only that in chap. xxiii. 1. where it is ſaid, A long time after God had given them reſt, Joſhua waxed old, &c. which ſhews it is not to be reſtrain'd to ſo ſhort a time as ſeven, or ten years, but may rather be thought twenty, as Du Pin computes it.

Ver. 11. As yet I am as ſtrong this day, as I was in the day that Moſes ſent me.] As able both in body and mind, to undertake, and diſpatch any buſineſs, as he was forty and five years ago; which was a wonderful bleſſing of God, and an argument that the petition of Caleb ſhould be granted; becauſe he wanted neither courage nor ſtrength to aſſault and take the place he deſired, if it were ſtill in the hands of the Canaanites, or to defend and preſerve it, if it were already conquered from them.

—— As my ſtrength was then, even ſo is my ſtrength now, for war, both to go out, and to come in.] This is a repetition of what he affirmed, as is uſual, when a thing is certain and undoubted. And it likewiſe ſhews the force and efficacy of the Divine Promiſe, confirmed by an oath; which (as Dr. Jackſon well obſerves) was as remarkable in preſerving the life and ſtrength of Caleb, as in bringing mortality on others, who he ſware ſhould not enter into Canaan.

Ver. 12. Now therefore give me this mountain, whereof the Lord ſpake in that day.] The mountainous country where Hebron lay, xi. 21. which was the place promiſed to him.

—— For thou heardeſt in that day.] The LXX and the vulgar Latin, refer this to what goes before, and make the ſenſe to be, as if he had ſaid, in thy hearing, God promiſed this country to me.

—— How the Anakims were there, and that the cities were great and fenced.] The vulgar repreſents the ſenſe thus, thus, where the Anakims are, &c. See Numb. xiii. 28, 32, 33. Caleb mentions cities in the plural number; for we read of two other, beſide Hebron, which they poſſeſſed, xi. 21.

——— If ſo be the Lord will be with me.] Theſe are not words of doubting; but a pious acknowledgment that nothing could be ſucceſsfully enterprized, without God's gracious aſſiſtance; of which Caleb was undoubtedly very confident. The Targum hath it, If ſo, the word of the Lord will be my helper: which is the conſtant language of that Paraphraſt in all this book, upon ſuch occaſions. See i. 9, 17, vi. 27. x. 42. and xxiii. 3, 10.

——— Then I ſhall be able to drive them out as the Lord ſaid.] Whether this expulſion was accompliſhed now, or before, when Joſhua conquered great part of the country, is a diſpute. See x. 37.

Ver. 13. And Joſhua bleſſed him.] Acknowledged his deſerts, and beſeeched God to proſper him in his undertaking, and gave his conſent that he ſhould have this country: For then God is ſaid to bleſs a man, when he beſtows his benefits upon him; and we do not bleſs others to purpoſe, unleſs we perform what they reaſonably deſire.

——— And gave unto Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, Hebron for an inheritance.] That is, the country about it: For Hebron itſelf was a city of the prieſts, xxi. 11, 13. where it is expreſly ſaid ver. 12, the fields and the villages of it were given to Caleb.

Ver. 14. Hebron therefore became the inheritance of Caleb, the ſon of Jephunneh the Kenezite unto this day, becauſe that he wholly followed the Lord God of Iſrael.] God rewarded his fidelity by this ſingular gift, which he beſtowed upon him before the land was divided by Lot.

Ver. 15. And the name of Hebron before was Kirjath-Arba.] See upon Gen. xxiii. 2.

——— Which Arba was a great man among the Anakims.] Of great authority, as well as ſtrength. So the word Gadol is uſed Gen. xxiv. 35. and ſo we call men at this day, who are of great power, by the name of Magnates. He was the father of Anak, xv. 13. and xxi. 11. who either built this city, or fortified it, or made it his royal ſeat (being a kind of prince among them) and perhaps was here buried, which made it be called his city. See Numb. xiii. 33.

——— And the land had reſt from war.] Which afforded an opportunity for dividing the land. This was ſaid before, xi. ult. and now repeated, perhaps to ſhew that what is here reported concerning Caleb, was done ſome time ago, at the end of the war, and now mentioned to manifeſt, that he held this portion of land by a Divine Donation, before the country was divided by Lot.

CHAP. XV.

1 The borders of the lot of Judah. 13 Calebs portion and conqueſt. 16 Othniel for his valour, hath Achſah, Calebs daughter to wife. 18 She obtaineth a bleſſing of her father. 21 The cities of Judah. 63 The Jebuſites not conquered.

THIS then was the lot of the tribe of the children of Judah by their families, even to the border of Edom; the wilderneſs of Zin ſouth-ward, was the uttermoſt part of the ſouth-coaſt.

2 And their ſouth-border was from the ſhore of the ſalt-ſea, from the bay that looketh ſouth-ward.

3 And it went out to the ſouth-ſide to Maaleh-acrabbim, and paſſed along to Zin, and aſcended up on the ſouth-ſide unto Kadeſh-barnea: and paſſed along to Hezron, and went up to Adar, and fetched a compaſs to Karkaa.

4 From thence it paſſed toward Azmon, and went out unto the river of Egypt, and the goings out of that coaſt were at the ſea: this ſhall be your ſouth-coaſt.

5 And the eaſt-border was the ſalt-ſea, even unto the end of Jordan: and their border in the north-quarter, was from the bay of the ſea, at the uttermoſt part of Jordan.

6 And the border went up to Beth-hogla, and paſſed along by the north of Beth-arabah, and the border went up to the ſtone of Bohan the ſon of Reuben.

7 And the border went up toward Debir from the valley of Achor, and ſo northward looking toward Gilgal, that is before the going up to Adummim, which is on the ſouth-ſide of the river: and the border paſſed towards the waters of Enſhemeſh, and the goings out thereof were at En-rogel.

8 And the border went up by the valley of the ſon of Hinnom, unto the ſouth-ſide of the Jebuſite, the ſame is Jeruſalem: and the border went up to the top of the mountain, that lieth before the valley of Hinnom weſt-ward, which is at the end of the valley of the giants north-ward.

9 And the border was drawn from the top of the hill unto the fountain of the water of Nephtoah, and went out to the cities of mount Ephron, and the border was drawn to Baalah, which is Kirjath-jearim.

10 And the border compaſſed from Baalah weſt-ward unto mount Seir, and paſſed along unto the ſide of mount Jearim (which is Cheſalon) on the north-ſide, and went down to Beth-ſhemeſh, and paſſed on to Timnah.

11 And the border went out unto the ſide of Ekron north-ward: and the border was drawn to Shicron, and paſſed along to mount Baalah, and went out unto Jabneel; and the goings out of the border were at the ſea.

12 And the weſt-border was to the great ſea, and the coaſt thereof: this is the coaſt of the children of Judah round about, according to their families.

13 ¶ And unto Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, he gave a part among the children of Judah, according to the commandment of the LORD to Joſhua, even the city of Arba the father of Anak, which city is Hebron.

14 And Caleb drove thence the three ſons of Anak, Sheſhai, and Ahiman, and Talmai, the children of Anak.

15 And

15 And he went up thence to the inhabitants of Debir: and the name of Debir before was Kirjath-ſepher.

16 ¶ And Caleb ſaid, He that ſmiteth Kirjath-ſepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achſah my daughter to wife.

17 And Othniel the ſon of Kenaz, the brother of Caleb, took it: and he gave him Achſah his daughter to wife.

18 And it came to paſs, as ſhe came unto him, that ſhe moved him to ask of her father a field: and ſhe lighted off her aſs; and Caleb ſaid unto her, What wouldſt thou?

19 Who anſwered, Give me a bleſſing; for thou haſt given me a ſouth-land, give me alſo ſprings of water: and he gave her the upper ſprings, and the nether ſprings.

20 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Judah according to their families.

21 And the uttermoſt cities of the tribe of the children of Judah toward the coaſt of Edom ſouth-ward, were Kabzeel, and Eder, and Jagur,

22 And Kinah, and Dimonah and Adadah,

23 And Kedeſh, and Hazor, and Ithnan,

24 Ziph, and Telem, and Bealoth,

25 And Hazor, Hadattah, and Kerioth, and Hezron, which is Hazor,

26 Aman, and Shema, and Moladah,

27 And Hazar-gaddah, and Heſhmon, and Beth-palet,

28 And Hazar-ſhual, and Beer-ſheba, and Bizjothjah,

29 Baalah, and Iim, and Azem,

30 And Eltolad, and Cheſil, and Hormah,

31 And Ziklag, and Madmannah, and Sanſannah,

32 And Lebaoth, and Shilhim, and Ain, and Rimmon: all the cities are twenty and nine with their villages.

33 And in the valley, Eſhtaol, and Zoreah, and Aſhnah,

34 And Zanoah, and En-gannim, Tappuah, and Enam,

35 Jarmuth, and Adullam, Socoh, and Azekah,

36 And Sharaim, and Adithaim, and Gederah, and Gederothaim: fourteen cities with their villages.

37 Zenan, and Hadaſhah, and Migdal-gad,

38 And Dilean, and Mizpeh, and Joktheel,

39 Lachiſh, and Bozkath, and Eglon,

40 And Cabbon, and Lahmas, and Kithliſh,

41 And Gederoth, Beth-dagon, and Naamah, and Makkedah: ſixteen cities with their villages.

42 Libnah, and Ether, and Aſhan,

43 And Jiphtah, and Aſhnah, and Nezib,

44 And Keilah, and Achzib, and Mareſhah: nine cities with their villages.

45 Ekron with her towns and her villages.

46 From Ekron even unto the ſea, all that lay near Aſhdod, with their villages.

47 Aſhdod with her towns and her villages, Gaza with her towns and her villages, unto the river of Egypt, and the great ſea, and the border thereof.

48 ¶ And in the mountains, Shamir, and Jattir, and Socoh,

49 And Dannah, and Kirjath-ſannah, which is Debir,

50 And Anab, and Eſhtemoh, and Anim,

51 And Goſhen, and Holon, and Giloh: eleven cities with their villages.

52 Arab, and Dumah, and Eſhean,

53 And Janum, and Beth-tappuah, and Aphekah,

54 And Humtah, and Kirjath-arba, (which is Hebron) and Zior: nine cities with their villages.

55 Maon, Carmel, and Ziph, and Juttah,

56 And Jezreel, and Jokdeam, and Zanoah,

57 Cain, Gibeah, and Timnah: ten cities with their villages.

58 Halhul, Beth-zur, and Gedor,

59 And Maarath, and Beth-anoth, and Eltekon: ſix cities with their villages.

60 Kirjath-baal, (which is Kirjath-jearim) and Rabbah: two cities with their villages.

61 ¶ In the wilderneſs, Beth-arabah, Middin, and Secacah,

62 And Nibſhan, and the city of Salt, and En-gedi: ſix cities with their villages.

63 As for the Jebuſites, the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the children of Judah could not drive them out: but the Jebuſites dwell with the children of Judah at Jeruſalem unto this day.

Ver. 1. This then was the lot of the tribe of the children of Judah.] The firſt lot that came up was for the tribe of Judah; in honour of it, and that the prophecy of Jacob might be fulfilled concerning his pre-eminence among his brethren. Theſe lots could not be drawn without a precedent ſurvey of the whole country. A deſcription of which being laid before Joſhua, he, together with Eleazer, and the princes, divided it into nine ſhares and a half, as equally as they could, conſidering not merely the quantity of ground, but likewiſe the quality and goodneſs of the ſoil.

——— By their families.] The lot was only of ſo much land for the whole tribe; unto every family of which a portion was aſſigned by Joſhua, and the reſt, who were appointed to ſee that none were neglected, and that they had every one a juſt proportion. Therefore the lot for each tribe was not ſo unalterably fixed and determined, but that it might be enlarged or diminiſhed, by taking from that tribe which had too much, and giving it to that which had too little. See chap. xix. 9.

———Even to the border of Edom, the wilderneſs of Zin, ſouthward, was the uttermoſt part of the ſouth-coaſt.] See Numb xxxiv. 2. Edom lay upon the wilderneſs of Zin; and the lot of Judah extended as far as that; which was the ſouth part of the land. And indeed the tribe of Judah (as Pellicanus obſerves) had half of the ſouth part of the whole land of Canaan for their portion; as the tribes of Joſeph, (Ephraim, and Manaſſeh,) had the north part; with whom the reſt of the tribes were intermix'd, namely, Simeon, Benjamin, and Dan, with the tribe of Judah; and Iſſachar, Zebulon, Aſher, and Naphtali, with the portion of Joſeph.

Ver. 2. And their ſouth-border was from the ſhore of the Salt ſea.] The foregoing verſe was a ſhort deſcription of the length of Judah's country: Now the ſacred hiſtorian deſcribes the bounds of it on all quarters: And here declares, that the Salt, or Dead-ſea, was the bounds of it on the ſouth-eaſt.

——— From the bay that looketh ſouthward.] In the Hebrew, it is from the tongue; which ſignifies either a creek, or a promontory, as ſome underſtand it, pointing to the ſouth-eaſt. See Numb. xxxiv. 3.

Ver. 3. And it went out to the ſouth-ſide to Maaleh-acrabbim.] There was a mountain ſo call'd, from the multitude of ſcorpions that were there. It roſe at the end of this lake, Numb. xxxiv. 4. from whence the country of Acrabatene had its name, as Bochart thinks (ſee Hierozoicon, p. 2. lib. 5. cap. 29.) and it lay near the country of Edom, 1 Maccab. v. 3.

——— And paſſed along to Zin, and aſcended up on the ſouth-ſide unto Kadeſh-barnea.] This is the very deſcription of the ſouthern bounds of the promiſed land, Numb. xxxiv. 4.

——— And paſſed along to Hezron.] There is nothing ſaid of this place in the book of Numbers; but it appears to have been a city, from the 25th verſe of this chapter.

——— And went up to Adar.] This place is mention'd in Numb. xxxiv. 4. and call'd Hazaradar. So that Hezron lay between Kadeſh-barnea and this town.

—— And fetched a compaſs to Karkaa.] This place is not mention'd in Numbers, or any where elſe; but lay beyond Adar, not in a right line, but bending toward the weſt.

Ver. 4. From thence it paſſed toward Azmon.] This is mention'd in the forenamed place, Numb. xxxiv. 4.

—And went out unto the river of Egypt; and the goings-out of that coaſt were at the ſea.] That is, the Mediterranean ſea, Numb. xxxiv. 5.

—This ſhall be your ſouth coaſt.] From the tongue of the Salt-ſea to the Mediterranean.

Ver. 5. And the eaſt border was the Salt-ſea, even unto the end of Jordan.] Having deſcribed the ſouthern limits, the ſacred penman ſets down the eaſtern; which beginning where the ſouthern did, at the tongue of the Salt-ſea, reached to the other end of it, where Jordan falls into this ſea. So that the whole length of this ſea, from one end of it to the other, was the eaſtern boundary of Judah's country.

—And their border in the north quarter, was from the bay of the ſea, at the uppermoſt part of Jordan.] It had its beginning where the eaſtern border ended, namely, at the mouth of Jordan, where it flows into the Salt-ſea.

Ver. 6. And the border went up to Beth-hogla.] A city in the tribe of Benjamin, chap. xviii. 21.

—And paſſed along by the north of Beth-arabah.] Another city in the ſame tribe, chap. xviii. 21. tho' there was one in this tribe of the ſame name, (ver. 61. of this chapter) which ſome take to be the ſame city, which lay in the frontier of both tribes.

—And the border.] That is, this northern border.

——— Went up to the ſtone of Bohan, the ſon of Reuben.] We find mention made of this ſtone again, chap. xviii. 17. where the author of this book ſpeaks of the bounds of the tribe of Benjamin. It was but lately laid here, ſince the Iſraelites came into this country; but by whom, or of what it was a monument, is not known. It is certain, Bohan did not dwell here; for the Reubenites had their portion on the other ſide of Jordan; but perhaps he performed ſome famous exploit in this place, or died and was buried here; being one of thoſe who came over Jordan to aſſiſt their brethren in the conqueſt of Canaan.

Ver. 7. And the border went up toward Debir.] Which is mention'd in no other place: For it is not the ſame with that Debir, in ver. 15. which was in the ſouth, near Hebron; but this in the northern parts.

——— From the valley of Achor.] Mentioned, vii. 24, 26.

——— And ſo northward, looking toward Gilgal.] Having Gilgal on the north of it. Which is to be underſtood, not of that Gilgal near Jericho, but of that place called Geliloth, chap. xviii. 17. which was diſtant from thence, as appears by what follows.

——— That is before the going up to Adummim.] A place which ſtood upon a riſing ground; which ſome think was in the tribe of Judah, others of Benjamin.

——— Which is on the ſouth-ſide of the river.] Or, of the brook; which ſome take to be the brook Kedron.

——— And the border paſſed toward the waters of En-ſhemeſh, and the goings-out thereof were at En-rogel.] This place, it is evident (1 Kings i. 9.) was near Jeruſalem; which ſhews that Gilgal before-mentioned was not the place where they were now encamped.

Ver. 8. And the border went up.] For it was an aſcent from the Salt-ſea to this country; eſpecially when they came nigh to this place.

—— By the valley of the ſon of Hinnom.] A famous place on the eaſt-ſide of Jeruſalem; and ſo delightfully ſhady, that it invited the Iſraelites to idolatrous worſhip in this valley, whereby it became infamous, 2 Kings xxiii. 10. Jerem. vii. 32. Hinnom, in all probability, was ſome eminent perſon, in ancient times, who was the owner of this valley: For it is ſometimes called the valley of the children of Hinnom; which ſhews his poſterity were planted here. After it was polluted by idolatry, it became a place where they threw all their filth, and dead carcaſes; and where there was a continual fire, the Jews ſay, to burn bones, and ſuch ſordid things, as were thrown there; from whence, they think, it became the name for Hell-fire.

——— Unto the ſouth-ſide of the Jebuſite.] Namely, the city of the Jebuſites.

——— The ſame is Jeruſalem.] Which is called Jebuſi, in the laſt verſe of the eighteenth chapter, and Jebus, Judg. xix. 10. eſpecially that part of it fortified by the Jebuſites, which was called mount Sion, and lay on the ſouth of Jeruſalem.

——— And the border went up to the top of the mountain.] Which is thought to be mount Moriah.

——— That lieth before the valley of Hinnom weſtward.] It was weſt-ward to the valley of Hinnom; and ſo had that valley on the eaſt of it.

—— Which is at the end of the valley of the giants northward.] Which mountain had on the north part of the valley of Rephaim (as the word is in the Hebrew) which was in the tribe of Judah, extending itſelf from mount Moriah, as far as Bethlehem, as Joſephus informs us.

Ver. 9. And the border was drawn from the top of the hill unto the fountain of the water of Nephtoah.] Where this fountain, or well of water, was, cannot be known; for it is no where mentioned but here, and in chap. xviii. 15.

——— And went out to the cities of mount Ephron.] This place alſo is unknown; for it cannot be that in the tribe of Ephraim, mentioned 1 Chron. xiii. 19.

——— And the border was drawn to Baalah, which is Kirjath-jearim.] Called (ver. 60. and xviii. 14.) Kirjath-baal;

baal; there being, it is likely, a temple of Baal in this place, whoſe name the Iſraelites changed into Kirjath-jearim; which ſignifies urbs ſylvarum, a city of woods, becauſe of the goodly trees that grew in this quarter, and made it the fitter for idolatrous uſes.

Ver. 10. And the border compaſſed from Baalah weſtward.] Not in a direct line, but ſlanting toward the weſt.

——— Unto mount Seir.] Not that mount belonging to the Edomites, but another of that name.

——— And paſſed along unto the ſide of mount Jearim (which is Cheſalon) on the north-ſide.] This was a woody country, as appears from the name of this mountain, and from mount Seir alſo, which ſignifies as much as hairy.

——— And went down to Beth-ſhemeſh.] A known place in the tribe of Judah, and a city of the prieſts, xxi. 16.

——— And paſſed on to Timnah.] Another city in the ſame tribe, ver. 17. but afterward given to the tribe of Dan, xix. 43.

Ver. 11. And the border went out to the ſide of Ekron northward.] This city belonged to the Philiſtines; but fell to the lot of Judah, as did alſo Aſhdod and Gaza, ver. 45, 46, 47. But afterward Ekron was given to the Danites.

——— And the border was drawn to Shicron, and paſſed along to mount Baalah, and went out unto Jabneel.] It cannot now be known where theſe three places were; only it appears by what follows, that they were not far from the coaſt of the Philiſtines.

——— And the goings-out of the border were at the ſea.] That is, the northern border ended at the Mediterranean ſea; where there was a city called Jamnia; which ſome think was the ſame with Jabneel.

Ver. 12. And the weſt border was to the great ſea, and the coaſt thereof.] All along that coaſt of the Mediterranean, unto the river of Egypt; where the weſt border met with the ſouthern, ver. 4.

——— This is the coaſt of the children of Judah round about, according to their families.] That is, thus the lot was bounded on all ſides, in the firſt draught of it. Which being afterward found too large, it was contracted into a narrower compaſs, that more room might be made for the tribe of Simeon, who had part of this lot conſigned to them; as ſome other places were added out of it, to the tribes of Benjamin and Dan; as will afterward appear.

Ver. 13. And unto Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, he gave a part among the children of Judah.] Or rather, he (that is, Joſhua) had given him a part in this country, which by lot fell to the tribe of Judah. See the foregoing chap. xiv. 6, 7, &c. where we read how Caleb petitioned for it, and founded that petition on a grant made to him of it, long ago, by God himſelf.

——— According to the commandment of the Lord to Joſhua.] God promiſed it by Moſes; and it appears from theſe words, that Joſhua had an order from God to make it good.

—Even the city of Arba the father of Anak, which city is Hebron.] See chap. xiv. 15. This is here again particularly remembered, and an addition made to it, for this reaſon; that Joſhua havingdeſcribed the bounds of the country of Judah, and intending to ſet down the particular cities that were included in it, and diſtributed among them (as he had juſt before ſaid, ver. 12.) according to their families; it might be remembered, that there were two cities, or rather the territories about them, given to two families, antecedent to this diſtribution made by him, Eleazar and the princes. Which being a matter fit to remain for ever upon record, and to be known to all poſterity, he inſerts it here at large, in this deſcription of the portion of Judah; of which, it is likely, every family of that tribe had a map in their houſes; that, they knowing their limits, might both preſerve them, and keep within them.

Ver. 14. And Caleb drove thence.] Not by his own power alone, but by the confederate army of the tribe of Judah and Simeon, (Judges i. 3, 9, &c.) in which, it is probable, he had a principal command; and led on that party, which aſſaulted this city. See chap. x. 36, 37. xi. 21.

——— The three ſons of Anak, Sheſhai, and Ahiman, and Talmai, the children of Anak.] Who he had ſeen five and forty years ago, and was not at all affrighted at them; ſee Numb. xiii. 22. and Judges i. 10, &c.

Ver. 15. And he went up thence to the inhabitants of Debir.] See chap. x. 38, 39.

——— And the name of Debir before was Kirjath-ſepher] See Judges i. 11, 12. It is called alſo Kirjath-ſanna, ver. 49. of this chapter; which hath the ſame ſignification: For ſunna, (as Bochart obſerves, Canaan, lib. 2. cap. 17.) in the Arabic language, is learning, or the law. The Chaldee calls it, Kirjath-arche; which he tranſlates, urbs archivorum, the city where the ancient records of theſe nations were kept. All which ſhews, the conjecture of ſome very learned men is not improbable, who think this city in thoſe times was the ſeat of learning, as Athens was among the Greeks in future ages: Inſomuch, that Grotius takes this city to be the ſame with that which Xenophon calls Φοινίκων γυμνάσιον, the ſchool of the Phœnicians. But, as the word γυμνάσιον, in Xenophon's days, did not ſignify a ſchool of learning, but a place deſigned for exerciſes of the body, ſo we do not read of any famous place in that country, to which men reſorted in his time for ſtudy.

Ver. 16. And Caleb ſaid.] Made proclamation, we ſuppoſe, throughout the army, which he led againſt Debir.

———He that ſmiteth Kirjath-ſephir, and taketh it.] Aſſaults this fortreſs, and poſſeſſeth himſelf of it.

———To him will I give Achſah my daughter to wife.] With this place, we ſuppoſe, for her dowry.

Ver. 17. And Othniel the ſon of Kenaz, the brother of Caleb, took it.] He was ſtirred up, in all probability, by the ſpirit of God, (as he was when he was conſtituted judge of Iſrael, Judges iii. 9, 10.) to attack this place with an extraordinary courage; in which the providence of God appeared, (as Caleb hoped it would) in beſtowing his daughter upon a worthy perſon, and keeping the inheritance in his own tribe.

———And he gave him Achſah his daughter to wife.] Some think this was not lawful, becauſe he was her uncle. But this is a miſtake, for Othniel was not Caleb's brother, but Kenaz, who was Othniel's father. For Caleb is conſtantly called the ſon of Jephunneh, and Othniel the ſon of Kenaz. Therefore they had not the ſame father, but were very near of kin; which is all the word brother ſignifies in many places.

Ver. 18. And it came to paſs, as ſhe came unto him.] As ſhe was brought from her father's houſe to her husband's, according to the accuſtomed manner. See Selden, in his Uxor. Hebr. l. 2. c. 11.

———That ſhe moved him to ask of her father a field.] Deſired her husband, to whom ſhe thought her father at this time would deny nothing, to beſtow a field upon her. Or, perhaps, ſhe deſired his permiſſion for her to ask it of her father.

———And ſhe lighted off her aſs.] Upon which they then rode in thoſe countries, having no horſes, nor mules, till after-times. And her lighting down was in reverence to her father, to whom ſhe addreſſed herſelf in an humble poſture.

———And Caleb ſaid unto her, What wouldſt thou?] He ſeems to have prevented her requeſt; knowing, by her poſture, ſhe had ſomething to deſire of him. But Ludov. de Dieu takes it quite otherwiſe; that when ſhe came to her husband's houſe, ſhe did not alight from her aſs, but continued ſtill ſitting upon it. Which her father obſerving, and asking her the reaſon why ſhe did not come down, and go to her husband, ſhe told him, ſhe had firſt a requeſt to beg of him. And thus both the LXX and the Vulgar tranſlate it, as if ſhe did not alight, but ſighed and cried, ἐκ τοῦ ὄνου, from the aſs on which ſhe ſat.

Ver. 19. Who anſwered, Give me a bleſſing.] Beſtow a gift upon me, as the word bleſſing is uſed, Gen. xxxiii. 11. or, make my happineſs compleat.

——— For thou haſt given me a ſouth land.] A dry country; being both mountainous, and toward the ſouth, that is, toward the deſerts of Arabia, from whence very hot and ſcorching winds were wont to blow.

—Give me alſo ſprings of water.] A field hard by, wherein were ſprings of water; for it was not merely the ſprings ſhe begged, but the ground in which they were; as appears from the foregoing verſe, where ſhe moved her husband to ask a field.

——— And he gave her the upper ſprings, and the nether ſprings.] Whereby that dry ground might be water'd water'd and made fruitful. He ſeems to have given her more than ſhe deſired; not only thoſe ſprings which were in the mountain, but thoſe below alſo; ſo that neither the riſing ground, nor the plain, might want water, as Arias Montanus expounds it.

Ver. 20. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Judah, according to their families.] Now follows an account of the cities within the lot of this tribe; which were aſſigned to their ſeveral families, after Hebron (which was the principal of them, for here David reigned over the tribe of Judah alone ſeven years) was given to Caleb. Which the generality of the Jews think he did not get into his poſſeſſion till after the death of Joſhua; as is related in the book of Judges. See there, chap. i. 11, 12, 13, &c.

Ver. 21. And the uttermoſt cities of the tribe of the children of Judah.] Thoſe that were in the confines; for he doth not ſeem to number all that were in the heart of the country. So the Jews think; tho' the truth is, as will appear in the following part of the chapter, he only begins with the outmoſt cities, but afterward proceeds to thoſe that were in the midſt of the country.

——Toward the coaſt of Edom, ſouthward.] He begins with thoſe that lay on the ſouth ſide of the country; which was the border he firſt deſcribed, ver. 1, 2.

——Were Kabzeel.] Where that valiant perſon Benajah was born, who ſmote two lion-like men of Moab, 1 Chron. xi. 22.

——And Eder.] Which Euſebius calls Ἐδὲρ: but hath no more to ſay of it, nor of Jagur, and the reſt that follow, but that they were in the tribe of Judah: Nor ſhall we further enquire after every particular city mentioned; the number of which is ſumm'd up, ver. 32.

Ver. 32. — All the cities are twenty and nine, with their villages.] If the foregoing places be enumerated, there are no leſs than thirty and eight of them: But there were only twenty and nine of them (as ſome ſolve the difficulty) that could be called cities; the other being only villages: Or, the meaning is, (as the Jews generally think) that twenty and nine only belonged to the tribe of Judah; the reſt being afterward given to the tribe of Simeon, as we find in the nineteenth chapter. Where nine of theſe very cities here mentioned, are ſaid to be in that tribe, viz. Beer-ſheba, Moladah, Hazar-ſhual, Baalah, Azem, Hormah, Zigleg, Ain, and Rimmon: Which nine, with the twenty and nine here ſet down as the ſum total, make juſt thirty and eight: And this ſeems to be the truer account, becauſe the villages of other cities are mentioned, ver. 36 and 41. and yet none of them ſet down by name, as is ſuppoſed in the firſt interpretation of theſe words.

Ver. 33. And in the valley.] Or in the plain, below the mountains: But which way, we think it unneceſſary to examine.

Ver. 36. Fourteen cities, with their villages.] There are fifteen in all, if we take the two laſt for diſtinct cities. But, in all probability, there might be one, called indifferently Gederah, or (as we tranſlate it in the margin) Gederothaim. Perhaps there might be a double city, the old and the new: Or, Gederothaim was an appendix to Gederah, as the borough of Southwark is to the city of London.

Ver. 37. Zenan, and Hadaſha, &c.] We ſuppoſe, theſe cities, and all that follow to the forty-firſt verſe, lay alſo in the valley, or plain.

Ver. 41. Sixteen cities, with their villages.] There are exactly that number, among which Mizpeh, Lachiſh, Beth-dagon, Eglon, and Makkedah, were the chief. They ſeem to have been in the weſtern part of this country, near the tribe of Dan; for the two firſt in the former diviſion (Eſhtaol and Zoreah, ver. 33.) were afterward given to the Danites, xix. 41.

Ver. 42. Libnah and Ether, &c.] Theſe two cities, and thoſe that follow to ver. 45. were in another diviſion of the plain country; among which, Libnah, Keilah, Achzib, and Mareſhah, were the moſt noble.

Ver. 44. Nine cities, with their villages.] But Ether and Aſhan were afterward given to the tribe of Simeon, xix. 7. which may ſeem a prejudice to the interpretation given by the Jews of ver. 32. unleſs we ſuppoſe theſe two places to be different from them, tho' called by the ſame name: As here is mention made of Aſhnah, ver. 43. and there is one of the ſame name in the former Diviſion, ver. 33.

Ver. 45. Ekron, with her towns and her villages.] The Hebrew word for towns ſignifies daughters; by which, ſeem to be meant leſſer cities, depending on Ekron, with their villages belonging to them: Gath and Askalon, perhaps, were ſuch at this time; tho', in future ages they became much more conſiderable; which may be the reaſon they are not here mentioned. For this, and the two following verſes, deſcribe the lot of Judah in the weſt, upon the Mediterranean ſea; which comprehended all from Ekron, unto the river of Egypt.

Ver. 48. And in the mountains.] From the plain, the author of this book proceeds to the mountains; and diſtributes the cities there into five diviſions.

——Shamir and Jattir, &c.] In this diviſion there were eleven cities; among which was Kirjath-ſanna, ver. 49. which had three names. See ver. 15.

Ver. 52. Arab and Dumah, &c.] In this diviſion there were nine cities, ver. 54. which were in this mountainous country, in the middle of Judæa; as thoſe mentioned before, and thoſe that follow, were: And therefore, it is not true which the Jews ſay, that Joſhua reckons up only the cities in the skirts of the country, with which indeed he began. See ver. 21.

Ver. 55. Maon, Carmel, &c.] This, and the two following verſes, contain an account of ten cities and their villages, in another diviſion, two of which were near each other; for Nabal dwelt in Maon, and had great poſſeſſions in Carmel, 1 Sam. xxv. 2. There was another Maon in the deſerts of Jeſhimon, 1 Sam. xxiii. 1. as there was another among the Moabites, called Beth-maon, the houſe, or dwelling of Maon. The people of which, called Maonites, and, as ſome think, Mehunims, (Judges x. 10, 12. 2 Chron. xxvi. 7.) were very powerful, and ſome time oppreſſed the Iſraelites. And there was likewiſe another Carmel; for this is not the place where Elijah built an altar and offered ſacrifices, when he ſlew the prophets of Baal, (1 Kings xviii.) but a place far diſtant from it; where Saul made himſelf a place when he returned from the conqueſt of the Amalekites, 1 Sam. xv. 12. that is, encamped, as ſome will have it, and divided the ſpoil, or built a triumphant arch, as St. Jerom interprets it; and where Nabal kept ſo many ſheep, as are mentioned in the place before-named; and is the place the prophets mean (as Bochart conjectures) when they ſpeak of the paſtures of Carmel, Jer. l. 19. Amos i. 2. Mic. vii. 14. See Hierozoicon, P. 1. lib. 2. cap. 48.

Ver. 57. Cain, Gibeah, and Timnah, &c.] The firſt of theſe cities, Pellicanus thinks, hath the ſame name with that called Kinah, ver. 22. tho' it be in a different place. And, indeed, in this diviſion, conſiſting of ten cities, there are two whoſe names we had before, when mention is made of thoſe in the skirts of the country, namely, Ziph and Zanoah. See ver. 24, 34. Which ſhews there were many cities in the ſame country of the ſame name.

——Gibeah and Timnah.] Are known places. See Gen xxxviii. 12.

Ver. 58. Halhul, Beth-zur, &c.] This, and the following verſe, contain a ſmall diviſion of ſix cities; the moſt eminent of which was Beth-zur, which lay in the road from Jeruſalem to Hebron, about twenty miles from it, as St. Jerom tells us.

Ver. 60. Kirjath-baal, &c.] Here are only two cities in this diviſion, the firſt of which was called Kirjath-jearim, as we read, chap. xviii. 14. and Baala, and Baal-gudah, 2 Sam. vii. 2. 1 Chron. xiii. 6.

Ver. 61. In the wilderneſs.] So the Hebrews call thoſe parts of the country, which were but thinly inhabited; as this was, wherein there were but ſix cities. Of this wilderneſs of Judah, we read frequently in the following books of ſcripture; ſeveral parts of which are mentioned in the hiſtory of David, when he fled for fear of Saul, and lurked in this country: Particularly in the wilderneſs of Ziph, 1 Sam. xxiii. 14. and of Maon, ver. 24, 25. and of Engeddi, one of the places here mentioned, 1 Sam. xxiv. 1. And there was a part of the wilderneſs not far from Carmel, before-mentioned, 1 Sam. xxv. 14.

Ver. 62. The city of Salt.] Some take this to be Zoar, the little city to which Lot was permitted to retire at the deſtrucdeſtruction of Sodom: And it is called the city of Salt, either becauſe it ſtood near the Salt-ſea, or becauſe the wife of Lot was here transformed into a pillar of ſalt.

Ver. 63. As for the Jebuſites, the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the children of Judah could not drive them out.] This ſuppoſes that Jeruſalem belonged to the children of Judah; and ſo it did in part, though not the whole; for ſome of it was in the tribe of Benjamin, as ſhall be obſerved in its proper place. The king of this city Joſhua had vanquiſhed, together with the other four kings of the Amorites, who joined in battle with him, Joſh. x. 5, 23. and, in the concluſion of that chapter, he is ſaid (ver. 42.) to have taken all theſe kings and their land at one time. But if Jeruſalem was then taken, as well as the land about it, the ſtrong-hold of Zion remained ſtill in the hands of the Jebuſites. And the Iſraelites not being able preſently to people all the cities they had taken, the Jebuſites recovered the city of Jeruſalem; from whence, the children of Judah expelled them after the death of Joſhua, Judg. i. 8 But ſtill mount Zion continued in their hands, till the reign of David.

——But the Jebuſites dwell with the children of Judah, at Jeruſalem, unto this day.] That is, in the fort of Zion, which was a part of it; where they were ſo conſiderable, that the city was called the city of the Jebuſites, and its name, Jebus, Judges xix. 10, 11. There can be no doubt, we think, that theſe Jebuſites were of the ſeed of Canaan, they being conſtantly numbered among the ſeven nations devoted to deſtruction. Yet ſome of the Jews have a conceit, that the people here mentioned, were derived from Abimelech, king of the Philiſtines; with whom, their fore-father Iſaac made a ſolemn league; and therefore the children of Judah did not expel them. So Kimchi. But this is evidently a weak imagination: For why did they expel them at laſt, as they really did, if they were to be kind to them upon this account?

CHAP. XVI.

1 The general borders of the ſons of Joſeph. 5 The border of the inheritance of Ephraim. 10 The Canaanites not conquered.

AND the lot of the children of Joſeph fell from Jordan by Jericho, unto the water of Jericho on the eaſt, to the wilderneſs that goeth up from Jericho throughout mount Beth-el,

2 And goeth out from Beth-el to Luz, and paſſeth along unto the borders of Archi to Ataroth,

3 And goeth down weſt-ward, to the coaſt of Japhleti, unto the coaſt of Beth-horon the nether, and to Gezer: and the goings-out thereof are at the ſea.

4 So the children of Joſeph, Manaſſeh, and Ephraim, took their inheritance.

5 ¶ And the border of the children of Ephraim, according to their families, was thus: even the border of their inheritance on the eaſt-ſide, was Ataroth-addar unto Beth-horon the upper.

6 And the border went out toward the ſea, to Michmethah on the north-ſide, and the border went about eaſt-ward unto Taanah-ſhiloh, and paſſed by it on the eaſt to Janohah:

7 And it went down from Janohah, to Ataroth and to Naarath, and came to Jericho, and went out at Jordan.

8 The border went out from Tappuah weſt-ward unto the river Kanah: and the goings-out thereof were at the ſea. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Ephraim by their families.

9 And the ſeparate cities for the children of Ephraim were among the inheritance of the children of Manaſſeh, all the cities with their villages.

10 And they drave not out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer: but the Canaanites dwell among the Ephraimites unto this day, and ſerve under tribute.

Ver. 1. And the lot of the children of Joſeph.] That is, of Ephraim, and that half of the tribe of Manaſſeh, which was not yet provided for: See ver. 4. One cannot but obſerve the providence of God, in bringing up their lot next to Judah's. For, as he had the prerogative of being made the chief of all Jacob's children, Gen. xlix. 10. ſo Joſeph had the privilege of the firſt-born transferred to his family. And therefore they are conſidered before any of the other tribes, except Judah.

——Fell from Jordan by Jericho.] In the Hebrew, went forth from Jordan, by the city of Jericho, which was in the tribe of Benjamin; whoſe tribe lay between thoſe of Judah and Ephraim.

——Unto the water of Jericho, on the eaſt.] This is juſtly thought to be the water mentioned, 2 Kings ii. 19, 20, 21. whoſe ſpring, which watered the plain of Jericho, was cured by Eliſha.

——To the wilderneſs that goeth up from Jericho throughout mount Beth-el.] It appears from chap. xviii. 12, 13. that this was the wilderneſs of Beth-aven.

Ver. 2. And goeth out from Beth-el to Luz.] Beth-el was ſo called, becauſe the famous Divine Viſion was there imparted to Jacob, mentioned Gen. xviii. It was near the city Luz, as appears from the 19th verſe of that chapter, but was diſtinct from the city itſelf, being in the neighbouring fields, where Jacob lay all night; though being ſo near, it is likely they afterward became one city. But they who would hence infer, that this book could not be written by Joſhua, becauſe Luz was built after his death in the land of the Hittites, (Judges i. 26.) have, inſtead of ſhewing any great capacity, proved themſelves meer triflers: For, it is evident that the Sacred Hiſtorian doth not here ſpeak of that Luz, but of the old city: For the country of the Hittites belonged to Hebron and Beerſheba, and the neighbouring places in the land of Judah; to which the author of this book could have no reſpect here in the deſcription of the land of Ephraim. Therefore, when Luz and Beth-el are ſaid to be the ſame, (xviii. 13. and Judges i. 23) the meaning can be no more, but that in length of time they were united; the inhabitants of Luz going into Beth-el. And of ſuch coalitions of two cities into one, there are ſix hundred examples, as Huetius obſerves in his Demonſtr. Evang. Propoſ. 4. And therefore, we think, Dupin well tranſlates this whole verſe, in the following manner: From Beth-el Luz, the border paſſeth along to Archi-ataroth.

——And paſſeth along unto the borders of Archi to Ataroth.] Or rather, the borders of Archi-ataroth, as both the LXX and the Vulgate tranſlate it, and as the words are in the Hebrew, this being the ſame city which is afterward call'd Ataroth, ver. 7. it being uſual to cut off the former part of the names of cities, as Bochart obſerves in abundance of inſtances; and gives this for one, in his Phaleg. lib. 2. cap. 24.

Ver. 3. And goeth down weſt-ward to the coaſt of Japhleti.] This place is mentioned no where elſe; but it was in the weſtern part of the land, toward the Mediterranean.

——Unto the coaſt of Beth-horon the nether.] See chap. x. 10.

——And to Gezer.] This was one of the Levitical cities in this tribe of Ephraim, Joſh. xxi. 21. And, as

If. Caſaubon hath proved at large, it was, in all probability, the city which Joſephus, and the author of the book of the Maccabees, call Gazara; and is mentioned as a neighbouring city to Joppa, Azotus, and Jamnia.

——— And the goings-out thereof are at the ſea.] The Vulgate hath it, at the great ſea; which is certainly here meant; this being a ſhort deſcription of the lot of this tribe from Jordan on the eaſt, to the Mediterranean on the weſt.

Ver. 4. So the children of Joſeph, Manaſſeh, and Ephraim, took their inheritance.] According to the following meaſures: Which give a more particular account of what is before ſaid in general.

Ver. 5. And the border of the children of Ephraim, according to their families.] And firſt, the author of this book ſhews what was given to Ephraim, reſerving the deſcription of Manaſſeh's portion to the next chapter.

——— Even the border of their inheritance on the eaſt ſide.] The north eaſt. For he deſcribes, tho' ſlightly, only the breadth of this lot from ſouth to north.

———Was Ataroth-addar, unto Beth-horon the upper.] The firſt of theſe was in the ſouth, and the latter in the north.

Ver. 6. And the border went out toward the ſea.] From Beth-horon the upper; this northern border went on one ſide weſtward, toward the Mediterranean.

——— To Michmetha on the north ſide.] And on the other ſide eaſtward, toward Jordan. This is very obſcurely expreſſed; but it appears, from what follows, that it muſt be thus interpreted.

—— And the border went about eaſt-ward unto Taanath-ſhiloth.] Still proceeded further eaſtward, unto this place; the name of which only is now known.

——And paſſed by it on the eaſt to Janohah.] Another place eaſterly, of which we are now ignorant. For there are no records left to make us underſtand in what part of the eaſt it was ſituated; which was perfectly known, when this country was inhabited by the Ephraimites.

Ver. 7. And it went down from Janohah to Ataroth, and to Naarath, and came to Jericho.] Not to the very city, for that belonged to Benjamin; but to the country adjoining.

——And went out at Jordan.] Which was the eaſtern boundary of this country.

Ver. 8. The border went out from Tappuah weſtward, unto the river Kanah.] The Sacred Hiſtorian returns to deſcribe the length of it from eaſt to weſt; if the river, or brook Kanah, be the ſame with the brook Cerith, mentioned 1 Kings xvii. 3. And ſo not only Adricoinius underſtands it, but that great man Bochart; who obſerves it was called the brook Cherith, from the word cara, which ſignifies to eat or feed, becauſe here God commanded the ravens to feed Elijah; and it was called Kana, from the multitude of reeds which grew there, (and ſo the Vulgar here tranſlates it, the valley of reeds) in which, it may be ſuppoſed, Elijah lay hid, Hierozoicon, P. 2. L. 2. C. 14. But there is ſo much to be objected againſt this ſituation of the brook Kana, that we muſt leave it in ſuſpence whether it were in the eaſt, or in the weſt; and confeſs, with Pellicanus, that as none of the Hebrews or Latins have given a ſatisfactory account of theſe four laſt verſes, ſo neither do we pretend to it.

——— And the goings-out thereof were at the ſea.] Where ſea alone is mentioned, it is commonly underſtood to ſignify the Mediterranean; which quite overthrows the opinion that makes Kana the ſame with Cherith. But the Vulgar here took it for the Salt-ſea, (adding the word Salſiſſimum) which favours the above-mentioned opinion.

Ver. 9. And the ſeparate cities for the children of Ephraim, were among the inheritance of the children of Manaſſeh, &c.] What theſe ſeparate cities were, cannot now be known, becauſe we have not a particular account given of all the cities of this tribe, (as we had of Judah) but only of thoſe, which were the limits of this country. But they ſeem to have been ſome cities in the tribe of Manaſſeh, which were inhabited by the children of Ephraim, tho' the territories about them belonged to the Manaſſites, and were occupied by them.

Ver. 10. And they drave not out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer, but the Canaanites dwell among the Ephraimites unto this day.] The inhabitants of Gezer were properly Canaanites, who dwelt upon the ſea-coaſt where Gezer was ſituated.

——— And ſerve under Tribute.] The Iſraelites ſo far ſubdued them, as to make them tributaries; and ſome fancy, impoſed on them the precepts of the ſons of Noah. But they ought to have deſtroyed them, and were prohibited from making peace with them on any conditions. See Judges ii. 1, 2, 3. unleſs the conjecture of Grotius be true, namely, that the inhabitants of Gezer ſubmitted and accepted the terms of peace, which Joſhua was bound to offer them before he began the war; as the Gergaſites he thinks, alſo did, who remained even in our Saviour's time: For they delivered up themſelves at the firſt ſummons to ſurrender; which is the reaſon, he imagines, that they are omitted in the enumeration of their enemies, both in xi. 1. and in Deut. xx. 17. See his annot. on his 13th chapter of the ſecond book de Juri Belli & Pacis. ſect. 4.

This city, and the people of it, were deſtroyed in Solomon's time by Pharaoh king of Egypt, who made a preſent of it to his daughter, Solomon's wife; who therefore rebuilt it, 1 Kings ix. 16, 17. till the Canaanites lived in it; from whence Spinoza would have it concluded, that this book was not written by Joſhua, becauſe we find the ſame thing recorded in the book of Judges, i. 29. which is of a later date. But this is a very frivolous cavil; for, as Huetius well obſerves, if an hiſtorian ſhould have ſaid in the life of Tiberius, the Germans were not deſtroyed, the ſame might in like manner have been ſaid in the life of Veſpaſian; and juſt ſo, when Joſhua ſaid the Gazerites were not cut off by the Ephraimites, it did not hinder him, who wrote in the following age, from declaring the ſame, becauſe they ſtill remained in poſſeſſion of their ancient habitation.

CHAP. XVII.

1 The lot of Manaſſeh. 7 His coaſt. 12 The Canaanites not driven out. 14 The children of Joſeph obtain another lot.

THERE was alſo a lot for the tribe of Manaſſeh: (for he was the firſt-born of Joſeph) to wit, for Machir the firſt-born of Manaſſeh the father of Gilead: becauſe he was a man of war, therefore he had Gilead and Baſhan.

2 There was alſo a lot for the reſt of the children of Manaſſeh by their families; for the children of Abiezer, and for the children of Helek, and for the children of Aſriel, and for the children of Shechem, and for the children of Hepher, and for the children of Shemida: theſe were the male-children of Manaſſeh the ſon of Joſeph by their families.

3 ¶ But Zelophehad the ſon of Hepher, the ſon of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh, had no ſons, but daughters: and theſe are the names of his daughters, Mahlah, and Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah.

4 And they came near before Eleazar the prieſt, and before Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and before the princes, ſaying, The LORD commanded Moſes to give us an inheritance among our brethren: therefore according to the commandment of the LORD, he he gave them an inheritance among the brethren of their father.

5 And there fell ten portions to Manaſſeh, beſide the land of Gilead and Baſhan, which were on the other ſide Jordan;

6 Becauſe the daughters of Manaſſeh had an inheritance among his ſons: and the reſt of Manaſſehs ſons had the land of Gilead.

7 ¶ And the coaſt of Manaſſeh was from Aſher to Michmethah, that lieth before Shechem, and the border went along on the right-hand, unto the inhabitants of En-tappuah.

8 Now Manaſſeh had the land of Tappuah: but Tappuah on the border of Manaſſeh belonged to the children of Ephraim.

9 And the coaſt deſcended unto the river Kanah, ſouth-ward of the river: theſe cities of Ephraim are among the cities of Manaſſeh: the coaſt of Manaſſeh alſo was on the north ſide of the river, and the out-goings of it were at the ſea.

10 South-ward it was Ephraims, and north-ward it was Manaſſehs, and the ſea is his border, and they met together in Aſher on the north, and in Iſſachar on the eaſt.

11 And Manaſſeh had in Iſſachar and in Aſher, Beth-ſhean and her towns, and Ibleam and her towns, and the inhabitants of Dor and her towns, and the inhabitants of En-dor and her towns, and the inhabitants of Taanach and her towns, and the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns, even three countries.

12 Yet the children of Manaſſeh could not drive out the inhabitants of thoſe cities, but the Canaanites would dwell in that land.

13 Yet it came to paſs when the children of Iſrael were waxen ſtrong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute; but did not utterly drive them out.

14 And the children of Joſeph ſpake unto Joſhua, ſaying, Why haſt thou given me but one lot and one portion to inherit, ſeeing I am a great people, foraſmuch as the LORD hath bleſſed me hitherto?

15 And Joſhua anſwered them, If thou be a great people, then get thee up to the wood-country, and cut down for thy ſelf there in the land of the Perizzites, and of the giants, if mount Ephraim be too narrow for thee.

16 And the children of Joſeph ſaid, The hill is not enough for us: and all the Canaanites that dwell in the land of the valley, have chariots of iron, both they who are of Beth-ſhean and her towns, and they who are of the valley of Jezreel.

17 And Joſhua ſpake unto the houſe of Joſeph, even to Ephraim, and to Manaſſeh, ſaying, Thou art a great people, and haſt great power: thou ſhalt not have one lot only.

18 But the mountain ſhall be thine, for it is a wood: and thou ſhalt cut it down: and the out-goings of it ſhall be thine: for thou ſhalt drive out the Canaanites, though they have iron chariots, and though they be ſtrong.

Ver. 1. There was alſo a lot for the tribe of Manaſſeh.] That half of it, which had no portion on the other ſide Jordan.

—— For he was the firſt-born of Joſeph.] We cannot make any ſenſe of this, and therefore the particle ki ſhould be tranſlated tho', not for. And then the meaning is plain enough, that the lot of Manaſſeh came up after that of Ephraim (not before it) tho' he was the firſt-born of Joſeph; for Jacob had preferred Ephraim before him, Gen. xlviii. 19, 20.

—— For Machir, the firſt-born of Manaſſeh.] And his only ſon, from whom ſprung ſuch a multitude, that there was no room for them all, on the other ſide Jordan; but part of them were to be diſpoſed of here.

—— The father of Gilead.] Numb. xxvi. 29.

—— Becauſe he was a man of war.] This is generally thought to relate to Machir; who had accompliſhed ſome famous exploits in the skirmiſhes they had with the neigbouring people, while they were in Egypt (ſee 1 Chron. vii. 21, 22.) for he was not alive to fight when they came to Canaan.

—— Therefore he had Gilead and Baſhan.] A ſhare in this country; for ſome of it was given to the Reubenites and Gadites, xiii. 25. but the Gileadites were alſo planted here, ver. 31. for as they inherited the valour of their progenitor, they were fit to defend this frontier country.

Ver. 2. There was alſo a lot for the reſt of the children of Manaſſeh, by their families.] A great part of the Manaſſites being diſpoſed of before they paſſed over Jordan, now follows the lot which fell to the reſt, whoſe ſeveral families are named.

—— For the children of Abiezer, and for the children of Helek, and for the children of Aſriel, and for the children of Shechem, and for the children of Hepher, and for the children of Shemida.] Theſe ſix families deſcended from Gilead, as was read Numb. xxvi. 30, &c. where the firſt of them, who is here called Abiezer, is there called Jeazer.

—— Theſe were the male children of Manaſſeh, the ſon of Joſeph, by their families.] The expreſſion of male children is here uſed, in order to introduce what follows concerning the females. And they are called the children of Manaſſeh, becauſe they inherited in his right, being families deſcended from him. See Selden de Succeſſionibus, cap. 22.

Ver. 3. But Zelophehad the ſon of Hepher, the ſon of Gilead, the ſon of Machir, the ſon of Manaſſeh.] Here is recited their pedigree from the ſon of Joſeph.

—— Had no ſons, but daughters.] And ſo could not make a family in Manaſſeh; and conſequently have no ſhare in the land.

—— And theſe are the names of his daughters, Malah, and Noah, &c.] See Numb. xxvi. 33.

Ver. 4. And they came near before Eleazar the prieſt, and before Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and before the princes]

To

To whom God had committed the care of dividing the ſeveral lots, xiv. 1. Numb. xxxiv. 17, 18.

——— Saying, the Lord commanded Moſes to give us an inheritance among our brethren.] See Numb. xxvii. 6, 7.

——— Therefore, according to the commandment of the Lord, he gave them an inheritance among the brethren of their father.] Or, an inheritance was given them, according to this commandment of God to Moſes, by Eleazar and Joſhua, and the reſt who were appointed to divide the land. For after the lot had determined what land every tribe ſhould have, Eleazar, Joſhua, and the princes, conſidered how many families there were in the tribe, and how large they were; and accordingly, divided it among them. So Numb. xxvi. 55, 56, imports.

Ver. 5. And there fell ten portions to Manaſſeh.] For there were ſix portions given to ſix ſons: But the portion of Hepher, the laſt of them, being divided into five parts among his five daughters, there were ten portions in all. See Selden de Succeſſion. cap. 23. which ten portions being aſſigned to ſo many families, Eleazar, Joſhua, and the princes, were not concerned any further in dividing thoſe ten portions into leſſer, among ſeveral houſholds; but that, we ſuppoſe, they agreed among themſelves.

——— Beſide the land of Gilead and Baſhan, which were on the other ſide Jordan.] Mentioned before, ver. 1.

Ver. 6. Becauſe the daughters of Manaſſeh.] That is, of Zelophehad, who deſcended from Manaſſeh.

——— Had an inheritance among his ſons.] Being conſidered as heirs to their father ——— And the reſt of Manaſſeh's ſons.] Who were not of the ſix families before-mentioned.

——— Had the land of Gilead.] On the other ſide Jordan, as has been frequently obſerved; and is again repeated, to prevent all contentions that might ariſe about their portions.

Ver. 7. And the coaſt of Manaſſeh was from Aſher to Michmethah, that lieth before Shechem.] This was the ſouth border, which extended from a city called Aſher, to another called Michmethah; which was over-againſt a city in the tribe of Ephraim, called Shechem.

——— And the border went along on the right hand unto the inhabitants of Entappuah.] And ſo to thoſe that lived in the land of Tappuah, leaving Tappuah it ſelf on the right hand.

Ver. 8. Now Manaſſeh had the land of Tappuah.] All the territory, adjoining to this city, belonged to the tribe of Manaſſeh.

——— But Tappuah on the border of Manaſſeh belonged to the children of Ephraim.] But the city it ſelf, which lay on the confines of their country, was one of thoſe ſeparated cities mentioned in the preceding chapter, ver. 9. in which the children of Ephraim dwelt.

Ver. 9. And the coaſt deſcended unto the river Kanah, ſouthward of the river.] Concerning this place, ſee ver. 8. of the foregoing chapter.

——— Theſe cities of Ephraim are among the cities of Manaſſeh.] That is, the cities on the coaſt before-mentioned, were inhabited by the Ephraimites, as well as Tappuah; tho' they were in the tribe of Manaſſeh. For theſe two tribes were nearer of Kin than any other; for which reaſon a ſtricter friendſhip was intended to be eſtabliſhed between them.

——— The coaſt of Manaſſeh alſo was on the north ſide of the river.] By the coaſt of Manaſſeh, is meant the cities inhabited by the Manaſſites; which were all on the north ſide of this river; as all thoſe on the ſouth ſide of it, tho' belonging to the Manaſſites, were inhabited by the children of Ephraim.

——— And the out-goings of it were at the ſea.] The coaſt mentioned in the beginning of the verſe, ended at the Mediterranean ſea.

Ver. 10. Southward it was Ephraim's, and northward it was Manaſſeh's, and the ſea is his border.] Theſe words expreſs the ſituation of theſe two tribes, with reſpect to each other: Ephraim on the ſouth, and Manaſſeh on the north; and both bounded on the weſt, by the Mediterranean.

——— And they met together in Aſher on the north, and in Iſſachar on the eaſt.] Though on the ſouth the tribe of Manaſſeh was wholly joined to the tribe of Ephraim, yet, on the north-weſt, toward the Mediterranean, it had the tribe of Aſher on the confines of it; and on the eaſt, (toward Jordan, and the ſea of Tiberias) the tribe of Iſſachar. So Pellicanus rightly explains theſe words. For both the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh could not touch theſe other tribes.

Ver. 11. And Manaſſeh had in Iſſachar and in Aſher.] As Ephraim had ſome towns in the tribe of Manaſſeh, ſo Manaſſeh had others in the tribes of Iſſachar and Aſher, to whom, in the north weſt, and the eaſt, they were near neighbours.

——— Beth-ſhean, and her towns] This was a place not far from the ſea of Tiberias, before-mentioned, and near Jordan.

——— And Ibleam and her towns.] It appears, by 2 Kings ix. 27. that it was not far from Megiddo, mentioned in the latter end of this verſe.

——— And the inhabitants of Dor and her towns.] Concerning Dor, ſee chap. xi. 2. whoſe inhabitants (as alſo thoſe of the cities following) are here mentioned; becauſe, it ſeems, they poſſeſſed the people (whom they ought to have deſtroyed) as well as their cities and towns, making them their ſlaves.

——— And the inhabitants of Endor, and her towns.] Endor was the city to which Saul went in order to conſult with the witch, and it was not far from mount Tabor; which was in the confines of the tribe of Iſſachar.

——— And the inhabitants of Taanach, and her towns.] This city lay not far from the other, and was one of thoſe given to the Levites, chap. xxi. 25.

——— And the inhabitants of Megiddo, and her towns.] This was near the former; not far from the brook Kiſhon, Judges v. 19.

——— Even three countries] Or rather, three parts of thoſe countries before-mentioned.

Ver. 12. Yet the children of Manaſſeh could not drive out the inhabitants of thoſe cities.] Thro' want of faith in God, and of zeal to execute his commands; which made them tardy in their attempts to expel the inhabitants of this country.

——— But the Canaanites would dwell in that land.] Finding themſelves ſtrong enough to maintain it, againſt ſuch feeble endeavours, as the Iſraelites employed in its conqueſt.

Ver. 13. Yet it came to paſs, when the children of Iſrael were waxen ſtrong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute.] When they were more numerous and expert in war, not only the Manaſſites, but they of other tribes alſo, compelled the Canaanite to be tributaries to them.

——— But did not utterly drive them out.] In which they heinouſly tranſgreſſed the Divine Command, Deut. xx. 16, 17, 18.

Ver. 14. And the children of Joſeph ſpake unto Joſhua] Both they of Ephraim, and they of Manaſſeh, ver. 17.

——— Saying, why haſt thou given me but one lot, and one portion to inherit, ſeeing I am a great people.] They were diſcontented with their lot, which they thought too contracted for them; becauſe they were ſo very numerous, that the country which was aſſigned them was little enough for one of their tribes.

——— For as much as the Lord hath bleſſed me hitherto?] Multiplied them exceedingly, as appears from Numbers xxvi. 34, 37.

Ver. 15. And Joſhua anſwered them, if thou be a great people.] Though Joſhua was their fleſh and blood, yet he would not humour them; but returns their argument upon them, that ſince they were ſo great a people, they ſhould act as here follows.

——— Then get thee up to the wood-country.] Which was in the highlands, ver. 18. and theſe were full of trees; for aba, as Bochart obſerves, ſignifies very thick woods, Canaan, lib. 2. cap. 9.

——— And cut down for thy ſelf there.] Make it habitable, and commodious for your purpoſe.

——— In the land of the Perizzites.] Who were a rough uncivilized people, living in theſe mountainous foreſts, as Bochart collects from this paſſage; and thinks they had their name from thence; becauſe they did not live in cities and towns, but in thoſe pagi, or wild villages, that were in the woods; and which the Hebrews call pherazoth; from whence the pagani, the people who inhabited thoſe places, were called pherazim. Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 36.

——And

——— And of the giants.] There were ſome of the rephaim (as the Hebrew word is) ſtill remaining here; or it was a place where they had been wont to dwell.

——— If mount Ephraim be too narrow for thee.] If that noble mount which was conſigned to them for their portion, with the reſt of the land before-mentioned (which is included in the name of mount Ephraim, the principal part being put for the whole) did not afford them ſufficient room, Joſhua exhorts them to enlarge their bounds, by taking in thoſe wood-lands before-mentioned.

Ver. 16. And the children of Joſeph ſaid, the hill is not enough for us.] They ſtill inſiſted, that if they could get poſſeſſion of the woody mountain, and deſtroy all the inhabitants, and cut down all the trees, it would not be ſufficient to contain them.

——And all the Canaanites that dwell in the land of the valley.] But if it would, they further alledge, they had no hope to conquer it; becauſe, before they could come at it, they muſt encounter thoſe who lived in the valley below it, who were too ſtrong for them.

——Have chariots of Iron.] Not chariots made of iron, but armed with that metal, and which the ancients called currus falcati, in Greek, δρεπανοφόρα; having a kind of ſcythes, of two cubits, faſtned to long axle-trees on both wheels; which being driven ſwiftly through a body of men, made great ſlaughter, mowing them down like graſs or corn. Xenophon gives a deſcription of them in his Cyro-Pædia, lib. 6. and Quintus Curtius, lib. 4. cap. 9. alſo Vegetius de Re Militari, lib. 3. cap. 24. Bonfrerius hath collected many particulars on this ſubject, and ſo hath Dietericus in his Antiq. Biblicæ, p. 329, &c. where he obſerves, that Xenophon imagined Cyrus to have been the inventor of theſe chariots, which had been in uſe among the Canaanites eight hundred years before.

——Both they who are of Beth-ſhean and her towns, and they who are of the valley of Jezreel.] Which cities, it ſeems, lay near this mountain, to which Joſhua directed them, and both of them were poſſeſſed by the Canaanites.

Ver. 17. And Joſhua ſpake unto the houſe of Joſeph, even to Ephraim, and to Manaſſeh.] He was not moved, by their objections, from his reſolution; but told them, ——— Thou art a great people, and haſt great power.] That, by their own confeſſion, they were very numerous; and, conſequently, of great power.

——— Thou ſhalt not have one lot only.] And therefore need not be ſtraitned in their habitation, which they ſaid was not ſufficient for one tribe.

Ver. 18. But the mountain ſhall be thine.] For they ſhould have the mountain added to their portion; which he could not enlarge any other way, it being ſettled by a Divine Decree.

——— For it is a wood, and thou ſhalt cut it down.] Or, tho' it be a wood, yet they could cut it down, and grub it up; and then it would afford a commodious habitation.

——— And the out-goings of it ſhall be thine.] They ſhould have the product of it: Or, all the country below in the valley, ver. 16. ſhould be theirs alſo.

——— For thou ſhalt drive out the Canaanites, tho' they have iron chariots, and tho' they be ſtrong.] Joſhua anſwers all their objections, ver. 16. with an aſſurance that they ſhould be able, with the divine aſſiſtance, to diſpoſſeſs the preſent inhabitants, notwithſtanding their great force and power: For ſo God had commanded them to believe, and not be afraid of their chariots, which now ſeemed ſo terrible to them. See Deut. xx. 1.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 The Tabernacle is ſet up at Shiloh. 2 The remainder of the land is deſcribed, and divided into ſeven parts. 10 Joſhua divideth it by lot. 11 The lot and border of Benjamin. 21 Their cities.

AND the whole congregation of the children of Iſrael aſſembled together at Shiloh, and ſet up the tabernacle of the congregation there, and the land was ſubdued before them.

2 And there remained among the children of Iſrael ſeven tribes, which had not yet received their inheritance.

3 And Joſhua ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, How long are you ſlack to go to poſſeſs the land, which the LORD God of your fathers hath given you?

4 Give out from among you three men, for each tribe: and I will ſend them, and they ſhall riſe, and go through the land, and deſcribe it according to the inheritance of them, and they ſhall come again to me.

5 And they ſhall divide it into ſeven parts: Judah ſhall abide in their coaſt on the ſouth, and the houſe of Joſeph ſhall abide in their coaſts on the north.

6 Ye ſhall therefore deſcribe the land into ſeven parts, and bring the deſcription hither to me, that I may caſt lots for you here before the LORD our God.

7 But the Levites have no part among you, for the prieſthood of the LORD is their inheritance: and Gad, and Reuben, and half the tribe of Manaſſeh, have received their inheritance beyond Jordan on the eaſt, which Moſes the ſervant of the LORD gave them.

8 ¶ And the men aroſe, and went away: and Joſhua charged them that went to deſcribe the land, ſaying, Go, and walk through the land, and deſcribe it, and come again to me, that I may here caſt lots for you before the LORD in Shiloh.

9 And the men went, and paſſed through the land, and deſcribed it by cities into ſeven parts, in a book, and came again to Joſhua to the hoſt at Shiloh.

10 ¶ And Joſhua caſt lots for them in Shiloh, before the LORD: and there Joſhua divided the land unto the children of Iſrael according to their diviſions.

11 ¶ And the lot of the tribe of the children of Benjamin came up according to their families: and the coaſt of their lot came forth between the children of Judah, and the children of Joſeph.

12 And their border on the north ſide was from Jordan, and the border went up to the ſide of Jericho, on the north ſide, and went up through the mountains weſt-ward, and the goings-out thereof were at the wilderneſs of Beth-aven.

13 And the border went over from thence toward Luz, to the ſide of Luz (which is Beth-el) ſouth-ward, and the border de-ſcended to Ataroth-adar, near the hill that lieth on the ſouth ſide of the nether Beth-horon.

14 And the border was drawn thence, and compaſſed the corner of the ſea ſouth-ward, from the hill that lieth before Beth-horon ſouth-ward: and the goings-out thereof were at Kirjath-baal (which is Kir-jath-jearim) a city of the children of Judah: This was the weſt quarter.

15 And the ſouth quarter was from the end of Kirjath-jearim, and the border went out on the weſt, and went out to the well of waters of Nephtoah.

16 And the border came down to the end of the mountain that lieth before the valley of the ſon of Hinnom, and which is in the valley of the giants on the north, and deſcended to the valley of Hinnom, to the ſide of Jebuſi on the ſouth, and deſcended to En-rogel,

17 And was drawn from the north, and went forth to En-ſhemeſh, and went forth toward Geliloth, which is over-againſt the going up of Adummim, and deſcended to the ſtone of Bohan the ſon of Reuben.

18 And paſſed along toward the ſide over-againſt Arabah north-ward, and went down unto Arabah.

19 And the border paſſed along to the ſide of Beth-hoglah north-ward: and the out-goings of the border were at the north bay of the Salt-ſea, at the ſouth end of Jordan: This was the ſouth coaſt.

20 And Jordan was the border of it on the eaſt ſide. This was the inheritance of the children of Benjamin, by the coaſts thereof round about, according to their families.

21 Now the cities of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, according to their families, were Jericho and Beth-hoglah, and the valley of Keziz,

22 And Beth-arabah, and Zemaraim, and Beth-el,

23 And Avim, and Parah, and Ophrah,

24 And Chephar-haammonai, and Ophni, and Gaba: twelve cities with their villages.

25 Gibeon, and Ramah, and Beeroth,

26 And Mizpeh, and Chephirah, and Mozah,

27 And Rekem, and Irpeel, and Taralah,

28 And Zelah, Eleph, and Jebuſi (which is Jeruſalem) Gibeath, and Kirjath: fourteen cities with their villages. This is the inheritance of the children of Benjamin, according to their families.

Ver. 1. And the whole congregation of the children of Iſrael.] All their elders, and heads of their tribes, who repreſented the people of Iſrael, and are ſometimes meant by the whole congregation, as Bertram hath ſhewn in many inſtances, particularly in 1 Chron. xiii. 1, 2. &c. See L. de Repub. Judaica, in the latter end of cap. 6. and cap. 11. But here it may well ſignify the whole body of the people, who accompany'd the ark, in order to fix it in a new ſituation.

—— Aſſembled together at Shiloh.] A place in the tribe of Ephraim, not far from Jeruſalem; the great Uſher thinks, it was the ſame with Salem; but we cannot find any ground for that ſuppoſition.

—— And ſet up the tabernacle of the congregation there.] Which had hitherto remained in Gilgal; but now, by God's order, no doubt, for he was to chuſe the place of his own reſidence, Deut xii. 5, 11, 14, &c. was removed hither, together with the camp of Iſrael, which continued ſo long in Gilgal, merely becauſe the tabernacle was there. If it be enquired, what token God gave of his choice of this place, Mr Mede anſwers (Diſcourſe XLV Book 1.) perhaps it was by manifeſting ſome extraordinary token of his approbation, by accepting their ſacrifices; or, it may be, they conſulted him in this caſe by the oracle of Urim and Thummim. For, when he made choice of mount Sion, an angel ordered the prophet Gad to tell David he ſhould ſet up an altar in the treſhing-floor of Ornan; and there God anſwered him by fire, &c. See 1 Chron. xxi. 18, 26. Now the reaſon of its being tranſlated to Shiloh, was, probably, becauſe it would have been too far, after the diviſion of the land, for all the tribes of Iſrael to go to Gilgal, to tranſact all that the law required to be done at the tabernacle; which was now indiſpenſably to be performed, tho' while they lived in the wilderneſs, they did not conduct themſelves by theſe rules, Deut. xii. 8, 9, 10. and perhaps while they continued unſettled in Canaan, could not exactly obſerve them. This place alſo was very convenient for all the tribes to reſort to it, and likewiſe very ſafe, being guarded by the two powerful tribes of Judah and Ephraim. And it was, as we obſerved, in the lot of the latter, for it was fit it ſhould be where Joſhua was; who, being of this tribe, lived among them. Here it is thought the tabernacle continued for the ſpace of three hundred and fifty years, till the days of Samuel; but the learned archbiſhop Uſher reckons no more than three hundred and twenty-eight years.

—— And the land was ſubdued before them.] Or rather, for the land was ſubdued, &c. that is, continued quiet, without any oppoſition from the old inhabitants, ſince the conqueſt mentioned, xi. 23.

Ver. 2. And there remained among the children of Iſrael ſeven tribes, which had not yet received their inheritance.] For whom no lot had been drawn at Gilgal. The reaſon of which was, perhaps, becauſe the laſt mentioned tribes of the houſe of Joſeph, were not ſatisfied with the diviſion which was begun to be made there: And therefore Joſhua diſcontinued his proceedings till he had made a new ſurvey of the whole country. In order to which, God commanded him to remove hither; from whence, being in the middle of the country, they might accompliſh it with the greater facility, and in a more ſatisfactory manner to the children of Joſeph, by ſettling the houſe of God among them.

Ver. 3. And Joſhua ſaid unto the children of Iſrael.] Unto the congregation before-mentioned, ver. 1.

—— How long are you ſlack to go to poſſeſs the land, which the Lord God of your fathers hath given you?] He doth not reprove them for not taking poſſeſſion of the land that was conquered, without God's direction, by a lot, (for that was expreſly commanded) but for their being ſo remiſs in propoſing ſome means of making ſuch an equal diviſion as they deſired, that they might take poſſeſſion of the land, where their lot ſhould fall.

Ver. 4. Give out from among you three men, for each tribe.] Joſhua therefore propounds a method himſelf for their ſatisfaction; and ſuch a one, as they could not reaſonably diſlike, namely, that they ſhould chuſe three men (for he would not appoint them, but only give them orders ders what to do) out of each of the ſeven remaining tribes that were not provided for; or rather, out of the nine tribes and a half; that they who had already received their portion, might be willing to reſign up ſome part of it, if they found, upon the ſurvey, there was not ſufficient left for their brethren.

—— And I will ſend them, and they ſhall riſe, and go through the land.] I will give them orders to go immediately through the whole country, both that which was divided, and that which was not.

—— And deſcribe it.] Set down not only the dimenſions of it, but its condition and quality, whether barren or fruitful, mountainous or plain, &c.]

—— According to the inheritance of them.] Diſtributing the geographical deſcription into as many parts as there remain tribes unprovided of their inheritance.

—— And they ſhall come again to me.] Make their report to Joſhua, when they had compleated their work, that he might judge of it.

Ver. 5. And they ſhall divide it into ſeven parts] Of equal extent, with a juſt regard, as Joſephus obſerves, not merely to the quantity of ground, but the goodneſs of the ſoil. But there was no reſpect to the greater or leſſer number of perſons in each tribe: for then theſe men had given each tribe their portion, and there had been no need of a lot. Their buſineſs was to divide the country into ſeven equal portions, and leave God to appoint which portion ſhould fall to each tribe; who would have no reaſon to complain, when the diviſion was made by themſelves.

—— Judah ſhall abide in their coaſt on the ſouth, and the houſe of Joſeph ſhall abide in their coaſts on the north.] The lot of Judah, which was ſoutherly, and the lot of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, which, with reſpect to the former, were northerly, were not to be altered. But theſe tribes were to remain undiſturbed in their poſſeſſions, unleſs it ſhould be found, that they had more than they needed, and others had leſs. For this was the very reaſon of making a new and more exact ſurvey of the country, than had been made before the firſt diviſion; that there might be an allotment made more to every one's ſatisfaction, when they had a more perfect account of all the land. Accordingly, it is evident, that the tribe of Judah (by common conſent, no doubt) parted with ſome of their portion to the Simeonites, and the Danites, whoſe lot appeared to be too ſcanty, xix. 29, 41.

Ver. 6. Ye ſhall therefore deſcribe the land into ſeven parts, and bring the deſcription hither to me.] When the men, who were appointed to meaſure the country, had divided it into ſeven parts, Joſhua ordered that the deſcription thus divided, ſhould be laid before him.

—— That I may caſt lots for you here before the Lord, &c.] Whereby their poſſeſſions were ſettled and eſtabliſhed by a divine authority. For the lots being drawn before the ſanctuary, God was intreated to declare what portion every tribe ſhould have. Accordingly, it was their duty to look upon it as a ſacred appointment, and to be contented with it; for it was done at the very door of the tabernacle, as we read, xix. 51.

Ver. 7. But the Levites have no part among you, for the prieſthood of the Lord is their inheritance.] Joſhua declared, what had been often ſaid before, that in this diviſion of the land, the prieſts and Levites were to have no ſhare; God having otherwiſe provided for them. See xiii. 14, 32. xiv. 3.

—— And Gad and Reuben, and half the tribe of Manaſſeh, have received their inheritance beyond Jordan, &c.] And as for the reſt, no care was to be taken of them in this diviſion, becauſe Moſes had provided for them before they came over Jordan.

Ver. 8. And the men aroſe, and went away.] Being choſen by their brethren (as Joſhua directed, ver. 4.) to act in their name.

—— And Joſhua charged them that went to deſcribe the land, ſaying, Go, and walk through the land, and deſcribe it, &c.] Before they went, Joſhua gave them a charge to accompliſh the buſineſs in which they were employed, with care and fidelity; uſing their beſt diligence to be truly and fully informed; and, at their return, to give him an account of the particulars, that he might terminate all diſputes, by imploring God to aſſign every tribe their portion.

—— That I may here caſt lots for you, before the Lord in Shiloh.] Theſe words ſound as if Joſhua gave this charge in the preſence of God, before the ſanctuary, that the men might be excited to execute his orders with with greater diligence.

Ver. 9. And the men went and paſſed through the land.] Thro' the whole country, which the Iſraëlites had conquered.

—— And deſcribed it by cities.] Set down the name of every city, and its villages, and the territory about it, with its ſituation. For ſo, we ſuppoſe, Joſhua charged them.

—— Into ſeven parts, in a book.] Which contained maps, that exhibited a chorographical deſcription of all the cities, towns, mountains, plains, woods, and all other conditions and qualities of the ſoil.

—— And came again to Joſhua to the hoſt at Shiloh.] For the tabernacle being removed hither, the camp followed it, as we obſerved, ver. 1. And here it remained till the land was divided among the ſeven tribes, which could not be done in a ſhort time: For, Joſephus declares, they were ſeven months in taking this ſurvey, and making the deſcription above-mentioned.

Ver. 10. And Joſhua.] With the aſſiſtance of Eleazar and the princes, xiv. 1.

—— Caſt lots for them in Shiloh, before the Lord.] As he aſſured them he would, ver. 6.

—— And there Joſhua divided the land unto the children of Iſrael according to their diviſions.] That is, according to the diviſions made by the ſurveyors; which were ſo juſt and equal, that all conſented the lot ſhould determine what part ſhould belong to them.

Ver. 11. And the lot of the tribe of the children of Benjamin came up.] The providence of God ſo ordered it, that the children of Benjamin ſhould have the firſt lot of theſe ſeven, next to the children of Joſeph; they two, being the only ſons of Rachel, the beloved wife of Jacob.

—— According to their families.] To be divided according to their families.

—— And the coaſt of their lot came forth between the children of Judah.] Who lay on the ſouth of them.

—— And the children of Joſeph.] For the Ephraimites lay on the north of them. And it is obſervable, that in the bleſſing of Moſes, Benjamin is placed between Judah and Joſeph (Levi having no inheritance among them) Which prophecy of Moſes, was, by this lot, exactly accompliſhed concerning him, Deut. xxxiii. 12.

Ver. 12. And their border on the north-ſide was from Jordan, and the border went up to the ſide of Jericho, on the north-ſide.] Juſt thus the ſouth border of Ephraim proceeded from Jordan by Jericho, which was in the tribe of Benjamin. See xvi. 1, 7.

—— And went up through the mountains weſtward.] Through the mountainous country, which lay on the north of Jericho; it went up to the weſtern part of the country.

—— And the goings-out thereof were at the wilderneſs of Beth-aven.] A place near Beth-el; which, in after times, (when foul idolatry was committed there) was called Beth-avan, an houſe or place of iniquity, Hoſea iv. 15. x. 8.

Ver. 13. And the border went over from thence toward Luz, to the ſide of Luz, which is Beth-el, ſouthward.] On the ſouth-ſide of that city. See xvi. 2. The Jews think there were two Beth-els; one here named, in the confines of Benjamin and Joſeph, where Jacob had the viſion of the Ladder reaching up to heaven; and the other near Ai, viii. 6, 17.

—— And the border deſcended to Ataroth-adar.] Called Archi-ataroth, chap. xvi. 2.

—— Near the hill that lieth on the ſouth ſide of the nether Beth-horon.] Beth-horon was a city in the tribe of Ephraim, chap. xvi. 3. called, the nether, becauſe there was an higher at a ſmall diſtance from it, in the mountain adjoining. Tho' others will have the two Beth-horons to have been very remote from each other; one in the mountain of Ephraim, the other in the valley near Jordan.

Ver. 14. And the border was drawn thence.] In a line bending weſtward, as appears by what follows in the end of the verſe; which informs us, that the weſtern border began from Beth-heron the nether.

—— And

——And compaſſed the corner of the ſea ſouthward, from the hill that lieth before Beth-horon.] We cannot give any account of this border, according to our tranſlation: For, it is certain, it did not compaſs any corner of the Mediterranean, (and no other ſea can be here meant) nor came near unto it. Therefore, by peath, which we tranſlate corner, muſt be underſtood the ſide of the ſea. As if the ſacred hiſtorian had ſaid, it extended in a parallel line to the ſea. So the Vulgate hath it, over-againſt the ſea; and the LXX to the ſame purpoſe. And the word ſouthward is joined by the Vulgate, not to the ſea, but to the next words; ſouthward from the hill that lieth before Beth-horon.

Southward.] That is, the hill was to the ſouth of Beth-horon, as we read in the verſe before.

——And the goings-out thereof were at Kirjath-baal, (which is Kirjath-jearim) a city of the children of Judah.] See chap. xv. 60.

——This was the weſt quarter.] Here the peath, before-mentioned, (for it is the ſame word we before tranſlate corner) the weſt ſide, or quarter, ended: For that is meant by its out-goings.

Ver. 15. And the ſouth quarter.] Here is the ſame word, peath, again in the Hebrew.

——Was from the end of Kirjath-jearim, and the border went out on the weſt.] Did not go directly ſouth, but deflected a little toward the ſea, till it came to the well of waters of Nephtoah, as this verſe concludes; ſee chap. xv. 9. By conſidering of which, and the foregoing and following verſes, it will be unneceſſary to ſay much of this ſouth border of Benjamin; it being the ſame with the north border of Judah. For the very ſame places are named here, as are there, and in the ſame order; with this difference only, that in deſcribing this border, the ſacred penman proceeds from the weſt toward the eaſt; but, in deſcribing that of Judah, from the eaſt toward the weſt. So that Kirjath-jearim is there the north limits of Judah, as it is here the ſouth limits of Benjamin.

Ver. 16. And the border came down to the end of the mountain that lieth before the valley of the ſon of Hinnom, &c.] See chap. xv. 8.

——And deſcended to En-rogel.] See chap. xv. 7.

Ver. 17. And was drawn from the north, and went forth to En-ſhemeſh, and went forth toward Geliloth.] See chap. xv. where this place is called Gilgal.

——Which is over-againſt the going up of Adummim, and deſcended to the ſtone of Bohan, the ſon of Reuben.] See the ſame chapter, and ver. 6.

Ver. 18. And paſſed along toward the ſide over-againſt Arabah northward, and went down unto Arabah.] Called Beth-arabah, chap. xv. 6. and ſo the LXX have it here in this verſe.

Ver. 19. And the border paſſed along to the ſide of Beth-hoglah northward.] Leaving Beth-hoglah on the north of it; ſee chap. xv. 6.

——And the out-goings of the border were at the north bay of the Salt-ſea.] Its utmoſt progreſs was to the tongue or bay of the Salt-ſea, which is on the north part of it.

——At the ſouth end of Jordan.] Where Jordan ends toward the ſouth; being ſwallowed up by the Salt-ſea.

——This was the ſouth coaſt.] That is, hither it reached, and here it ended.

Ver. 20. And Jordan was the border of it on the eaſt ſide.] Till, near Jericho, it met with the bounds of the tribe of Ephraim and Manaſſeh.

——This was the inheritance of the children of Benjamin, by the coaſts thereof round about.] That is, a deſcription of its bounds, on all ſides.

——According to their families.] This inheritance was divided among as many families as were in that tribe.

Ver. 21. Now the cities of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, according to their families, were Jericho.] Having given a deſcription of the bounds of the country, the hiſtorian ſets down the principal cities in it. The firſt of which was well known, viz. Jericho; the territory of which remained, though the city it ſelf was deſtroyed: And perhaps there were ſome houſes there, though without walls or gates; which ſeem to be the only things which Joſhua commanded ſhould not be built, chap. vi. 26.

——And Beth-hoglah.] A city near Jericho, and not far from Jordan.

——And the valley of Keziz.] Rather, Emer-keziz; for a city is here meant, and not a valley. Or, it may be interpreted, Keziz, in the valley; that is, in the plain of Jericho.

Ver. 22. And Beth-arabah.] This city is reckoned to Judah, chap. xv. 61. being, it ſeems, in the confines of both tribes. It ſtood alſo in the plain of Jericho, ſignifying as much as Domus Campeſtris, an habitation in the fields: For there were large fields about it, as Bochart ſuppoſes; from whence a place in Aſſyria, for this reaſon, was called Araba, as he ſhews, Phaleg. lib. 4. cap. 21.

——And Zemaraim.] A city, it is probable, built by Zemari, the tenth ſon of Canaan, Gen. x. 18. There was a mountain alſo called by this name; from the ſame city, it is likely. For though it is ſaid to be mount Ephraim, 2 Chron. xiii. 14. it might alſo, in part, belong to Benjamin; as Betharaba, and the next cities, were the property of two tribes.

——And Beth-el.] A city in the confines of the tribe of Ephraim, and of Benjamin; and it ſeems to have belonged to both.

Ver. 23. And Avim, and Parah, and Ophrah] We know no more of theſe cities but their names.

Ver. 24. And Chepher-haammonai, and Opkni.] Theſe alſo are unknown cities.

——And Gaba.] This is often named in ſcripture, and called Gibeah, being that place where the barbarous fact was committed, which almoſt ruined this tribe, Judges xix. and is called Gibeah of Saul; becauſe it was his native country, where he made his reſidence, after he was king, 1 Sam. x. 26. And it was one of the cities of the prieſts, Joſh. xxi. 17.

——Twelve cities, with their villages.] Which ſeem to have been in the eaſtern part of their country.

Ver. 25. Gibeon, and Ramah, and Beeroth.] The firſt of theſe is well known from the ſtory of its ancient inhabitants, related in the ninth chapter of this book. It was alſo a city of the prieſts, chap. xxi. 17. and ſeated on a hill, as its very name imports. Ramah alſo was an eminent city on the north ſide of Jeruſalem, as Bethlehem was on the ſouth. So that Jeruſalem was in the road from the one to the other, as appears from the man that went from Bethlehem-Judah to Ramah, Judges xix. 2, 11, 13.

Beeroth alſo is notorious upon this account, that is, was one of the cities which cunningly joined with Gibeon to deceive Joſhua, and procure a peace, chapter ix. 17.

Ver. 26. And Mizpeh.] There were ſeveral cities of this name, as we have obſerved before, chap. xv. 38. And this was in the confines of the tribe of Judah: So that it ſeems to have belonged both to them, and to Benjamin, as ſeveral others did.

——And Chephirah.] Another of the cities depending upon Gibeon, chap. ix. 17.

——And Mozah.] An unknown city.

Ver. 27. And Rekem.] This is a city mentioned both by Euſebius and St. Jerom; but they do not inform us where it was; nor ſo much as mention the two next, Irpeel and Taralah.

Ver. 28. And Zelah, Eleph.] Two cities, of which no more than the names are remaining. Euſebius, and St. Jerom, mention the former, as in the tribe of Benjamin, but ſay no more.

——And Jebuſi, (which is Jeruſalem.)] See chap. xv. 63. where it is reckoned to the tribe of Judah; for both that tribe, and Benjamin, had an intereſt in it. The old city belonged to the tribe of Benjamin; to which, an addition being made, it belonged to Judah, (as ſome have ſuppoſed) that is, the north part, with mount Moriah, was in the porrion of Benjamin; but the ſouth part, wherein mount Sion was, belonged to Judah.

——Gibeath.] This was a diſtinct city from Gaba, ver. 24. and we ſuppoſe near Jeruſalem.

——And Kirjath.] The very name imports a city: Which, Euſebius and St. Jerom ſay, was under the metropolis of Gibeath, before-mentioned. Πόλις τῶν Μητροπολιν Γαβαθά.

——Fourteen cities, with their villages.] Which were in the weſtern part of this tribe.

——This is the inheritance of the children of Benjamin.] Which was one of the ſmalleſt, with reſpect to the quantity quantity of ground which they poſſeſſed; but the ſoil was the richeſt of all other tribes, as Joſephus informs us.

——According to their families.] All the families of the Benjamites were diſpoſed of into theſe great cities, and the territories belonging to them; in which, it is probable, there were leſſer cities, not here named. For we find two cities of the prieſts in this tribe, which are not among thoſe here ſet down, namely, Anathoth, and Almon, chap. xxi. 18.

CHAP. XIX.

1 The lot of Simeon, 10 Of Zebulun, 17 Of Iſſachar, 24 Of Aſher, 32 Of Naphtali, 40 Of Dan. 49 The children of Iſrael give an inheritance to Joſhua.

AND the ſecond lot came forth to Simeon, even for the tribe of the children of Simeon, according to their families: and their inheritance was within the inheritance of the children of Judah.

2 And they had in their inheritance, Beer-ſheba, and Sheba, and Moladah,

3 And Hazar-ſhual, and Balah, and Azem,

4 And Eltolad, and Bethul, and Hormah,

5 And Ziklag, and Beth-markaboth, and Hazar-ſuſah,

6 And Beth-lebaoth, and Sharuhen: thirteen cities, and their villages.

7 Ain, Remmon, and Ether, and Aſhan: four cities, and their villages.

8 And all the villages that were round about theſe cities, to Baalath-beer, Ramath of the ſouth. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Simeon according to their families.

9 Out of the portion of the children of Judah, was the inheritance of the children of Simeon: for the part of the children of Judah was too much for them: therefore the children of Simeon had their inheritance within the inheritance of them.

10 ¶ And the third lot came up for the children of Zebulun, according to their families: and the border of their inheritance was unto Sarid.

11 And their border went up toward the ſea, and Maralah, and reached to Dabbaſheth, and reached to the river that is before Jokneam,

12 And turned from Sarid eaſt-ward, toward the ſun-riſing, unto the border of Chiſloth-tabor, and then goeth out to Daberath, and goeth up to Japhia,

13 And from thence paſſeth on along on the eaſt to Gittah-hepher, to Ittah-kazin, and goeth out to Remmon-methoar to Neah.

14 And the border compaſſeth it on the north ſide to Hannathon: and the out-goings thereof are in the valley of Jiphthah-el.

15 And Kattath, and Nahallal, and Shimron, and Idalah, and Beth-lehem: twelve cities with their villages.

16 This is the inheritance of the children of Zebulun, according to their families, theſe cities with their villages.

17 ¶ And the fourth lot came out to Iſſachar, for the children of Iſſachar, according to their families.

18 And their border was toward Jezreel, and Cheſſulloth, and Shunem,

19 And Hapharaim, and Shihon, and Anaharath,

20 And Rabbith, and Kiſhion, and Abez,

21 And Remeth, and En-gannim, and En-haddah, and Beth-pazzez.

22 And the coaſt reacheth to Tabor, and Shahazimah, and Beth-ſhemeſh, and the out-goings of their border were at Jordan: ſixteen cities with their villages.

23 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Iſſachar, according to their families, the cities and their villages.

24 ¶ And the fifth lot came out for the tribe of the children of Aſher, according to their families.

25 And their border was Helcath, and Hali, and Beten, and Achſhaph,

26 And Alammelech, and Amad, and Miſheal; and reacheth to Carmel weſtward, and to Shihor-libnath,

27 And turneth toward the ſun-riſing to Beth-dagon, and reacheth to Zebulun, and to the valley of Jiphthah-el, toward the north ſide of Beth-emek, and Neiel, and goeth out to Cabul on the left-hand,

28 And Hebron, and Rehob, and Hammon, and Kanah, even unto great Zidon:

29 And then the coaſt turneth to Ramah, and to the ſtrong city Tyre, and the coaſt turneth to Hoſah: and the out-goings thereof are at the ſea from the coaſt to Achzib.

30 Ummah alſo, and Aphek, and Rehob: twenty and two cities with their villages.

31 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Aſher, according to their families, theſe cities with their villages.

32 ¶ The ſixth lot came out to the children of Naphtali: even for the children of Naphtali, according to their families.

33 And their coaſt was from Heleph, from Allon to Zaanannim, and Adami, Nekeb, and Jabneel, unto Lakum: and the out-goings thereof were at Jordan.

34 And then the coaſt turneth weſt-ward to Aznoth-tabor, and goeth out from thence to Hukkok, and reacheth to Zebulun on the ſouth ſide, and reacheth to Aſher on the weſt ſide, and to Judah upon Jordan toward the ſun-riſing.

35 And the fenced cities are Ziddim, Zer, and Hammath, Rakkath, and Cinnereth,

36 And Adamah, and Ramah, and Hazor,

37 And Kedeſh, and Edrei, and Enhazor,

38 And Iron, and Migdal-el, Horem, and Beth-anath, and Beth-ſhemeſh: nineteen cities with their villages.

39 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Naphtali, according to their families, the cities and their villages.

40 ¶ And the ſeventh lot came out for the tribe of the children of Dan, according to their families.

41 And the coaſt of their inheritance was Zorah, and Eſhtaol, and Ir-ſhemeſh,

42 And Shaalabbin, and Ajalon, and Jethlah,

43 And Elon, and Thimnathah, and Ekron,

44 And Eltekeh, and Gibbethon, and Baalath,

45 And Jehud, and Bene-berak, and Gath-rimmon,

46 And Me-jarkon, and Rakkon, with the border before Japho.

47 And the coaſt of the children of Dan went out too little for them: therefore the children of Dan went up to fight againſt Leſhem, and took it, and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and poſſeſſed it, and dwelt therein, and called Leſhem, Dan, after the name of Dan their father.

48 This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Dan, according to their families, theſe cities with their villages.

49 ¶ When they had made an end of dividing the land for inheritance by their coaſts, the children of Iſrael gave an inheritance to Joſhua the ſon of Nun, among them:

50 According to the word of the LORD, they gave him the city which he asked, even Timnath-ſerah in mount Ephraim: and he built the city, and dwelt therein.

51 Theſe are the inheritances which Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael, divided for an inheritance by lot, in Shiloh before the LORD, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: ſo they made an end of dividing the country.

• Ver. 1. And the ſecond lot came forth to Simeon, even for the tribe of the children of Simeon.] Both the LXX, and the Vulgate, leave out the latter part of theſe words, as if they were ſuperfluous; and only ſay, the ſecond lot came forth to Simeon. But we ſuppoſe, the words following, in the Hebrew, are intended to ſhew, that tho' their inheritance was within that of the tribe of Judah, (as the ſucceeding words inform us) yet thoſe cities were not all that were given to this tribe, but they had another ſhare by lot that fell to them: And God diſpoſed it ſo, that the very next lot to Benjamin came up for them; Simeon being the eldeſt ſon of Jacob, that was unprovided for.

——According to their families.] Which was divided by Eleazar, Joſhua, and the princes, among their ſeveral families.

——And their inheritance was within the inheritance of the children of Judah.] So we well tranſlate it; for tho' the word in the Hebrew be (betoch) in the midſt, of the inheritance of Judah, yet it ſignifies no more than within. For the lot of Simeon did not lie in the very heart, but in the skirts of the country of Judah: From whoſe northern and weſtern border ſome part was cut off, and given to the Simeonites; for the reaſon mentioned ver. 9.

Ver. 2. And they had in their inheritance Beer-ſheba, and ſheba.] Or rather, Beer-ſheba, which is Sheba: For they were one and the ſame place; ſometimes called at length, Beer-ſheba, and ſometimes contracted into Sheba; nothing being more common than to cut off the beginnings of the names of towns and places, as Bochart hath ſhewn in many inſtances, in his Phaleg. lib. 2. cap. 24. which he repeats in his Hierozoicon, P. 1. lib. 2. cap. 15. And certainly it is ſo here; for otherwiſe it could not have been ſaid, ver. 6. there were thirteen cities in all, but fourteen; for there are ſo many, if Sheba be diſtinct from Beer-ſheba. Which was the laſt city in the ſouth belonging to the land of Iſrael. From whence the common ſaying, From Dan to Beer-ſheba, to expreſs the whole length of the country; from Dan in the north, to Beer-ſheba in the ſouth.

——And Moladah.] This is mentioned before, in the account we had of the lot of Judah, chap. xv. 26.

Ver. 3. And Hazar-ſhual.] A place abounding in foxes.

——And Balah.] The ſame that is mentioned in the ſouth of Judah, chap. xv. 29.

——And Azem.] It ſignifies in Hebrew, great ſtrength. We read of it no where elſe but in this place, and 1 Chron. iv. 29. where it is called Ezem.

Ver. 4. And Eltolad.] Called in the ſame book and chapter of Chronicles, Tolad; the firſt ſyllable being cut off, as we obſerved, ver. 2. it often is.

——And Bethul.] Called there Bethuel. Which ſome will have to be the ſame with Bethulia, where Judith dwelt; becauſe ſhe was of the tribe of Simeon. But that is a miſtake; for this was in the ſouth of Judah, and that a city in Galilee.

——And Hormah.] Which is mentioned in the ſame place, 1 Chron. iv. 30. and was one of the cities, to whom David ſent part of the ſpoil he took from the Amalekites, 1 Sam. xxx. 30.

Ver. 5. And Ziklag.] A neighbouring city, as appears from both the fore-mentioned places.

——And Beth-markaboth, and Hazar-ſuſah.] It is a very probable conjecture of Bochart, that theſe were two of the cities where Solomon kept his chariots and horſes, 1 Kings x. 26. For the former of theſe ſignifies the houſe of chariots; and the other, the village of horſes. For it is called Hazar-ſuſim, in the plural number, 1 Chron. iv. 31. See Hierozoicon, P. 1. l. 2. c. 9.

Ver. 6. And Beth-lebaoth, and Sharuhen.] They ſeem to be the ſame cities called in after-times Beth-birei, and Shaaraim, 1 Chron. iv. 31.

—— Thirteen cities, and their villages.] See ver. 1.

Ver. 7. Ain, Remmon, and Ether, and Aſhan.] One of theſe towns is otherwiſe called in 1 Chron. iv. 32. namely, Etam, not Ether; and a fifth is added; which ſhews, that all the cities and towns belonging to Simeon are not here mentioned; no more than all thoſe belonging to Benjamin, as we obſerved on ver. 28 of the foregoing chapter. Aſhan alſo is thought by Bochart (in the place aforenamed) to be the ſame with Chor-aſhan in 1 Sam. xxx. 30. by cutting off the firſt ſyllable.

—— Four cities, and their villages.] Which are mentioned ſeparate from the reſt; either becauſe they were in another part of the country; or becauſe they were not properly cities, but only Chatſerim (large villages) as they are expreſly called, 1 Chron. iv. 32. that is, towns which were without walls. Here indeed they are called cities; but that muſt be underſtood largely, to make it agree with the Chronicles, for towns of more than ordinary bigneſs.

Ver. 8. And all the villages that were round about theſe cities.] Here the word Chatſerim (villages) is oppoſed to cities; and ſignifies all the towns great and ſmall, that lay about all the cities before-mentioned.

—To Baalath-beer, Ramath.] This is the name but of one city, called ſimply Baal, in 1 Chron. iv. 33. and is that city in the tribe of Judah, mentioned ch. xv. ver. 24. or ver 29. As far as which city the bounds of the tribe of Simeon extended: Some think, this is the city which Solomon repaired, and made larger and ſtronger, 1 Kings ix. 18.

—— Of the ſouth.] This doth not relate to the ſituation of the city before-mentioned; but of the inheritance of this tribe, which was on the ſouth of Judah.

Ver. 9. Out of the portion of the children of Judah was the inheritance of Simeon.] For which reaſon the bounds of this tribe on all ſides are not deſcribed, becauſe that was ſufficiently done in the deſcription of the poſſeſſion of Judah; out of which the inheritance of this tribe was taken.

—— For the part of the children of Judah was too much for them.] They who were ſent to make a new ſurvey of the whole land, found that the former ſurveyors had not meaſured it exactly; but left one diviſion too big in proportion to the reſt, which fell to the tribe of Judah; who had now, therefore, a large ſhare cut from them; becauſe they had too much, and others too little.

—Therefore the children of Simeon had their inheritance within the inheritance of them.] Within that lot, which was at firſt given to the tribe of Judah; yet not abſolutely given, but ſo that, if it appeared there was not ſufficient for the reſt of their brethren, and they had more than enough, that error ſhould be corrected, by taking ſomething from them, and giving it to another tribe; as it was now in this new allotment.

Ver. 10. And the third lot came up for the children of Zebulun, according to their families.] He was not the next brother; for Iſſachar was born before him. But he is mentioned before Iſſachar, both in the bleſſing of Jacob, Gen. xlix. 13. and of Moſes, Deut. xxxiii. 18.

—— And the border of their inheritance was unto Sarid.] No more is ſaid of this place by Euſebius, than that it was ὅριον Ζαβουλών, the bound or limit of Zebulun; and St. Jerom declares the ſame. By what follows, it ſeems to have been the ſouth-weſt border.

Ver. 11. And their border went up toward the ſea.] That is, the Mediterranean, which was in the weſt.

—And Maralah, and reached to Dabbaſheth.] Theſe were the cities in the weſtern borders, as appears by the following words.

—— And reached to the river that is before Jokneam.] See xii. 22.

Ver. 12. And turned from Sarid eaſtward toward the ſun-riſing.] This is the deſcription of the ſouth-border; which extended from Sarid in the weſt, as far as Jordan in the eaſt.

—— Unto the border of Chiſloth-tabor.] A city near mount Tabor in the tribe of Iſſachar, ver 18. For, as on the weſt the Zebulunites were contiguous to the tribe of Manaſſeh; ſo, toward the eaſt, they were to the tribe of Iſſachar.

—— And then goth out to Daberath.] A city alſo in the tribe of Iſſachar, xxi. 28.

—— And goeth up to Japhia.] It is uncertain where this city was, tho' ſome think it to be the ſtrong city which Joſephus calls Japha (L. 2. de Bello Jud. cap. 25.) and places it in Galilee near Jotapata.

Ver. 13. And from thence paſſeth on along on the eaſt to Gittah-hepher.] This ſeems to be a deſcription of the eaſtern border: We read of the land of Hepher, 1 Kings iv. 10. which was near the ſea of Galilee. There this city was, in which Jonah the prophet was born, 2 Kings xiv. 25.

—— To Ittah-kazin.] This city, it is likely, was upon the ſame ſea of Galilee, called Geneſaret, which the Vulgate calls Thacaſin.

—— And goeth out to Remmon-methoar to Neah.] Here the eaſtern border ended (for that is meant by the phraſe goeth out) at the ſea of Geneſaret; ſo Joſephus expreſly affirms. See alſo Gen. xlix. 13.

Ver. 14. And the border compaſſeth it on the north-ſide to Hannathon.] Here begins the deſcription of the northern bo der; which, from the laſt-named place, went in a bending line toward Hannathon, a city, it is ſuppoſed, in this tribe.

—— And the out-goings thereof are in the valley of Jiphthah-el.] Here the northern border ended; but we know no more of this valley of Jiphthah-el, than that it was in the tribe of Aſher, in the confines of this tribe, ver. 27.

Ver. 15. And Kattath, and Nahallal, and Shimron, and Idalah, and Bethlehem.] It is not certain whether theſe cities belonged to Zebulun, or are ſet down as places upon which this tribe border'd. Of the two firſt, we can give no account, but we read of Shimron as a principal city, which had a king in it conquered by Joſhua. See xii. 20. And Idalah is mentioned by St. Jerom (De locis Hebraicis) and called Jadela, as if were compounded of Jad (which ſignifies a place, Deut. xxv. 12.) and Ela (a goddeſs) being the place where Venus was worſhipped, as Bochart conjectures, Lib. 1. Canaan, cap. 3. As for Beth-lehem, we are not to take it for the place where our Saviour was born, which is called Bethlehem-Judah, to diſtinguiſh it from this, which was far from it, —— Twelve cities, with their villages.] Here are more cities than twelve; therefore ſome of them are mentioned only as the boundaries of this country. There is no doubt but thoſe mentioned ver. 13. were in this tribe, and many think, thoſe five, here mentioned in this, were ſo likewiſe. Jokneam likewiſe belonged to it; but which were the reſt to make up the number twelve cannot be determined.

Ver. 16. This is the inheritance of the children of Zebulun, according to their families, theſe cities with their villages.] That is, theſe were the boundaries of it; but all the cities belonging to it are not here enumerated; for we read of two, Kartah, and Dimnah, xxi. 34, 35. which are not here named; and indeed twelve cities, like theſe, hardly ſeem ſufficient for ſixty thouſand men, (Numb. xxvi. 27.) therefore they were only the principal; and all perhaps that the meaſurers of the land had noted in their book.

Ver. 17. And the fourth lot came out to Iſſachar, for the children of Iſſachar, according to their families.] Thus far there is ſome kind of order obſerved in theſe lots; Iſſachar being brother to Zebulun by the ſame mother.

Ver. 18. And their border was toward Jezreel.] This was one of the royal ſeats of the kings of Iſrael in after-times, 1 Kings xxi. 1. Euſebius and St. Jerom place it in the tribe of Manaſſeh, but it ought to be conſidered as belonging to this tribe, as the next place is agreed to be. There was another in the tribe of Judah, xv. 56.

—— And Cheſſulloth.] Mentioned ver. 12. and which St. Jerom and Euſebius place in the tribe of Iſſachar, under the name of Acheſeloth.

—— And Shunem.] Where that noble lady lived, who entertained Eliſha at her houſe, 2 Kings iv. 8. 12.

And

And where Abiſhag, the wife of David in his old age, was born, 1 Kings i. 3.

Ver. 19. And Hapharaim, and Shihon, and Anaharath.] The ſacred hiſtorian doth not deſcribe the borders on all ſides of this tribe, but only ſets down ſome principal cities; for it lying between Manaſſeh and Zebulun, the ſituation of it was ſufficiently known; and they do but gueſs, who ſay theſe ſix cities, named in the preceding verſe and in this, were in the ſouthern border.

Ver. 20. And Rabbith, and Kiſhion, and Abez.] Theſe three cities, and the two next that follow, ver. 21. are ſuppoſed by ſome to have conſtituted the weſtern boundary.

Ver. 21. And Remeth and En-gannim.] Here the ſame perſons imagine the weſtern border ended.

——— En-haddah, and Beth-pazzez.] Theſe two, and the three next, ver. 22. are conceived to have been the northern limits.

Ver. 22. And the coaſt reacheth to Tabor.] That is, this northern border; for mount Tabor was in the north, and this city lay near it, and received its name from the mount, or gave its own name to it.

——— And Shahazimah, and Beth-ſhemeſh.] Here the northern border ended. There was another Beth-ſhemeſh in the tribe of Naphtali, ver. 38. and a third in the tribe of Judah, xxi. 16.

——— And the out-goings of their border were at Jordan.] This makes it probable, that the former account, given as we obſerved by ſome perſons of its other borders, is not true, becauſe it leaves no city for the eaſtern boundary near Jordan; nor any for the middle of the country.

——— Sixteen cities, with their villages.] This makes it evident, that Tabor was a city; otherwiſe there would be but fifteen.

Ver. 23. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Iſſachar, according to their families, the cities and their villages.] Theſe were their principal cities, but, in all probability, there were others, for we read of two, which are not mentioned here, xxi. 28, 29. namely, Dabareh, and Jarmuth; yet there are thoſe who think Jarmuth is but another name for Remeth, mentioned ver. 2. which ſeems to us to be altogether improbable.

Ver. 24. And the fifth lot came out for the tribe of the children of Aſher, according to their families.] No reaſon can be aſſigned for this order; unleſs it be, that God was pleaſed to place this tribe, as being deſcended from the hand-maid of Leah, not far from Zebulun, one of Leah's ſons. As for Gad, the elder brother of Aſher, he was provided-for before, on the other ſide of Jordan.

Ver. 25. And their border was Helkath, and Hali, and Beten, and Achſhaph.] We know no more of the three firſt of theſe cities, than their names; but the laſt of them was very conſiderable, mention being made of the king of Achſhaph, xi. 1. xii. 20. The firſt of them alſo we find was a Levitical city, xxi. 31. called Hukok, in 1 Chron. vi. 75. It appears likewiſe, by the mention of Carmel in the next verſe, unto which this border extended, that theſe cities were ſituated in the weſt, near the Mediterranean ſea.

Ver. 26. And Alammelech, and Amad, and Miſheal; and reacheth to Carmel weſtward.] Or, by the ſea, not far from Ptolemais, to diſtinguiſh it from the other Carmel, in the tribe of Judah, near Hebron. See xv. 55. Here the great prophet Elijah ſometimes dwelt, and confounded the worſhippers of Baal by a ſtupendous miracle; but we are as ignorant of the three cities mentioned in this verſe, as we are of the other in the preceding.

——— And to Shihor-libnath.] Whether this was a city (ſome fancy Ptolemais) or a promontory, or a muddy river (for there are theſe different opinions concerning it) we cannot take upon us to determine.

Ver. 27. And turneth toward the ſun-riſing.] It turned from the ſea toward the eaſt; and from thence northward, bending toward the weſt again; for there are no borders or ſides of this tribe deſcribed: But from the ſouth part of the ſea it extended eaſtward, and then to the north, in the form of a bow, toward the north part of the ſame ſea where Zidon was, ver. 28.

—— To Beth-dagon.] There was a place of this name mentioned before, in the tribe of Judah, xv. 41. where it is thought there was a famous temple of Dagon, the god of the Philiſtines.

——— And reacheth to Zebulun, and to the valley of Jipthah-el.] And ſo touched upon the northern border of the tribe of Zebulun; where the valley of Jipthah-el lay. See ver. 14.

——— Toward the north-ſide of Beth-emek, and Neiel.] The ſituation of theſe is not known; only Euſebius and St. Jerom declare, that Beth-emek lay in a valley, in this tribe, as the word ſeems to import.

——— And goeth out to Cabul on the left hand.] On the north-ſide (called the left-hand) of this city, which was ſituated in the tribe of Aſher, this border ended. Some have been ſo frivolous as from hence to argue, that this book was written long after the time of Joſhua; becauſe the land of Cabul (1 Kings ix. 13.) was not known till the days of Solomon, when Hiram gave this name to the land preſented to him by that king; as if there were no difference between the land, and the city of Cabul; when one of them was a little region, containing twenty towns, and the other a ſmall place in the confines of Ptolemais, both of them in the tribe of Aſher. They are plainly diſtinguiſhed by Joſephus, who calls one of them γῆν Χαβαλῶν, the land of Cabul; and the other, κώμην, the village of Cabul.

Ver. 28. And Hebron.] Called Elbon by the LXX, and by the Vulgate, Abran; to diſtinguiſh it, we ſuppoſe, from Hebron in the land of Judah.

—— And Rehob.] There were two cities ſo called in this tribe. See ver. 30. One of them was a Levitical city, xxi. 31. and the Canaanites kept poſſeſſion either of that, or the other, Judges i. 31.

—— And Hammon.] There was a Levitical city of this name in the tribe of Naphtali, 1 Chron. vi. 76. called Hammoth-dor in xxi. 32. of this book.

—— And Kanah.] There were two cities of this name; one in the upper Galilee, which was Kanah the greater; and the other in the lower Galilee, called Kanah the leſs. The greater is here meant, and it was near Zidon. The leſſer was that where our bleſſed Saviour turned water into wine, and of which Nathaniel and the Syrophœnician woman were inhabitants.

—— Even unto great Zidon.] See before, concerning this city, xi. 8.

Ver. 29. And then the coaſt turneth to Ramah.] Which was another city on the northern part of the Mediterranean ſea.

——— And to the ſtrong city Tyre.] This tranſlation is queſtionable; for we never read one word of the city Tyre (unleſs it be here) until the days of David; tho' we often read of Sidon in the books of Moſes; even in the prophecy of Jacob. And Homer himſelf, who frequently mentions Sidon, and the Sidonians, never names Tyre. Therefore, it is highly probable, ſome other place is meant by Tzor, (as our margin notes the word is in the Hebrew) which was a fenced city, as we render the word here tranſlated ſtrong, ver. 35. And, perhaps, there were ſeveral cities called by this name of Tzor, or Tyre, beſide that famous one in future times; particularly Palætyrus, which ſignifies Old Tyre. And, it is no improbable conjecture of Campegius Vitringa, that into theſe two places, Sidon and Tzor, many of the Canaanites fled, to ſecure themſelves when Joſhua invaded them: For tzor ſignifies not only a rock, but any ſtrong and fortified place; from whence it is poſſible, the Latin word turris, and our Engliſh word tower, are derived. Certain it is, that theſe were two celebrated cities, ἐνδοξικοὶ λαμπροὶ, as Strabo calls them, lib. 16. where he declares, they were ſo anciently, as well as in his time; inſomuch, that it was uncertain which was the metropolis of the Phœnicians. But he undoubtedly means the New Tyre, which was built in an iſland; for the Old Tyre was on the continent.

——— And the coaſt turneth to Hoſah.] The coaſt declined a little toward a city of this name.

——— And the out-goings thereof are at the ſea from the coaſt to Achzib.] It ended at the country which belonged to Achzib; for ſo hebel, which we here tranſlate coaſt, ſignifies. In proper ſpeaking, indeed, it imports a cord, with which ground was meaſured; and thence was uſed to ſignify the portion of ground it ſelf, which was meaſured by that cord or line. Thus we read of Hebel Argob, the region of Argob, Deut. iii. 13. And Hebel Hajam, the region of the ſea, Zeph. ii. 5. Achzib, according according to St. Jerom, is that place, which in after-times was called Ecdippa, by Pliny and others.

Ver. 30. Ummah alſo, and Aphek, and Rehob.] It is probable theſe were three cities in the heart of the country of Aſher.

——Twenty and two cities with their villages.] There are more than this number here mentioned, though we do not reckon Carmel, nor Jipthah-el; one of which was a mountain, the other a valley. Therefore ſome of them were only the boundaries of this tribe, but did not belong to their poſſeſſion.

Ver. 31. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Aſher according to their families, theſe cities with their villages.] That is, theſe were the moſt eminent cities; tho' it be probable there were ſome other; for we read of one called Abdon, chap. xxi. 30. which is not mentioned here.

Ver. 32. The ſixth lot came out to the children of Naphtali: even for the children of Naphtali, according to their families.] Here the younger ſon of Bilhah, the handmaid of Rachel, is preferred before the elder, who was Dan, (Gen. xxx. 6, 8.) as Zebulun was before Iſſachar. Such was the method of Divine Providence in that nation, to convince them, that they ought not to value themſelves too highly, as they were apt to do, upon their external privileges.

Ver. 33. And their coaſt was from Heleph, from Allon to Zaanannim, and Adami, Nekeb, and Jabneel unto Lakum.] The Sacred Penman has not informed us what particular coaſt this was; but, by what follows, it appears to have been the northern border where theſe cities were ſituated, near Lebanon and Sidon, and the reſt of the northern tract of Aſher's country: For Naphtali comprehended the Upper Galilee.

——And the out-goings thereof were at Jordan.] This border ended at that river, and at the very fountain of it, which was at the foot of Libanus.

Ver. 34. And then the coaſt turneth weſt-ward to Aznoth-tabor, and goeth out from thence to Hukkok.] The ſouthern border began at the former of theſe cities, and terminated at the latter.

—— And reacheth to Zebulun on the ſouth ſide.] Toucheth on the confines of the tribe of Zebulun; ſo that the north ſide of Zebulun was the ſouth ſide of Naphtali.

——And reacheth to Aſher on the weſt ſide.] This is a ſhort account of their weſtern border, which extended as far as the limits of the tribe of Aſher.

—— And to Judah upon Jordan toward the ſun-riſing.] It was not near Judah, there being ſeveral tribes between them. Therefore the meaning is, this tribe had a communication with that of Judah, by means of the river Jordan. So the word upon, in our tranſlation, ought to be interpreted. This river afforded them the convenience of carrying merchandizes to Judah, or bringing them from thence. And thus ſome think the prophecy of Moſes was accompliſhed, Deut. xxxiii. 23. Poſſeſs thou the weſt and the ſouth. Which doth not ſignify, that they had any land in the ſouth; but that they trafficked with that country by the means of Jordan.

Ver. 35. And the fenced cities are Ziddim, Zer, and Hammath, Rakkath, and Cinnereth.] Theſe were northern cities, as appears by that mentioned in the midſt, namely, Hammath, or Hamath, which was the utmoſt bounds of the land of Iſrael northward. See Numb. xiii. 21. xxxiv. 8. 1 Kings viii. 65. It ſeems to have derived its name from the youngeſt ſon of Canaan, who probably was its founder, as his eldeſt ſon was of Sidon, Gen. x. 18. It continued a famous city a long time; for, in the days of David, we read how the king of it artfully made his peace with that prince, by a very conſiderable preſent, 2 Sam. viii. 9, &c.

Rakkath, which immediately follows Hammath, is, in the opinion of ſome Jews, the ſame with Tiberias. So the author of the book de Cippis Hebraicis, ſet forth by Hottinger. Whence the Talmudiſts, as he obſerves, ſay, Rakkath is Zipporia; which was called Rakkath, becauſe it was ſeated on the bank of a river. It was alſo called Mœſia, and at laſt, Tiberias; tho' other Jewiſh authors make Rakkath different from that city.

—— Cinnereth.] This was a place upon the ſea of Tiberias, and in it were delightful gardens, and a kind of paradiſe. Whence it was called Geneſer; as much as to ſay, the gardens of princes (Gannoth-ſarim.) And it had the name of Cinnereth from its ſweetneſs and pleaſures, as the Jews ſay, (Cod. Megill) Kinnereth is Ginſer. And why is it called Cinnereth? becauſe its fruits are as ſweet to the taſte, as the ſound of a harp is to the ear. See Hottinger, in his annotations on the fore-named book, p. 36.

As to the two firſt cities, Ziddim and Zer, we cannot ſay any thing of them.

Ver. 36. And Adamah, and Ramah, and Hazor.] We may gueſs where theſe cities were ſeated, by Hazor, the laſt of them, to which they were neighbours. See concerning it, chap. xi. 1.

Ver. 37. And Kedeſh, and Edrei, and En-hazor.] The firſt of theſe was a Levitical city, chap. xxi. 32. in which that famous captain, Barak, was born, Judg. iv. 6. where it is called Kedith-Naphtali, to diſtinguiſh it from thoſe of that name in other tribes. Of the other two cities we know nothing.

Ver. 38. And Iron, and Migdal-el, Horem, and Beth-anath, and Beth-ſhemeſh.] It is generally known that there was another Beth-ſhemeſh in the tribe of Judah; and that this city, and Beth-anath, the children of Naphtali could not conquer, Judges i. 33. but we know no more of them, nor of the reſt, ſave only that Euſebius declares, there was a large village, called Magdal-el, between Dora and Ptolemais.

——Nineteen cities with their villages.] Six of which were fenced cities, certainly belonging to this tribe; and there are as many more mentioned as make up twenty-three. Some of which, therefore, muſt be accounted as bordering cities, or only large villages, and not properly cities.

Ver. 39. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Naphtali according to their families, the cities and their villages.] This muſt be underſtood (as in the account of the fore-mentioned tribes) of the principal cities; for there were more beſide theſe, as appears from chap. xxi. 32. where Hammoth-dor, and Kartan, are enumerated among the Levitical cities in this tribe, which are not mentioned here.

Ver. 40. And the ſeventh lot came out for the tribe of the children of Dan, &c.] They were the only remaining tribe that was to be provided for.

Ver. 41. And the coaſt of their inheritance was Zorah, and Eſhtaol, and Ir-ſhemeſh.] The author of this book doth not here deſcribe the lot of the children of Dan by its borders; but mentions the cities that were comprehended in it. Some of which were at firſt given to Judah; out of whoſe ſhare, it being too large, ſome cities were taken for the Danites, as others likewiſe were for the Simeonites. And, it is certain, the two firſt of theſe fell to Judah, in the firſt diviſion of the land, chap. xv. 33. They both were very eminent places, for the birth and burial, and mighty actions of Sampſon: For at Zorah he was born, Judges xiii. 2. Between Zorah and Eſhtaol he was buried, Judges xvi. 31. And here the Spirit of God began to operate upon him at certain times, chap. xiii. 25. It is probable alſo, that Ir-ſhemeſh was originally in the tribe of Judah, it being of much the ſame ſignification with Beth-ſhemeſh: For one ſignifies, the city of the ſun; the other, the houſe, or place, of the ſun.

Ver. 42. And Shaalabbin.] Which the Amorites kept in their poſſeſſion, Judg. i. 35. where, by a ſmall variation of letters, it is called Shaalbin; and in ſome copies of the LXX, tranſlated, ἐν ᾧ ᾗ αἱ ἀλωπεκες, and in others, ἐν Θέλαξιν. And, in our preſent LXX, both theſe are retained: For a fox, in the Arabian language, is called thalab; and, in the Phœnician, (which is half Arabic) ſaalab.

——And Ajalon.] Another city which the Amorites kept from the children of Iſrael, as we find Judg. i. 35 It was one of the Levitical cities, chap. xxi. 23. and that famous place, mentioned chap. x. 13.

——And Jethlah.] We know no more of it, than that it was a city in this tribe.

Ver. 43. And Elon, and Thimnathah, and Ekron.] It is certain, that the laſt of theſe three cities was at firſt given to Judah, chap. xv. 45. But Thimnathah was not the ſame with Timnath in the ſame tribe, (chap. xv. 10, 57.) but quite different from it, as Gibeath was from Geba. For Sampſon went down to this city Timnath, Judg. xiv. 5. which ſhews it was in a valley; whereas Judah went up to Timnath, to ſhear his ſheep, (Gen xxxviii. 11, 13.)

11, 13.) which ſhews it was upon a hill. Concerning Elon, we can ſay nothing, unleſs it be the ſame with Holon in the tribe of Judah, chap. xv. 51.

Ver. 44. And Eltekeh, and Gibbethon, and Baalath.] Some think that the firſt of theſe is the ſame with that city in the tribe of Judah, called Eltekon, chap. xv. 59. and the laſt the ſame with that called there Baalah, verſe 39. As for Gibbethon, the Danites ſeem not to have got poſſeſſion of it, or at leaſt they loſt it again; for it was in the hands of the Philiſtines after the days of David, 1 Kings xv. 27. xvi. 15. and yet was appointed one of the Levitical cities, Joſh. xvi. 21, 23.

Ver. 45. And Jehud, and Bene-berak, and Gath-rimmon.] Where Jehud was we find not; but Βαεραχαι is mentioned by Euſebius, as a village near Azotus (or Aſhdod) and St. Jerom ſaith it was called Bernea, in his time; which may incline us to his opinion, that Gath-rimmon was no other than the city of Gath, ſo frequently mentioned in ſcripture, as one of the principal cities of the Philiſtines. It is ranked among the Levitical cities, xxi. 24. as Gibbethon was, ver. 44. tho' in the hands of the Philiſtines.

Ver. 46. And Me-jarkon, and Rakkon.] It is not certain where theſe places were ſituated; but very likely near the place next mentioned.

——With the border before Japho.] This place was afterward called Joppa, being the principal ſea-port town in all Judea (mentioned by Pomponius Mela, Strabo, and Pliny) and continues ſo to this day; retaining the name of Japha, which in the Hebrew ſignifies fair, or beautiful. It is not certain, that it was a part of the tribe of Dan, tho' Euſebius calls it a ſea town of the lot of Dan; for theſe words may ſignify no more, but that their portion comprehended the border which lay before this place.

Ver. 47. And the coaſt of the children of Dan went out too little for them.] The words, too little, are not in the Hebrew; where there is nothing that correſponds with them. The paſſage runs thus, The coaſt of the children of Dan went out from them; that is, they were diſpoſſeſſed of it in ſome parts, by their potent neighbours, the Amorites, who forced them into the mountains, and would not ſuffer them to dwell in the valley, Judg. i. 34. This reduced them to ſuch ſtraits, that they were conſtrained to enlarge their border ſome other way; which they did by the means following.

——Therefore the children of Dan went up to fight againſt Leſhem.] A city not far from Jordan, called Laiſh, in the book of Judges, before it was taken by the Danites. In after-times, when it fell into the hands of the Romans, it was called Paneas, and made the metropolis of Iturea, and Trachonitis; and from Philip alſo, ſon of Herod the great, who very much enlarged and adorned it, it was called Cæſarea Philippi, in honour of Tiberius Cæſar.

——And took it, and ſmote it with the edge of the ſword, and poſſeſſed it, and dwelt therein.] Were not diſturbed in their poſſeſſion of this conquer'd place.

——And called Leſhem, Dan, after the name of Dan their father.] It was cuſtomary for conquerors to change the names of thoſe places which they ſubdued. This was done with reſpect to Leſhem, after the death of Joſhua; and is related more largely in the book of Judges, chap. xviii. where the whole expedition is recorded. From whence ſome have argued, that this book was not written by Joſhua; whereas no more can fairly be inferr'd, than that in after-times, Ezra, or ſome other, thought good to inſert this verſe here, in order to compleat the account of the Danites poſſeſſions. For any one may ſee, that if this verſe were taken away, all that is related of this tribe is perfectly coherent, and there is no breach at all in the context of the foregoing with the verſe ſubſequent to this; which is an argument, that this ſhort account of their taking Leſhem was not written by the author of this book, but inſerted afterward by ſome other perſon. For if the words of this verſe were omitted, this relation of the Danites lot would be more like the account of all the other lots.

Ver. 48. This is the inheritance of the tribe of the children of Dan, according to their families, theſe cities with their villages.] The number of them is not ſet down, as in the foregoing tribes; of which it is to no purpoſe to enquire the reaſon.

Ver. 49. When they had made an end of dividing the land for inheritance by their coaſts.] That is, after every tribe had their reſpective portion aſſigned to them.

——The children of Iſrael gave an inheritance to Joſhua the ſon of Nun, among them.] We cannot but admire the wonderful modeſty of this great man, who received his portion laſt of all; and then, not by lot, but by their gift, who were already poſſeſſed of the whole land.

Ver. 50. According to the word of the Lord, they gave him the city which he asked.] God indeed had ordered, that he ſhould have a portion, and that he himſelf ſhould chuſe it; but he was content to ſtay for it till every one elſe was amply provided for. We do not expreſsly read of this command; but many particulars were ſaid and done, which are not recorded. And Joſhua being as faithful and upright as Caleb, and choſen beſide to be the captain of God's people, we cannot but think, that when God ordered what Caleb ſhould have, he gave the ſame direction with reſpect to Joſhua. And ſo much is implied in theſe words of Caleb himſelf, when he demanded his portion of Joſhua, xiv. 6. Thou knoweſt the thing the Lord ſaid unto Moſes the man of God, concerning me and thee, in Kadeſh-barnea.

——Even Timnah-ſerah in mount Ephraim.] Joſhua did not chuſe the beſt place in all the country, but a convenient one in his own tribe; which was ſeated on the north-ſide of a hill called Gaaſh, as we read in the latter end of this book.

——And he built the city, and dwelt therein.] Repaired it, we ſuppoſe, (for in all probability there was a city in that ſituation before) and made a convenient habitation for his family and relations. But we read nothing of them; for as he did not affect to make himſelf king of Canaan, ſo he contented himſelf with a moderate allotment, and made no large proviſion for his poſterity. We have no mention made of his ſons or daughters; but as Pellicanus obſerves, all the Iſraelites were his children.

Ver. 51. Theſe are the inheritances which Eleazar the prieſt, and Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael, divided, &c.] It is uſual, after ſo long an account to recapitulate in a compendious manner what had been tranſacted, and by whoſe authority.

——So they made an end of dividing the country.] Every tribe had the place of their ſettlement appointed to their ſatisfaction; ſo that there was no further diviſion made of the land.

CHAP. XX.

1 God commandeth, 7 and the children of Iſrael appoint the ſix cities of refuge.

THE LORD alſo ſpake unto Joſhua, ſaying,

2 Speak to the children of Iſrael, ſaying, Appoint out for you cities of refuge, whereof I ſpake unto you by the hand of Moſes:

3 That the ſlayer that killeth any perſon unawares and unwittingly, may flee thither: and they ſhall be your refuge from the avenger of blood.

4 And when he that doth flee unto one of thoſe cities, ſhall ſtand at the entring of the gate of the city, and ſhall declare his cauſe in the ears of the elders of that city; they ſhall take him into the city unto them, and give him a place that he may dwell among them.

5 And if the avenger of blood purſue after him, then they ſhall not deliver the ſlayer up into his hand: becauſe he ſmote his neighbour unwittingly, and hated him not before-time.

6 And

6 And he ſhall dwell in that city, until he ſtand before the congregation for judgment, and until the death of the high-prieſt that ſhall be in thoſe days: then ſhall the ſlayer return and come unto his own city, and unto his own houſe, unto the city from whence he fled.

7 ¶ And they appointed Kedeſh in Galilee in mount Naphtali, and Shechem in mount Ephraim, and Kirjath-arba (which is Hebron) in the mountain of Judah.

8 And on the other ſide Jordan by Jericho eaſt-ward, they aſſigned Bezer in the wilderneſs upon the plain, out of the tribe of Reuben, and Ramoth in Gilead out of the tribe of Gad, and Golan in Baſhan out of the tribe of Manaſſeh.

9 Theſe were the cities appointed for all the children of Iſrael, and for the ſtranger that ſojourneth among them, that whoſoever killeth any perſon at unawares, might flee thither, and not die by the hand of the avenger of blood, until he ſtood before the congregation.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſpake unto Joſhua, ſaying.] From the tabernacle, at the door of which he, and Eleazar, and the princes, had been making a diviſion of the land, as the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter informs us.

Ver. 2. Speak unto the children of Iſrael, ſaying, Appoint out for you cities of refuge.] We have already given a large account of theſe cities of refuge, and the perſons who were intitled to protection there, in our annotations on the 35th chapter of Numbers, to which we therefore refer our readers.

Ver. 7. And they appointed Kedeſh in Galilee in mount Naphtali, and Shechem in mount Ephraim, and Kirjath-arba (which is Hebron) in the mountain of Judah.] It is commonly obſerved, that as theſe three cities were ſeated on high and eminent places, that they might be ſeen afar off; ſo they were at ſuch a diſtance from each other, that all the country might more eaſily have the benefit of one or other of them. For Kedeſh was in the north, and Hebron in the ſouth, and Shechem between both.

Ver. 8. And on the other ſide Jordan by Jericho, eaſtward.] On the eaſt of Jericho, in the land of the two tribes and a half; which was almoſt as long as the land of Canaan, but not ſo broad.

—They aſſigned Bezer in the wilderneſs upon the plain, out of the tribe of Reuben, and Ramoth in Gilead out of the tribe of Gad, and Golan in Baſhan out of the tribe of Manaſſeh.] Theſe cities were aſſigned by Moſes before he died, Deut. iv. 43. but were not inveſted with the privilege till now. And it is obſervable, that if Bezer ſtood in a flat country, the other two, Ramoth and Golan, were ſeated on riſing ground.

All theſe cities belonged to the Levites; who by their authority, might defend thoſe who fled thither for refuge, from all unjuſt treatment; and by their wiſdom direct the elders to judge aright concerning the cauſe of ſuch as took ſanctuary there; and alſo give them good inſtructions while they continued among them, until the death of the high-prieſt.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Eight and forty cities given by lot out of the other tribes, unto the Levites. 43 God gave the land, and reſt unto the Iſraelites, according to his promiſe.

THEN came near the heads of the fathers of the Levites unto Eleazar the prieſt, and unto Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and unto the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael.

2 And they ſpake unto them at Shiloh in the land of Canaan, ſaying, The LORD commanded by the hand of Moſes, to give us cities to dwell in, with the ſuburbs thereof for our cattle.

3 And the children of Iſrael gave unto the Levites out of their inheritance at the commandment of the LORD, theſe cities, and their ſuburbs.

4 And the lot came out for the families of the Kohathites: and the children of Aaron the prieſt, which were of the Levites, had by lot out of the tribe of Judah, and out of the tribe of Simeon, and out of the tribe of Benjamin, thirteen cities.

5 And the reſt of the children of Kohath had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Ephraim, and out of the tribe of Dan, and out of the half tribe of Manaſſeh, ten cities.

6 And the children of Gerſhon had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Iſſachar, and out of the tribe of Aſher, and out of the tribe of Naphtali, and out of the half tribe of Manaſſeh in Baſhan, thirteen cities.

7 The children of Merari by their families had out of the tribe of Reuben, and out of the tribe of Gad, and out of the tribe of Zebulun, twelve cities.

8 And the children of Iſrael gave by lot unto the Levites theſe cities with their ſuburbs, as the LORD commanded by the hand of Moſes.

9 ¶ And they gave out of the tribe of the children of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, theſe cities which are here mentioned by name,

10 Which the children of Aaron, being of the families of the Kohathites, who were of the children of Levi, had: (for theirs was the firſt lot.)

11 And they gave them the city of Arba the father of Anak (which city is Hebron) in the hill-country of Judah, with the ſuburbs thereof round about it.

12 But

12 But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, gave they to Caleb the ſon of Jephunneh, for his poſſeſſion.

13 ¶ Thus they gave to the children of Aaron the prieſt, Hebron with her ſuburbs, to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer, and Libnah with her ſuburbs,

14 And Jattir with her ſuburbs, and Eſhtemoa with her ſuburbs,

15 And Holon with her ſuburbs, and Debir with her ſuburbs,

16 And Ain with her ſuburbs, and Juttah with her ſuburbs, and Beth-ſhemeſh with her ſuburbs: nine cities out of thoſe two tribes.

19 All the cities of the children of Aaron, the prieſts, were thirteen cities with their ſuburbs.

20 ¶ And the families of the children of Kohath, the Levites, which remained of the children of Kohath, even they had the cities of their lot out of the tribe of Ephraim.

22 And Kibzaim with her ſuburbs, and Beth-horon with her ſuburbs: four cities.

25 And out of the half tribe of Manaſſeh, Tanach with her ſuburbs, and Gath-rimmon with her ſuburbs: two cities.

26 All the cities were ten with their ſuburbs, for the families of the children of Kohath that remained.

27 ¶ And unto the children of Gerſhon of the families of the Levites, out of the other half tribe of Manaſſeh, they gave Golan in Baſhan with her ſuburbs, to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer: and Beeſhterah with her ſuburbs: two cities.

28 And out of the tribe of Iſſachar, Kiſhon with her ſuburbs, Dabareh with her ſuburbs,

32 And out of the tribe of Naphtali, Kedeſh in Galilee with her ſuburbs, to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer: and Hammoth-dor with her ſuburbs, and Kartan with her ſuburbs: three cities.

33 All the cities of the Gerſhonites, according to their families, were thirteen cities with their ſuburbs.

34 ¶ And unto the families of the children of Merari the reſt of the Levites, out of the tribe of Zebulun, Jokneam with her ſuburbs, and Kartah with her ſuburbs,

38 And out of the tribe of Gad, Ramoth in Gilead with her ſuburbs, to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer: and Mahanaim with her ſuburbs, 39 Heſhbon with her ſuburbs, Jazer with her ſuburbs: four cities in all.

40 So all the cities for the children of Merari by their families, which were remaining of the families of the Levites, were by their lot, twelve cities.

41 All the cities of the Levites within the poſſeſſion of the children of Iſrael, were forty and eight cities with their ſuburbs.

42 Theſe cities were every one with their ſuburbs round about them: thus were all theſe cities.

43 ¶ And the LORD gave unto Iſrael all the land which he ſware to give unto their fathers: and they poſſeſſed it, and dwelt therein.

44 And the LORD gave them reſt round about, according to all that he ſware unto their fathers: and there ſtood not a man of all their enemies before them; the LORD delivered all their enemies into their hand.

45 There failed not ought of any good thing which the LORD had ſpoken unto the houſe of Iſrael: all came to paſs.

Ver. 1. Then came near.] After the cities of refuge were ſettled.

——The heads of the fathers of the Levites.] So the princes of the ſeveral tribes, who divided the land in conjunction conjunction with Joſhua and Eleazar, are called, xiv. 1. and in the concluſion of this verſe. And therefore the chief perſons deſcended from Kohath, Gerſhon, and Merari (who were the fathers of the Levites) are here meant by the heads of the fathers of that tribe.

——Unto Eleazar the prieſt, and unto Joſhua the ſon of Nun, and unto the heads of the fathers of the tribes of the children of Iſrael.] Who were appointed by God, to ſee the land divided, and are called the princes of the tribes, Numb. xxxiv. 18.

Ver. 2. And they ſpake unto them at Shiloh in the land of Canaan, ſaying, The Lord commanded, &c.] This command is recorded in Numb. xxxv. 2. &c. and is ſet down before any mention was made of the cities of refuge, (which are ordered in the following part of the chapter) tho', it ſeems, that command was executed before this.

Ver. 3. And the children of Iſrael gave unto the Levites out of their inheritance at the commandment of the Lord, theſe cities and their ſuburbs.] Not only Joſhua, Eleazar, and the princes, but all the people of Iſrael acknowledged this obligation which God had laid upon them; and accordingly theſe words import, that the people ſeparated ſo many cities as the Divine Majeſty commanded by Moſes (and which were to be forty eight, Numb. xxxv. 7.) for the habitation of the Levites. Which cities are here named and diſtributed among them in this chapter.

Ver. 4. And the lot came out for the family of the Kohathites.] After the cities which were to belong to the Levites were ſet out, they were divided by lot among their ſeveral families, as the whole land was among the tribes. And the firſt lot came out for the nobleſt family in the tribe of Levi; for Moſes and Aaron were deſcended from Kohath.

——And the children of Aaron the prieſt, which were of the Levites.] The family of Aaron being prieſts, were the principal among the Levites; and therefore were firſt, and very honourably provided for.

——Had by lot out of the tribe of Judah, and out of the tribe of Simeon, and out of the tribe of Benjamin, thirteen cities.] It was by a peculiar providence, that the ſhare which fell to the prieſts, was in thoſe tribes that were neareſt to the city; which God intended ſhould be the fixed place of his worſhip and ſervice in future times; that the prieſts might be ready to give their attendance there, without much trouble.

Ver. 5. And the reſt of the children of Kohath.] All his deſcendants were not prieſts, but Aaron and his family alone; the reſt were nothing more than Levites.

——Had by lot out of the families of the tribe of Ephraim, and out of the tribe of Dan, and out of the half tribe of Manaſſeh, ten cities.] Theſe three tribes were neareſt to the other three before-mentioned; ſo that the Kohathites were not ſeparated to any conſiderable diſtance from one another.

Ver. 6. And the children of Gerſhon had by lot, &c.] Among the ſons of Levi, Gerſhon is mentioned as the eldeſt, (Exod. vi. 16. Numb. iii. 17.) but the lot came up firſt to the children of Kohath, the prieſts being deſcended from him.

Ver. 7. The children of Merari by their families, had out of the tribe of Reuben, &c. —— twelve cities.] This is only a general account of the tribes in which their reſpective lots fell, and of the number of cities beſtowed on their ſeveral families.

Ver. 9. And they gave out of the tribe of the children of Judah, and out of the tribe of the children of Simeon, theſe cities which are here mentioned by name.] Here now follows a particular account of the names of thoſe cities, which were ſaid before, in general, to have been given out of the two tribes; which are joined together, becauſe the lot of Simeon was taken out of the lot of Judah.

Ver. 10. Which the children of Aaron being of the families of the Kohathites, &c.] That is, being one of the families of the Kohathites, and the eldeſt of them; for they were deſcended from Amram, the eldeſt ſon of Kohath, Exod. vi. 18. Numb. iii. 19.

Ver. 11. And they.] Namely, Eleazar, Joſhua, and the princes.

—— Gave them the city of Arba, &c.] See, with reſpect to this city, chap. xiv. 15. xv. 13.

Ver. 12. But the fields of the city, and the villages thereof, they gave to Caleb, &c.] The prieſts had only the cities and ſuburbs, which were their poſſeſſion, as much as the fields and villages were Caleb's; on whom they were beſtowed before, chap. xiv. 13.

——Thus they gave to the children of Aaron the prieſt, Hebron with her ſuburbs, to be a city of refuge for the ſlayer.] It was given them with this condition, that they who ſlew a man undeſignedly, ſhould be entertained in this city, and have a place aſſigned them, in order to live ſecurely among the reſt of the inhabitants, chap. xx. 4.

—— And Libnah with her ſuburbs.] This muſt be underſtood to belong to them no otherwiſe than Hebron did; unto which they had no pretenſions beyond the city and ſuburbs: And therefore the fields and villages of Libnah were no part of their property; and the ſame is to be obſerved with relation to all the following cities of the prieſts.

Ver. 14. And Jattir with her ſuburbs, and Eſhtemoa with her ſuburbs.] Theſe are mentioned as belonging to Judah, chap. xv. 48, 50.

Ver. 15. And Holon with her ſuburbs.] Called Helin, 1 Chron. vi. 56.

——And Debir with her ſuburbs.] See chap. xv. 55.

Ver. 16. And Ain with her ſuburbs.] This was a city in the tribe of Simeon, xix. 17. but taken out of Judah, xv. 32.

——And Juttah with her ſuburbs.] See xv. 55.

—— And Beth-ſhemeſh with her ſuburbs.] Unto which city the Divine Providence directed the kine, that drew the cart wherein the Philiſtines placed the ark, when they ſent it home, there being a very conſiderable number of prieſts in this city, to receive it with due care and reverence, 1 Sam. vi. 12, 13.

——Nine cities out of theſe two tribes.] For the tribe of Judah was very large; and the command of God was, that from them who had many cities, they ſhould give many, Numb. xxxv. 8.

Ver. 17. And out of the tribe of Benjamin, Gibeon with her ſuburbs, &c.] See chap. xviii 24, 25.

Ver. 18. Anathoth with her ſuburbs.] This was the city of the prophet Jeremiah, who was likewiſe a prieſt, Jer. i. 1.

——And Almon with her ſuburbs.] Called Alemeth, in 1 Chron vi. 60. For there were greater alterations than this made, by length of time, in the names of places.

—— Four cities.] Which may be conſidered as a large number, out of ſo ſmall a tribe, but the ſoil was very rich.

Ver. 20. And the families of the children of Kohath, the Levites, which remained of the children of Kohath.] Who were mere Levites, and not prieſts.

—— Even they had the cities of their lot out of the tribe of Ephraim.] Part of them were planted there, and part of them in two other tribes, as it follows, ver. 23, &c.

Ver. 21. For they gave them Schechem, &c.] See chap. xx. 7. xvi. 3.

Ver. 22. And Hibzaim with her ſuburbs.] Which city is called Jokmeam, in 1 Chron. vi. 68.

——And Beth-horon with her ſuburbs.] We read of both the Beth-horons in the deſcription of this tribe, the upper and the nether, xvi. 3, 5. the firſt of which ſeems to be here meant.

Ver. 24. Ajalon with her ſuburbs, &c.] The four cities mentioned in this and the 23d verſe, we find before in this tribe, xix, 41, 44, 45.

Ver. 25. And out of the half tribe of Manaſſeh.] Namely, that half of it which was ſettled in Canaan.

—— Tanach with her ſuburbs.] See xvii. 11.

——And Gath-rimmon with her ſuburbs.] In 1 Chron. vi. 70. theſe two cities are called Aner, and Bileam: ſo much were names changed in a long tract of time: Or, the Levites being diſpoſſeſſed of the two cities mentioned in this verſe, by the invaſion of their enemies (who perhaps demoliſhed them) thoſe two others were given in lieu of them.

——Two cities.] Which were a juſt proportion to the other whole tribes, who gave four.

Ver. 26. All the cities were ten with their ſuburbs, for the families of the children of Kohath that remained.] Who were not of the children of Aaron, the prieſts, ver. 5.

Ver. 27. And unto the children of Gerſhon of the families of the Levites, out of the other half tribe of Manaſſeh.] Namely, that half tribe who had their inheritance on the other ſide of Jordan.

——Golan in Baſhan, &c.] From whence the neighbouring country was called Gaulonitis.

——And Beeſh-terah, with her ſuburbs.] Called Aſhtaroth in 1 Chron. vi. 71. by a very inconſiderable change, only leaving out the firſt letter.

——Two cities.] The ſame number that was given out of the other half of this tribe, ver. 25.

Ver. 28. And out of the tribe of Iſſachar, Kiſhon with her ſuburbs.] xix. 20. Called Kedeſh, 1 Chron.. vi. 72.

——And Dabareh with her ſuburbs.] Not mentioned before in this book; but in 1 Chron vi. 72.

Ver. 29. Jarmuth, with her ſuburbs.] Called Ramoth, 1 Chron. vi. 73.

——En-gannim, with her ſuburbs.] xx. 21. Called Anem, 1 Chron. vi. 73.

Ver. 30. And out of the tribe of Aſher, Miſhal with her ſuburbs.] Called Miſhael, xix. 26. and Maſhal, 1 Chron. vi. 74.

——Abdon, with her ſuburbs.] Mentioned in the laſt cited chapter of the Chronicles, but not in the 19th chapter of this book.

Ver. 31. Helkath, with her ſuburbs.] xix. 25. Called Hukok, 1 Chron. vi. 75.

——And Rehob.] Mentioned likewiſe there, and in the 19th chap. ver. 28. of this book.

Ver. 32. And out of the tribe of Naphtali, Kedeſh in Galilee, &c.] See chap. xx. ver. 7.

——And Hammoth-dor, with her ſuburbs.] Called ſimply Hamath, xix. 35. and Hammoth, 1 Chron. vi. 76.

——And Kartan, with her ſuburbs.] Called Kirjathaim, 1 Chron. vi. 76.

——Three cities.] This being a ſmaller territory, it ſeems, than the reſt of the tribes already mentioned, who gave four.

Ver. 34. And unto the families of the children of Merari, the reſt of the Levites.] The remaining families of the Levites; for there were three heads of them, Gerſhon, Kohath, and Merari.

——Out of the tribe of Zebulun, Jokneam, with her ſuburbs, and Kartah, with her ſuburbs.] Of the former, See xix. 11. and of the latter, ver. 16.

Ver. 35. Dimnah, with her ſuburbs, &c.] See xix. 15, 16.

——Four cities.] There are but two mentioned, 1 Chron. vi. 77. with quite different names; the other two, it ſeems, being loſt before that time.

Ver. 36. And out of the tribe of Reuben, Bezer, with her ſuburbs.] This was one of the cities of refuge, xx. 8. tho' not here mentioned as the reſt are, in the foregoing part of this chapter, and in ver. 38.

——And Jahazath, with her ſuburbs.] Theſe, and the two cities in the next verſe, are mentioned as cities in this tribe, xiii. 18. And ſo they are in 1 Chron. vi. 78, 79. as Levitical cities.

Ver. 37. Kedemoth, with her ſuburbs.] Some have urged againſt the integrity of the Hebrew text, that this and the preceding verſe are not to be found in ſome ancient copies of the Bible; and indeed, the Maſorites acknowledge as much; but it is evident, that they are found in copies of very great antiquity; and the context ſhews, that they ought to be here, as biſhop Walton obſerves in his Conſiderator conſidered, chap. 6. ſect. 14. And Hottinger alſo (who anſwers this cavil more largely) obſerves, that they were in a moſt accurate manuſcript belonging to the duke of Rohan, and written in 1495. The Maſorites, who take notice of this omiſſion, acknowledge, in the margin of this verſe, that it was to be found in ſeveral copies.

Ver. 38. And out of the tribe of Gad, Ramoth, &c.] See xx. 8.

——And Mahanaim, with her ſuburbs.] This city was made by Abner, the royal ſeat for Iſhboſheth, Βασίλειον ἐπείνου, as Joſephus expreſſes it, Antiq l. 7. c. 1.

Ver. 39. Heſhbon, with her ſuburbs, Jazar, with her ſuburbs, &c.] Theſe with the foregoing, are mentioned 1 Chron. vi. 80, 81.

Ver. 41. All the cities of the Levites within the poſſeſſion of the children of Iſrael, were forty and eight cities, &c.] So God ordered by Moſes, Numb. xxxv. 7. and it is a demonſtration, that Moſes was divinely inſpired to make ſuch an appointment, before it could be known, whether, without ſtraitning the other tribes, they could part with ſo many cities to the Levites. For when Joſhua and Caleb went up to ſearch the land, they could have no opportunity to take any accurate dimenſions of the country; whereby Moſes might know there would be room enough to allow the Levites ſo large a portion as this; but he was directed to it by a divine fore-knowledge.

Ver. 42. Theſe cities were every one with their ſuburbs round about them.] Namely, two thouſand cubits on every ſide round the city, as is ordered, Numb. xxxv. 5. and it certainly was a large proportion for this tribe, which was the ſmalleſt of them all. But God intended an ample proviſion ſhould be made for his miniſters; and they had not any part of the land belonging to theſe cities, but only room for themſelves and their cattle.

——Thus were all theſe cities.] In this manner were they diſpoſed, and ſettled, according to the Divine command. Six of them were cities of Refuge; and the other forty two had the ſame privileges, when the inhabitants pleaſed, and at the coſt of thoſe who fled thither for protection.

Ver. 43. And the Lord gave unto Iſrael all the land which he ſware to give unto their fathers.] The Deity gave them a right to the whole country, and inveſted them with the actual poſſeſſion and enjoyment of the greateſt part of it: He likewiſe authorized them to ſubdue the reſt (if they continued obedient to him) aſſoon as it would be convenient. All which was exactly conformable to his promiſe and oath; for the Iſraelites not being numerous enough to people the whole country, at their firſt coming into it, God never intended to expel all the old inhabitants at once, but by degrees; as we read expreſly, Exod. xxiii. 29, 30.

Ver. 44. And the Lord gave them reſt round about, &c.] They continued unmoleſted in their reſpective poſſeſſions, and cultivated their land without any diſturbance.

——The Lord delivered all their enemies into their hand.] This is not to be underſtood, as if all the people of Canaan were abſolutely in ſubjection to them; but that as long as Joſhua lived, all thoſe who attempted to oppoſe and deſtroy them, were delivered into their power.

Ver. 45. There failed not ought of any good thing which the Lord had ſpoken unto the houſe of Iſrael; all came to paſs.] Which they themſelves (as God afterward tells them, xxiii. 14.) knew very well, and could not but acknowledge. But it muſt be underſtood, according to the explication of ver. 43. For the time of fulfilling ſome part of the divine promiſe was not then come, and the completion of what was already begun, depended upon their obedience to God.

CHAP. XXII.

1 The two tribes and half with a bleſſing are ſent home. 10 They build the altar of teſtimony, in their journey. 11 The Iſraelites are offended thereat. 21 They give them good ſatisfaction.

THEN Joſhua called the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh,

2 And ſaid unto them, Ye have kept all that Moſes the ſervant of the LORD commanded you, and have obeyed my voice in all that I commanded you.

3 Ye have not left your brethren theſe many days unto this day, but have kept the charge of the commandment of the LORD your God.

4 And now the LORD your God hath given reſt unto your brethren, as he promiſed them: therefore now return ye, and get ye unto your tents, and unto the land of your poſſeſſion, which Moſes the ſervant of of the LORD gave you on the other ſide Jordan.

5 But take diligent heed to do the commandment and the law, which Moſes the ſervant of the LORD charged you, to love the LORD your God, and to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and to cleave unto him, and to ſerve him with all your heart, and with all your ſoul.

6 So Joſhua bleſſed them, and ſent them away: and they went unto their tents.

7 ¶ Now to the one half of the tribe of Manaſſeh Moſes had given poſſeſſion in Baſhan: but unto the other half thereof gave Joſhua among their brethren on this ſide Jordan weſt-ward. And when Joſhua ſent them away alſo unto their tents, then he bleſſed them,

8 And he ſpake unto them, ſaying, Return with much riches unto your tents, and with very much cattle, with ſilver, and with gold, and with braſs, and with iron, and with very much raiment: divide the ſpoil of your enemies with your brethren.

9 ¶ And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, returned, and departed from the children of Iſrael out of Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan, to go unto the country of Gilead, to the land of their poſſeſſion, whereof they were poſſeſſed, according to the word of the LORD by the hand of Moſes.

10 ¶ And when they came unto the borders of Jordan, that are in the land of Canaan, the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, built there an altar by Jordan, a great altar to ſee to.

12 And when the children of Iſrael heard of it, the whole congregation of the children of Iſrael gathered themſelves together at Shiloh, to go up to war againſt them.

13 And the children of Iſrael ſent unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, into the land of Gilead, Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the prieſt,

14 And with him ten princes, of each chief houſe a prince, throughout all the tribes of Iſrael, and each one was an head of the houſe of their fathers, among the thouſands of Iſrael.

15 And they came unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, unto the land of Gilead, and they ſpake with them, ſaying, 16 Thus ſaith the whole congregation of the LORD, What treſpaſs is this that ye have committed againſt the God of Iſrael, to turn away this day from following the LORD, in that ye have builded you an altar, that ye might rebel this day againſt the LORD?

17 Is the iniquity of Peor too little for us, from which we are not cleanſed until this day, (although there was a plague in the congregation of the LORD)

18 But that ye muſt turn away this day from following the LORD? and it will be, ſeeing ye rebel to-day againſt the LORD, that to-morrow he will be wroth with the whole congregation of Iſrael.

19 Notwithſtanding if the land of your poſſeſſion be unclean, then paſs ye over unto the land of the poſſeſſion of the LORD, wherein the LORDs tabernacle dwelleth, and take poſſeſſion among us: but rebel not againſt the LORD, nor rebel againſt us, in building you an altar, beſide the altar of the LORD our God.

20 Did not Achan the ſon of Zerah commit a treſpaſs in the accurſed thing, and wrath fell on all the congregation of Iſrael? and that man periſhed not alone in his iniquity.

21 ¶ Then the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, anſwered and ſaid unto the heads of the thouſands of Iſrael,

22 The LORD God of gods, the LORD God of gods, he knoweth, and Iſrael he ſhall know, if it be in rebellion, or if in tranſgreſſion againſt the LORD, (ſave us not this day)

23 That we have built us an altar to turn from following the LORD, or if to offer thereon burnt-offering, or meat-offering, or if to offer peace-offerings thereon, let the LORD himſelf require it;

24 And if we have not rather done it for fear of this thing, ſaying, In time to come your children might ſpeak unto our children, ſaying, What have you to do with the LORD God of Iſrael.

25 For

25 For the LORD hath made Jordan a border between us and you; ye children of Reuben, and children of Gad, ye have no part in the LORD: ſo ſhall your children make our children ceaſe from fearing the LORD.

26 Therefore we ſaid, let us now prepare to build us an altar, not for burnt-offering, nor for ſacrifice:

27 But that it may be a witneſs between us and you, and our generations after us, that we might do the ſervice of the LORD before him with our burnt-offerings, and with our ſacrifices, and with our peace-offerings, that your children may not ſay to our children in time to come, Ye have no part in the LORD.

28 Therefore ſaid we, that it ſhall be, when they ſhould ſo ſay to us, or to our generations in time to come, that we may ſay again, Behold the pattern of the altar of the LORD, which our fathers made, not for burnt-offerings, nor for ſacrifices, but it is a witneſs between us and you.

29 God forbid that we ſhould rebel againſt the LORD, and turn this day from following the LORD, to build an altar for burnt-offerings, for meat-offerings, or for ſacrifices, beſides the altar of the LORD our God that is before his tabernacle.

30 ¶ And when Phinehas the prieſt, and the princes of the congregation, and heads of the thouſands of Iſrael, which were with him, heard the words that the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the children of Manaſſeh ſpake, it pleaſed them.

31 And Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the prieſt, ſaid unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the children of Manaſſeh, This day we perceive that the LORD is among us, becauſe ye have not committed this treſpaſs againſt the LORD: now ye have delivered the children of Iſrael out of the hand of the LORD.

32 ¶ And Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the prieſt, and the princes, returned from the children of Reuben, and from the children of Gad, out of the land of Gilead unto the land of Canaan, to the children of Iſrael, and brought them word again.

33 And the thing pleaſed the children of Iſrael, and the children of Iſrael bleſſed God, and did not intend to go up againſt them in battle, to deſtroy the land wherein the children of Reuben and Gad dwelt.

34 And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, called the altar Ed: for it ſhall be a witneſs between us, that the LORD is God.

Ver. 1. And Joſhua called the Reubenites, &c.] Who came as auxiliaries to their brethren when they paſſed over Jordan; as they had engaged to do, when they received their inheritance on the other ſide of it, i. 12, 13, 14, &c.

Ver. 2. And ſaid unto them, Ye have kept all that Moſes the ſervant of the Lord commanded you, and have obeyed my voice in all that I commanded you.] In this and in the following verſes, Joſhua commends them for their obedience to God, and likewiſe to him, and for their conſtancy and patience in their piety to God, and love to their brethren.

Ver. 3. Ye have not left your brethren theſe many days, unto this day.] Seven years (ſome think, as many more) they had continued in their ſervice, as long as the war laſted with the Canaanites, and even till they had ſeen their brethren ſettled in the lots fallen to them.

——But have kept the charge of the commandment of the Lord your God.] During which time they never refuſed what was expected from them, for the aid of their brethren. See xi. 18. xiv. 10. This was a ſignal proof of their perſevering obedience, in continuing ſo long abſent from their wives and children.

Ver. 4. And now the Lord your God hath given reſt unto your brethren, as he promiſed them.] In which the Divine Majeſty had acted as graciouſly for them before, chap. i. 13.

——Therefore now return ye, and get ye unto your tents.] So Joſhua calls their houſes, becauſe this was the common word uſed for a long time in the wilderneſs, to ſignify an habitation.

——And unto the land of your poſſeſſion, which Moſes the ſervant of the Lord gave you on the other ſide Jordan.] It was but reaſonable and juſt, that they ſhould go and enjoy what God had beſtowed upon them, now their brethren were in the quiet poſſeſſion of their portion; it was likewiſe proper, that their fidelity in accompliſhing their promiſe, ſhould be rewarded with the ſame ſtate of tranquility in their own ſettlements, when they were diſmiſſed, after they had thus acquitted themſelves of their engagement; for they agreed to ſerve no longer, than till they had driven the Canaanites out of their country, Numb. xxxii. 21.

Ver. 5. But take diligent heed to do the commandment and the law, which Moſes the ſervant of the Lord charged you.] That is, be ſedulous to obſerve all his precepts, (as they had been punctual to this of aiding their brethren) and for that end, preſerve in mind all that God hath done for you.

——To love the Lord your God, and to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and to cleave unto him, and to ſerve him with all your heart, and with all your ſoul.] Eſpecially to worſhip the Lord alone, with ſincere affection; which Moſes inculcated above all things, before he died, Deut. vi. 5, 13, 14. x. 12. xi. 13, 22. xx. 9. xxx. 6. 20.

Ver. 6. So Joſhua bleſſed them, and ſent them away.] He not only praiſed and commended them, but diſmiſſed them with a ſolemn prayer to God for his bleſſing upon them. And he ſeems firſt to have diſmiſſed with his bleſſing the Reubenites and Gadites; and then to have bleſſed the Manaſſites by themſelves.

——And they went unto their tents.] In order to make the neceſſary preparations for their departure.

Ver. 7. Now to the one half of the tribe of Manaſſeh Moſes had given poſſeſſion in Baſhan: but unto the other half thereof gave Joſhua among their brethren on this ſide Jordan weſt-ward.] This is repeated, to ſhew, why only the half tribe of Manaſſeh is mentioned, ver. 1. and to introduce what follows.

——And

—— And when Joſhua ſent them away alſo unto their tents.] In the ſame manner as he had diſmiſſed the Reubenites and Gadites.

——Then he bleſſed them] This ſeems to ſignify, that he gave a peculiar bleſſing to the Manaſſites; that is, rewarded their ſervices, by ſome preſent which he made them: For ſo the word bleſſing ſometimes ſignifies, 2 Kings v. 15. And he did this the rather, becauſe the Manaſſites were nearly related to the children of Ephraim, (of which tribe Joſhua himſelf was a member) and were now to be ſeparated from the reſt of their brethren in Canaan.

Ver. 8. And he ſpake unto them, ſaying.] This ſpeech ſeems to be directed to the Reubenites and Gadites, as well as to the Manaſſites; tho' theſe laſt had a peculiar concern in it.

——Return with much riches unto your tents, and with very much cattle, with ſilver, and with gold, &c.] As if he had ſaid, Part with your brethren contentedly, and well pleaſed; laden with the ſpoils which you have acquired in the wars againſt the people of Canaan. For they had their ſhare in the prey, as well as the other ſeven tribes and a half; and carried it away to their own country.

—— Divide the ſpoil of your enemies with your brethren.] Joſhua order'd them, when they came home, to let thoſe who remained on the other ſide of Jordan, to defend their wives, children, and cattle, participate in the ſpoil which they had obtained, eſpecially ſince ſuch a proceeding was thought equitable by God himſelf, in the war they had with the Midianites, before they came over Jordan; when twelve thouſand marched out to battle, and had one half of the ſpoil; the other being diſtributed among all thoſe of the congregation who continued at home, Numb. xxxi. 27. And it is very reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the ſame proportion was now obſerved; the forty thouſand who went to aſſiſt their brethren in the war, having one half of the ſpoil; and their brethren, who ſtaid to guard their poſſeſſion, the other half: So that the warriors, who were leſs numerous than thoſe who remained at home, had the far greater ſhare, as was highly reaſonable; becauſe they had hazarded their lives in the enterprize. But, in Davids's time, a law was made, that they who went to fight, and they who ſtaid to guard the ſtuff, ſhould have an equal ſhare in the prey, 1 Sam. xxx. 24, 25. Gen. xiv. 24.

Ver. 9. And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, returned, and departed from the children of Iſrael out of Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan, to go into the country of Gilead, &c.] This ſhews that Joſhua gave them all his bleſſing in Shiloh, where the ſanctuary was; and ſent them from thence, under the Divine Protection, to their own country: Which is here called, the country of Gilead; becauſe that was an eminent part of their country, divided between the children of Gad, and Manaſſeh, and here comprehends the reſt of the land, where the Reubenites lived.

Ver. 10. And when they came into the borders of Jordan.] Or, they came (for the word when is not in the Hebrew) unto the banks of that river.

——— That are in the land of Canaan.] This ſeems at firſt ſight to import, that they built the altar, mentioned in the end of the verſe, before they went over Jordan, in the land of Canaan. Which is altogether improbable; for it would not have anſwered their intention; which was to ſhew, that Jordan did not make ſuch a ſeparation between them and their brethren, but that they were one people with thoſe in Canaan: where the altar of God was in Shiloh. Therefore we take this to be a compendious form of ſpeech; ſignifying, that they came to the borders of Jordan in the land of Canaan; and paſſed over into their own country on the other ſide of the river. And ſo the Hebrew word gelilath (which we tranſlate borders) ſeems to ſignify, a certain place near Jordan, to which they came. The Vulgate tranſlates it heaps; the LXX, in the Vatican copy, retains the word Γαλαάδ, (or Γαλιλαὼθ, as ſome other copies more truly have it) taking it for ſome noted place, which was near their paſſage over Jordan.

——— The children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, built there an altar by Jordan.] The word there hath cauſed ſome expoſitors to imagine, that they built this altar in the land of Canaan: But the particle ſham relates to time, as well as place, and may be tranſlated then, as well as there. Examples of which there are in Judg. v. 21. Prov. viii. 27. compared with ver. 30. Eccleſ. iii. 17. and moſt plainly Iſa. xlviii. 16. And thus it is here to be interpreted, that before they went any farther, they continued on the bank of Jordan, till they had erected this altar, on the borders of their own country: For ſo the next verſe teaches us to expound it, and will admit of no other ſenſe; where it is ſaid, they had built an altar over-againſt the land of Canaan.

——— A great altar to ſee to.] Which made a very conſpicuous appearance, being very high, and conſequently viſible afar off. For being built, not by a private perſon, but by the whole body of a great people, they thought they could not make it too ſtately and magnificent. And herein it differ'd ſo much from the altar made by Moſes, that they thought perhaps it would adminiſter the leſs occaſion to their brethren, to ſuſpect it was intended for ſacrifice.

The deſign, however, of thoſe who erected this altar was ſo far miſtaken by their brethren, that theſe latter aſſembled themſelves at Shiloh, and there reſolved to enter into a bloody war againſt them, in caſe they could not clear themſelves from the crime of rebellion and apoſtacy, of which this new altar had cauſed them to be thought guilty. They therefore deputed ten of their chiefs, with Phineas, the ſon of the High-prieſt, at their head, to go and enquire into the reaſon of this proceeding.

Ver. 15. And they came unto the children of Reuben, and to the children of Gad, and to the half-tribe of Manaſſeh.] Who hearing of their coming, held a congregation, it is likely, of the chief perſons among them, to receive the meſſage from them.

—— Unto the land of Gilead.] So the country of the two tribes and half is called here, and in verſe 13. by the name of an eminent part of it, which is put for the whole.

——— And they ſpake with them, ſaying.] Made the following ſpeech in the aſſembly of the two tribes and half, by the mouth of Phineas.

Ver. 16. Thus ſaith the whole congregation of the Lord] The repreſentatives of the whole people of Iſrael, in whoſe name this embaſſy was ſent.

———What treſpaſs is this that ye have committed againſt the God of Iſrael.] They were not able to expreſs the heinouſneſs of it.

———To turn away this day from following the Lord] So ſoon after they had ſeen his wonderful works, and receiv'd ſuch a charge from Joſhua, as he gave them at their departure from Canaan, ver. 5.

—— In that ye have built you an altar.] Which they ſuppoſed was for ſacrifice.

——— That ye might rebel this day againſt the Lord?] Which, if it had been ſo, would have been an impious violation of his expreſs command, immediately after the promulgation of the law from mount Sinai, Exod. xx. 24.

Ver. 17. Is the iniquity of Peor too little for us, from which we are not cleanſed unto this day] Phineas inſtances in this, being himſelf an actor in the puniſhment of it, tho' it deſerv'd ſtill much greater ſeverity. For, that's the meaning of, we are not cleanſed; have not ſufficiently ſuffered for that ſin, there being ſome remaining (he fear'd) that were infected with thoſe idolatrous inclinations, whom God might juſtly cut off.

———(Although there was a plague in the congregation of the Lord.)] Which deſtroyed twenty and four thouſand, Numb. xxv. 9.

Ver. 18. But that ye muſt turn away this day from following the Lord?] Commit more ſins of that nature. For, whether they intended to worſhip other gods, or to worſhip the God of Iſrael in a manner he did not allow, it was idolatry, in the judgment of Phineas.

——— And it will be, ſeeing ye rebel to day againſt the Lord.] It muſt be acknowledged, that Phineas, and thoſe by whom he was deputed, were a little too precipitate in concluding their brethren to be rebels, before they had ask'd them for what purpoſe they had erected this altar, which ſhould properly have been the firſt queſtion; but their pious fear, leſt God ſhould be offended, made them immediately utter this vehement expoſtulation.

———That to-morrow.] That is, quickly, or ſpeedily.

———He will be wroth with the whole congregation of Iſrael.] With you for committing this ſin, and with us for not puniſhing it.

Ver. 19. Notwithſtanding.] Or rather, and now, as the LXX tranſlate the Hebrew particle veac.

—— If the land of your poſſeſſion be unclean.] They imagin'd the Reubenites, and Gadites, and Manaſſites, might take their land to be leſs holy, for want of an altar, and ſuch a token of the Divine Preſence, as there was in the tabernacle. This appears to be the ſenſe, by what follows; which Mr. Mede carries ſomething further, in his obſervations concerning the appropriation of ſome place to the worſhip of God: Which ſo univerſally prevail'd, from the beginning, that it was believ'd, in thoſe elder times, that thoſe countries and territories, wherein no place was ſet apart for divine worſhip, were unhallow d and unclean. This, he thinks, may be rightly gather d from theſe words. See book ii. upon Eccleſ. v. 1 p. 433.

——Then paſs ye over unto the land of the poſſeſſion of the Lord, wherein the Lord's tabernacle dwelleth, and take poſſeſſion among us.] This expreſſes a wonderful zeal for God, and the common good, wherewith they were at preſent poſſeſſed; which made them deſire rather to give up ſome o' their own land to them, than ſee them apoſtatize from their religion.

——But rebel not againſt the Lord, nor rebel againſt us.] They deſire their brethren not to break the common bond that united them to each other, as well as unto God, which was the ſame religion.

——In building you an altar, beſide the altar of the Lord our God.] Which was, in effect, to forſake the Lord.

Ver. 20. Did not Achan the ſon of Zerah.] Deſcended from Zerah, chap. vii. 17, 18.

——Commit a treſpaſs in the accurſed thing.] This was a freſher inſtance than that of Baal-peor, ver. 17.

——And wrath fell upon all the congregation of Iſrael? and that man periſhed not alone in his iniquity.] Chap. vii. 1, 2, &c. Phineas here explains what he ſaid, ver. 18. that the whole congregation was in danger of falling under the divine diſpleaſure by their apoſtacy.

Ver. 21. Then the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, anſwered and ſaid unto the heads of the thouſands of Iſrael.] Some of the heads of the tribes made the following reply, in the name of all the reſt.

Ver. 22. The Lord God of Gods, the Lord God of Gods.] In the Hebrew, the God of Gods, the Lord; the God of Gods, the Lord. Where there are three names of God, El, Elohim, and Jehovah; ſignifying, that they own'd no other god, but him whom their fore-fathers worſhipped, by what name ſoever he was called: That God, who is infinitely above all creatures, the fountain of all other beings. And they double the expreſſion of their devotion to him, that they might ſignify their earneſtneſs and vehemency to vindicate themſelves from the crime objected to them.

Some of the ancient Jews thought a great myſtery was contained in theſe words: For the Midraſch Tillim, upon the fiftieth pſalm, (cited by Mart. a Raymund, in his Pugio Fidei, P. 3. Diſtinct. 1. cap. 4.) thus diſcourſes, "What did they ſay, that they mention theſe words twice, "El, Elohim, Jehovah; El, Elohim, Jehovah? They "ſaid, God, God, Jehovah, the firſt time, becauſe by "theſe the world was created; and they ſaid, God, God, "Jehovah, the ſecond time, becauſe by theſe the law was "given." Where he plainly inſinuates a plurality of perſons, ſaying, beheu, (by theſe) the world was created, &c. and refers to the firſt words of Geneſis, where it is ſaid, Elohim created in the beginning the heaven and the earth. No wonder then that Chriſtians have been of the ſame opinion, and thought theſe three names denoted the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt; as the author of the old Nitzacon (three hundred years before that of R. Lipman's) acknowledges, p. 59. and offers no anſwer, but only this, That theſe three belong to one God; which we alſo acknowledge.

——He knoweth.] They appeal to him who ſearcheth the hearts of men, and their moſt ſecret deſigns.

——And Iſrael he ſhall know.] By ſeeing their conſtancy in the religion of their anceſtors.

—— If it be in rebellion, or if in tranſgreſſion againſt the Lord, (ſave us not this day.)] They direct their ſpeech on a ſudden (as is uſual in great emotions of mind) to God himſelf; deſiring they may not live, but be immediately deſtroyed by him, if they intended either to renounce his worſhip and ſervice; or to worſhip him in any manner that ſhould deviate from his Divine Appointment.

Ver. 23. That we have built us an altar to turn from following the Lord, or if to offer thereon burnt-offering, or meat-offering, or if to offer peace-offerings thereon, let the Lord himſelf requite it.] That is, they deſire God to puniſh it, (for ſo that phraſe, requite it, ſignifies, Deut. xviii. 19.) if they intended to offer any ſort of ſacrifice upon this altar; which they acknowledge would be a direct apoſtacy from their religion.

Ver. 24. And if we have not rather done it for fear of this thing.] The Hebrew word, deaga, (which we tranſlate fear) ſignifies ſuch anxiety in their mind, as filled them with great inquietude, till they thought of this expedient to give themſelves eaſe.

—— Saying, In time your children might ſpeak unto our children, ſaying, What have you to do with the Lord God of Iſrael? They were afraid a time might come, when they ſhould be look'd upon as aliens, who had no right to come to the tabernacle, and the altar, to offer ſacrifice there. The Targum hath it, What have you to do with the word of the Lord God of Iſrael?

Ver. 25. For the Lord hath made Jordan a border between us and you; ye children of Reuben, &c.] Divided us from you by the river Jordan.

—— Ye have no part in the Lord: ſo ſhall your children make our children ceaſe from fearing the Lord.] Make them loſe their religion, (which is called, the fear of God) by pretending they were none of the Lord's people. It was not likely, would one think, ſuch a thing ſhould happen; but they did not know what length of time, and their diſtance from their brethren might produce, to make theſe forget their relation to them and unto God; their country being no part of the land of Promiſe, as Canaan was. Here again the Targum hath it; Ye have no part in the word of the Lord.

Ver. 26. Therefore we ſaid, Let us now prepare to build us an altar, not for burnt-offering, nor for ſacrifice.] They again diſclaim that, before they give the true reaſon of what they had done.

Ver. 27. But that it may be a witneſs between us and you, and our generations after us.] For it had been an ancient way of preſerving the remembrance of things, by raiſing ſuch ſtructures to teſtify to them, Gen. xxx. 48. and uſed afterward by Joſhua himſelf, chap. xxxiv. 27.

—— That we might do the ſervice of the Lord before him with our burnt-offerings.] Have the privilege to come and worſhip God at the tabernacle, by offering ſuch ſacrifices as the reſt of the Iſraelites did.

——That your children may not ſay to our children in time to come, ye have no part in the Lord.] That they might not be thruſt away from the altar when they brought their ſacrifices, under a pretence that they were none of God's people, becauſe they did not live in the land which he promis'd to their fathers. Here the Targum uſes the ſame language again, No part in the WORD of the Lord.

Ver. 28. Therefore ſaid we, that it ſhall be, when they ſhould ſo ſay to us or to our generations in time to come, that we may ſay again.] Have a reply ready, if ſuch a thing, as we fear, ſhould happen.

——Behold the pattern of the altar of the Lord, which our fore-fathers made.] Which they cou'd not exactly have imitated, if they had not been acquainted with it, and worſhipped God there with their brethren.

——Not for burnt-offerings, nor for ſacrifices.] They thought this could not be too often repeated, that they might not be miſunderſtood.

—— But it is a witneſs between us and you.] A publick teſtimony, that we ought not to be excluded from the worſhip of God among you, being of the ſame communion with you.

Ver. 29. God forbid that we ſhould rebel againſt the Lord, and turn this day from following the Lord, to build an altar for burnt-offerings, &c.] They utterly renounce all ſuch intentions, as they were ſuſpected to have entertained, proteſting once more, in the moſt ſolemn manner, that they meant not to rebel againſt the WORD of the Lord, as the Targum again expreſſes it.

Ver. 30. And when Phinehas the prieſt, and the princes of the congregation, and heads of the thouſands of Iſrael, which which were with him, heard the words that the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, and the children of Manaſſeh ſpake, it pleaſed them.] They not only acquieſced in their anſwer, but were exceedingly rejoiced to hear it.

Ver. 31. And Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the prieſt, ſaid unto the children of Reuben, &c.] He ſpake to them in the name of all his company.

——This day we perceive that the Lord is among us, becauſe ye have not committed this treſpaſs againſt the Lord.] He acknowledges thankfully the gracious preſence of God with them, in preſerving the Reubenites, &c. from ſo great a ſin, as their brethren fear'd they had committed; and all the people of Iſrael from ſuch heavy judgments, as it would have deſerv'd.

——Now ye have delivered the children of Iſrael out of the hand of the Lord.] Who would have puniſhed them for this ſchiſm, if they had been guilty of it, and not cenſured for it. This whole verſe runs thus in the Targum. "This day we perceive, that the SCHECHI-"NAH (or Divine Majeſty) is among us, becauſe ye "have not committed this treſpaſs againſt the word of the "Lord; whereby ye have delivered the children of Iſrael "out of the hand of the word of the Lord."

Ver 32. And Phinehas the ſon of Eleazar the prieſt, and the princes, returned from the children of Reuben, and from the children of Gad, out of the land of Gilead] Under Reuben and Gad, the half tribe of Manaſſeh is included, both here, and ver. 25, 32, 33. as under the land of Gilead is included the whole country of theſe tribes. The LXX thought good to add here (and in all thoſe verſes) expreſly, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh; tho' not in the Hebrew.

——And brought them word again.] Inform'd them how they found things among their brethren.

Ver. 33. And the thing pleaſed the children of Iſrael.] They were ſatisfied in the account they received; and approved of what their brethren had done.

——And the children of Iſrael bleſſed God.] As Phinehas had done, that their brethren had not offended the Divine Majeſty, as they ſuſpected.

——And did not intend to go up againſt them in battle.] Laid aſide that intention, which was in their mind, ver. 21. and purſued it no further.

——To deſtroy the land wherein the children of Reuben, and Gad, dwelt.] For ſo they thought they were bound to do by the command, Deut. 12, &c. which extended to a whole country, as well as a city.

Ver. 34. And the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, called the altar Ed.] That is, a witneſs; for the reaſon following.

——For it ſhall be a witneſs between us, that the Lord is God.] That we own no other God but Jehovah, and him only will we worſhip, as he hath commanded. So the LXX, ὅτι Κύριος ὁ Θεὸς αὐτῷ ἐστι, that the Lord is their God

In all this whole relation, from ver. 10. to the end of the chapter, there being no mention of Joſhua, who is not once named, either as ſending theſe ambaſſadors, or receiving the report which they brought back, ſome have thence entertained a conceit, that he was dead before this event happened; and conſequently that he could not be the author of this book. But, it is manifeſt, ſuch perſons are very induſtrious to weaken the authority of theſe ſacred records; or elſe they would not draw conſequences of this nature, from ſuch frivolous obſervations. For it is evident, that all this came to paſs not long after Joſhua had diſmiſſed theſe tribes with good counſel, and likewiſe with his bleſſing: for they returning, immediately after this, to their own country, went no farther than Jordan before they erected this altar; ſoon after which thoſe great perſons went to expoſtulate with them, and heard their apology, and came back and reported it. All this is related in one continued and coherent hiſtory, as it were with one breath, without the leaſt ſignification of any conſiderable time that paſſed between one part of it and the other. And the LXX were ſo well ſatisfied of this, that they took the anſwer of the Reubenites, Gadites, and Manaſſites, to have been brought to Joſhua; for they ſay he impoſed the name of Ed upon the altar. So their words are in the Vatican edition, which is moſt common among us, Καὶ ἐπωνέμασεν ὁ Ιησοῦς τ βωμὸν, &c.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 Joſhua's exhortation before his death, 3 by former benefits, 5 by promiſes, 11 and by threatnings.

AND it came to paſs, a long time after, that the LORD had given reſt unto Iſrael from all their enemies round about, that Joſhua waxed old, and ſtricken in age:

2 And Joſhua called for all Iſrael, and for their elders, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers, and ſaid unto them, I am old and ſtricken in age:

3 And ye have ſeen all that the LORD your God hath done unto all theſe nations, becauſe of you; for the LORD your God is he that hath fought for you,

4 Behold, I have divided unto you by lot theſe nations that remain, to be an inheritance for your tribes, from Jordan, with all the nations that I have cut off, even unto the great ſea weſt-ward.

5 And the LORD your God he ſhall expel them from before you, and drive them from out of your ſight, and ye ſhall poſſeſs their land, as the LORD your God hath promiſed unto you.

6 Be ye therefore very couragious to keep and to do all that is written in the book of the law of Moſes, that ye turn not aſide therefrom, to the right hand or to the left.

7 That ye come not among theſe nations, theſe that remain amongſt you, neither make mention of the name of their gods, nor cauſe to ſwear by them, neither ſerve them, nor bow your ſelves unto them:

8 But cleave unto the LORD your God, as ye have done unto this day.

9 For the LORD hath driven out from before you, great nations and ſtrong: but as for you, no man hath been able to ſtand before you unto this day.

10 One man of you ſhall chaſe a thouſand: for the LORD your God, he it is that fighteth for you, as he hath promiſed you.

11 Take good heed therefore unto your ſelves, that ye love the LORD your God.

12 Elſe if ye do in any wiſe go back, and cleave unto the remnant of theſe nations, even theſe that remain among you, and ſhall make marriages with them, and go in unto them, and they to you:

13 Know

13 Know for a certainty, that the LORD your God will no more drive out any of theſe nations from before you; but they ſhall be ſnares and traps unto you, and ſcourges in your ſides, and thorns in your eyes, until ye periſh from off this good land which the LORD your God hath given you.

14 And behold, this day I am going the way of all the earth, and ye know in all your hearts, and in all your ſouls, that not one thing hath failed of all the good things which the LORD your God ſpake concerning you; all are come to paſs unto you, and not one thing hath failed thereof.

15 Therefore it ſhall come to paſs, that as all good things are come upon you, which the LORD your God promiſed you: ſo ſhall the LORD bring upon you all evil things, until he have deſtroyed you from off this good land which the LORD your God hath given you.

16 When ye have tranſgreſſed the covenant of the LORD your God, which he commanded you, and have gone and ſerved other gods, and bowed your ſelves to them: then ſhall the anger of the LORD be kindled againſt you, and ye ſhall periſh quickly from off the good land which he hath given unto you.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs, a long time after that the Lord had given reſt unto Iſrael from all their enemies round about.] Some take it to have been fourteen years after their conqueſt of the country, chap. xi. 23. and ſeven years after the diviſion of it. See chap. xiv. 10.

——— That Joſhua waxed old, and ſtricken in age.] This was ſaid of him before the land was divided, chap. xiii 1. and a portion thereof given unto him; where he built a city, which took up ſo much time, that probably he was now in the laſt year of his life.

Ver. 2. And Joſhua called for all Iſrael.] Sent out a ſummons to them, to come to him at Timnah-ſerah, where he lived, as the Jews will have it; but rather to Shiloh, where they might appear before God, as well as before him, and have the greater regard to his words.

———And for their elders, &c.] The word and is not in the Hebrew text, and therefore theſe words are an explication of what is meant by all Iſrael, namely, not all the people, but their elders; that is, the great Sanhedrim, as they were called in future times.

———And for their heads.] That is, of their tribes and families.

———And for their judges.] Who were ſettled in all the leſſer cities.

———And for their officers.] Who attended upon the judges, to execute their ſentence.

———And ſaid unto them, I am old and ſtricken in age.] He would make them ſenſible, that this might be the laſt time he ſhould be able to ſpeak to them, which might move them to give greater attention unto what he ſaid.

Ver. 3. And ye have ſeen.] Or rather, behold ye have ſeen; for ſo the particle ve, which we tranſlate and, ſometimes ſignifies, Gen. xxiv. 31. "Behold, I have prepared "the houſe," &c.

———All that the Lord your God hath done unto all theſe nations, becauſe of you.] For your ſake; that he might make room for you in their country, by expelling them out of it.

———For the Lord your God is he that hath fought for you.] See i. 9. xi. 8, 10, 42. The Targum here ſaith, (as in chap. x. 42.) "The Lord your God, his Word fought for "you." See chap. xiv. 12.

Ver. 4. Behold, I have divided unto you by lot theſe nations that remain, to be an inheritance for your tribes, from Jordan, with all the nations that I have cut off, even unto the great ſea weſt-ward.] The meaning is, he had divided among them the whole land of Canaan, from Jordan in the eaſt, to the Mediterranean in the weſt; as well that part of the land which remain'd ſtill unconquer'd, as that out of which they had expell'd the ancient inhabitants.

Ver. 5. And the Lord your God, he ſhall expel them from before you, and drive them from out of your ſight, &c.] This relates to thoſe who remained unſubdued, mention'd in the beginning of the foregoing verſe, whom they ſhould undoubtedly conquer, and poſſeſs their country, if they adhered to God in faithful obedience, as Joſhua exhorts them in the following part of this chapter.

Ver. 6. Be ye therefore very courageous to keep and to do.] Or, as it may be tranſlated, by obſerving or doing.

———All that is written in the book of the law of Moſes.] Which was the condition upon which God promiſed to continue them in the poſſeſſion of this land. By this it is evident, that the book of the law of Moſes was extant in thoſe days, and that the people read it.

Ver. 7. That ye come not among theſe nations, theſe that remain among ſt you.] Have no familiarity with them, e pecially by marriage.

Neither make mention of the name of their gods.] With any ſort of reſpect to them. See Exod. xxiii. 13. and Deut. xii. 3.

———Nor cauſe to ſwear by them.] It was utterly unlawful for them to compel even a pagan to ſwear by the name of his god; for this was to ſuppoſe, that theſe imaginary deities were conſcious of mens thoughts, and had power to puniſh thoſe who were guilty of perjury. And the forbidding this, was alſo to ſecure them from making leagues and covenants with the Gentiles, which they would not look upon as binding without an oath.

———Neither ſerve them.] By offering ſacrifices, or praying, or making vows to them, tho' ever ſo ſecretly.

———Nor bow yourſelves unto them.] As all inward reverence, ſo all outward reſpect likewiſe, was forbidden to be paid to them, eſpecially open and public acts of worſhip. Interpreters here obſerve a gradation, from an amicable familiarity with thoſe pagans, to the moſt groſs idolatry, into which their friendſhip with theſe people would naturally be ray them.

Ver. 8. But cleave unto the Lord your God, as ye have done unto this day.] A remarkable inſtance of which adherence they had all lately given, when the nine tribes and a half were ſo unanimous in their reſolution to puniſh idolatry, with the extirpation of thoſe that were guilty of it, chap. xxii. 33. and when their ſuſpected brethren likewiſe zealouſly diſclaimed all inclinations to it, ver. 22, 29.

Ver. 9. For the Lord hath driven out from before you great nations and ſtrong.] The ſeven nations of Canaan, who dwelt in ſtrong cities, and brought mighty armies againſt the Iſraelites, with horſes and chariots, and were ſome of them gigantic perſons, chap. xi. 4, 22.

——— But as for you, no man hath been able to ſtand before you unto this day.] The enemies who gave them battle were ſhamefully defeated, tho' from ſome of their ſtrong cities the Iſraelites had not yet driven them. See chap. xxi. 44.

Ver. 10. One man of you ſhall chaſe a thouſand.] Joſhua animates them with juſt hopes of the ſame ſucceſs for the future, as they had hitherto been favour'd with by the divine bleſſing on their arms.

——— For the Lord your God is he that fighteth for you, as he hath promiſed you.] Joſhua would not have them aſcribe their victories to their own bravery, but to the divine power. Here again the Targum hath it, "the "Word of the Lord, &c.

Ver. 11. Take good heed therefore unto yourſelves, that ye love the Lord your God.] It highly therefore concerned them to be ſedulous in the worſhip and ſervice of God alone, alone; and this conduct was to be accompanied with ſincere love to him; ſince all their happineſs depended upon his favour to them; for that this is meant by loving God, appears from the following verſe; and from Deut. vi. 4, 5. x. 12. xi. 22.

Ver. 12. Elſe if you do in any wiſe go back.] If you apoſtatize from God, and baſely degenerate into idolatry.

——And cleave unto the remnant of theſe nations, even theſe that remain among you.] Embrace their errors, as the Vulgate tranſlates; which they might eaſily do by contracting friendſhips with them, as the phraſe properly ſignifies.

——And ſhall make marriages with them.] Which would be the natural effect of their familiarity with them.

Ver. 13. Know for a certainty that the Lord your God will no more drive out any of theſe nations from before you.] As he had hitherto done, and ſtill promiſed the ſame, if they would continue in their obedience to him. The expreſſion in the Targum is, The Word of the Lord will no more drive out, &c.

——But they ſhall be ſnares and traps unto you.] They ſhall remain in the land to inveigle and ſeduce you into other impieties.

Ver. 16. When ye have tranſgreſſed the covenant of the Lord your God, which he commanded you, and have gone and ſerved other gods, &c.] This was the principal particular in the covenant, that they ſhould have no other gods but him alone; as we have obſerved from a great number of places in the book of Deuteronomy.

——Then ſhall the anger of the Lord be kindled againſt you, and ye ſhall periſh quickly from off the good land which he hath given unto you.] See Deut. xxviii. 20.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Joſhua aſſembleth the tribes at Shechem. 2 A brief hiſtory of God's benefits from Terah. 14 He reneweth a covenant between them and God. 26 A ſtone the witneſs of the covenant. 29 Joſhuas age, death and burial. 32 Joſephs bones are buried. 33 Eleazar dieth.

AND Joſhua gathered all the tribes of Iſrael to Shechem, and called for the elders of Iſrael, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers, and they preſented themſelves before God.

2 And Joſhua ſaid unto all the people, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, Your fathers dwelt on the other ſide of the flood in old time, even Terah the father of Abraham, and the father of Nachor: and they ſerved other gods.

3 And I took your father Abraham from the other ſide of the flood, and led him throughout all the land of Canaan, and multiplied his ſeed, and gave him Iſaac.

4 And I gave unto Iſaac, Jacob and Eſau: and gave unto Eſau mount Seir, to poſſeſs it; but Jacob and his children went down into Egypt.

5 I ſent Moſes alſo and Aaron, and I plagued Egypt, according to that which I did amongſt them: and afterward I brought you out.

6 And I brought your fathers out of Egypt: and you came unto the ſea, and the Egyptians purſued after your fathers with chariots and horſemen unto the Red ſea.

7 And when they cried unto the LORD, he put darkneſs between you and the Egyptians, and brought the ſea upon them, and covered them; and your eyes have ſeen what I have done in Egypt: and ye dwelt in the wilderneſs a long ſeaſon.

8 And I brought you into the land of the Amorites, which dwelt on the other ſide Jordan; and they fought with you: and I gave them into your hand, that ye might poſſeſs their land, and I deſtroyed them from before you.

9 Then Balak the ſon of Zippor king of Moab, aroſe and warred againſt Iſrael, and ſent and called Balaam the ſon of Beor, to curſe you:

10 But I would not hearken unto Balaam, therefore he bleſſed you ſtill: ſo I delivered you out of his hand.

11 And ye went over Jordan, and came unto Jericho: and the men of Jericho fought againſt you, the Amorites and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Girgaſhites, the Hivites, and the Jebuſites, and I delivered them into your hand.

12 And I ſent the hornet before you, which drave them out from before you, even the two kings of the Amorites: but not with thy ſword, nor with thy bow.

13 And I have given you a land for which ye did not labour, and cities which ye built not, and ye dwell in them: of the vineyards and olive-yards which ye planted not, do ye eat.

14 ¶ Now therefore fear the LORD, and ſerve him in ſincerity and in truth, and put away the gods which your fathers ſerved on the other ſide of the flood, and in Egypt: and ſerve ye the LORD.

15 And if it ſeem evil unto you to ſerve the LORD, chuſe you this day whom you will ſerve, whether the gods which your fathers ſerved, that were on the other ſide of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites, in whoſe land ye dwell: but as for me and my houſe we will ſerve the LORD.

16 And the people anſwered and ſaid, God forbid that we ſhould forſake the LORD, to ſerve other gods.

17 For the LORD our God, he it is that brought us up, and our fathers out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage, and which did thoſe great ſigns in our ſight, and preſerved us in all the way wherein we went, and amongſt all the people through whom we paſſed.

18 And the LORD drave out from before us all the people, even the Amorites which dwelt in the land: therefore will we alſo ſerve the LORD, for he is our God.

19 And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Ye cannot ſerve the LORD; for he is an holy God: he is a jealous God, he will not forgive your tranſgreſſions, nor your ſins.

20 If ye forſake the LORD, and ſerve ſtrange gods, then he will turn and do you hurt, and conſume you, after that he hath done you good.

21 And the people ſaid unto Joſhua, Nay, but we will ſerve the LORD.

22 And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Ye are witneſſes againſt your ſelves, that ye have choſen you the LORD, to ſerve him. And they ſaid, We are witneſſes.

23 Now therefore put away (ſaid he) the ſtrange gods which are among you, and incline your heart unto the LORD God of Iſrael.

24 And the people ſaid unto Joſhua, The LORD our God will we ſerve, and his voice will we obey.

25 So Joſhua made a covenant with the people that day, and ſet them a ſtatute, and an ordinance in Shechem.

26 ¶ And Joſhua wrote theſe words in the book of the law of God, and took a great ſtone, and ſet it up there under an oak, that was by the ſanctuary of the LORD.

27 And Joſhua ſaid unto all the people, Behold, this ſtone ſhall be a witneſs unto us; for it hath heard all the words of the LORD which he ſpake unto us: it ſhall be therefore a witneſs unto you, leſt ye deny your God.

28 So Joſhua let the people depart, every man unto his inheritance.

29 ¶ And it came to paſs after theſe things, that Joſhua the ſon of Nun, the ſervant of the LORD died, being an hundred and ten years old.

30 And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in Timnath-ſerah, which is in mount Ephraim, on the north-ſide of the hill of Gaaſh.

31 And Iſrael ſerved the LORD all the days of Joſhua, and all the days of the elders that overlived Joſhua, and which had known all the works of the LORD, that he had done for Iſrael.

32 ¶ And the bones of Joſeph, which the children of Iſrael brought up out of Egypt, buried they in Shechem, in a parcel of ground which Jacob bought of the ſons of Hamor the father of Shechem, for an hundred pieces of ſilver; and it became the inheritance of the children of Joſeph.

33 And Eleazar the ſon of Aaron died, they buried him in a hill that pertained to Phinehas his ſon, which was given him in mount Ephraim.

Ver. 1. And Joſhua gathered all the tribes of Iſrael.] It is likely that Joſhua, living longer than he expected, when he made the foregoing ſpeech to the Iſraelites, called the people together once more, to repeat his good advice to them before he died; as Moſes made ſeveral pathetic ſpeeches to them before his departure from them: Or, perhaps, it was the uſual cuſtom of Joſhua to take frequent occaſion to aſſemble them together, in order to remind them of their duty. And theſe two exhortations, which he made to them in the latter end of his life, he thought fit to record.

——To Shechem.] Some will have this place to be the ſame with Shiloh: It is here called Shechem, becauſe it was in the country of Shechem, and not far from it. The LXX alſo call it Σηλω̃, both here, and ver. 25. It is plain alſo, by the latter end of the verſe, that they aſſembled at the place where God condeſcended to reſide, and which was in Shiloh: Yet all this is not ſufficient to make us think they were not ſummoned to the city called Shechem: For there is no good reaſon for aſſigning this name to Shiloh; it being (as St. Jerom obſerves) ten miles from Shechem: And all other copies of the LXX, but the Vatican, having Συχὲμ, not Σηλω̃. And as for their appearing before God at this place, we ſhall give an account of it in the end of this verſe; and only obſerve at preſent, that it is likely Joſhua, who was the ſupreme governor of God's people, being old and infirm, cauſed the ark, for this time, to be brought to Shechem, as being near to him, that he might renew the covenant with the people in that place where Abraham firſt ſettled, when he came into the land of Canaan, and where he erected an altar, and God eſtabliſh'd his covenant with him, (Gen. xii. 6, 7,) and where the patriarchs were bury'd, (Acts vii. 15, 16.) and the bones of Joſeph were ſoon to be depoſited, (ver. 32. of this chapter) and where the Iſraelites, at their their firſt entrance into Canaan, renew'd their covenant with God, Joſh. viii. 30, &c. For Ebal and Gerzim were near Shechem.

——— And called for the elders of Iſrael, and for their heads, and for their judges, and for their officers.] The ſame perſons as were mentioned, chap. xxiii. 2. Theſe paſſages give us a diſtinct account of thoſe who were employed in the government of the Iſraelites.

——— And they preſented themſelves before God.] At his tabernacle, which was for the preſent brought hither. For, it is evident, that the kings, or chief rulers of Iſrael, were empowered to carry the ark from the place of its reſidence, whenever ſuch a conveyance was rendered neceſſary by any great emergency, 1 Sam. iv. 3, 4. 2 Sam. xv. 24. And now at this great aſſembly of the whole nation by their repreſentatives, there was a juſt reaſon for its being brought hither, (becauſe the old age of Joſhua rendered him incapable of going, with any convenience, to Shiloh) that it might be a more ſolemn meeting, being held in the preſence of God. Mr. Mede hath another notion of this matter; for he thinks that there was a proſeucha, or place of prayer, erected by the Iſraelites, (at leaſt by the Ephraimites, in whoſe lot Shechem was) after they had ſubdued the country, that they might reſort thither to call upon God, when they were not able to go ſo far as the tabernacle.

Ver 2. And Joſhua ſaid unto all the people.] Who were there preſent, namely, the elders, heads, judges, and officers, mentioned in the foregoing verſe; who were to report his words to all the people.

——— Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael.] This is an argument, that Joſhua uttered all that follows by a Divine Impulſe; for he begins his ſpeech in the ſolemn form uſed by the prophets, (thus ſaith the Lord) and introduces God himſelf ſpeaking in his own perſon. From whence it may be inferr'd, he was a prophet, as well as the ruler of God's people.

———Your fathers dwelt on the other ſide of the flood.] That is, of the river Euphrates.

——In old time.] Many years before they came from Ur of the Chaldees into Haran, Gen. xi. 21, 31.

——— Even Terah the father of Abraham, and the father of Nahor.] Theſe were Terah's two eldeſt ſons, Gen xi. 26.

——— And they ſerved other gods.] All agree that Terah was an idolater, living in that country; from whence, as many think, idolatry firſt came, Gen. xxxi. 19. The Jews, in Schalſch. Hakkabala ſay, he was a prieſt; ſee Hottinger in his Smegma Orientale, cap. 8 p. 290. Others of them ſay, he was a ſtatuary, who made images of ſeveral materials, λέγων τάτες εἶναι Θεὸς, ſaying, theſe were gods; as Suidas ſpeaks, who, together with Epiphanius, is of this opinion. See Bochart, in his Phaleg. lib. 2. cap. 5. Abraham himſelf alſo was, as moſt agree, bred up in the ſame idolatry; tho' ſome few deny it; as Hottinger obſerves in the ſame place; where he alledgeth the words of Maimonides, who declares, that he was converted to the worſhip of the Creator of all in the 48th year of his age; and that his father Terah alſo repented, and worſhipped the true and only God.

Ver. 3. And I took your father Abraham from the other ſide of the flood.] From that idolatrous country where he was born and educated. Which is mentioned as a ſingular obligation upon the Iſraelites to adhere to God, who ſelected out the father of their families, ſo many ages ago, to be his worſhipper. This, Maimonides repreſents in very pathetical expreſſions: "How great is the benefit, "(ſaith he) that we receive by theſe precepts, which "have freed us from ſuch a grand error wherein our fa-"ther was educated, and converted us to the true belief "of God? by teaching us, that he created all things, "and that he is to be worſhipped, and lov'd, and fear'd, "and he only; and that there is no great labour required "to do his will, but only the love and fear of him, in "which too all his worſhip is perfected," &c. More Nevochim, P. 3. cap. 29.

——And led him.] From Charran, after his father's death.

———Throughout all the land of Canaan.] Till he came to Shechem, (where the Iſraelites now were aſſembled) and to Beth-el; and ſtill on toward the ſouth of the land of Canaan, Gen. xii. 6, 8, 9.

——— And multiplied his ſeed, and gave him Iſaac.] In order to the accompliſhment of his promiſe, Gen. xv. 5. he beſtowed a ſon upon him when he was an hundred years old, Gen. xxi. 1, 2, &c.

Ver. 4. And I gave unto Iſaac, Jacob, and Eſau.] Who had a very numerous iſſue, Gen. xxv. 24, &c.

——— And I gave unto Eſau Mount Seir, to poſſeſs it.] He and his brother being grown ſo rich, and their cattle ſo increaſed, that there was not room for them both, in the land of Canaan, where they ſojourn'd, Gen. xxxvi. 6, 7. 8.

———But Jacob and his children went down into Egypt.] Tho' Eſau left the land of Canaan entirely to him, yet the time was not come when God intended to plant his poſterity in it; but they were obliged to go down into Egypt, where they ſuffered a cruel bondage, Gen. xlvi. 6. Exod i. 11, &c. So the LXX explain it.

Ver. 5 I ſent Moſes alſo and Aaron.] And when they were multiply'd exceedingly, (Exod. i. 7, 14, 20.) theſe two great perſons were ſent to deliver them from that Bondage, Exod. iii. 10. iv. 14.

———And I plagued Egypt, according to that which I did amongſt them] Smote it with thoſe ſigns (as the LXX explain it) which are related in that book of Exodus.

———And afterward I brought you out.] By thoſe wonderful plagues the Egyptians were at laſt conſtrained to let the Iſraelites depart, as they deſired, Exod xii. 31. &c.

Ver 6. And I brought your fathers out of Egypt, and you came unto the ſea.] When he had brought them out (as is related Exod xii 40.) they were led by God through the way of the wilderneſs of the Red Sea, Exod. xiii 8. by which they encamped, and were in very great ſtraits, xiv. 9.

———And the Egyptians purſued after your fathers with chariots and horſemen unto the Red Sea.] Imagining them to be in ſuch difficulties, that they could not eſcape out of their hand, Exod. xiv. 3

Ver. 7. And when they cried unto the Lord, he put darkneſs between you and the Egyptians.] So that when they had overtaken them, they could not ſee where they were, Exod. xiv. 10, 19, 20.

———And brought the ſea upon them, and covered them.] Inſomuch that they march'd after them into the ſea, where they were overwhelmed, Exod. xiv 27, 28.

———And your eyes have ſeen what I have done in Egypt.] Or, upon the Egyptians. He appeals to the truth of this to them, who had ſeen the Egyptians lie dead upon the ſea ſhore, Exod. xiv. 30. 31. For their elders, to whom Joſhua now addreſſes himſelf, were ſpectators of that wonderful event, and were now not only men of great dignity but (many of them at leaſt) of great age.

———And ye dwelt in the wilderneſs a long ſeaſon.] Forty years Numb. xiv. 33. where God gave them a Law and fed them in a miraculous manner, &c.

Ver. 8 And brought you into the land of the Amorites, which dwelt on the other ſide Jordan.] Toward the latter end of that time, Numb. xxi. 20, 21.

And they fought with you: and I gave them into your hand, &c.] ſee there, ver. 23, 24, 33, &c.

Ver. 9. Then Balak the ſon of Zippor king of Moab, aroſe, and warred againſt Iſrael.] He did not actually draw out his forces and fall upon them, but prepared them with an intention to drive the Iſraelites from his coaſt, if Balaam could have diſabled them by his curſes; which ſufficiently appears from Numb xxii. 11. David Camius therefore judiciouſly obſerves, that the deſign or contrivance is reputed the work it ſelf.

——— And ſent and called Balaam the ſon of Beor to curſe you.] See Numb. xxii. 5, 6, &c.

Ver. 10. But the Lord would not hearken unto Balaam.] Who had a great inclination to do what Balak deſired; and one would think, by this, begg'd of God to give him leave to practiſe his arts in order to injure the Iſraelites. And, when this was deny'd him; yet, when he afterward obtained the Divine Permiſſion to go to the king of Moab, he ſet out with theſe intentions, and with hope he might prevail with God to ſuffer him to proſecute his deſign, Numb. xxii. 32.

——— Therefore he bleſſed you ſtill: So I delivered you out of his hand] Balaam all along pronounced nothing but bleſſings on them, inſtead of curſes, notwithſtanding all the the attempts that were made to the contrary, Numb. xxiii. and xxiv. which was to be aſcribed to the over-ruling power of God, who hinder'd him from hurting them.

Ver. 11. And ye went over Jordan.] Having vanquiſh'd two kings of the Amorites on the other ſide of it, and got quit of all other enemies, (the Moabites and Midianites) God, in a wonderful manner, brought them into Canaan, by drying up the river Jordan to give them a paſſage over it.

——— And came unto Jericho.] Which was the firſt place they beſieged, being the neareſt Jordan.

——— And the men of Jericho fought againſt you.] We do not read of any ſallies they made upon the Iſraelites; but they ſhutting their gates to defend the city againſt them, it is likely flung ſtones from their wall upon them.

——The Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, and the Hittites, and the Girgaſhites, the Hivites, and the Jebuſites.] After which, it appears by this book that they fought with all the ſeven nations of Canaan; who engaged them in ſeveral bodies, and at different times. Theſe tranſactions were performed ſo lately, that there was no need for Joſhua to repeat all the particulars mentioned in the 10th, 11th, and 12th chapters. But, by the diviſion of their land among the Iſraelites, it was very well known to them, that (as this verſe concludes) God had delivered them into their hands. It is obſervable, that the Girgaſhites are here particularly mentioned, as fighting againſt Iſrael with the reſt of the ſeven nations; which makes Grotius's obſervation doubtful of their ſurrender at Joſhua's firſt ſummons; (ſee chap. xvi. 10.) but if that be not true, it is manifeſt ſome of them remain'd unſubdu'd, and had a ſettlement in Canaan in our Saviour's days: When we read of the country of the Gergeſens, the inhabitants of which were not Jews, as appears by their breeding ſwine.

Ver. 12. And I ſent the hornet before you, which drave them out before you.] This may ſignify either, that before the Iſraelites came into theſe parts, God ſent hornets, which ſo infeſted their enemies, that many of them were compelled to leave their country; or, that when they came to give battle, they were aſſaulted by theſe creatures in ſuch a manner, as facilitated the victory of the Iſraelites. This God promiſed in Exod xxiii. 27, 28. Deut. vii. 20. And here Joſhua reminds them of the Divine Veracity. The book of Wiſdom calls them προφόβους, the fore runners of God's hoſt. And Kimchi declares, they flew in the eyes of the Canaanites, and ſo blinded them, that they could not ſee to fight.

———Even the two kings of the Amorites.] Sihon and Og, whoſe country was firſt infeſted with theſe noxious animals; and afterward the kings of Canaan, and their people felt their fury.

——But not with thy ſword, nor with thy Bow.] Theſe ſwarms of hornets, it ſeems, did greater execution than the armies of the Iſraelites. We do not read of their aſſaulting the Canaanites in any of the battles that Joſhua fought with them; for he did not think fit to mention it in the foregoing account of his victory, but declares it now in general, when he was to ſum up all the mercies of God to them.

Ver. 13. And I have given you a land for which ye did not labour, and cities which ye built not, and ye dwell in them.] As Joſhua had obſerv'd before, chap. xi. 13.

——Of the vine yards and olive-yards which ye planted not, do ye eat.] According to his promiſe, Deut. vi. 10, 11.

Ver. 14. Now therefore fear the Lord.] The fear of God commonly ſignifies his worſhip and ſervice, unto which, Joſhua exhorts the Iſraelites in the following words; which ſeem to relate to all outward acts of worſhip; as the expreſſion before us does to the inward and mental reverence which it was incumbent on them to entertain for him as the only God.

———And ſerve him in ſincerity and in truth.] Worſhip no other god in conjunction with him, nor blend any idolatrous rites with thoſe preſcribed by his Sacred Majeſty; but ſerve him conſtantly and purely according to his law, which is the truth, Pſalm cxix. 142.

—And put away the gods which your fathers ſerved, on the other ſide of the flood.] See ver. 2. This intimates, that ſome idolaters were now among them, tho' they did not preſume to make any open profeſſion of their impiety: For the Iſraelites had lately expreſs'd ſo unanimous a zeal againſt any appearance of idolatry, that one cannot think there was any known worſhipper of other gods now in the nation.

—And in Egypt.] Where they began to be corrupted in their religion, as is often ſuggeſted by the prophet Ezekiel, chap. xx. 6, 7, 8, 18. xxiii. 3, 8, 9, 21, 27.

——And ſerve ye the Lord.] Joſhua repeats it again, as an exhortation of the greateſt moment.

Ver. 15. And if it ſeem evil unto you to ſerve the Lord, chuſe you this day whom you will ſerve.] He could not think they would turn Atheiſts, and have no God at all; and was unwilling to ſuppoſe, that they would prefer any other god to him, who had obliged them by ſuch benefits as are before-mentioned: Which he expreſſes in this rhetorical form of ſpeech; and is as much as if he had ſaid, If you like not the Lord's ſervice, tell me whom you will ſerve? Where do you hope to find a God comparable to him?

———Whether the gods which your fathers ſerved, that were on the other ſide of the flood.] That ſervice had ſome colour for it, becauſe of its antiquity; but was condemn'd by Abraham their father, who forſook that religion, and was bleſſed for it by God with the inheritance he had now given his poſterity in the land of Canaan.

———Or the gods of the Amorites, in whoſe land you dwell.] That was ſo abſurd as to need no confutation; for thoſe gods could not defend their own worſhippers.

———But as for me and my houſe, we will ſerve the Lord.] Joſhua declares his firm reſolution, that let them take what courſe they pleas'd, he, together with his whole family, (as far as he could oblige them) would worſhip the Lord alone.

Ver. 16. And the people anſwered and ſaid.] All the elders, and others there preſent, and all thoſe to whom they reported what Joſhua had ſaid, made this anſwer.

——— God forbid that we ſhould forſake the Lord.] The Hebrew word, Chalila, (which we tranſlate, God forbid) imports a great abhorrence and abomination of that which is mentioned with it.

——To ſerve other Gods.] Which they now look'd upon as the greateſt madneſs.

Ver. 17. For the Lord our God, he it is that brought us up, and our fathers out of the land of Egypt, from the houſe of bondage, and which did thoſe great ſigns in our ſight, &c.] They gave ſuch powerful reaſons why they ſhould ſerve none but the Lord alone, that if they had always preſerv'd them as freſh in their minds, as they were now, they could never have apoſtatized to the worſhip of other Gods.

Ver. 18. And the Lord drave out from before us all the people.] That is, of Canaan.

——— Even the Amorites that dwelt in the land. In the Hebrew, and the Amorites; that is, together with the two kings of the Amorites, whom they had driven before out of the land on the other ſide Jordan.

———Therefore will we alſo ſerve the Lord.] Their reſolution was to follow the example of Joſhua, their leader.

———For he is our God.] As they were convinced by their wonderful deliverance out of Egypt; and by all the great ſigns God had wrought there, and after they came from thence, and by the care he took of them in the wilderneſs, and all other places; and now by their late victories over moſt potent enemies, whom he had driven out of their country, and inveſted the Iſraelites with the poſſeſſion of it.

Ver. 19. And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Ye cannot ſerve the Lord.] This is far from ſignifying an utter impoſſibility; (for that would have contradicted his exhortation, ver. 14.) but that they were ſo very prone to idolatry, that they would not be able to perſevere ſtedfaſt in their reſolution, unleſs they took care conſtantly to reflect upon, and lay to heart, what they had now acknowledg'd, (ver. 18.) which he was afraid they would not do.

———For he is an holy God: he is a jealous God.] Who having no equal, (that's meant by holy) will endure no rival; and therefore they who rendered the worſhip proper to him, to any other beſide, or with him, were deem'd to deny his incomparable ſanctity, and ſaid in ſcripture to profane his holy name, as Mr. Mede obſerves, ſee book 1. diſcourſe 2. It is a juſt remark which Mr. Alix here makes, in his excellent book, (of the judgment of the Jewiſh church againſt the Unitarians, chap. ix.) that here is a plain idea of a plurality of perſons in the Godhead, the words in the Hebrew being, he is the holy Gods; like that Eccleſ. xii. 1. Remember thy creators. And, indeed, this is a place antiently noted by the Chriſtian doctors, (whom the Jews call Hereticks) who ask'd R. Samlai, as the Jews themſelves tell us, what he had to anſwer to theſe words, Ye cannot ſerve the Lord, Ki Elohim Kedoſhim Hu, becauſe he is the holy Gods? Who had nothing to reply, but that Joſhua doth not ſay, They are the holy gods, but he is the Holy Gods; which is the very ſame that we affirm, that he is Three in One. This is in Bereſchith Rabba, mention'd by Raymund, in his Pugio Fidei, and by J. Wagenſeil, in his conſutation of Lipman's Carmen Memoriale, p. 129.

—He will not forgive your tranſgreſſions, nor your ſins.] But make thoſe who aſſume any other deity into fellowſhip with him in worſhip, feel how he reſents ſuch diſhonour done to his Divine Majeſty.

Ver. 20. If ye forſake the Lord, and ſerve ſtrange gods.] Either the gods of the Amorites, before-mention'd, or thoſe that their fathers anciently ſerv'd.

——— Then he will turn and do you hurt, and conſume you, after that he hath done you good.] After the courſe of his providence toward you, and ſend as many curſes upon you, as he hath conferred bleſſings; according to the predictions of Moſes, in Deut. xxviii. 63.

Ver. 21. And the people ſaid unto Joſhua, Nay, but we will ſerve the Lord.] They deſire him to entertain a better opinion of them; for they perſiſt in their well-grounded reſolution, ver. 16, 17, 18.

Ver. 22. And Joſhua ſaid unto the people, Ye are witneſſes againſt your ſelves, that ye have choſen you the Lord, to ſerve him.] This ſolemn profeſſion, which they had thus deliberately and publickly made, he tells them, would teſtify againſt them, and condemn them, if they proved falſe to God.

——— And they ſaid, We are witneſſes.] Here they renew that choice of God for their king, which their forefathers made when they came out of Egypt, (in the xixth and xxivth chapters of Exodus) and acknowledg'd they ſhould be ſelf-condemn'd, if they did not make it good.

Ver. 23. Now therefore put away (ſaid he) the ſtrange gods that are among you.] See ver. 14. This is an argument that he was a prophet, as we ſaid upon verſe 2. that he ſaw their inward diſpoſition, and the ſecret affection hey had to idols. For tho' there was no publick idol worſhipped, yet he knew, by the ſpirit of prophecy, that they had their penates, (as the Romans called them) houſhold gods; or rather, gods which they worſhipped ſecretly in their cloſets, as our Dr. Spencer obſerves, Diſſert. 1. lib. 3. cap. 3. Theſe being the very ſame words which Jacob uſed to his houſhold, when he ſuſpected them of the ſame crime, tho' there was no open idolatry practiſed among them, Gen. xxxv. 2.

——— And incline your heart unto the Lord God of Iſrael.] Settle your affection upon the Lord alone, who you profeſs is your ſovereign, to whom the whole nation hath infinite obligations, ver. 16, 17, 18.

Ver. 24. And the people ſaid unto Joſhua, The Lord our God will we ſerve, and his voice will we obey.] They repeat their profeſſed reſolution a third time, which made it more binding; and a ſtronger witneſs againſt them, if they forſook the Lord.

Ver. 25. So Joſhua made a covenant with the people that day.] Engaged them to make good this ſolemn profeſſion, by renewing the covenant they had formerly enter'd into, both in the days of Moſes, and in his time: wherein they promiſed to worſhip him alone, and be obedient to him; and he promiſed to do for them as he had formerly done, that is, be their conſtant protector and benefactor. There are thoſe who think this covenant was now eſtabliſhed by ſacrifice, as it was when they came out of Egypt, Ex. xxiv. 4, 5. and when they came into Canaan, Joſh. viii. 31. But as there is no mention of an altar, or any offering, ſo it is not likely, that Joſhua would offer any ſacrifice, but in the place which God had choſen, which was Shiloh: For tho' we ſuppoſe the ſanctuary to have been brought hither for a little time, yet it was not the ſettled place of the Divine reſidence.

———And ſet them a ſtatute, and an ordinance.] It is commonly interpreted, that he propounded to them in brief the precepts of the law; which are the conditions of the covenant: But it may be interpreted, that he enacted this covenant to have the force of a ſtatute and ordinance, or judgment, as it is in the Hebrew.

———In Shechem.] So that it was afterward called the covenant or ſtatute in Shechem, where they all made repeated profeſſions of love to God.

Ver. 26. And Joſhua wrote theſe words.] From hence, the Talmudiſts conclude Joſhua to have been the author of this book; as if theſe words ſignified, that he, after the example of Moſes, committed to writing all that we read in this book, and added it at the end of the five books written by Moſes, as it is now annexed to them. But it muſt be confeſſed, that one cannot certainly infer more from thoſe words, than that he wrote the words of the foregoing covenant; and this he did, as it here follows, in the very book of the law of God, that it might be preſerved in everlaſting remembrance.

——— In the book of the law of God.] Which was laid up, by the order of Moſes, in the ſide of the ark, Deut. xxxi. 24, 25, 26. From whence he took it, and wrote in it all that had paſſed between him and the people, that they might look upon this as a ſacred tranſaction, as indeed it was, and moſt carefully obſerve it: And perhaps he wrote it alſo in that copy of the law of God, which the princes had for the uſe of every tribe. See upon Deut. xxxi. 9.

———And took a great ſtone, and ſet it up there.] As a monument of the covenant now made. Which was an ancient way of preſerving the memory of things paſt, as appears by what Jacob did, Gen. xxviii. 18. and they themſelves had lately done, chap. iv. 3, 20, 21, &c. Upon this ſtone, it is probable, there was an inſcription, ſignifying what it meant.

———Under an oak that was by the ſanctuary of the Lord.] This is one argument Mr. Mede uſes, to prove that the ſanctuary, properly ſo called, cannot be here meant, becauſe it was unlawful to plant any trees near it, Deut. xvi. 21, 22. and therefore he underſtands hereby a Proſeucha, or place of prayer, which, in memory of Jacob, was here at Shechem. And he plainly ſhews, there were both ſuch places, and alſo ſynagogues, in ſeveral parts of the country; the former being in the fields, and open on the top; the latter in cities, and covered as our houſes are: To which we may add, that we read of ſanctuaries, in the plural number, that were among them in after-times, Amos vii. 9. Yet it muſt be acknowledged, that the argument he uſes from the place we mentioned in Deuteronomy, is not cogent: For tho' they be prohibited there to plant a grove of any trees near God's altar, after the manner of the Gentiles, this did not make it unlawful to ſet up the ſanctuary under a tree that had been planted before; eſpecially when was done only for a ſhort time, and not to make it the ſettled place for its conſtant abode.

But there are thoſe who avoid this ſeeming difficulty, by refering theſe words in the ſanctuary of the LORD, (as they may be tranſlated) not to the Oak, but to the words going before, namely, the Book of the Law of God; which was in the ſanctuary. And thus, it is certain, words are ſometimes to be connected, not with thoſe immediately preceding, but with thoſe that are more remote. A remarkable inſtance of which we have in Gen. xiii. 10. where thoſe words in the end of the verſe, As thou comeſt unto Zoar, cannot be joined to the land of Egypt, juſt before mentioned, but to the plain of Jordan, in the very beginning of the verſe.

Ver. 27. And Joſhua ſaid unto all the people, This ſtone ſhall be a witneſs unto us.] As Laban ſaid concerning the heap of ſtones which he and Jacob rais'd, Gen. xxxi. 48, 51, 52.

——— For it hath heard all the words of the Lord which he ſpake unto us.] All thoſe ſpeeches which had been delivered by Joſhua in the name of God, ver. 2, 3, &c. and all that the Iſraelites had anſwered to him: That is, the covenant between God and them; which being renewed before this ſtone, it is ſaid, by an elegant figure, to have heard what was ſpoken, becauſe it would remain to teſtify and declare to all poſterity the engagements that lay upon them. Thus the prophet calls to all creatures, Hear, O Heaven, &c.

——— It ſhall be therefore a witneſs unto you, leſt ye deny your God.] To accuſe them, as much as if it had heard what they ſaid, and could ſpeak againſt them.

Ver. 28. So Joſhua let the people depart, every man unto his own inheritance.] And the ſanctuary of the LORD returned to its ſettled place, which was in Shiloh.

Ver. 29. And it came to paſs after theſe things, that Joſhua the ſon of Nun, the ſervant of the Lord died, &c.] Thus did this great man, this faithful and illuſtrious ſervant of the Moſt High, cloſe the laſt period of a glorious life. He had long devoted himſelf to the ſervice of Moſes, and in ſcripture is called the ſervant of this great Legiſlator. He is called by the Greeks, Jeſus the ſon of Nave; His firſt name was Hoſea, and we find him mentioned by it, in the Book of Numbers, chap. xiii. ver. 8, 16. Some believe that Moſes changed his name, by adding that of God to it. Hoſea ſignifies Saviour; and Jehoſua, the Salvation of God, or, he will ſave. His quality of ſervant of Moſes is no blemiſh or diſhonour to his memory. On the contrary, it is one of the greateſt honours he could receive, and a very particular mark of diſtinction from Moſes to have choſen him for his miniſter. In the heroic times, great men had their ſervants in this manner, who were people of eminent quality and known worth: Thus in Homer, Patroclus was the ſervant of Achilles, and Meriones attended on Idomeneus. Now, Patroclus and Meriones were two Grecian princes of great conſideration in the army before Troy. Eliſha was the ſervant of Elijah, and poured water upon his hands; notwithſtanding which, he was a great prophet.

Jeſus the ſon of Sirach, has penned the encomium of of Joſhua in theſe terms. "Jeſus the ſon of Nave was "valiant in the wars, and was the ſucceſſor of Moſes in "prophecies, who according to his name, was made "great for the ſaving of the elect of God, and taking "vengeance of the enemies that roſe up againſt them, "that he might ſet Iſrael in their inheritance. How "great glory got he, when he did lift up his hands, and "ſtretched out his ſword againſt the cities! Who before "him ſo ſtood to it? for the Lord himſelf brought his "enemies unto him. Did not the ſun go back by his "means, and was not one day as long as two? He called "upon the moſt high Lord, when the enemies preſſed "upon him on every ſide, and the great Lord heard "him: And with hail-ſtones of mighty power he made "the battle to fall violently upon the nations, and in the "deſcent of Bethoron he deſtroyed them that reſiſted "that the nations might know all their ſtrength, becauſe "he fought in the ſight of the Lord, and he followed "the mighty one." Ecclus. xlvi. 1, 2. &c.

The Book which bears the name of Joſhua is generally attributed to this great man, and all the copies of it go under his name. Both the church and ſynagogue agree, in making him the author of this work, and acknowledging it to be canonical.

The Samaritans pretend to have a Book of Joſhua, which they preſerve with great reſpect, and make uſe of it to ſupport their pretenſions againſt the Jews; but this Book is very different from that which the Jews and Chriſtians eſteem to be canonical. It contains 47 chapters, filled with an infinite number of fables and childiſh ſtories. It begins where Moſes choſe Joſhua to ſucceed him in the government of the people, and relates the hiſtory of Balaam the diviner, who was ſent for to curſe the Iſraelites; it likewiſe mentions the war which Moſes made againſt the Midianites, together with the occaſion of it, and gives an account of the death, both of Balaam and Moſes, and the lamentations which were made for the latter. It relates the paſſage of Jordan very much at large, and the taking of Jericho, and adds a large number of miracles which are not recorded in the genuine Book of Joſhua. After the death of Joſhua, this Book names one Terſico, of the tribe of Ephraim, for his ſucceſſor. The author comprehends in his hiſtory, what concerns the judges and kings of Judah, Jaddus, and Alexander the Great, together with the ſiege of Jeruſalem by Adrian: He concludes with what relates to Nathanael, and his ſons Babarraba, Akbarus, and Phinehas. This Book is not printed; Joſeph Scaliger, to whom it belonged, left it as a legacy to the library of Leyden, where it is at preſent written in Samaritan characters, but in the Arabic language, tranſlated from the Hebrew.

The Jews repreſent Joſhua as the author of a prayer, which they repeat, either entire or in part, as often as they go out of their ſynagogues. It begins thus. "It "is our duty to praiſe the Lord of the univerſe, and to "celebrate the creation of the world; for he hath not "made us like unto the nations of the earth, and hath "prepared for us an inheritance infinitely richer and "greater, &c." They likewiſe aſcribe to Joſhua ten rules, which were to be obſerved in the land of promiſe. The firſt is, that it is lawful to feed ſmall, but not large cattle, in foreſts, the trees whereof are large. The ſecond, that all Iſraelites are allowed to pick up ſmall pieces of wood, ſuch as briars, or the like, in another man's field, provided they find them looſe on the ground, and do not cut them. The reſt of theſe regulations are much of the ſame nature.

We do not read any where, that Joſhua was ever married, or had children,

Some of the eaſtern writers add a very peculiar ſtory concerning Joſhua, namely, that his ſwift conqueſts, and his ſeverity to the inhabitants of the land of Canaan, made his enemies call him the evening, or the deſtroying wolf. And that in his time there was a king of Armenia the leſs, whoſe name was Shaubeck the ſon of Hemam, who made a confederacy with five and forty kings out of Perſia and Media, as alſo Armenia the greater, Syria, Sidon, and the remains of the Canaanites, and with them Japhet the giant. Theſe by their united ſtrength raiſe an army like the ſand of the ſea, and ſend a letter to Joſhua, the ſtile whereof ſhews it to have been written in a much later age, being couched in theſe terms.

"We know, O thou evening wolf, what thou haſt done "to our neighbours. Thou haſt made our palaces deſolate. "Thou haſt kill'd, and haſt not ſpar'd. Thou haſt de"ſtroy'd all with the ſword, both young and old, without "diſtinction, and haſt laid all their cities waſte. Know "therefore, that we at the end of thirty days, will come "into thy land, and invade thy poſſeſſion, even to the "mountain, in which thou worſhippeſt thy God, which is "called the holy mountain (of Gerizim.) We the forty"five kings, every one of us being guarded with a thou"ſand valiant men, handling the bow and dart, wearing "ſwords, and skill'd in war (will come.) And with us "there is the Giant the ſon of Japhet, arm'd with an En"gine of ſteel, with which he kills a thouſand, or at leaſt "five hundred at a time. Thoſe whom he brings with "him are kings, guarded with ſoldiers, and arm'd with in"ſtruments of war, which they all received in their own "right from their grandfather Noah, of bleſſed memory. "Be thou therefore ready, and provide thy inſtruments of "war, leſt thou ſhouldſt ſay hereafter, that we took thee "unprovided." Upon this the elders and chief men of the army thought fit to ſend this epiſtle by a proper ambaſſador, who ſhould number the people, view the camp, obſerve their order, and give an account of their condition, and in what manner they might be attack'd with the greateſt advantage. This ambaſſador was ſent on the ſecond day of the tenth month, in the twenty firſt year after the entrance of the Iſraelites into Canaan, and came thither on the day after the great aſſembly of the feaſt of weeks began; and he brought the epiſtle to Joſhua, who was then ſeated on his royal throne, and judging the people; ſome of whom he condemned to be beheaded, others to be burnt, and others to be impriſon'd. Joſhua commanded, that the ambaſſador ſhould be brought to him, but refus'd to ſee him, before he had made an end of judging the children of Iſrael. At laſt he took the epiſtle from his hand and read it in the houſe of God, with faſting, weeping and mourning, and kept it at his own houſe till the end of the feaſt of weeks; neither would he at that time make the people ſad, tho' he himſelf laid up the matter in his own heart. In the mean time the ambaſſador view'd the multitude and good diſcipline of the army, the ſtrength and valour of the king, the commandments of their God, and his power, the deſcent of the pillar of fire, and its greatneſs. But when he beheld the high prieſt, he was ſeized with a ſecret fear, becauſe he never ſaw any one like him, nor heard of any ſuch in former ages. But when the feaſt was ended, Joſhua gather'd all the people together, and read the epiſtle before them. After which he ſaid, "I have fought many bat" tles. I have ſubdued many kings, and was never afraid " of any of them. But this accident makes me fear and " tremble." The congregation likewiſe was ſad, their joints trembled, their knees ſmote one againſt another, and they hung down their heads toward the earth. In the mean time Joſhua had detain'd the ambaſſador in a private place, where he could not ſee the concern of the people. However the multitude made this anſwer to Joſhua, " We " never yet heard any ſuch thing. We never yet con- " quer'd any ſuch perſon; and we never yet fought with " ſuch an army. But this war is the war of God, who " is with us, and with our children, and with thee alſo, " O our king, keeper and lord. Thou ſhalt direct us by " the help of God, and as we have obey'd Moſes, ſo will " we obey thee, Take thee a roll of a book, and write in a " manly ſtyle, and anſwer our neighbours theſe perverſe rebels " with words as ſharp as theirs. Joſhua ſaid, ſtand ſtill, " that you may hear the form, which I have drawn up, " and if you like it, I will ſend it to them." And all the people anſwered, " Open thy mouth and let thy words " be underſtood." Upon which he reads to them the following letter. " In the name of the Lord God of Iſrael, " who weakens the ſtrong, and proud, and kills the wicked " and rebellious; who ſeparates the aſſemblies of ſinners " and robbers, and gathers together the diſperſed, juſt and " and holy men. He is God of Gods, and Lord of Lords, " the God of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, the Lord who " is a man of war. Joſhua the ſervant of God, and of the " holy ſelect ſynagogue, the bleſſed aſſembly, the multi- " tude of the congregation of the children of Iſrael, the " ſons of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, ſaith, There is no " peace to the wicked, to the congregation ſmitten with " plagues, to the worſhippers of Images and adorers of " Idols. Know ye, that ye have done ill in waking a ſleep- " ing lion, and ſtirring up a fierce lion, by putting a ſword " into his hand, when he is provok'd. I watching for ju- " ſtice will render your deſerts upon your heads. What " madneſs hath provok'd you to come into the holy place, " and pollute my land? Put yourſelves in order, and ſtir " not a foot from your place; for after ſeven days I will " come to you, and kill your ſtrong men, that there ſhall " be no poſſibility of eſcaping. You boaſt indeed, that " you have with you five and forty kings, and every one " of theſe is guarded with a thouſand valiant men. I will " not boaſt, becauſe the kings of the earth, and becauſe " the glorious angels are with me; one of whom over- " turn'd Sodom and Gomorrah, another brought in the " Flood, and a third divided the world into ſeventy na- " tions. The people which are with me being ſi hun- " dred thouſand men, both ſtrong and valiant, paſs'd the " ſea with a dry foot. God went before them by night in " a pillar of fire, and by day in a pillar of cloud. Twelve " thouſand of the choiceſt of them ſlew the five kings of " Midian, and Balaam the ſon of Beor, and all their males " without the loſs of a man. We have a prieſt whoſe " name is Phinehas, in whoſe hands are the trumpets; ſo that " when he blows them, all our enemies fall down before us. " Have you not heard that Pharaoh and all his multitude " were overwhelmed in the ſea, and we paſs'd over as on " dry land? Hath it not been told to you, what we have " done to Sihon and Og, the two kings of the Amorites? " Is it not evident what we have done to the one and thirty " kings of Canaan? What then? If the ſon of Japhet " the giant is with you; yet with us there is the giant of " giants, and one who is exalted far above all."

The Mohammedans add, that Joſhua was ſent by God in order to fight the giants, who poſſeſſed the town and country of Arika or Jericho; and that he gave them battle on a Friday in the evening; but as night came on, and he could not combat them on the enſuing ſabbath, he beg'd of God to prolong the day, that he might have ſufficient time to defeat them. His prayer was accordingly heard, and the ſun continued an hour and an half above the horizon longer than uſual. This was one motive which obliged the Muſſulmans to chuſe this day for their feſtival preferably to Saturday. They add, that Joſhua drove the Philiſtines, or rather the Canaanites, out of their country, and obliged them to retire into Africa. It is certain, that as God had given expreſs orders for this people to be treated with the utmoſt rigour, Joſhua extirpated great numbers, and obliged the reſt to fly, as authors have obſerved, ſome into Africa, others into Greece. Nay, there are ſome writers, who ſeem perſuaded, that many of them came into Germany and Sclavonia, and that others retired into America. Their opinion, however, ſeems to have the beſt foundation, who affirm, that they withdrew into Africa. The rabbins aſſure us, that the Girgaſhites took this reſolution; but do not inform us to what part of Africa they retired. Procopius ſays, that they firſt retreated into Egypt, but not thinking themſelves ſecure there, they advanced further into Africa, where they built many cities, and ſpread themſelves over all thoſe vaſt regions, which extend as far as the pillars of Hercules, preſerving their old language with ſome little alteration. This author adds, that in the province of Tingitana, and in the very ancient city of Tingis, which was founded by them, there were two great pillars to be ſeen, of white ſtone, erected near a large fountain, with an inſcription in Phœnician characters, to this purpoſe: We are people preſerved by flight from that rover Jeſus the ſon of Nave, who purſued us. In the time of Athanaſius, the Africans ſtill ſaid they were deſcended from the Canaanites; and, when they were asked concerning their original, they ſaid, they were Canaani; and it is agreed that the Punic tongue was almoſt entirely the ſame as the Canaanitiſh and Hebrew language.

——— Being an hundred and ten years old.] Joſhua was conſequently of the ſame age with Joſeph. How many of theſe years he paſs'd in Canaan, as the chief ruler of God's people, interpreters have not agreed. Some ſay he lived twenty and eight years after the Iſraelites came over Jordan; (which is the opinion of the Jews in Seder Olam) tho' others reduce this number of years to ſeven. There is a middle opinion maintained by others, that he was their governor ſeventeen years.

Ver. 30. And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in Timnath-ſerah.] Called, in Judges ii. 9. Timneth-heres; becauſe of the image of the ſun engraven on his ſepulchre, in memory of that famous day when the ſun ſtood ſtill till Joſhua had compleated his victory.

——On the north ſide of the hill of Gaaſh.] So called, as the Jews fable, becauſe it trembled at the interment of Joſhua, whoſe death the people did not ſufficiently lament. Which fancy, it is likely, came into their head, becauſe there is no mention here of any days of mourning for him, as there were for Aaron and Moſes. In which, St. Jerom, and other of the fathers, think there is a myſtery, namely, that under the law, when the kingdom of heaven was not yet open'd, they had reaſon to mourn and weep for the death of their friends; but under the Goſpel, wherein is revealed, by the Lord Jeſus, (of whom Joſhua was a figure) the wonderful love of God to men, &c. There is no reaſon for mourning and lamentation, but rather for rejoicing.

Ver. 31. And Iſrael ſerved the Lord all the days of Joſhua.] No idolatry appeared among them publickly while he lived, (whatſoever private ſuperſtition might be practis'd, ver. 14, 23.) for all that wicked generation which came out of Egypt, (except the younger ſort) were conſumed in the wilderneſs, before Joſhua took the conduct of them. And God kept them there ſo many years, as waſted them alſo, for this reaſon, among others, that they might forget the idolatrous cuſtom of Egypt, unto which it early appear'd, by their making the golden calf, they were ſtrongly inclined. Thus St. Chryſoſtom diſcourſes, Adverſ. Vitæ Monaſt. vituper. lib. 1. God, ſaith he, that the children of Iſrael might unlearn the evil cuſtoms of Egypt, brought them κλαὶ μόνας ἐπὶ τῆς ἐρημίας, to lead a ſolitary life in the wilderneſs, forming their minds, as in a monaſtery, far from thoſe who had corrupted them. And he deſtroy'd there all the elder ſort, that none might enter into Paleſtine, but thoſe who had not ſeen the ſuperſtitious impieties of the Egyptians, ἵ μηδὲν διδάσκαλον ἔχειν τῆς τοσαύτης πονηρίας; and that they might have no maſter left among them, to teach them ſuch kind of wickedneſs.

——And all the days of the elders that over-lived Joſhua, and which had known all the works of the Lord, that he had done for Iſrael.] Theſe elders had been choſen by Moſes, who knew them to be men of great piety; that had not only ſeen, but obſerv'd and kept in mind all God's wonderful works; and would put others in mind of them, and teach them to ſerve and obey the Lord.

From

From this place the Jews labour to eſtabliſh all their oral traditions; which Moſes, ſay they, deliver'd to Joſeph, and he to theſe elders, and they to the prophets, and theſe to others; (ſee Maimonides, in Seder Zeraim, ſet forth by our moſt learned Dr. Pocock, P. 34.) for which, there is no foundation.

Ver. 32. And the bones of Joſeph, which the children of Iſrael brought up out of Egypt.] The Jews have employed very unneceſſary pains in reconciling this place with Exodus xiii. 19. where it is ſaid, Moſes took the bones of Joſeph with him: For there is no contradiction between theſe two places, the children of Iſrael doing what Moſes required them to do; who could not carry them away himſelf, but ſaw them brought out of Egypt. Yet thus they gravely diſcourſe about this matter in the Talmud, Tit. Sota, cap. 1. ſect. 47. "When any one begins a "thing, but doth not bring it to perfection, and another "comes and finiſhes it, the ſcripture ſpeaks of him who "compleats it, as if he alone had done it."

——Buried they in Shechem.] Which was one reaſon, perhaps, for gathering the great aſſembly abovementioned, that they might the more ſolemnly depoſite the bones of this great man, in that portion of land which his father Jacob had given him, (ſee Gen. xlviii. 22.) where, it ſeems, they thought it moſt agreeable to lay him, rather than in the cave of Machpelah. It may be reaſonably thought alſo, that the bodies of the reſt of the ſons of Jacob, from whom the twelve tribes deſcended, were brought into Canaan to be there interr'd, as Joſephus relates from ancient tradition, Antiq. lib. 2. cap. 4. And St. Stephen confirms it, Acts xii. 16. For tho' Joſeph excell'd them all in dignity, and gave this ſpecial charge about his body, yet no doubt every tribe had as great a regard to the head of it, and would be inclined to do the ſame for their fathers, as Joſeph deſired for himſelf.

—— In a parcel of ground which Jacob bought of the ſons of Hamor, the father of Shechem, for an hundred pieces of ſilver.] See Gen. xxxiii. 18, 19. This ſhews they did not bury him in the city of Shechem, but in a field near it, which was his own ground: For ſo the antient manner was, not to bury in cities or towns, but in the adjacent fields or gardens.

And it became the inheritance of the children of Joſeph.] Of theEphraimites, who gave Shechem to the Levites, for a city of refuge, xxi. 20, 21.

Ver. 33. And Eleazar the ſon of Aaron died.] Who imitated Joſhua (if we may believe the Samaritan chronicle) in calling all the elders and princes of the tribes to him before he died, charging them ſtrictly to obey all the commands of God. After which he put off his ſacred Garments, and cloathed his ſon Phinehas with them. This is ſo far from being improbable, that it is likely all the Elders did the ſame, as far as their authority could extend; being very deſirous their poſterity ſhould continue firm and ſtedfaſt in the worſhip of God alone.

—— And they buried him in an hill, that pertained to Phinehas his ſon.] In the Hebrew the words are, in the hill of Phinehas; that is, a hill called by his name. It being the manner, to call places by the name of their eldeſt ſon.

——— Which was given to him in Mount Ephraim.] It is a queſtion to whom this hill was given: Moſt probably to Eleazar, who being the high prieſt at the time of the diviſion of the land, they thought fit to give him a peculiar portion, diſtinct from all the cities of the prieſts; none of which were in the tribe of Ephraim, but all of them in the tribes of Judah, Benjamin, and Simeon, as we read xxi. 9, 17, 19. And they gave it Eleazar in this country, that he might be near the tabernacle, (which was in Shiloh) and near Joſhua, in order to be ready on all occaſions to adviſe him, and conſult the oracle for him. But againſt this there lies a great objection; namely, that no Levite or prieſt was to have any portion in the diviſion of the land: And therefore it is the moſt received opinion among the Jews, that either Eleazar or Phinehas had this inheritance in the right of his wife. So the Gemara Babylonica on Bava Bathra, and a great many others, mentioned by Mr. Selden in his book de ſucceſſionibus ad leges, Heb. cap. 18. where he obſerves another example of this marital ſucceſſion, as he calls it; that is, the husband ſucceeding his wife in her eſtate after her death, in 1. Chron. ii. 21. where the twenty three cities which Jair poſſeſs'd, Kimchi ſaith he had by his wife.

Theſe five laſt verſes, it is evident, were not written by Joſhua: But this is no argument againſt his being the author of this book; no more than that Moſes did not write the Pentateuch, becauſe there is the like account given of his death and burial, in the concluſion of it, by ſome other author. See Deut. xxxiv. 1. The Talmudiſts, ſay in Bava Bathra, that Joſhua wrote his own book, and the eight laſt verſes of the Pentateuch. And they ſay in the ſame place (chap. 1.) as to what is written here, ver. 29, it was done by Eleazar; and what is ſaid, ver. 33. it was wrote by Phinehas: Or rather theſe five verſes from 29. to the end, were written by Samuel, who being a prophet, was moved and directed by God to continue the hiſtory of this people from the death of Joſhua, to his own time.

The End of the Book of JOSHUA.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS On the BOOK of JUDGES.

The ARGUMENT.

This book is called in the Hebrew by the name of Shophetim, or Judges; and it contains an excellent hiſtory of the ſtate of the Iſraelites, as well eccleſiaſtical as civil, from the death of Joſhua, till the government and high-prieſthood of Eli, under the conduct of the Judges, who were ſo called, not becauſe they exerciſed the ordinary juriſdiction of magiſtracy among the people (as the word Judge commonly imports) but becauſe they were raiſed up by God, in a very extraordinary manner, ſometimes out of one tribe, ſometimes out of another, and were endued with a ſpirit of wiſdom and magnanimity, to maintain his rights, and thoſe of the people he had ſelected to himſelf, and to vindicate them in a victorious manner from the injuſtice and tyranny of their oppreſſors, as likewiſe to reſtore the purity of the divine worſhip, whenever it happened to be alter'd or corrupted.

Firſt therefore, in this book are recorded the ſeveral wars in which the Iſraelites were engaged, after the death of Joſhua, by the expreſs command of God, againſt the heathen inhabitants then remaining in the land of Canaan, in order to their utter extermination; in which the Iſraelites were generally ſo remiſs and neglectful, that God, in his diſpleaſure againſt them for ſuch a conduct, ſuffered many of theſe pagan nations to continue in the land, for a trial and puniſhment of his inconſiderate and indolent people.

The Iſraelites indeed retained the purity of the divine worſhip among them, during the lives of thoſe venerable and pious elders, who had been ſpectators of the miraculous acts which the LORD had performed by the miniſtration of Joſhua; but after the death of theſe excellent perſons, this book records in what manner the people, by abuſing their liberty, peace, and proſperity, degenerated from time to time into idolatry, and a moſt impious corruption of manners, as is frequently intimated in this hiſtory, not only in general terms, but likewiſe in ſeveral heinous and tragic inſtances, particularly thoſe recorded in the 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th chapters, and which may be juſtly conſidered as ſo many monuments, not only of the iniquity and corruption of that people, but likewiſe of, the righteous indignation of the Almighty, and the inſupportable ſeverity of his awakened vengeance.

This book likewiſe informs us, that God, when he was provoked at the frequent apoſtacy of his people, not only reproved them in the ſharpeſt manner for their inexcuſable conduct, but actually delivered them into the hands of their inveterate enemies, ſuch as Cuſhan king of Meſopotamia, Eglon king of Moab, Jabin king of the Canaanites, and alſo into the hands of the Philiſtines, Midianites, Amalakites, and other eaſtern people, and likewiſe of the Ammonites, &c. who for a long time oppreſſed and afflicted Iſrael. And yet when this guilty people did, in the anguiſh of their ſouls, make an humble acknowledgment of their tranſgreſſions, when they renounced their idolatry and perverſeneſs, and fervently called upon God for his grace and aſſiſtance, he was immediately moved with compaſſion, and ſhewed himſelf as faithful in performing his promiſes, as he had been in executing his menaces; and he frequently delivered them by the generous inſtruments he had raiſed for that purpoſe, ſuch as were Othniel, Ehud, Shamgar, Deborah, and Barak, Gideon, Jephtha, and Sampſon.

This book alſo makes mention of five Judges, whoſe wars are not recorded in it, namely, Thola, Jair, Ebſan, Edon, and Abdon.

This whole hiſtory may be of uſe to inform us, that tho' the church of God may be tainted with many corruptions, yet he generally takes a very particular care to reclaim the members of it from their apoſtacy, and often employs thoſe to puniſh and chaſtiſe his people, who have been the occaſion of their ſins; in a word, that he never chaſtens them with a deſign to deſtroy them, but to make them return to him by true repentance, and that he is always ready to aid and deliver them, when ſuch is their diſpoſition.

It is but conjectured who was the writer of this book: Some think Ezra; but in all probability it was the prophet Samuel, who was the laſt of the Judges; and by the direction of God brought down their hiſtory to his own days, when the Iſraelites were ſollicitous for a king to be ſet over them. The Talmudiſts (in Bava Bathra, cap. 1.) are of this opinion, which is likewiſe embraced by Kimchi, Abarbinel, and other great authors. And indeed there is reaſon to believe, that the perſon, who wrote the concluſion of the book of Joſhua, was likewiſe the writer of this, in the ſecond chapter of which he inſerts part of what is recorded there. And it is manifeſt, that it was written before the ſecond book of Samuel, where mention is made of a paſſage in this book, which could not have been ſo commonly known, if it had not been publiſhed here, 2 Sam. xi. 21. out of Judges ix. 53. David alſo, in Pſalm lxviii. 7, 8. ſeems to allude unto what we read in the Song of Deborah, ver. 4. Certain it is, it was written before the reign of David; for the Jebuſites were poſſeſſed of Jeruſalem when this author lived, ver. 21. of the firſt chapter; and they were driven out of it by David, 2 Sam. v. 6. and therefore this book was compiled before that time; and is of wonderful uſe, as Procopius Gazæus obſerves, to repreſent to us the mighty power of true religion to make a nation happy; and the diſmal calamities which are brought upon it by a courſe of impiety.

CHAP. I.

1 The acts of Judah and Simeon. 4 Adoni-bezek juſtly requited. 8 Jeruſalem taken. 10 Hebron taken. 11 Othniel hath Achſah to wife for taking of Debir. 16 The Kenites dwell in Judah. 17 Hermah, Gaza, Askelon and Ekron taken. 21. The Acts of Benjamin. 22 Of the houſe of Joſeph, who take Bethel. 30 Of Zebulon. 31 Of Aſher. 33 Of Naphtali. 34 Of Dan.

NOW after the death of Joſhua, it came to paſs, that the children of Iſrael asked the LORD, ſaying, Who ſhall go up for us againſt the Canaanites firſt to fight againſt them?

2 And the LORD ſaid, Judah ſhall go up: behold, I have delivered the land into his hand.

3 And Judah ſaid unto Simeon his brother, Come up with me into my lot, that we may fight againſt the Canaanites, and I likewiſe will go with thee into thy lot. So Simeon went with him.

4 And Judah went up, and the LORD delivered the Canaanites and the Perizzites into their hand: and they ſlew of them in Bezek ten thouſand men.

5 And they found Adoni-bezek in Bezek: and they fought againſt him, and they ſlew the Canaanites, and the Perizzites.

6 But Adoni-bezek fled, and they purſued after him, and caught him, and cut off his thumbs, and his great toes.

7 And Adoni-bezek ſaid, Threeſcore and ten kings, having their thumbs and their great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my table: As I have done, ſo God hath requited me. And they brought him to Jeruſalem, and there he died.

8 (Now the children of Judah had fought againſt Jeruſalem, and had taken it, and ſmitten it with the edge of the ſword, and ſet the city on fire.)

9 ¶ And afterward the children of Judah went down to fight againſt the Canaanites that dwelt in the mountain, and in the ſouth, and in the valley.

10 And Judah went againſt the Canaanites that dwelt in Hebron (now the name of Hebron before was Kirjath-arba) and and they ſlew Sheſhai, and Ahiman, and Talmai.

11 And from thence he went againſt the inhabitants of Debir? (and the name of Debir before was Kirjath-ſepher.)

12 And Caleb ſaid, He that ſmiteth Kirjath-ſepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Achſah my daughter to wife.

13 And Othniel the ſon of Kenaz, Calebs younger brother took it: and he gave him Achſah his daughter to wife.

14 And it came to paſs when ſhe came to him, that ſhe moved him to ask of her father a field: and ſhe lighted from off her aſs; and Caleb ſaid unto her, What wilt thou?

15 And ſhe ſaid unto him, Give me a bleſſing: for thou haſt given me a ſouth-land, give me alſo ſprings of water. And Caleb gave her the upper ſprings, and the nether ſprings.

16 ¶ And the children of the Kenite, Moſes father in law, went up out of the city of palm-trees, with the children of Judah into the wilderneſs of Judah, which lieth in the ſouth of Arad, and they went and dwelt among the people.

17 And Judah went with Simeon his brother, and they ſlew the Canaanites that inhabited Zephath, and utterly deſtroyed it: (and the name of the city was called Harmah)

18 Alſo Judah took Gaza with the coaſt thereof, and Askelon with the coaſt thereof, and Ekron with the coaſt thereof.

19 And the LORD was with Judah, and he drave out the inhabitants of the mountain, but could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, becauſe they had chariots of iron.

20 And they gave Hebron unto Caleb, as Moſes ſaid: and he expelled thence the three ſons of Anak.

21 And the children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebuſites that inhabited Jeruſalem: but the Jebuſites dwell with the children of Benjamin in Jeruſalem unto this day.

22 ¶ And the houſe of Joſeph, they alſo went up againſt Beth-el: and the LORD was with them.

23 And the houſe of Joſeph ſent to deſcry Beth-el: (now the name of the city before was Luz)

24 And the ſpies ſaw a man come forth out of the city, and they ſaid unto him, Shew us, we pray thee, the entrance into the city, and we will ſhew thee mercy.

25 And when he ſhewed them the entrance into the city, they ſmote the city with the edge of the ſword: but they let go the man and all his family.

26 And the man went into the land of the Hittites, and built a city, and called the name thereof Luz: which is the name thereof unto this day.

27 ¶ Neither did Manaſſeh drive out the inhabitants of Beth-ſhean and her towns, nor Taanach, and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Dor and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Ibleam and her towns, nor the inhabitants of Megiddo and her towns: but the Canaanites would dwell in that land.

28 And it came to paſs when Iſrael was ſtrong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute, and did not utterly drive them out.

29 ¶ Neither did Ephraim drive out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer: but the Canaanites dwelt in Gezer among them.

30 ¶ Neither did Zebulun drive out the inhabitants of Kitron, nor the inhabitants of Nahalol: but the Canaanites dwelt among them, and became tributaries.

31 ¶ Neither did Aſher drive out the inhabitants of Accho, nor the inhabitants of Zidon, nor of Ahlab, nor Achzib, nor Helbah, nor Aphik, nor of Rehob:

32 But the Aſharites dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land: for they did not drive them out.

33 ¶ Neither did Naphtali drive out the inhabitants of Beth-ſhemeſh, nor the inhabitants of Beth-anath; but he dwelt among the Canaanites, the inhabitants of the land: nevertheleſs, the inhabitants of Beth-ſhemeſh and of Beth-anath became tributaries unto them.

34 And the Amorites forced the children of Dan into the mountain: for they would not ſuffer them to come down to the valley.

35 But the Amorites would dwell in mount Heres in Ajalon, and in Shaalbim: yet the hand of the houſe of Joſeph prevailed, ſo that they became tributaries.

36 And the coaſt of the Amorites was from the going up to Akrabbim, from the rock, and upward.

Ver. 1. Now after the death of Joſhua.] And of Eleazar, it is probable (for this book gives an account of what follow'd after thoſe events that are mention'd in the foregoing) foregoing) but how long after cannot be certainly determin'd: There is ſome reaſon however to think, it was not till the Iſraelites were become ſo numerous, as to be able to people more of the country than they had yet in poſſeſſion.

——It came to paſs, that the children of Iſrael.] There was no perſon appointed by Joſhua to ſucceed him in the government, as he was nominated by Moſes to be his ſucceſſor; but the adminiſtration of affairs was left to the elders. For it is a mere fiction which we find in the Samaritan Chronicle, namely, that at the aſſembly (mentioned, Joſhua xxiv.) that great leader choſe twelve of the chief of the tribes, and caſt lots which of them ſhould hold his place when he died; and that the lot fell upon one whoſe name was Abel, and was likewiſe his nephew; to whom Joſhua aſſign'd his authority, and placed a crown upon his head.

——Asked the Lord, ſaying.] Enquired of him by urim and thummim, as the manner was in all caſes that concern'd the whole congregation of Iſrael. For which end, it is to be ſuppoſed, that ſome who repreſented the body of the people (their elders, perhaps, or heads of their tribes) were ſent to Shiloh, where the ſanctuary was fixed, and deſired Phinehas the High-prieſt, to repreſent their caſe to God, and implore his directions.

——Who ſhall go up for us againſt the Canaanites firſt to fight againſt them.] The Iſraelites being increas'd, as we have already intimated, to ſuch a number, that they were able to people more of the country; and finding themſelves ſtraitned for want of room, began to concert meaſures for enlarging their poſſeſſions; but would not begin an enterprize of that nature without the Divine approbation and direction: And therefore intreated the Divine Majeſty to inform them who ſhould make the firſt attempt; that the reſt being encouraged by their ſucceſs (of which they did not doubt, if they had his ſacred warrant for what they did) might act in the ſame manner. For it is evident by theſe words, go up for us, that all the tribes on this ſide Jordan were concern'd in this affair.

Ver. 2. And the Lord ſaid, Judah.] That is, the tribe of Judah, who were very populous, and equally brave.

——Shall go up.] And aſſault the mountainous country, which was the lot of this tribe. According to the prophecy of Jacob, Gen. xlix. 8. where, comparing Judah to a lion's whelp, that patriarch declares, from the prey, my ſon, thou art gone up.

——Behold I have delivered the land into his hand.] That is, all the land belonging to their lot. By this it ſeems plain, that the anſwer by urim and thummim was given by a voice which utter'd theſe words. Here Abarbinel endeavours to anſwer a queſtion ſtarted by the Jews; namely, why Joſhua did not enquire in this manner, tho' it be expreſly ſaid, Numb. xxvii. 21. that he ſhall ſtand before Eleazar the prieſt, and ask counſel of the Lord, after the judgment of urim. He thinks he did ſo, all the time after that, till the death of Moſes, to ſhew he was conſtituted the leader of God's people, for none but ſuch could enquire by urim: But after the death of that great Law-giver, Joſhua was endued with the ſpirit of prophecy, as Moſes was, and ſo had no need to enquire in that manner, being immediately directed by God in his proceedings; but when he himſelf died, there being none endued with the prophetical ſpirit, the children of Iſrael were obliged to have recourſe to this oracle. This account is very much below the judgment of ſo great a man as Abarbinel; for tho' Moſes was a prophet, yet, he frequently asked counſel of God at the ſanctuary, which was the ſame as if he had enquired by urim. Therefore the true anſwer is, that Joſhua did thus enquire of the Lord in the caſe of Achan; and it is highly probable he did the ſame in the management of his war, and other occaſions, tho' it be not expreſly mention'd in ſo many words.

Ver. 3. And Judah ſaid unto Simeon his brother.] They were brethren by the ſame father and mother; and alſo nearly ſtationed in their ſituation, the lot of the tribe of Simeon being taken out of that of Judah, Joſh. xix 9.

——Come up with me into my lot, that we may fight againſt the Canaanites.] Which people, with the Perizzites (as is further declared in the next verſe) ſtill poſſeſſed a conſiderable part of the lot which fell to Judah.

——And I likewiſe will go with thee into thy lot.] To drive the Canaanites out of that part of the country which was the portion of Simeon.

——So Simeon went with him.] They joyn'd their forces together in this expedition, under the conduct, no doubt, of ſome eminent leader. And who ſo fit as Caleb? Who, tho' an aged man, was full of vigour, and fit for war, (as he himſelf declared not long ago, Joſh. xiv. 10, 11.) and had not yet got poſſeſſion (as appears by the ſequel) of that portion which by God's commandment was aſſign'd him.

Ver. 4. And Judah went up.] They were the principal perſons concern'd in this expedition, and therefore only mention'd, tho' the children of Simeon went up with them.

——And the Lord delivered.] We meet with no ſuch religious expreſſion (which occurs often here) in any Heathen writer.

——The Canaanites and Perizzites into their hand.] Tho' moſt of the people properly called Canaanites dwelt by the Mediterranean ſea, yet many of them were ſcatter'd up and down in other parts of the country, and particularly in theſe mountains and woody places, where the Perizzites dwelt; ſee Joſh. xvii. 15, 16.

——And they ſlew of them in Bezek ten thouſand men.] In the country near Bezek, which was a city in the tribe of Judah, not far, as ſome think, from Bethlehem. Here they choſe to make their rendezvous of their forces, and wait to receive the children of Judah, that if they ſhould happen to be defeated, they might eaſily find a ſtrong place of retreat.

Ver. 5. And they found Adoni-bezek in Bezek.] He was the king, or Lord of this place, as his name imports, whom the Iſraelites ſurprized, as the word found ſignifies, by a ſudden aſſault upon this city, whither he ſeems to have fled, when he had loſt the field. Theodoret makes this king the ſame with Adonizedek (mention'd in Joſh. x) but as their names are different, ſo he was king of Jeruſalem, and this of Bezek; where he was overcome; but the former in Gibeon, who was killed alſo with the ſword, and then hanged on a tree; but this had only his thumbs and toes cut off, and then brought to Jeruſalem, where he died.

——And they fought againſt him.] Took the city wherein he thought to have defended himſelf, and the remainder of his army, which eſcaped hither.

——And they ſlew the Canaanites, and the Perizzites.] Put all the people of thoſe two nations, (whom they found there) to the ſword.

Ver. 6. But Adoni-bezek fled, and they purſued after him and caught him.] They found which way he went, and purſued him with ſo much expedition, that they overtook him before he could arrive at the ſtrong fortreſs of the Jebuſites; where, it is likely, he hoped to ſecure himſelf.

——And cut off his thumbs and his great toes.] That he might be made incapable of war hereafter, being rendered unable to handle arms, or to run ſwiftly.

This ſevere treatment had been practiſed by himſelf as appears by his own confeſſion in the next verſe, which made the Iſraelites think it reaſonable to ſerve him in his own kind.

Ver. 7. And Adoni-bezek ſaid, threeſcore and ten kings.] In theſe days the chief perſon in every city had a kingly power; as we learn from the hiſtory of Joſhua, who found many kings in Canaan, when he conquer'd it. And ſeventy ſuch petty princes Adoni-bezek had ſubdued; who were not kings of ſo many ſeveral cities, but ſome of them, it is likely, kings of the ſame place, who ſucceſſively oppoſed him, and were dethroned by him.

——Having their thumbs, and their great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my table.] He was proud and inſolent, as well as cruel, treating thoſe kings whom he conquered, as if they had been the vileſt of animals.

As I have done, ſo God hath requited me.] Juſtice was defined by the Pythagorans to be τὸ ἀντιπεπονθὸς, to make others feel the hurt they had done, by their ſuffering the like puniſhment; which Harmenopulus calls ταυτοπάθεια, ſuffering the very ſame; as Grotius obſerves Lib. 2. De jure belli & Pacis, c. 20. N. 32. Now,

Adoni-

Adoni-bezek's acknowledgment of God's juſtice in this puniſhment, hath made ſome think that prince was a penitent, and became a convert to the true religion: For he ſpeaks of God in the ſingular number, and not of the gods, as was cuſtomary with the Heathens, and this might poſſibly be the reaſon why they ſpared his life. Certain it is, his pride and arrogance were very much humbled by his puniſhment, which extorted this confeſſion from him; for it carried with it (as Mr. Mede obſerves upon theſe words) the very ſtamp and print of the ſin for which it was inflicted.

——And they brought him to Jeruſalem.] Which, as it follows in the next verſe, was now in the poſſeſſion of the children of Judah: Tho' the Jews think they had not yet taken the city; but having begirt it, they brought him priſoner thither, and he died in the time of the ſiege.

——And there he died.] After he had lived ſome time, perhaps, to perfect his repentance.

Ver. 8. Now the children of Judah had fought againſt Jeruſalem, and taken it.] We do not read of its being taken by Joſhua, tho' it ſeems highly probable, that when he took the king of Jeruſalem, he alſo made himſelf maſter of his city, and treated it as he did the reſt of the cities of thoſe kings, Joſh. x. 3, 23. But when he was gone to conquer other parts of the country, it is likely the old inhabitants returned again, and took poſſeſſion of it: For the land was not then divided among the Iſraelites: After which, this city falling in part to the ſhare of Judah, they diſpoſſeſſed the Jebuſites who dwelt there, of all but the ſtrong fortreſs on the top of mount Sion, which held out till the days of David.

——And ſmitten it with the edge of the ſword, and ſet the city on fire.] As Joſhua had done to Jericho, Ai, and Hazor; this being a city, it is probable, deeply infected with idolatry; from which they thought fit entirely to purify it before they rebuilt it.

Ver. 15. And afterward the children of Judah went down.] From Jeruſalem (we ſuppoſe) which ſtood high.

——To fight againſt the Canaanites which dwelt in the mountain.] There were ſeveral mountains round Jeruſalem, (Pſal. cxxv. 2.) and we often read of the mountains of Judah, which were poſſeſſed, it ſeems, by the old inhabitants, till after the death of Joſhua.

——And in the ſouth.] Toward the wilderneſs of Paran.

——And in the valley.] Or the flat country about thoſe mountains, ſome of which are mentioned in the following verſes.

Ver. 10. And Judah went againſt the Canaanites that dwelt in Hebron.] It appears from hence, that the old inhabitants of this country had returned to this place, after it had been deſtroyed by Joſhua, as we read it was, Joſh. x. 36, 37. But they were now expelled again by the children of Judah after his death, this city being in their lot.

——Now the name of Hebron before was Kirjath-arba.] Which ſignifies the city of Arba, who was the father of Anak.

——And they ſlew Sheſhai, Ahiman, and Talmai.] Theſe were the three ſons of Anak, as we read Joſh. xv. 14. where it is ſaid, that Caleb drove them out from thence; for he was the conductor of the children of Iſrael in this expedition, and had great reaſon to go up againſt this city, becauſe this part of the country was given to him by a particular direction of God, Joſh. xiv. 13, 14. xv. 13. But he did not conquer it till after the death of Joſhua.

Ver. 11. And from thence he went againſt the inhabitants of Debir, &c.] Another city which had been taken by Joſhua in the beginning of the war, Joſh. x. 38, 39. but while he was engaged in the conqueſt of other parts of the country, was re-inhabited by the Canaanites who were not expelled till after the death of Joſhua; when Caleb (to whom it was aſſigned, together with Hebron, for his portion, Joſh. xv. 15.) drove them out again, and poſſeſſed himſelf of it.

Ver. 12. And Caleb ſaid.] Hence it ſtill appears, that the children of Judah fought under the conduct of Caleb, as their general.

——He that ſmiteth Kirjath-ſepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Acksah my daughter to wife.] This, and the three following verſes. 13, 14, 15, have been explained upon Joſh. xv. 16, &c. where the portion of Judah being deſcribed, there is a particular mention of what was given to Caleb, and how he diſpoſed of it; which relation ſeems to have been taken out of this book, and inſerted there, by the authority of Ezra, for the fuller illuſtration of all that belonged to that tribe, whether by lot, or peculiar donation before the diviſion of the land. For any one may ſee that the deſcription of Judah's lot is entirely coherent (as Huetius truly obſerves) if all between the twelfth and the twentieth verſe were left out; and that all things here mentioned were not done till after the death of Joſhua, is evident by the narration which is here made of all that fell out after that time.

Ver. 16. And the children of the Kenite, Moſes his father-in-law.] See Numb. x. 29. where Hobab, the ſon of Jethro, was invited by Moſes to accompany him into the land of Canaan, and, in all probability, accepted the invitation.

——Went up out of the city of palm-trees.] That is, Jericho, which was in a flat country. See Deut. xxxiv. 3. Here, it ſeems, they were pleaſed to ſettle themſelves at their firſt coming into Canaan, where Moſes promiſed, that whatſoever goodneſs God ſhould ſhew to the Iſraelites, they ſhould have their ſhare in it: And no part of the country was more delightful than this about Jericho; in the territory of which they dwelt, for the city it ſelf was deſtroy'd.

——With the children of Judah.] Admiring the courage and ſucceſs of this tribe, they ſeem to have contracted a particular friendſhip with them, and to have accompanied them in this expedition into the high country.

——Into the wilderneſs of Judah, which lieth in the ſouth of Arad.] In the ſouthern part of the land of Canaan, where Arad was, Numb. xxi. 1. which, as Procopius Garzæus here obſerves, was a city of the Amorites, near the wilderneſs of Kadeſh, which is Paran: In his time it was a village four miles from Malaathon; but twenty from Hebron.

——And dwelt among the people.] They removed from the city of Palm-trees, which was in the tribe of Benjamin, and ſettled themſelves among the people of Judah. Yet not all of them; for ſome went into the northern parts among the tribe of Naphtali, as appears from chap. iv. 10, 11. What ſhould be the reaſon of their forſaking ſo pleaſant a place, as that where they were firſt ſettled, is but conjectured. Some think it was the love of ſolitude and retirement; which they gather from Jerem. xxxv. 6. &c. Or, as we ſaid, out of their great affection to the children of Judah, under whoſe protection they hoped for greater ſafety than in other places.

Ver. 17. And Judah went with Simeon his Brother.] Having finiſhed, as far as they were able, the conqueſt of what belonged to the tribe of Judah, they went to aſſiſt the Simeonites, according to their mutual engagement, ver. 3.

——And they ſlew the Canaanites that inhabited Zephath, and utterly deſtroyed it.] Some think this was the name both of a city, and of a ſmall region; but the exact ſituation of it is not known.

——And the name of the city was called Hormah.] From the utter deſtruction before-mentioned. Some think this was the ſame place with that mentioned Numb. xxi. 2, 3. But mention is there made of more cities that were laid waſte, whereas here there is but one.

Ver. 18. And Judah took Gaza, with the coaſt thereof; and Askelon, with the coaſt thereof; and Ekron, with the coaſt thereof.] Theſe three cities were in the land of the Philiſtines, upon the ſea-coaſt, which the Iſraelites did not hold long, before the Philiſtines recovered them again. For the Iſraelites contenting themſelves with taking theſe cities, without deſtroying the people, (as they did in other places, and ought to have done here) and only making them tributaries, it was not difficult for them to regain their liberty.

Ver. 19. And the Lord was with Judah.] The Targum here uſes the ſame language, which the author of it conſtantly expreſſes in the book of Joſhua, when he mentions God's preſence with Iſrael, and the word of the Lord helped the houſe of Judah.

foregoing) but how long after cannot be certainly determin'd: There is ſome reaſon however to think, it was not till the Iſraelites were become ſo numerous, as to be able to people more of the country than they had yet in poſſeſſion.

——It came to paſs, that the children of Iſrael.] There was no perſon appointed by Joſhua to ſucceed him in the government, as he was nominated by Moſes to be his ſucceſſor; but the adminiſtration of affairs was left to the elders. For it is a mere fiction which we find in the Samaritan Chronicle, namely, that at the aſſembly (mentioned, Joſhua xxiv.) that great leader choſe twelve of the chief of the tribes, and caſt lots which of them ſhould hold his place when he died; and that the lot fell upon one whoſe name was Abel, and was likewiſe his nephew; to whom Joſhua aſſign'd his authority, and placed a crown upon his head.

——Asked the Lord, ſaying.] Enquired of him by urim and thummim, as the manner was in all caſes that concern'd the whole congregation of Iſrael. For which end, it is to be ſuppoſed, that ſome who repreſented the body of the people (their elders, perhaps, or heads of their tribes) were ſent to Shiloh, where the ſanctuary was fixed, and deſired Phinehas the High-prieſt, to repreſent their caſe to God, and implore his directions.

——Who ſhall go up for us againſt the Canaanites firſt to fight againſt them.] The Iſraelites being increas'd, as we have already intimated, to ſuch a number, that they were able to people more of the country; and finding themſelves ſtraitned for want of room, began to concert meaſures for enlarging their poſſeſſions; but would not begin an enterprize of that nature without the Divine approbation and direction: And therefore intreated the Divine Majeſty to inform them who ſhould make the firſt attempt; that the reſt being encouraged by their ſucceſs (of which they did not doubt, if they had his ſacred warrant for what they did) might act in the ſame manner. For it is evident by theſe words, go up for us, that all the tribes on this ſide Jordan were concern'd in this affair.

Ver. 2. And the Lord ſaid, Judah.] That is, the tribe of Judah, who were very populous, and equally brave.

——Shall go up.] And aſſault the mountainous country, which was the lot of this tribe. According to the prophecy of Jacob, Gen. xlix. 8. where, comparing Judah to a lion's whelp, that patriarch declares, from the prey, my ſon, thou art gone up.

——Behold I have delivered the land into his hand.] That is, all the land belonging to their lot. By this it ſeems plain, that the anſwer by urim and thummim was given by a voice which utter'd theſe words. Here Abarbinel endeavours to anſwer a queſtion ſtarted by the Jews; namely, why Joſhua did not enquire in this manner, tho' it be expreſly ſaid, Numb. xxvii. 21. that he ſhall ſtand before Eleazar the prieſt, and ask counſel of the Lord, after the judgment of urim. He thinks he did ſo, all the time after that, till the death of Moſes, to ſhew he was conſtituted the leader of God's people, for none but ſuch could enquire by urim: But after the death of that great Law-giver, Joſhua was endued with the ſpirit of prophecy, as Moſes was, and ſo had no need to enquire in that manner, being immediately directed by God in his proceedings; but when he himſelf died, there being none endued with the prophetical ſpirit, the children of Iſrael were obliged to have recourſe to this oracle. This account is very much below the judgment of ſo great a man as Abarbinel; for tho' Moſes was a prophet, yet, he frequently asked counſel of God at the ſanctuary, which was the ſame as if he had enquired by urim. Therefore the true anſwer is, that Joſhua did thus enquire of the Lord in the caſe of Achan; and it is highly probable he did the ſame in the management of his war, and other occaſions, tho' it be not expreſly mention'd in ſo many words.

Ver. 3. And Judah ſaid unto Simeon his brother.] They were brethren by the ſame father and mother; and alſo nearly ſtationed in their ſituation, the lot of the tribe of Simeon being taken out of that of Judah, Joſh. xix 9.

——Come up with me into my lot, that we may fight againſt the Canaanites.] Which people, with the Perizzites (as is further declared in the next verſe) ſtill poſſeſſed a conſiderable part of the lot which fell to Judah.

——And I likewiſe will go with thee into thy lot.] To drive the Canaanites out of that part of the country which was the portion of Simeon.

——So Simeon went with him.] They joyn'd their forces together in this expedition, under the conduct, no doubt, of ſome eminent leader. And who ſo fit as Caleb? Who, tho' an aged man, was full of vigour, and fit for war, (as he himſelf declared not long ago, Joſh. xiv. 10, 11.) and had not yet got poſſeſſion (as appears by the ſequel) of that portion which by God's commandment was aſſign'd him.

Ver. 4. And Judah went up.] They were the principal perſons concern'd in this expedition, and therefore only mention'd, tho' the children of Simeon went up with them.

——And the Lord delivered.] We meet with no ſuch religious expreſſion (which occurs often here) in any Heathen writer.

——The Canaanites and Perizzites into their hand.] Tho' moſt of the people properly called Canaanites dwelt by the Mediterranean ſea, yet many of them were ſcatter'd up and down in other parts of the country, and particularly in theſe mountains and woody places, where the Perizzites dwelt; ſee Joſh. xvii. 15, 16.

——And they ſlew of them in Bezek ten thouſand men.] In the country near Bezek, which was a city in the tribe of Judah, not far, as ſome think, from Bethlehem. Here they choſe to make their rendezvous of their forces, and wait to receive the children of Judah, that if they ſhould happen to be defeated, they might eaſily find a ſtrong place of retreat.

Ver. 5. And they found Adoni-bezek in Bezek.] He was the king, or Lord of this place, as his name imports, whom the Iſraelites ſurprized, as the word found ſignifies, by a ſudden aſſault upon this city, whither he ſeems to have fled, when he had loſt the field. Theodoret makes this king the ſame with Adonizedek (mention'd in Joſh. x) but as their names are different, ſo he was king of Jeruſalem, and this of Bezek; where he was overcome; but the former in Gibeon, who was killed alſo with the ſword, and then hanged on a tree; but this had only his thumbs and toes cut off, and then brought to Jeruſalem, where he died.

——And they fought againſt him.] Took the city wherein he thought to have defended himſelf, and the remainder of his army, which eſcaped hither.

——And they ſlew the Canaanites, and the Perizzites.] Put all the people of thoſe two nations, (whom they found there) to the ſword.

Ver. 6. But Adoni-bezek fled, and they purſued after him and caught him.] They found which way he went, and purſued him with ſo much expedition, that they overtook him before he could arrive at the ſtrong fortreſs of the Jebuſites; where, it is likely, he hoped to ſecure himſelf.

——And cut off his thumbs and his great toes.] That he might be made incapable of war hereafter, being rendered unable to handle arms, or to run ſwiftly.

This ſevere treatment had been practiſed by himſelf as appears by his own confeſſion in the next verſe, which made the Iſraelites think it reaſonable to ſerve him in his own kind.

Ver. 7. And Adoni-bezek ſaid, threeſcore and ten kings.] In theſe days the chief perſon in every city had a kingly power; as we learn from the hiſtory of Joſhua, who found many kings in Canaan, when he conquer'd it. And ſeventy ſuch petty princes Adoni-bezek had ſubdued; who were not kings of ſo many ſeveral cities, but ſome of them, it is likely, kings of the ſame place, who ſucceſſively oppoſed him, and were dethroned by him.

——Having their thumbs, and their great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my table.] He was proud and inſolent, as well as cruel, treating thoſe kings whom he conquered, as if they had been the vileſt of animals.

As I have done, ſo God hath requited me.] Juſtice was defined by the Pythagorans to be τὸ ἀντιπεπονθὸς, to make others feel the hurt they had done, by their ſuffering the like puniſhment; which Harmenopulus calls ταὐτοπάθεια, ſuffering the very ſame; as Grotius obſerves Lib. 2. De jure belli & Pacis, c. 20. N. 32. Now,

Adoni-

Adoni-bezek's acknowledgment of God's juſtice in this puniſhment, hath made ſome think that prince was a penitent, and became a convert to the true religion: For he ſpeaks of God in the ſingular number, and not of the gods, as was cuſtomary with the Heathens, and this might poſſibly be the reaſon why they ſpared his life. Certain it is, his pride and arrogance were very much humbled by his puniſhment, which extorted this confeſſion from him; for it carried with it (as Mr. Mede obſerves upon theſe words) the very ſtamp and print of the ſin for which it was inflicted.

——And they brought him to Jeruſalem.] Which, as it follows in the next verſe, was now in the poſſeſſion of the children of Judah: Tho' the Jews think they had not yet taken the city; but having begirt it, they brought him priſoner thither, and he died in the time of the ſiege.

——And there he died.] After he had lived ſome time, perhaps, to perfect his repentance.

Ver. 8. Now the children of Judah had fought againſt Jeruſalem, and taken it.] We do not read of its being taken by Joſhua, tho' it ſeems highly probable, that when he took the king of Jeruſalem, he alſo made himſelf maſter of his city, and treated it as he did the reſt of the cities of thoſe kings, Joſh. x. 3, 23. But when he was gone to conquer other parts of the country, it is likely the old inhabitants returned again, and took poſſeſſion of it: For the land was not then divided among the Iſraelites: After which, this city falling in part to the ſhare of Judah, they diſpoſſeſſed the Jebuſites who dwelt there, of all but the ſtrong fortreſs on the top of mount Sion, which held out till the days of David.

——And ſmitten it with the edge of the ſword, and ſet the city on fire.] As Joſhua had done to Jericho, Ai, and Hazor; this being a city, it is probable, deeply infected with idolatry; from which they thought fit entirely to purify it before they rebuilt it.

Ver. 15. And afterward the children of Judah went down.] From Jeruſalem (we ſuppoſe) which ſtood high.

——To fight againſt the Canaanites which dwelt in the mountain.] There were ſeveral mountains round Jeruſalem, (Pſal. cxxv. 2.) and we often read of the mountains of Judah, which were poſſeſſed, it ſeems, by the old inhabitants, till after the death of Joſhua.

——And in the ſouth.] Toward the wilderneſs of Paran.

——And in the valley.] Or the flat country about thoſe mountains, ſome of which are mentioned in the following verſes.

Ver. 10. And Judah went againſt the Canaanites that dwelt in Hebron.] It appears from hence, that the old inhabitants of this country had returned to this place, after it had been deſtroyed by Joſhua, as we read it was, Joſh. x. 36, 37. But they were now expelled again by the children of Judah after his death, this city being in their lot.

——Now the name of Hebron before was Kirjath-arba.] Which ſignifies the city of Arba, who was the father of Anak.

——And they ſlew Sheſhai, Ahiman, and Talmai.] Theſe were the three ſons of Anak, as we read Joſh. xv. 14. where it is ſaid, that Caleb drove them out from thence; for he was the conductor of the children of Iſrael in this expedition, and had great reaſon to go up againſt this city, becauſe this part of the country was given to him by a particular direction of God, Joſh. xiv. 13, 14. xv. 13. But he did not conquer it till after the death of Joſhua.

Ver. 11. And from thence he went againſt the inhabitants of Debir, &c.] Another city which had been taken by Joſhua in the beginning of the war, Joſh. x. 38, 39. but while he was engaged in the conqueſt of other parts of the country, was re-inhabited by the Canaanites who were not expelled till after the death of Joſhua; when Caleb (to whom it was aſſigned, together with Hebron, for his portion, Joſh. xv. 15.) drove them out again, and poſſeſſed himſelf of it.

Ver. 12. And Caleb ſaid.] Hence it ſtill appears, that the children of Judah fought under the conduct of Caleb, as their general.

——He that ſmiteth Kirjath-ſepher, and taketh it, to him will I give Acksah my daughter to wife.] This, and the three following verſes. 13, 14, 15, have been explained upon Joſh. xv. 16, &c. where the portion of Judah being deſcribed, there is a particular mention of what was given to Caleb, and how he diſpoſed of it; which relation ſeems to have been taken out of this book, and inſerted there, by the authority of Ezra, for the fuller illuſtration of all that belonged to that tribe, whether by lot, or peculiar donation before the diviſion of the land. For any one may ſee that the deſcription of Judah's lot is entirely coherent (as Huetius truly obſerves) if all between the twelfth and the twentieth verſe were left out; and that all things here mentioned were not done till after the death of Joſhua, is evident by the narration which is here made of all that fell out after that time.

Ver. 16. And the children of the Kenite, Moſes his father-in-law.] See Numb. x. 29. where Hobab, the ſon of Jethro, was invited by Moſes to accompany him into the land of Canaan, and, in all probability, accepted the invitation.

——Went up out of the city of palm-trees.] That is, Jericho, which was in a flat country. See Deut. xxxiv. 3. Here, it ſeems, they were pleaſed to ſettle themſelves at their firſt coming into Canaan, where Moſes promiſed, that whatſoever goodneſs God ſhould ſhew to the Iſraelites, they ſhould have their ſhare in it: And no part of the country was more delightful than this about Jericho; in the territory of which they dwelt, for the city it ſelf was deſtroy'd.

——With the children of Judah.] Admiring the courage and ſucceſs of this tribe, they ſeem to have contracted a particular friendſhip with them, and to have accompanied them in this expedition into the high country.

——Into the wilderneſs of Judah, which lieth in the ſouth of Arad.] In the ſouthern part of the land of Canaan, where Arad was, Numb. xxi. 1. which, as Procopius Garzæus here obſerves, was a city of the Amorites, near the wilderneſs of Kadeſh, which is Paran: In his time it was a village four miles from Malaathon; but twenty from Hebron.

——And dwelt among the people.] They removed from the city of Palm-trees, which was in the tribe of Benjamin, and ſettled themſelves among the people of Judah. Yet not all of them; for ſome went into the northern parts among the tribe of Naphtali, as appears from chap. iv. 10, 11. What ſhould be the reaſon of their forſaking ſo pleaſant a place, as that where they were firſt ſettled, is but conjectured. Some think it was the love of ſolitude and retirement; which they gather from Jerem. xxxv. 6. &c. Or, as we ſaid, out of their great affection to the children of Judah, under whoſe protection they hoped for greater ſafety than in other places.

Ver. 17. And Judah went with Simeon his Brother.] Having finiſhed, as far as they were able, the conqueſt of what belonged to the tribe of Judah, they went to aſſiſt the Simeonites, according to their mutual engagement, ver. 3.

——And they ſlew the Canaanites that inhabited Zephath, and utterly deſtroyed it.] Some think this was the name both of a city, and of a ſmall region; but the exact ſituation of it is not known.

——And the name of the city was called Hormah.] From the utter deſtruction before-mentioned. Some think this was the ſame place with that mentioned Numb. xxi. 2, 3. But mention is there made of more cities that were laid waſte, whereas here there is but one.

Ver. 18. And Judah took Gaza, with the coaſt thereof; and Askelon, with the coaſt thereof; and Ekron, with the coaſt thereof.] Theſe three cities were in the land of the Philiſtines, upon the ſea-coaſt, which the Iſraelites did not hold long, before the Philiſtines recovered them again. For the Iſraelites contenting themſelves with taking theſe cities, without deſtroying the people, (as they did in other places, and ought to have done here) and only making them tributaries, it was not difficult for them to regain their liberty.

Ver. 19. And the Lord was with Judah.] The Targum here uſes the ſame language, which the author of it conſtantly expreſſes in the book of Joſhua, when he mentions God's preſence with Iſrael, and the word of the Lord helped the houſe of Judah.

——And he drave out the inhabitants of the mountain.] God gave them ſuch ſucceſs whereſoever they went, that it ought to have encouraged them to go on with their enterprize; which they did not, as the following words inform us. This mountain was, probably, Mons Caſius, which was near Gaza.

——But could not drive out the inhabitants of the valley, becauſe they had chariots of iron.] Here now the fountain of all the enſuing evils, which befell the Iſraelites, begins to be opened. In that, either through indolence, avarice, or diſtruſt of God's power, or by indulging more lenity than the law of Moſes allowed, they did not invade thoſe people who were ſtronger than ordinary; or, being unfaithful to God, they failed in their attempt; or, having ſome ſucceſs, only brought the enemies under tribute. And, it is moſt likely, they were ſo terrified at the iron chariots, (which were in uſe in the plain country, tho' not in the mountains) that they were quite diſheartened, and did not remember what God had promiſed them, (ver. 2. of this chapter) and how undauntedly Joſhua aſſaulted thoſe who advanced againſt him in this formidable array, Joſh. xi. 4, 6.

Ver. 20. And they gave Hebron unto Caleb, as Moſes ſaid; and he expelled thence the three ſons of Anak.] Thus ends the account of the wars of the tribe of Judah; which concludes with a repetition of what part of their country was given to Caleb; becauſe he was their leader, (as we have frequently obſerved) and this was his reward, namely, the country about Hebron, the city it ſelf belonging to the Levites.

Ver. 21. And the children of Benjamin did not drive out the Jebuſites that inhabited Jeruſalem.] This tribe, and that of Judah, had an intereſt in Jeruſalem: But though both of them joined together, they could not drive out the Jebuſites who inhabited the ſouth part of it, where they had a ſtrong fortreſs upon mount Sion. See Joſh. xv. 63. Nay, of that part of the city which belonged to Judah, they were not diſpoſeſſed till the fore-named expedition.

——But the Jebuſites dwelt with the children of Benjamin unto this day.] That is, they kept poſſeſſion of that fortreſs, from which the Benjamites were not able to expell them; but they dwelt there in the days when Samuel wrote this book, being not driven out till the reign of David. And they ſeem alſo to have dwelt with the Benjamites in that part of the city belonging to them; which tho' conquer'd, yet the inhabitants were not deſtroyed, but only brought under tribute For this was very agreeable to the indolent and avaricious turn of mind which now began to prevail in Iſrael.

Ver. 22. And the houſe of Joſeph.] Namely, the tribe of Ephraim, Joſh. xvi. 1.

——They alſo went up againſt Beth-el] They, following the example of Judah, Benjamin, and Simeon, endeavoured to enlarge their border by taking Beth-el.

—And the Lord was with them.] As the ſucceſs demonſtrated. The Targum hath it, (as before, ver. 19.) the word of the Lord was their helper.

Ver. 23. And the houſe of Joſeph ſent to deſcry Beth-el.] They proceeded very cautiouſly; ſending ſpies (as we read in the next verſe) to view the ſtrength of the place, and to diſcover how it might be beſt approached.

——Now the name of the city before was Luz.] See Gen. xxviii. 19. Joſh. xvi. 2.

Ver. 24. And the ſpies ſaw a man come forth out of the city.] Whom they apprehended, as he paſs'd by the place where they lay to make their obſervations, and get intelligence.

——And they ſaid unto him, ſhew us, we pray thee, the entrance into the city.] Where it may be moſt eaſily entered. For they did not enquire the way to the gate, which was common and plain enough; but for the weakeſt part, where the walls were loweſt, or moſt out of repair, or had the leaſt guard. Or, they deſired him, perhaps, to ſhew them ſome private way to get into it, which none knew but the inhabitants.

——And we will ſhew thee mercy.] As they addreſſed themſelves to him in a gentle manner, when they apprehended him; ſo they aſſured him he ſhould receive kind uſage, when they got into the city, by ſparing his life and all belonging to him, which it is highly probable, he begg'd of them when he found himſelf in their power; and they might lawfully grant that requeſt, provided he changed his religion, or left the country, as we find he afterward did.

Ver. 25. And when he ſhewed them the entrance into the city.] Notice, we ſuppoſe, was immediately ſent to the army which lay not far off.

——They ſmote the city with the edge of the ſword.] Came upon them on a ſudden, and attacked them where they leaſt expected it; ſo that the aſſailants found little reſiſtance.

——But they let go the man, and all his family.] Did not offer them any injury, but gave them their lives, together with full liberty to remove to what quarter they pleaſed.

Ver. 26. And the man went into the land of the Hittites.] A colony of this nation, we ſuppoſe, had planted themſelves heretofore in ſome of the neighbouring countries, Syria, or Arabia, or ſome of thoſe who fled upon Joſhuas invading the land, ſettled themſelves there. To whom this man thought good to go with his family, being perhaps of the ſame nation.

——And built a city.] Which is an argument, that the children of Ephraim were ſo kind as to diſmiſs him and his family, with all their goods and eſtate.

——And called the name thereof Luz.] To perpetuate the memory of the place from whence he came. The founders of cities are mentioned with honour by all authors, and this ſeems be the intention, in the paſſage before us.

——Which is the name thereof unto this day.] It retain'd its name to the time when this book was written, and long after: For it ſeems to be the ſame city mentioned by Joſephus, as ſituated in Arabia (not far from Judea) And Bochart obſerves, that this place derived its name originally from the great plenty of Almonds, which grew there; from whence alſo Luſitania might poſſibly have its name.

Ver. 27. Neither did Manaſſeh drive out the inhabitants of Beth-ſhean, &c.] Hitherto the Iſraelites had conducted themſelves with ſome bravery, and expelled ſeveral bodies of the Canaanites: But the ſacred hiſtorian now begins to ſhew how puſillanimous others of them were; for theſe do not ſeem to have attempted any thing againſt the places mentioned here, or any where elſe. Beth-ſhean was a city not far from Jordan. See Joſh. xvii. 11. where the reſt of the cities mentioned in this verſe are enumerated.

Ver. 28. And it came to paſs when Iſrael was ſtrong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute, and did not utterly drive them out.] Herein they violated the law whereby they were commanded to deſtroy that people, when they were able. As they were ſtrong enough to impoſe tribute upon them, they undoubtedly might have expelled them entirely out of the land. But they found more profit in making them tributaries, and it coſt them leſs pains to bring them into ſubjection, than to deſtroy them as they were enjoined. And this ſeems to be here intimated as the common fault of all the Iſraelites, that when they grew potent they did not endeavour to deſtroy or expel the Canaanites, but permitted them to live quietly upon payment of tribute.

Ver. 29. Neither did Ephraim drive out the Canaanites that dwelt in Gezer.] It is very probable that this tribe did not ſo much as exact any tribute from them (ſince nothing of that nature is here mentioned) but made a covenant of friendſhip with them, which was ſtill a greater crime. And this the next words ſeem to import.

——But the Canaanites dwell in Gezer among them.] Which is a form of ſpeech not uſed in the foregoing exceptions. And to dwell among a people, ſignifies a quiet ſettlement, as in 2 Kings iv. 13. When Eliſha offered the Shunamite to do her any good office at court, ſhe expreſſes herſelf ſatisfied with her condition, in theſe words, I dwell among my own people.

Ver. 30. Neither did Zebulun drive out the inhabitants of Kitron, nor the inhabitants of Nahalol.] This was a more criminal neglect than the former, becauſe this laſt city was ἀφωρισμένη Λευίταις, one of thoſe that were ſeparated for the Levites, as Euſebius obſerves. They, however, did more than the Ephraimites; for tho' they let this people dwell among them, they compelled them to pay tribute.

Ver. 31. Neither did Aſher drive out the inhabitants of Accho.] Which was a city near the Mediterranean ſea, called by Strabo and others, Ace, and afterward Ptolemais.

——Nor

———Nor the inhabitants of Zidon.] Which was a great and celebrated city on the ſame ſea.

———Nor of Ahlab, nor Achzib.] We find no mention of the former of theſe elſewhere; but the latter is in Joſh. xix. 29. and was called in after-times Ecdippa, as Euſebius relates.

———Nor Helbah, nor Aphik, nor of Rehob.] The two latter of theſe we read of in Joſh. xix. 28, 30. but nothing of the former, unleſs it be the ſame with Helkath, mentioned there, ver. 25.

Ver. 32. But the Aſherites dwell among the Canaanites, &c.] They ſeem to have entered into a league of friendſhip with the Canaanites; ſo that they were intermixed with them, as if they had been the ſame nation, which was moſt ſtrictly prohibited by the law of Moſes. For they did not ſo much as make them tributaries; but ſeem to have ſubmitted to the baſeſt condition of all the other tribes: For it is not ſaid, (as of the other tribes) that the people dwelt among the Aſherites; but that the Aſherites dwelt among them. As if the Canaanites ſtill remained the lords of the country, and the Aſherites were only permitted to live among them.

Ver. 33. Neither did Naphtali drive out the inhabitants of Beth-ſhemeſh, nor the inhabitants of Beth-anath.] Both theſe cities are mentioned as in the lot of Naphtali, Joſh. xix. 38.

———But he dwelt among the Canaanites, &c.] Imitating the Aſherites, in permitting the old inhabitants to live promiſcuouſly with them; or rather contenting themſelves with the liberty to live quietly among the Canaanites.

———Nevertheleſs, the inhabitants of Beth ſhemeſh and of Beth-anath became tributaries unto them.] In this particular they were more valiant than the Aſherites, ſince they brought thoſe two cities under contribution, and compelled the inhabitants to acknowledge them for their lords.

Ver. 34. And the Amorites forced the children of Dan into the mountain.] The condition of the Danites was the worſt of all the tribes: For they could neither expel the old inhabitants, nor make them tributaries, nor ſo much as poſſeſs the land together with them. But the Amorites greatly diſtreſſed them, by ſhutting them up in the cities that were in the mountanous parts of the country, and not ſuffering them to dwell below in the plain.

Ver. 35. But the Amorites would dwell in mount Heres in Aijalon, and in Shaalbim.] To add to the affliction of the Danites, the Amorites would not ſuffer them to enjoy all the mountainous country, but poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe cities there; which conſtrained the Danites to ſeek for larger quarters in other parts; and ſeems to have been the occaſion of that expedition mentioned Joſh. xix. 47.

———Yet the hand of the houſe of Joſeph.] That is, the Ephraimites, who were next neighbours to the Danites in one part of their country.

——Prevailed.] Againſt the Amorites, as the LXX expound it, Ἐβαρύνθη ἡ χεὶρ οἴκου Ἰωσὴφ ἐπὶ τὸ Ἀμορῥαῖον, The hand of the houſe of Joſeph was heavy upon the Amorite; for they came to the aſſiſtance of their brethren, when they were greatly diſtreſſed.

———So that they became tributaries.] They prevailed over the Amorites to ſuch a degree, as obliged the cities mentioned in ver. 35. to pay tribute to the Danites, if not all the low countries which they inhabited; for the ſacred hiſtorian declares in general, they became tributaries, meaning all the Amorites in thoſe parts.

Ver. 36. And the coaſt of the Amorites was from the going up to Akrabbim, from the rock and upward.] We find mention of the going up to Akrabbim, in Joſh. xv. 3. And the Vulgate by the rock (in Hebrew ſelah) underſtand the city called Petra, which was ſituated on the borders of Edom; and by Amaziah call'd Jockteel, in 2 Kings xiv. 7. Some take theſe words to ſignify the large extent of the country which the Amorites inhabited; but we rather think they denote, that the children of Ephraim gave ſuch a check to their inſolence, as confined them to this country, which extended from Akrabbim and Selah, to the mountains here mentioned. By this it appears, that the Iſraelites permitted ſo many of the old inhabitants to remain in Canaan, that they ſettled themſelves among them; inſomuch that, in the days of Solomon, we read of a remnant of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebuſites, 1 Kings ix. 20, 21. and in far later ages, the Gergaſens remained in the days of our bleſſed Saviour, Matt. viii. 28. but it is probable they were all become proſelytes, ſo far as to worſhip the God of Iſrael, tho' they were not entirely of the Jewiſh religion.

CHAP. II.

1 An angel rebuketh the people at Bochim. 6 The wickedneſs of the new generation after Joſhua. 14 Gods anger and pity towards them, 20 The Canaanites are left to prove Iſrael.

AND an angel of the LORD came up from Gilgal to Bochim, and ſaid, I made you to go up out of Egypt, and have brought you unto the land which I ſware unto your fathers: and I ſaid, I will never break my covenant with you.

2 And ye ſhall make no league with the inhabitants of this land, you ſhall throw down their altars: but ye have not obeyed my voice; why have you done this?

3 Wherefore I alſo ſaid, I will not drive them out from before you: but they ſhall be as thorns in your ſides, and their gods ſhall be a ſnare unto you.

4 And it came to paſs, when the angel of the LORD ſpake theſe words unto all the children of Iſrael, that the people lift up their voice, and wept.

5 And they called the name of that place Bochim: and they ſacrificed there unto the LORD.

6 ¶ And when Joſhua had let the people go, the children of Iſrael went every man unto his inheritance to poſſeſs the land.

7 And the people ſerved the LORD all the days of Joſhua, and all the days of the elders that outlived Joſhua, who had ſeen all the great works of the LORD, that he did for Iſrael.

8 And Joſhua the ſon of Nun, the ſervant of the LORD, died, being an hundred and ten years old.

9 And they buried him in the border of his inheritance in Timnath-heres in the mount of Ephraim, on the north-ſide of the hill Gaaſh.

10 And alſo all that generation were gathered unto their fathers: and there aroſe another generation after them, which knew not the LORD, nor yet the works which he had done for Iſrael.

11 ¶ And the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the LORD, and ſerved Baalim:

12 And they forſook the LORD God of their fathers, which brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, of the gods of the people that were round round about them, and bowed themſelves unto them, and provoked the LORD to anger.

13 And they forſook the LORD, and ſerved Baal and Aſhtaroth.

14 ¶ And the anger of the LORD was hot againſt Iſrael, and he delivered them into the hands of ſpoilers, that ſpoiled them, and he ſold them into the hands of their enemies round about, ſo that they could not any longer ſtand before their enemies.

15 Whitherſoever they went out, the hand of the LORD was againſt them for evil, as the LORD had ſaid, and as the LORD had ſworn unto them: and they were greatly diſtreſſed.

16 ¶ Nevertheleſs, the LORD raiſed up judges, which delivered them out of the hand of thoſe that ſpoiled them.

17 And yet they would not hearken unto their judges, but they went a whoring after other gods, and bowed themſelves unto them: they turned quickly out of the way, which their fathers walked in, obeying the commandments of the LORD; but they did not ſo.

18 And when the LORD raiſed them up judges, then the LORD was with the judge, and delivered them out of the hand of their enemies, all the days of the judge: (for it repented the LORD becauſe of their groanings, by reaſon of them that oppreſſed them, and vexed them)

19 And it came to paſs when the judge was dead, that they returned, and corrupted themſelves more than their fathers, in following other gods, to ſerve them, and to bow down unto them: they ceaſed not from their own doings, nor from their ſtubborn way.

20 ¶ And the anger of the LORD was hot againſt Iſrael; and he ſaid, Becauſe that this people hath tranſgreſſed my covenant which I commanded their fathers, and have not hearkened unto my voice:

21 I alſo will not henceforth drive out any from before them, of the nations which Joſhua left when he died:

22 That through them I may prove Iſrael, whether they will keep the way of the LORD, to walk therein, as their fathers did keep it, or not.

23 Therefore the LORD left thoſe nations, without driving them out haſtily, neither delivered he them into the hand of Joſhua.

Ver. 1. And an angel of the Lord.] The Jews by an angel here underſtand a prophet, who was ſent by God as his meſſenger; which the word angel imports: And they commonly take it to have been Phinehas, who was employ'd on this occaſion. But we cannot ſee any reaſon to depart from the natural ſignification of the word, when there is no abſurdity in it, and it is not uſual to ſpeak in this metaphorical ſtyle; for we think no inſtance can be given where a prophet is called "an angel of the Lord."

—— Came up from Gilgal to Bochim.] This latter was not the name of the place before, but was given it on this occaſion, ver. 5. In all probability it was Shiloh, for there was no other place where it was cuſtomary for the people of God to aſſemble, as they now were when this angel appeared to them, ver. 4.

——— And ſaid, I made you to go up out of Egypt.] Theſe words ſufficiently ſhew, that this was not a created angel. For who but God himſelf could ſpeak in this ſtyle, "I made you to go up out of Egypt." This angel therefore was the ſame divine Being that appeared to Joſhua near Jericho, Joſh. v. 13, 14. and therefore it was fit for him to appear now as coming from Gilgal, in order to remind the Iſraelites of the illuſtrious appearance of God near that place, and the aſſurance he then gave them of his intended preſence with them in the conqueſt of the land, and the ſolemn covenant they made with him, by the renewal of circumciſion in that place: Which upbraided them with their baſe ingratitude to God, and their puſillanimous ſloth in not endeavouring to expel the Canaanites.

--- And have brought you unto the land which I ſware unto your fathers.] And of which he had now given them poſſeſſion.

--- And I ſaid, I will never break my covenant with you.] If they proved not falſe to him, he aſſured them, they ſhould always find him preſent with them, to make good his promiſes to them.

Ver. 2. And ye ſhall make no league with the inhabitants of this land.] Or rather, but ye ſhall make no league, &c. for this was the condition of the covenant on their part, Deut. vii. 2. and long before that in Exod. xxiii. 32. xxxiv. 12. and again more lately, Joſh. xxiii. 12.

—— But ye have not obey'd my voice; why have ye done this?] That is, you can give no account of your diſobedience to ſuch plain and repeated commands.

Ver. 3. Wherefore I alſo ſaid, I will not drive them out from before you.] God therefore had taken a peremptory reſolution to accompliſh the threatnings pronounced in his covenant, with the ſame exactneſs and punctuality as he had hitherto obſerved in the performance of his favourable promiſes to them.

Ver. 4. And it came to paſs when the angel of the Lord ſpoke theſe words unto all the children of Iſrael.] It appears from hence that they were aſſembled to celebrate ſome ſolemn feſtival, and conſequently the place where thoſe words were ſpoken to them was Shiloh.

—— That the people lift up their voice and wept.] Some of them from a penitent ſenſe of their ſins; but moſt of them from a juſt apprehenſion of their danger and approaching calamities, from the growing power of the Canaanites, and to find themſelves forſaken by God, who had ſo long been their gracious protector.

Ver. 5. And they called the name of that place Bochim.] Which ſignifies weepers.

—— And they ſacrificed there unto the Lord.] For the expiation of their ſins, by which they had provoked God to this reſolution; and in order to regain his divine favour and compaſſion.

Ver. 8. And Joſhua the ſon of Nun, the ſervant of the Lord died.] After he had made that excellent ſpeech to them which we have commented upon at large, and after he had engaged them in a ſolemn covenant to be God's people, Joſh. xxiv. 29.

Ver. 10. And alſo all that generation were gathered unto their fathers.] Not only thoſe who had beheld the wonderful works of God in Egypt, and the wilderneſs, but thoſe alſo who had ſeen Jordan dried up, the walls of Jericho fall down, the ſun ſtand ſtill at the word of Joſhua, and their enemies over-whelmed with hail-ſtones, &c. which had created ſuch impreſſions in their hearts, that they generally continued in the ſervice of God while they lived; and kept others in obedience to him.

--- And

——— And there arose another generation after them which know not the Lord, &c.] Which had no experimental, nor serious and affectionate knowledge of God, nor of his works; but only studied to settle themselves, on any terms, in their possessions, by making peace with the Canaanites, whom they ought to have expelled from the land.

Ver. 11. And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim.] They render'd divine worship to the gods of those nations whose land they possessed, and which false deities were called by this general name (Baalim) which signifies lords. For among the Pagans, as St. Paul observes, there were gods many, and lords many. In Hebrew he would have said many Baalim, who were their deified great men. For Baal (in Chaldee, Bel) was the first monarch that was deified, and reputed a god after his death; from whence all other divinities of this class had the appellation of Baalim. As, from the first Roman emperor, who was called Cæsar, all those who succeeded him were styled Cæsars. Baalim therefore being the general name of the gods of Syria, Palestine, and the neighbouring countries, there were as many Baals as nations. For instance, Baal of the Sidonians, and Baal of the Amorites, Moabites, Ammonites, and the rest of the neighbouring people.

Ver. 12. And they forsook the Lord God of their fathers, which brought them out of the land of Egypt, and followed other gods, of the gods of the people that were round about them.] They were not contented with worshipping the gods of the Canaanites, but extended their adoration to the gods of other neighbouring nations; none of which had ever bestowed the least benefit upon them. This was a very flagrant aggravation of their sin; that when all other nations selected to themselves such gods as they imagined had been propitious to them, or from whom they could still receive the blessings they needed, the Israelites most unworthily forsook the greatest benefactor to their nation, who had render'd them a free and prosperous people; and worshipped such gods as had never been be eficial to them in any one instance, nor had been able to preserve their own adorers from the destruction to which they were fated by Almighty God, whom Israel ought to have served.

Ver. 13. And they forsook the Lord, and served Baal, and Ashtaroth.] They particularly worshipped the sun, and the moon, or Venus, which some understand by Astarte. In the next chapter it is said, they worshipped Baalim and the groves, ch. iii. 7. For in those groves several goddesses, under the name of Ashtaroth, were worshipped; and there were as many Astartes among the heathens, as there were Baals; and therefore the scripture mentions them in the plural number, because of the multitude of images representing Juno, or Venus, or Diana, which had the name of Ashtaroth, signifying (as some conjecture) beatæ, blessed.

Ver. 14. And the anger of the Lord was hot against Israel.] His Divine Indignation, at their apostacy from him, was now rendered manifest, by many tremendous effects.

——— And he sold them into the hands of their enemies round about.] Who carried away their persons, as well as their goods, and reduced them to a state of slavery; for that seems to be the meaning of selling them, which is a phrase that frequently occurs in this book, and likewise in other places. This was an equitable punishment; that as they served the gods of the people round about them, ver. 12. so they should be slaves to all those nations.

Ver. 16. Nevertheless the Lord raised up judges, &c.] Extraordinary rulers and governors, whose authority, we think, was chiefly exerted in times of war; they being raised up by a particular inspiration from God, to deliver them out of the hands of those that spoiled them. So that commonly, when they had wrought deliverance for the people, and their army was dismissed, they became private men again, as appears by the history of Jephtha, who would not undertake to lead them against the Ammonites, unless he might be their governor after the conclusion of the war, Judg. xi. 9. and of Gideon, who refused to rule over them, when they offered the government to him, after the conquest of the Midianites, chap. viii. 22, 23. Their principal business, therefore, was to preserve and restore the liberties of the people, together with God's true religion; and to prescribe what was proper to be done in such conjunctures; being a kind of dictators, whose power continued as long as the exercise of it was necessary. It must however be acknowledged, that some of them had an established authority for life, over those whom they had rescued from slavery, but not over the whole community of Israel, part of which was sometime in peace, when another part was oppressed; and took upon them the regulation of political affairs, when they were too difficult and intricate to be decided by the ordinary judges. Thus we read that Deborah, a prophetess, judged Israel, and that the people came to her for judgment, before she excited Barak to vindicate their liberties.

Ver. 17. And yet they would not hearken unto their judges, &c.] Not constantly, but revolted again, tho' those worthy persons admonished them of their sin and folly, and of the danger and misery which would inevitably result from such a conduct.

Ver. 18. And when the Lord raised them up judges, then the Lord was with the judge, &c.] Infused an heroic bravery into his soul, and blessed him with extraordinary success. The Targum here continues its usual language, The Word of the Lord was the helper of the judge.]

——— And delivered them out of the hand of their enemies, all the days of the judge.] As long as he ruled over them, and kept them in obedience to God. This signifies, that if the judges did not constantly exercise their authority, yet the effects of it remained all the days of their life.

——— For it repented the Lord because of their groanings, &c.] He graciously condescended to alter the course of his providence, when they not only sighed and groaned under their oppressions, but cried unto him for help and promised amendment, as we find they did, chap. iii. 9, 15. vi. 7, 8, &c.

Ver. 19. And it came to pass when the judge was dead, that they returned and corrupted themselves more than their fathers, &c.] These most ungrateful wretches then relapsed into their former idolatry, and exceeded their fathers in iniquity. They either multiplied more strange gods, or devised new rites of worship, contrary to the express law of the only true God.

Ver. 20. And the anger of the Lord was hot against Israel.] Their insolent and abominable conduct highly incensed the Divine Majesty against them, and provoked him to punish them with greater severity than before.

——— And he said, Because that this people hath transgressed my covenant, &c.] By contracting alliances with the Canaanites, and not destroying their altars, &c. The Deity had indeed sufficient cause to be exceedingly offended at their proceedings; first, because they had forsaken him to whom they owed the privilege of their being a nation; secondly, because they had violated that covenant, which was neither of a late date, nor couched in ambiguous or obscure terms, but had been made long ago with their progenitors, who, as it was very well known, had derived extraordinary benefits from it; and thirdly, because, as this verse concludes, they had not hearkened unto the voice of God, tho' he by his prophets had frequently admonished them of their duty, and severely reproved and threatned them; but they were grown so impious and untractable, that instead of paying that reverend regard, which was due to the divine precepts, they abandon'd themselves, in a most presumptive and rebellious manner, to the impieties of other nations.

Ver. 21. I also will not henceforth drive out any from before them, &c.] That is, not presently, or so soon as he intended, if the conduct of the Israelites had been agreeable to his sacred will.

Chap. III.

1 The nations which were left to prove Iſrael. 6 By communion with them they commit idolatry. 8 Othniel delivereth them from Chuſhan-Riſhathaim. 12 Ehud from Eglon. 31 Shamgar from the Philiſtines.

NOW theſe are the nations which the Lord left to prove Iſrael by them (even as many of Iſrael as had not known all the wars of Canaan;

2 Only that the generations of the children of Iſrael might know to teach them war, at the leaſt ſuch as before knew nothing thereof)

3 Namely, five lords of the Philiſtines, and all the Canaanites and the Sidonians, and the Hivites that dwelt in mount Lebanon, from mount Baal-hermon, unto the entring in of Hamath.

4 And they were to prove Iſrael by them, to know whether they would hearken unto the commandments of the Lord, which he commanded their fathers by the hand of Moſes.

5 ¶ And the children of Iſrael dwelt among the Canaanites, Hittites, and Amorites, and Perizzites, and Hivites, and Jebuſites:

6 And they took their daughters to be their wives, and gave their daughters to their ſons, and ſerved their gods.

7 And the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the Lord, and forgat the Lord their God, and ſerved Baalim, and the groves.

8 ¶ Therefore the anger of the Lord was hot againſt Iſrael, and he ſold them into the hand of Chuſhan-riſhathaim king of Meſopotamia: and the children of Iſrael ſerved Chuſhan-riſhathaim eight years.

9 And when the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord, the Lord raiſed up a deliverer to the children of Iſrael, who delivered them, even Othniel the ſon of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother.

10 And the ſpirit of the Lord came upon him, and he judged Iſrael, and went out to war; and the Lord delivered Chuſhan-riſhathaim king of Meſopotamia into his hand: and his hand prevailed againſt Chuſhan-riſhathaim.

11 And the land had reſt forty years: and Othniel the ſon of Kenaz died.

12 ¶ And the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the Lord: and the Lord ſtrengthened Eglon the king of Moab againſt Iſrael, becauſe they had done evil in the ſight of the Lord.

13 And he gathered unto him the children of Ammon, and Amalek, and went and ſmote Iſrael, and poſſeſſed the city of palm-trees.

14 So the children of Iſrael ſerved Eglon the king of Moab eighteen years.

15 But when the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord, the Lord raiſed them up a deliverer, Ehud the ſon of Gera, a Benjamite, a man left-handed: and by him the children of Iſrael ſent a preſent unto Eglon the king of Moab.

16 But Ehud made him a dagger (which had two edges) of a cubit length, and he did gird it under his raiment, upon his right thigh.

17 And he brought the preſent unto Eglon king of Moab: and Eglon was a very fat man.

18 And when he had made an end to offer the preſent, he ſent away the people that bare the preſent.

19 But he himſelf turned again from the quarries that were by Gilgal, and ſaid, I have a ſecret errand unto thee, O king: who ſaid, Keep ſilence. And all that ſtood by him, went out from him.

20 And Ehud came unto him, and he was ſitting in a ſummer-parlour, which he had for himſelf alone: and Ehud ſaid, I have a meſſage from God unto thee. And he aroſe out of his ſeat.

22 And the haft alſo went in after the blade: and the fat cloſed upon the blade, ſo that he could not draw the dagger out of his belly, and the dirt came out.

23 Then Ehud went forth through the porch, and ſhut the doors of the parlour upon him, and locked them.

24 When he was gone out, his ſervants came; and when they ſaw, that behold, the doors of the parlour were locked, they ſaid, Surely he covereth his feet in his ſummer-chamber.

25 And they tarried till they were aſhamed: and behold he opened not the doors of the parlour, therefore they took a key, and opened them: and behold their lord was fallen down dead on the earth.

26 And Ehud eſcaped while they tarried: and paſſed beyond the quarries, and eſcaped unto Seirath.

27 And it came to paſs when he was come, that he blew a trumpet in the mountain tain of Ephraim, and the children of Iſrael went down with him from the mount, and he before them.

28 And he ſaid unto them, Follow after me: for the LORD hath delivered your enemies the Moabites into your hand. And they went down after him, and took the fords of Jordan toward Moab, and ſuffered not a man to paſs over.

29 ¶ And they ſlew of Moab at that time about ten thouſand men, all luſty, and all men of valour; and there eſcaped not a man.

30 So Moab was ſubdued that day under the hand of Iſrael: and the land had reſt fourſcore years,

31 ¶ And after him was Shamgar the ſon of Anath, which ſlew of the Philiſtines ſix hundred men with an ox-goad, and he alſo delivered Iſrael.

Ver. 1. Now theſe are the nations which the Lord left, to prove Iſrael by them.] The ſacred hiſtorian having declared in general, that God did not think fit to drive out all the Canaanites, becauſe he intended to try the care and fidelity of his people in his ſervice, proceeds now to enumerate the particular nations that remained unſubdued.

——Even as many of Iſrael as had not known all the wars of Canaan.] Such as were born ſince the concluſion of the war, and had not ſeen any of the wonderful works of God, in the conqueſt of the land. The Divine Majeſty therefore intended to prove them, that it might appear whether they would worſhip him, when they ſaw what they muſt inevitably expect, if they apoſtatiſed from him; namely, that he would let their implacable enemies the Canaanites looſe upon them.

Ver. 2. Only that the generations of the children of Iſrael might know to teach them war.] There was another reaſon, mentioned ver. 22. of the preceding chapter, why theſe pagan nations were left remaining. But that which is contained in the verſe before us would have been ſufficient, if there had not been any other, namely, that the Iſraelites might not grow indolent and ſluggiſh, for want of ſome to awaken and exerciſe their courage, and cauſe martial diſcipline to be kept up among them; and that they might, by having powerful enemies ſo near them, have conſtant recourſe to God, and depend upon the aid of him alone, by whoſe power their fathers had ſubjected ſeveral of thoſe pagan nations.

——At the leaſt ſuch as before knew nothing thereof.] If this was not needful for all, it was at leaſt for ſuch as had never been trained up to arms. For they being wholly brought up to husbandry, and feeding of cattle, would have had no military diſcipline among them, if they had not had the Canaanites for ſuch near neighbours.

Or, the meaning of the verſe before us may be this, They ſhall know what it is to be left to themſelves; for their fathers fought by a divine power, but theſe their deſcendants ſhould learn what it was to fight like common men, and without the aſſiſtance of God.

Ver. 3. Namely, the five Lords of the Philiſtines.] See Joſh. xiii. 2, 3. and Judges i. 18. where it appears, that three of them had been in ſome meaſure conquer'd, but had now recovered their country again, in conſequence of the ſlothful conduct of the Iſraelites.

——And all the Canaanites.] Theſe, as we have frequently obſerved, were a particular people of that country, near the Mediterranean ſea; and many of them ſtill remained ſcattered up and down the land.

——And the Sidonians.] Who inhabited the territory belonging to the famous city of Sidon, which derived its name from one of the ſons of Canaan, Gen. x. 15.

——And the Hivites that dwelt in mount Lebanon.] Lebanon, or Libanus, is a famous mountain, which ſeparates Syria from Paleſtine. It forms a kind of horſe-ſhoe in its length, beginning at the diſtance of three or four leagues from the Mediterranean, above Smyrna, and extending from north to ſouth toward Sidon, and from thence bending from weſt to eaſt, from Sidon toward Damaſcus, and at laſt returning from the ſouth toward the north, from the ſtreight of Damaſcus, as far as Laodicea Scabioſa. The weſtern part of this chain of mountains is what we properly call Libanus. The other part, which is oppoſite to it eaſtward, and extends from ſouth to north, is called by the Greeks, Antilibanus. Between theſe two mountains is a long valley called Cœle-Syria, or hollow Syria; in Joſhua, the valley of Lebanon, chap. xi. 17. Its preſent name is Betkah, from the Hebrew, bekah, which ſignifies, a plain. The name of Libanus is derived from the Hebrew Leban, or Laban, which ſignifies, white; and the mount in all probability was ſo called, by reaſon of the ſnow which always covers it in many places.

Libanus is about an hundred leagues in circumference. It has Meſopotamia to the eaſt, Armenia to the north, the holy land to the ſouth, and the Mediterranean to the weſt. Four rivers iſſue from this celebrated mountain, namely, Jordan, Rocham, Nahar-Roſſien, and Nahar-Cadicha. It is compoſed of four incloſures of mountains, which riſe one upon the other. The firſt is very fruitful in grains and fruits; the ſecond is extremely barren, abounding in nothing but thorns, rocks, and flints; the third enjoys a perpetual ſpring, the trees being always crowned with verdure, and the orchards laden with fruit. In a word, it is ſo exceeding fertile and delightful, that ſome have call'd it a terreſtrial paradiſe. The fourth is ſo high, that it is generally covered with ſnow, and is render'd uninhabitable by the exceſſive cold.

We intend, in a more proper place, to preſent our readers with a particular account of the cedars for which this mountain was ſo juſtly celebrated.

——From mount Baal-hermon.] This mountain (as we formerly obſerved in our annotations on Joſh. xi. ver. 3.) was ſituated in the north-eaſt part of the country, where ſome Hivites were ſettled.

——Unto the entring in of Hamath.] There was a celebrated city of this name in Syria; and which is thought to be Emeſa on the Orontes. But the entring in of Hamath, mentioned in this verſe, and in ſeveral other paſſages of ſcripture, is the narrow paſs extending from the land of Canaan to Syria, through the valley which lies between Lebanon, or Libanus, and Antilabanus. This entrance into Hamath is ſet down as the northern boundary of the land of Canaan. Joſephus, and St. Jerom after him, believed Hamath to be Epiphania, but Theodoret, and many other good geographers, maintained it to be Emeſa in Syria.

The ſame Theodoret declares (qu. 22. in 2 lib. Reg.) that Aquila tranſlated Hamath, Epiphania. For his part he believes, there were two cities of this name which were to be diſtinguiſhed; one ſurnamed the great, Amos, vi. 2. which is the ſame as Emeſa; the other ſimply called Hamath, which, ſays that Author, is the ſame as Epiphania. St. Jerom (ad Amos vi. and in Ezek. xlvii.) and St. Cyril of Alexandria (in Amos p. 312.) believe, on the contrary, that Hamath the great is Antioch, and that Hamath, without an Epithet is Epiphania: But we think it cannot be made appear by any text of ſcripture, that there were two Hamaths in Syria. Joſhua aſſigns the city of Hamath to the tribe of Naphtali, Joſh. xix. 35. Toi, king of Hamath cultivated a good intelligence with David, 2 Sam. viii. 9. This city was taken by the kings of Judah, and retaken from the Syrians by Jeroboam the ſecond, 2 Kings xiv. 28. The kings of Aſſyria made themſelves maſters of it upon the declenſion of the kingdom of Iſrael, and tranſplanted the inhabitants of Hamath into Samaria. 2 Kings xvii. 24. and xviii. 34, &c.

Ver. 4. And they were to prove Iſrael by them, &c.] That their vertue might appear, if they did not imitate theſe people; or their baſeneſs and degeneracy, if they did.

Ver. 5. And the children of Iſrael dwelt among the Canaanites, Hittites, and Amorites, &c.] The Canaanites, the Sidonians, and the Hivites of mount Libanon, from Baal-hermon to Hamath, were left to prove Iſrael, and to exerciſe them with temptation to idolatry and other ſins; and the more immediately devoted nations, the Canaanites, Hittites, Amorites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebuſites, dwelt as it were in common with the children of Iſrael in their promiſed land; where being thus blended together, they in time wrought ſo upon the unſtable minds of the Iſraelites, as to perſuade that people to intermarry with them and ſerve their gods, thereby captivating their minds, as they afterward ſubjected their bodies.

to

Ver. 7. And the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the Lord, and forgat the Lord their God, and ſerved Baalim, and the groves.] Some expoſitors here take groves, literally, for the trees themſelves which compoſed thoſe ſhady retreats, that were anciently conſecrated to heroes; being, ſometime, the place of their interment, and where their manes were ſuppoſed to appear. For Baalim were the ſame as heroes, and trees were accounted ſacred by the ancient Pagans, who conſecrated them to this or that deity, decorated them with ribbands, and lights, made vows to them, and hung the ſpoils of their enemies upon them: Inſomuch, that it was cuſtomary for travellers to ſtop, when they were to paſs by them, as if they had been the habitation of ſome god. Mr. Selden however thinks, that by groves, are here to be underſtood the images of their gods in the groves; as it is certain they muſt ſignify in ſome places: And he conjectures, with great probability, that there were ſeveral goddeſſes, under the name of Aſhtaroth, worſhipped in theſe ſhady places

Whatever thoſe deities were, it is evident, that they were different from Baalim; for the prophets of Baal, and the prophets of the groves, were diſtinct perſons, in 1 Kings xviii. 19

——— Therefore the anger of the Lord was hot againſt Iſrael, and he ſold them into the hand of Cuſhan-riſhathaim king of Meſopotamia.] Of that country which lay between the two great rivers Euphrates and Tigris. So that the firſt enemies who oppreſſed the Iſraelites were the Syrians; who either out of hatred, or deſire to enlarge their dominions, came over the Euphrates and invaded them.

This prince kept the Iſraelites in ſubjection for the ſpace of about eight years.

Ver. 9. And when the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord.] When they returned to him, and acknowledged him to be their only God, of whom they earneſtly begged pardon and implored his divine aid with fervent prayer, beſeeching him to deliver them from this cruel ſervitude, as he did Jacob their forefather from the bondage of Laban the Syrian.

——— The Lord raiſed up a deliverer to the children of Iſrael, who delivered them.] All the judges are called by the name of ſaviours, or deliverers, in Nehemiah ix. 27. becauſe they reſcued the Iſraelites from the oppreſſion of their enemies, when they could not help themſelves.

——— Even Othniel the ſon of Kenaz, Caleb's younger brother.] It is not eaſy to determine, from the expreſſion as it is couched in this verſe, whether Othniel, or his father, was Caleb's brother. The Septuagint and Vulgate have taken it in the firſt ſenſe; but it is plain, he was not his brother by the father's ſide, becauſe the one is called the ſon of Jephunneh, and the other the ſon of Kenaz; neither can they be ſuppoſed to have been uterine brothers, becauſe in ſuch a caſe the law of Moſes would not have permitted the one to have given his daughter to the other. The diſparity of age likewiſe deſerves to be conſidered: Caleb had then paſt his eighty-fifth year, but Othniel muſt be ſuppoſed to have been much younger, when he married that great man's daughter, who was an heireſs. It is therefore more reaſonable to conclude that Caleb and Kenaz were firſt couſins, and ſuch the Hebrew frequently calls brothers; in which caſe Othniel and Achſah might lawfully marry.

Othniel found means to raiſe an army, with which he gained a compleat victory over the king of Meſopotamia, and freed Iſrael from the yoke of that potent prince. The ſacred hiſtorian gives us no further account of that war, the event of which could not but be much to the honour of Iſrael, conſidering the ſtrength of this enemy. All that the ſacred text adds, is, that the ſucceſs of Othniel obtained a peace which laſted forty years; that is, till the death of their judge and deliverer. This victory happened about thirty-eight years after the death of Joſhua, but it is not eaſy to fix the time when Othniel died.

Ver. 12. And the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the Lord.] It ſeems ſurprizing, that the preſence of one good man in authority, ſhould be able to diſcontinue ſuch a propenſity to idolatrous worſhip, that was ſo natural to the Iſraelites, and which immediately after the death of their judge, could not be conſtrained within any bounds, but broke out like a torrent with double force. Yet this was the caſe of the Iſraelites, during all the time of their judges; the ſame perſon who freed them from ſervitude, purified them alſo from idolatry; but he was no ſooner dead, than their innocence and religion were at an end, tho' their peace and happineſs were ſure to expire with thoſe. Thus every Epocha of their hiſtory, during the adminiſtration of the judges, is only an alternate ſucceſſion of ſinning and contrition, of ſervitude and deliverance.

——— And the Lord ſtrengthned Eglon the king of Moab againſt Iſrael.] As God raiſed up deliverers to Iſrael when they became penitent, ſo he ſpirited up enemies againſt them, and gave them power to oppreſs them, whenever they revolted from his ſervice.

Ver 13. And he gathered unto him the children of Ammon, and Amalek.] He prevailed upon theſe two nations, who were his near neighbours, (Moab lying between them) to aſſociate themſelves with him in this war; and they were eaſily inclined to be his confederates, eſpecially Amalek, who ſtill retained an old grudge to the Iſraelites.

——— And went and ſmote Iſrael.] Either by a ſudden invaſion, or in a pitched battle.

——— And poſſeſſed the city of palm-trees.] Which was Jericho, as appears from Deut. xxxiv. 3. Judges i. 16. which tho' it had been deſtroyed by Joſhua, yet the place where it ſtood remaining, theſe victorious forces, in all probability, built fortifications, and placed a ſtrong garriſon there, that they might the better keep the whole country in awe.

The Iſraelites continued in ſubjection to this prince for the ſpace of eighteen years.

Ver. 15. But when the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord, the Lord raiſed them up a deliverer, Ehud the ſon of Gera, a Benjamite.] The tribe of Benjamin was more immediately oppreſſed than any of the others, the country of Jericho lying in it, and therefore it was very proper that one of that tribe ſhould deliver his brethren on this occaſion.

——— A man left-handed.] The Hebrew words itter jad jemini are very obſcure, being uſed no where elſe but here, and xx. 16. In both places the Septuagint tranſlate them ἀμφοτεροδέξιος, and are followed by the Vulgate, which renders them, qui utraque manu pro dextra utebatur, who could uſe both hands as other people do their right. This conſtruction the Hebrew phraſe will bear, which naturally ſignifies, as we tranſlate it in the margin, ſhut of his right hand, that is, who did nothing with it, but employed his left, tho' he could uſe both alike. Or, as Joſephus will have it, τῶν χειρῶν τὴν ἀριστερὰν ἀμείνων, who of the two could uſe his left hand beſt.

——— And by him the children of Iſrael ſent a preſent unto Eglon the king of Moab.] Some interpreters underſtand by this, the tribute which had been impoſed upon them; but it rather ſignifies a voluntary preſent above their uſual payments; whereby they hoped to mollify his mind, and render him favourable to themſelves: For the Hebrew word mincha, is uſed for ſuch offerings as were preſented to God, in order to obtain his gracious regards.

Ver. 16. But Ehud made him a dagger, &c.] Ehud formed the deſign of delivering his countrymen from the intollerable oppreſſion they had ſo long ſuſtained, by aſſaſſinating the tyrant, and with that view provided himſelf with a dagger fit for the execution of his purpoſe; tho' ſhort enough to be concealed under the habit he wore; and being left-handed, he girt it on his right thigh, which alſo gave the leſs ſuſpicion of his being armed.

Ver. 17. And he brought the preſent to Eglon.] Was admitted into his preſence, and delivered the preſent with his his right hand, which he, probably, could uſe as well as his leſt, tho' not, perhaps, with ſo much ſtrength.

——And Eglon was a very fat man.] And conſequently very unweildy, and leſs able to riſe up, or defend himſelf from a ſudden ſtroke. The LXX tranſlate it ἀνὴρ ἀσεῖ& σφόδρα, an exceeding evil, or courteous man, which rendered it more practicable for Ehud to give the intended blow, when that prince embraced him, or roſe out of his ſeat to receive his meſſage, in an obliging manner.

Ver. 18. And when he had made an end to offer the preſent.] Which was done with ſuch ceremonies as were cuſtomary in thoſe days.

——He ſent away the people that bare the preſent.] It was brought by ſome of Ehud's retinue, whom he accompany'd part of their way homeward, and then diſmiſſed them with orders to proceed on their way, and leave him to diſpatch ſome private buſineſs: For ſuch deſigns as he was then meditating in his mind, ſeldom ſucceed when many are engaged in them.

Ver. 19. But he himſelf turned again from the quarries that were by Gilgal.] Some underſtand by the Hebrew word peſilim, which we tranſlate quarries, a place where ſtones were hewed or dug; others, the twelve ſtones which Joſhua placed in Gilgal: But the Septuagint and the Vulgate take it for graven images, for ſo indeed the word peſil commonly ſignifies in ſcripture; and ſo we tranſlate it in the margin of our Bible: When Ehud therefore beheld theſe idolatrous images, he was inflamed with a zealous indignation, and inſtead of proceeding any farther in his return home, he went back with a full reſolution to revenge the indignity offered to the Divine Majeſty, as well as the oppreſſion of his people. It is to be ſuppoſed, the Moabites had ſet up their graven images in this place, preferably to any other, in order to teſtify their contempt of the God of Iſrael, who had ſo long condeſcended to honour it with his Sacred Preſence; or that they might aſcribe their ſubjection of the land to their idols, as the Iſraelites rendered the glory of their conqueſts to the true God.

——And ſaid, I have a ſecret errand unto thee, O king, who ſaid keep ſilence.] Eglon, upon this intimation of privacy in the meſſage, would not ſuffer Ehud to proceed, till all the attendants were withdrawn.

——And all that ſtood by him, went out from him.] It may be thought ſurprizing that a prince ſhould truſt himſelf alone with one of that nation, who he knew groaned under the rigours of his yoke; but his mind was then blinded by the preſent he had received, and likewiſe by the engaging manner in which it was delivered.

Ver. 20. And Ehud came unto him, and he was ſitting in a ſummer parlour.] In a cool room, as the Hebrew word imports, where he was defended from the heat of the ſun, and enjoyed the freſh air.

——And Ehud ſaid, I have a meſſage from God unto thee.] Ehud expreſſed himſelf in this manner, in order to amuſe the king of Moab, and divert him from any apprehenſions of danger; and likewiſe to oblige him to riſe from his ſeat, which Ehud knew he would do, ſince ſuch was the common practice of the Heathens in their intercourſes with the gods they worſhipped. He deſignedly made uſe of the word Elohim, which was common both to the true God and the Pagan deities; and not the word Jehovah, which was peculiar to the true God; becauſe Eglon not knowing whether the meſſage came not from his own falſe god, he would have the greater inclination to riſe, whereby Ehud would have an opportunity of directing his blow in the moſt advantageous manner; but this prince would poſſibly have ſhewn his contempt of the God of Iſrael, by ſitting ſtill to hear his meſſage.

——And he aroſe out of his ſeat.] This is a remarkable inſtance of the ancient veneration men paid to whatſoever carried the name and authority of God in it, and it reproaches thoſe who can now preſume to behave themſelves irreverently, even in the celebration of his divine worſhip and ſervice.

Ver. 21. And Ehud put forth his left-hand, and took the dagger from his right-thigh.] The king, if he had been ſuſpicious of any danger, would naturally have had his eye upon the right-hand of Ehud, and not the left.

——And thruſt it into his belly.] So that it pierced ſome vital part, upon which the king immediately expired, without ſpeaking a word, or making any noiſe to alarm his ſervants, who were waiting without.

This action of Ehud ſome juſtify, by ſuppoſing he had the expreſs command of God for it. But as the ſcripture has not intimated any thing of that nature, others think he might lawfully rid his country of a tyrant, who had unjuſtly enſlaved it. This, however, is a poſition that ought to be advanced with the utmoſt caution, ſince it otherwiſe may encourage aſſaſſinations in every caſe, where the actor judges the cauſe he engages in to be righteous.

Ver. 27. And the haft alſo went in after the blade.] The thruſt was ſo violent, that not only the blade of the dagger, but the handle alſo went into his bowels.

——And the dirt came out.] All agree, that the word parſchedona, which is no where found but in this paſſage, ſignifies the excrements, which came not out at the wound, for that was cloſed, but at the uſual place, it being common for bodies, and eſpecially theſe that are corpulent, to purge after death.

Ver. 23. And Ehud went forth through the porch.] It is very uncertain what the Hebrew word miſredona, ſignifies, which we tranſlate porch. Some take it for the guard-chamber, as the LXX ſeem to underſtand it, or a place where the kings ſervants ſat; through which Ehud paſſed boldly, that he might give no ſuſpicion of what had happened. Kimchi ſays, it was the place where the people ſat, who waited for audience.

——And ſhut the doors of the parlour upon him, and locked them.] He not only ſhut the doors of the parlour and locked them, but in all probability took the key away with him. There ſeem to have been double doors, an outward and an inward, as is uſual.

Ver. 24. And when he was gone out, his ſervants came.] Aſſoon as Ehud had left the king, the attendants who ſaw him go out, came into the Anti-chamber to be ready at their ſovereign's call.

——And when they ſaw, that behold the doors of the parlour were locked, they ſaid ſurely he covereth his feet in his ſummer-chamber.] They concluded he was eaſing nature, as the phraſe in this verſe is commonly underſtood, and in 1 Sam. xxiv. 3. on which occaſion the long garments then worn in thoſe countries were ſo diſpoſed as to cover the feet. But we think it may be underſtood of laying himſelf down to ſleep, which was very cuſtomary in thoſe countries, during the heat of the day. 2 Sam. iv. 5. and then lying down in their cloaths it was neceſſary to cover their feet for the ſake of decency. This interpretation agrees better with the paſſage before us than the other; for the king's attendants thought fit to wait a very conſiderable time before they entered the chamber, that they might not interrupt his repoſe; whereas the other affair being ſoon diſpatch'd, would not have occaſioned their waiting ſo long.

Ver. 25. And they tarried till they were aſhamed.] Till they were in great confuſion, not knowing what could cauſe him to ſleep ſo much longer than uſual.

——And behold, he opened not the doors of the parlour.] At which, it is likely, after a tedious expectation, they knocked, without receiving any anſwer.

——Therefore they took a key and opened them.] For in the courts of kings it was uſual for more perſons than one to be entruſted with keys to the ſame room.

Ver. 26. And Ehud eſcaped while they tarried.] Their long expectance of the king's awaking from his ſuppoſed ſleep, gave Ehud a favourable opportunity of making his eſcape.

——And paſſed beyond the quarries, and eſcaped unto Seirath.] Gilgal was ſo near the garriſon which the Moabites had in thoſe territories, that Ehud did not think himſelf ſafe, till he was got out of the tribe of Benjamin, into the mountainous country of Ephraim, where this town was ſituated, on the confines of the tribe of Benjamin.

Ver. 27. And it came to paſs when he was come, that he blew a trumpet in the mountain of Ephraim.] In order to ſummon thoſe who were diſpoſed to recover their ancient liberties, to take arms and follow him; and when he had aſſembled what forces he could draw together on that occaſion, he attack'd the Moabites that were garriſon'd on the weſt of Jordan, and ſlew ten thouſand of their beſt men; which utterly broke the power of Moab, and freed the Iſraelites from the yoke of that nation.

Ver. 30. ——And the land had reſt fourſcore years.] This is expounded by a learned writer in the following manner, "And the land had reſt in the eightieth year "after the former reſtored to it by Othniel." But there is another ſolution, which ſome Jewiſh writers of great repute ſuggeſt, in order to bring the years of ſervitude and of peace, mentioned in this book, into ſuch a compaſs as may correſpond with what is ſaid in 1 Kings vi. 2. concerning the number of years that paſſed, from the deliverance out of Egypt, to the building of Solomon's temple: For they ſuppoſe, that few or none of the judges ruled over the whole country of Iſrael, but ſome in one part, and ſome in another; ſo that there were ſeveral judges at the ſame time, in different parts of the land. Accordingly, our learned chronologer Sir John Marſham, who follows this opinion, underſtands here by "the land, which "had reſt for the ſpace of fourſcore years," not the whole land of Iſrael, but the eaſtern part of it, which had ſhaken off the yoke of Moab; but in the mean time the Philiſtines invaded the weſtern parts, as it here follows, and were repulſed by Shamgar, while the eaſtern countries were in a ſtate of perfect tranquility. This we take to be the cleareſt account of theſe words, the land had reſt fourſcore years, that is, the eaſtern part of the country, which had ſhaken off the yoke of Moab, not the whole land of Iſrael: For as the Philiſtines invaded the weſtern parts, ſo Jabin afflicted the northern, as it follows in the next chapter, while the oriental tribes continued in peace.

Ver. 31. And after him was Shamgar the ſon of Anath, &c.] Shamgar, the third judge of the Iſraelites, deliver'd them from ſome ſmall oppreſſions wh ch they ſuffer'd from the Philiſtines. The ſacred text gives us no further particulars about him, than that he ſlew ſix hundred of them with an ox-goad, or, as the Latin and Greek verſions render it, with a plough-ſhare. The expreſſion in the Hebrew is, malmad hakabar, which ſignifies any inſtrument, by which oxen are broke to labour. The Philiſtines were more careful than any other nation to ſtrip the Jews of all their military weapons, whenever they had them in ſubjection; and if this was the caſe at preſent, it is likely that expreſſion means only ſuch ruſtic inſtruments, as Shamgar and his men could lay their hands on. But as the text mentions nothing of any previous ſervitude, it is probable, that the deliverance here ſpoken of was only from ſome incurſion of the Philiſtines, perhaps in the ſeaſon of ploughing, when they thought the Iſraelites might be more eaſily ſurpriſed, but in which they were repulſed with loſs, by the vigilance and bravery of their then judge.

CHAP. IV.

1 Deborah and Barak deliver Iſrael from Jabin and Siſera.
18 Jael killeth Siſera.

AND the children of Iſrael again did evil in the ſight of the LORD when Ehud was dead.

2 And the LORD ſold them into the hand of Jabin king of Canaan, that reigned in Hazor; the captain of whoſe hoſt was Siſera, which dwelt in Haroſheth of the Gentiles.

3 And the children of Iſrael cried unto the LORD: for he had nine hundred chariots of iron; and twenty years he mightily oppreſſed the children of Iſrael.

4 ¶ And Deborah a propheteſs, the wife of Lapidoth, ſhe judged Iſrael at that time.

5 And ſhe dwelt under the palm-tree of Deborah, between Ramah and Beth-el in mount Ephraim: and the children of Iſrael came up to her for judgment.

6 And ſhe ſent and called Barak the ſon of Abinoam, out of Kedeſh-naphtali, and ſaid unto him, Hath not the LORD God of Iſrael commanded, ſaying, Go, and draw toward mount Tabor, and take with thee ten thouſand men, of the children of Naphtali, and of the children of Zebulun?

7 And I will draw unto thee, to the river Kiſhon, Siſera the captain of Jabins army, with his chariots and his multitude; and I will deliver him into thine hand.

8 And Barak ſaid unto her, If thou wilt go with me, then I will go: but if thou wilt not go with me, then I will not go.

9 And ſhe ſaid, I will ſurely go with thee: notwithſtanding the journey that thou takeſt, ſhall not be for thine honour: for the LORD ſhall ſell Siſera into the hand of a woman. And Deborah aroſe, and went with Barak to Kedeſh.

10 ¶ And Barak called Zebulun and Naphtali, to Kedeſh, and he went up with ten thouſand men at his feet: and Deborah went up with him.

11 Now Heber the Kenite, which was of the children of Hobab the father-in-law of Moſes, had ſevered himſelf from the Kenites, and pitched his tent unto the plain of Zaanaim, which is by Kedeſh.

12 And they ſhewed Siſera, that Barak the ſon of Abinoam was gone up to mount Tabor.

13 And Siſera gathered together all his chariots, even nine hundred chariots of iron, and all the people that were with him, from Haroſheth of the Gentiles, unto the river of Kiſhon.

14 And Deborah ſaid unto Barak, Up; for this is the day in which the LORD hath delivered Siſera into thine hand: is not the LORD gone out before thee? So Barak went down from mount Tabor, and ten thouſand men after him.

15 And the LORD diſcomfited Siſera, and all his chariots, and all his hoſt with the edge of the ſword, before Barak; ſo that Siſera lighted down off his chariot, and fled away on his feet.

16 But Barak purſued after the chariots, and after the hoſt unto Haroſheth of the Gentiles: and all the hoſt of Siſera fell upon the edge of the ſword, and there was not a man left.

17 How-

17 Howbeit, Siſera fled away on his feet to the tent of Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite: for there was peace between Jabin the king of Hazor, and the houſe of Heber the Kenite.

18 ¶ And Jael went out to meet Siſera, and ſaid unto him, Turn in, my lord, turn in to me, fear not: and when he had turned in unto her, into the tent, ſhe covered him with a mantle.

19 And he ſaid unto her, Give me, I pray thee, a little water to drink, for I am thirſty: and ſhe opened a bottle of milk, and gave him drink, and covered him.

20 Again he ſaid unto her, Stand in the door of the tent, and it ſhall be when any man doth come, and enquire of thee, and ſay, Is there any man here? that thou ſhalt ſay, No.

21 Then Jael Hebers wife, took a nail of the tent, and took an hammer in her hand, and went ſoftly unto him, and ſmote the nail into his temples, and faſtned it into the ground: (for he was faſt aſleep and weary) ſo he died.

22 And behold, as Barak purſued Siſera, Jael came out to meet him, and ſaid unto him, Come, and I will ſhew thee the man whom thou ſeekeſt. And when he came into her tent, behold, Siſera lay dead, and the nail was in his temples.

23 So God ſubdued on that day Jabin the king of Canaan, before the children of Iſrael.

24 And the hand of the children of Iſrael proſpered, and prevailed againſt Jabin the king of Canaan, until they had deſtroyed Jabin king of Canaan.

Ver. 1. And the children of Iſrael again did evil in the ſight of the Lord, when Ehud was dead.] And likewiſe after the death of Shamgar, of whom no further mention is made, becauſe he did nothing more than that one memorable act, recorded in the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter.

Ver. 2. And the Lord ſold them into the hand of Jabin king of Canaan.] We agree with thoſe who think this Jabin deſcended from the other prince of that name, who fell by the hands of Joſhua, and that he now ſeized on the ſpot where Hazor formerly ſtood, and rebuilt that city. Whether Jabin was an appellative common to all the kings of Hazor, we cannot determine from any poſitive authority, tho' it ſeems to have been a common cuſtom for kings in thoſe parts to ſucceed each other under the ſame appellation, as Pharaoh in Egypt, Agag in Amalekitis, &c.

——— The captain of whoſe hoſt was Siſera, which dwelt in Haroſheth of the Gentiles.] This was a city ſituated on the lake Semechon, or Samechon, through which the Jordan paſſes. It is ſixty furlongs in length, and thirty in breadth, that is, about 7500 paces long, and 3750 broad. Some derive the name Semechon from ſamach, which in Arabic ſignifies a fiſh; others from the Chaldee word ſamak, which ſignifies red, as if the waters were reddiſh and turbid; and there was certainly marſhy ground about this lake. The city of Hazor, where Jabin reſided, was ſeated on the ſide of the lake Semechon, and afterward the city of Seleucia was founded there.

The lake Semechon muſt have been near the city of Dan, and the fountains of Jordan, and at the diſtance of 120 furlongs from the lake of Tiberias, toward the ſouth. Joſephus ſays, that the marſhes of this lake extended even as far as Daphne, but there is great probability that, inſtead of Daphne, it ſhould be Red Dane; for that hiſtorian declares, in the ſame place, that the waters of Jordan fall into this pool below the temple of the golden calf. Now it is known, that the temple of the golden calf was at Dan. It is ſomething extraordinary, that this lake ſhould never be mentioned in any paſſage of ſcripture, that we know of. 'Tis thought that Pliny intended to ſpeak of it, when he ſays, that there is a lake at the diſtance of 150 furlongs from the Mediterranean, not far from Libanus, where the ſweet-ſcented reed grows.

Ver. 3. And the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord: for he had nine hundred chariots of iron.] The number of theſe chariots, which are generally taken for the ſcythed ſort, is much wonder'd at by the learned; but what ſhall we ſay to Joſephus, who acquaints us, that Jabin did actually reſide at Azor [Hazor] near the lake Samachon, and that he had an army of 300,000 foot, 10,000 horſe, and 3000 chariots, (Antiq. lib. 5. c. 6.) If Bochart therefore wonders, as he does, at the 900 chariots given by the ſcripture to this prince, when that author obſerved, that Mithridates had but 100 in his army, and Darius but 200, what muſt he have thought of Joſephus's 3000? Indeed, not only in the number of the chariots, but in that alſo of the horſe and foot, the Jewiſh hiſtorian is too large to be eaſily credited; but it is to be obſerved, that notwithſtanding he on this ſide ſo vaſtly exceeds the ſcriptural account of Jabin's chariots, he however agrees with thoſe ſacred records, as to the number of the Iſraelites who roſe up to recover their rights and liberties, ſince he limits their number to ten thouſand. What authority he had for this very extraordinary exceſs, in the numbers of the Canaanites againſt the Iſraelites, we know not: but his view may have been to do honour, in this example, as well as in others, to his countrymen and forefathers, with the Romans, who gloried chiefly in their own military exploits, and in what had been accompliſhed of that nature by their anceſtors.

It may be ſuppoſed, that the Canaanites placed their chief ſtrength in chariots of this nature, not being able to maintain a great body of horſemen.

Ver. 4 And Deborah the propheteſs.] Such a one as Miriam, endued with divine gifts of wiſdom to inſtruct and govern others. For ſhe was not only enriched with the knowledge of divine things, but was alſo excited by the Holy Spirit (as Kimchi here obſerves) to declare the will of God to the people, which was the proper office of a prophet. Her name in Hebrew ſignifies a bee, which hath been given by other nations to illuſtrious women. As among the Greeks, for inſtance, the nymph ſaid to be the nurſe of Jove is called Meliſſa, which ſignifies a bee in the Greek language; and the wife of Periander king of Corinth had the ſame name.

——— The wife of Lapidoth.] Or, as others tranſlate it, a woman of Lapidoth, taking this word to ſignify a place, and not a perſon; but our verſion ſeems to be moſt natural, and is preferable to that of R. Solomon, and others, who render it, a woman of ſplendors, that is, an illuſtrious woman.

——— She judged Iſrael at that time.] Had the ſupreme authority over them; being ſo well known to be divinely inſpired, that it procured her univerſal reverence, and ſubmiſſion to her judgment.

Ver. 5. And ſhe dwelt under the palm-tree of Deborah.] Or, as the Septuagint and Vulgate underſtand it, ſhe ſat under the palm-tree, when ſhe adminiſter'd judgment. Whence the tree was called by her name, becauſe it was the place where all reſorted to her.

——— Between Ramah and Beth-el.] That is, in the confines of the tribes of Benjamin and Ephraim, for Ramah was a city in the tribe of Benjamin, and Beth-el in that of Ephraim.

——— In mount Ephraim.] In one of the mountains in the borders of that country; for tho' the tree was near both both tribes, yet it ſtood on the edge of the tribe of Ephraim. From her dwelling in a mount, and being a propheteſs as well as a governeſs, ſome learned men imagine, the ſtory of the Theban ſphinx was invented by the Greeks. See Bochart. lib. 1. Canaan. cap. 16.

Ver. 6. And ſhe ſent and called Barak the ſon of Abinoam.] Concerning whom we know no more, than that he was born or dwelt in a famous city in the tribe of Naphtali; for that he was Deborah's husband, or, as others ſay, her ſon, are ungrounded conceits of ſome of the Jews.

——Out of Kedeſh-Naphtali.] There were ſeveral cities named Kedeſh, one in the tribe of Iſſachar, 1 Chron. vi. 72. another in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 23. and therefore, for diſtinction ſake this is called Kedeſh-Naphtali, which was a city of great note, in the upper Galilee, belonging to the Levites, and a city of refuge.

——And ſaid unto him, Hath not the Lord God of Iſrael commanded?] She could not think he doubted of the commiſſion ſhe now gave him from God; and which he received as an oracle whoſe veracity was indiſputable.

——Saying, Go and draw.] The Vulgate take the word draw to ſignify gathering forces together, but the LXX ſuppoſe it to be of the ſame import with the preceding word go; ſignifying that he ſhould go, till he drew near to mount Tabor.

——Toward mount Tabor.] Which was a noble mountain in Galilee, not far from Kedeſh, in the tribe of Zebulun, and in the confines of Iſſachar and Manaſſeh. On the top of it was a very ſpacious plain, as we are informed by Joſephus, who calls it Staburium, (L. 4. de Bello Jud. c. 2.) where Barak might draw up an army in military array, and exerciſe the ſoldiers in a very commodious manner.

——And take with thee ten thouſand men of the children of Naphtali, and of the children of Zebulun?] She thought he need go no farther than theſe two tribes, which were neareſt to him; but others alſo offered their ſervice out of Manaſſeh and Iſſachar, as appears from ver. 14, 15.

Ver. 7. And I will draw unto thee.] Theſe are the words of God, (which Deborah pronounced in his name) ſignifying, as Arias Montanus underſtands the word draw, that the Deity would, by his ſecret providence, incline Siſera to come within the power of Barak, in order to be deſtroyed, as hunters (unto whom warriors are ſometimes compared) entice wild beaſts to fall into their toils.

——To the river Kiſhon.] Which was near mount Tabor, having its ſource at the foot of it.

——Siſera the captain of Jabin's army, with his chariots and his multitude.] Wherewith he intended to encompaſs this mountain, and block up Barak till he forced him to ſurrender.

——And I will deliver him into thine hand.] This ſhews Deborah to have been endued with the higheſt gift of prophecy, which was to foretell future events with certainty.

Ver. 8. And Barak ſaid unto her, If thou wilt go with me, then will I go: but if thou wilt not go with me, then I will not go.] He is commended for his faith in God by the apoſtle, Heb. xi. 32. as well as other great worthies in ancient time; tho' it was ſo weak and imperfect, that he made conditions with God's meſſenger, and abſolutely refuſed to obey, unleſs they were granted. He had great reaſon, he thought, for it; becauſe he might want her advice in doubtful matters, and her authority alſo, both to raiſe ſoldiers, and to keep them together in good order, and likewiſe to inſpire them with courage. The LXX here add a great many words, which make this the reaſon of his backwardneſs; that without her he ſhould not be able to know the beſt time of giving Siſera battle.

Ver. 9. And ſhe ſaid, I will ſurely go with thee.] She ſaw he had faith enough to undertake the enterprize, and therefore conſented to his propoſal.

——Notwithſtanding the journey that thou takeſt.] In the Hebrew it is, the way that thou takeſt. Which may ſignify the courſe he had reſolved upon, not to go without her.

——Shall not be for thine honour.] Tho' his faith was accepted; yet the weakneſs of it ſomething eclipſed his glory.

——For the Lord ſhall ſell Siſera into the hand of a woman.] It is a great part of the glory of a conqueror, to take the general of the enemy's army, or to kill him with his own hand; which ſhe tells him ſhould be denied him, as a ſmall puniſhment of his reluctance to comply with her directions; and as he would not go without a woman, ſo a woman ſhould take away this honour from him.

——And Deborah aroſe, and went with Barak to Kedeſh.] She made no delay, but immediately accompanied him to his own city, where he began, we ſuppoſe, his levy of men.

Ver. 10. And Barak called Zebulun and Naphtali, to Kedeſh.] He cauſed proclamation to be made of God's command, and his own intentions, in theſe two tribes; who reſorted to him in great numbers.

——And he went up with ten thouſand men.] He ſelected, we ſuppoſe, ten thouſand men, out of thoſe who flocked to him, and went up with them to mount Tabor.

——At his feet.] That is, they followed him as their leader. Tho' it may ſignify, that they were all footmen; there being no horſes in Judæa, but what were brought out of other countries. This made the victory the more glorious, by the overthrow of a vaſt number of chariots and horſes, in the oppoſite army.

——And Deborah went up with him.] To encourage him and his forces, now they were aſſembled together.

Ver. 11. Now Heber the Kenite, which was of the children of Hobab the father-in-law of Moſes.] See Numbers x. 29. This is interpoſed, to explain what follows concerning Jael who was Heber's wife.

——Had ſevered himſelf from the Kenites.] Who went along with the children of Judah, to ſettle among them, Judg. i. 16. What the reaſon was of Heber's leaving them, as they all left the plain of Jericho, is not known; but there was a ſpecial providence of God in it.

——And pitched his tent.] The Kenites lived after the manner of the Midianites, (from whom they deſcended) in tents, not in houſes.

——Unto the plain of Zaanaim.] A place in the tribe of Naphtali, Joſh. xix. 33. where there was a plain, or (as the LXX expounds the Hebrew word alon) a grove of oaks, under the ſhadow of which their tents were pitched.

Ver. 12. And they ſhewed Siſera, that Barak the ſon of Abinoam was gone up to mount Tabor.] They could not want intelligence of ſo publick an action as this; and the words ſeem to import, that Siſera had many to inform him of all that paſſed.

Ver. 13. And Siſera gathered together all his chariots, &c.] In which, as we before obſerved, their main ſtrength conſiſted: but they being unfit for ſervice in mountainous countries, it is probable they placed them in ſuch a manner below the mountain, as to ſhut up Barak there; by ſeizing all the avenues, and preventing all proviſions from being brought to him.

Ver. 14. And Deborah ſaid unto Barak, Up; for this is the day in which the Lord hath delivered Siſera into thine hand.] This is not any contradiction to what was ſaid ver. 9. that God would ſell Siſera into the hand of a woman. For both events were true; Siſera, and his army, were delivered into the hand of Barak, to be routed by him; but he, in his flight, fell into the hands of Jael, in order to be ſlain.

Ver. 15. And the Lord diſcomfited Siſera, &c.] The particulars of the battle are not recorded in the Sacred Text; but it evidently appears from thence, that there was ſomething extraordinary and miraculous in this defeat of Jabin's hoſt. The Lord ſtruck a terror into them (as the word haman imports) by a noiſe of thunder, and thick flaſhes of lightning, as the word is uſed, 1 Sam. vii. 10. and alſo in Joſh. x. 10. The heavens, therefore, had the principal ſhare in this great overthrow. Joſephus, that his readers might not be ſurpriſed at the ruin of ſo mighty a people by ſuch a contemptible handful of Iſraelites, tells us very circumſtantially, That the armies were no ſooner engaged, than there aroſe a furious wind, which diſcharged ſuch a tempeſt of hail and rain in the faces of the Canaanites, as at once ſtifled and blinded them, and benumbed their fingers to ſuch a degree, as entirely diſabled them from action; ſo that they were eaſily broken and and diſperſed, in conſequence of which they were trampled to death by the horſe, and torn to pieces by their own chariots, which, together with the execution made on them by the Iſraelites, quite diſſipated this mighty multitude, and reduced them to nothing.

—— So that Siſera lighted down off his chariot and fled away on his feet.] He thought his chariot not ſwift enough to carry him out of danger, and imagined that he ſhould be leſs liable to be diſcovered, when he fled like a common ſoldier. To which we may add, that in ancient times valiant men were wonderfully ſwift of foot; as is obſerved of Aſahel, 2 Sam. ii. 18. and every one knows it was the character of Achilles among the Greeks.

Ver. 17. Howbeit Siſera fled away on his feet to the tent of Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite.] Siſera was the only one of all the numerous army of the Canaanites, that was not ſlain by the victorious hoſt of Iſrael. By his ſwift running he gained, as he imagined, a place of ſecurity, in the tent of Jael. Women had their tents apart from their husbands, as appears by Gen. xxiv. 67. and xxxi. 33.

—— For there was peace between Jabin the king of Hazor, and the houſe of Heber the Kenite.] It ſhould ſeem from hence, that Heber was a conſiderable perſon, who had a great family, and many dependants, like that of Abraham, Gen. xiv. 44. How he came to eſcape the ſevere oppreſſion under which the Iſraelites groaned, and to live in tranquility, in a time of ſuch general diſtreſs, we can but conjecture. Perhaps the retired manner in which the family of Heber lived, in a place remote from towns and company, made Jabin not apprehenſive of any danger from them; and if they ſtill adhered to their religion, when the reſt of the Iſraelites were apoſtates, God might incline the heart of Jabin to be favourable to them, and give no moleſtation to his inoffenſive neighbours.

The manner in which Jael received the fugitive Siſera into her tent, and afterward ſlew him in his ſleep, is related with ſo much perſpicuity by the Sacred Hiſtorian, that we think it needs no explication. We therefore ſhall only obſerve, that Jael might as well have let the Canaaniteſh general continue in his profound ſleep, till Barak could arrive to make him his priſoner; if ſhe had not felt a Divine power exciting her to this action, that the prophecy of Deborah concerning his deſtruction by a woman might be exactly accompliſhed. Nothing but this authority from God, of which ſhe ſeemed to be certain, could juſtify a fact of this nature, which had the appearance of a diſhonourable breach of hoſpitality, and ſeemed to be attended with a number of other crimes; but was not ſo when God, the Lord of all mens lives, commanded her to execute his ſentence upon the enemy of Iſrael.

Thus did Siſera fall, and in this manner was all the glory of Jabin eclipſed, and his dominion wreſted from him by the children of Iſrael, by whom he was purſued to deſtruction. Joſephus gives us the particulars of his downfall, and declares that Jabin met Barak as he was in full march againſt Hazor, and was encountred by him and ſlain; upon which, Hazor, the ſeat of his empire, was laid level with the ground. Thus fell the empire of the Jabins in Hazor, a ſecond time, according to this hiſtorian.

CHAP. V.

1 The ſong of Deborah and Barak.

THEN ſang Deborah and Barak the ſon of Abinoam, on that day, ſaying,

2 Praiſe ye the LORD for the avenging of Iſrael, when the people willingly offered themſelves.

3 Hear, O ye kings, give ear, O ye princes; I, even I will ſing unto the LORD, I will ſing praiſe to the LORD God of Iſrael.

4 LORD, when thou wenteſt out of Seir, when thou marchedſt out of the field of Edom, the earth trembled, and the heavens dropped, the clouds alſo dropped water.

5 The mountains melted from before the LORD, even that Sinai from before the LORD God of Iſrael.

6 In the days of Shamgar the ſon of Anath, in the days of Jael, the highways were unoccupied, and the travellers walked through by-ways.

7 The inhabitants of the villages ceaſed, they ceaſed in Iſrael, until that I Deborah aroſe, that I aroſe a mother in Iſrael.

8 They choſe new gods; then was war in the gates: was there a ſhield or ſpear ſeen among forty thouſand in Iſrael?

9 My heart is toward the governors of Iſrael, that offered themſelves willingly among the people: Bleſs ye the LORD.

10 Speak ye that ride on white aſſes, ye that ſit in judgment, and walk by the way.

11 They that are delivered from the noiſe of archers in the places of drawing water; there ſhall they rehearſe the righteous acts of the LORD, even the righteous acts towards the inhabitants of his villages in Iſrael: then ſhall the people of the LORD go down to the gates.

12 Awake, awake, Deborah: awake, awake, utter a ſong: ariſe, Barak, and lead thy captivity captive, thou ſon of Abinoam.

13 Then he made him that remaineth have dominion over the nobles among the people: the LORD made me have dominion over the mighty.

14 Out of Ephraim was there a root of them againſt Amalek; after thee, Benjamin, among thy people: out of Machir came down governors, and out of Zebulun they that handle the pen of the writer.

15 And the princes of Iſſachar were with Deborah: even Iſſachar, and alſo Barak, he was ſent on foot into the valley: for the diviſions of Reuben there were great thoughts of heart.

16 Why abodeſt thou among the ſheepfolds, to hear the bleatings of the flocks? for the diviſions of Reuben there were great ſearchings of heart.

17 Gilead abode beyond Jordan: and why did Dan remain in ſhips? Aſher continued on the ſea-ſhore, and abode in his breaches.

18 Zebulun and Naphtali were a people that jeoparded their lives unto the death, in the high places of the field.

19 The kings came and fought, then fought the kings of Canaan in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo, they took no gain of money.

20 They fought from heaven, the ſtars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera.

21 The river of Kiſhon ſwept them away, that ancient river, the river Kiſhon: O my ſoul, thou haſt troden down ſtrength.

22 Then were the horſe-hoofs broken, by the means of the pranſings, the pranſings of their mighty ones.

23 Curſe ye Meroz (ſaid the angel of the LORD) curſe ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof: becauſe they came not to the help of the LORD, to the help of the LORD againſt the mighty.

24 Bleſſed above women ſhall Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite be, bleſſed ſhall ſhe be above women in the tent.

25 He asked water, and ſhe gave him milk, ſhe brought forth butter in a lordly diſh.

26 She put her hand to the nail, and her right hand to the workmens hammer: and with the hammer ſhe ſmote Siſera, ſhe ſmote off his head, when ſhe had pierced and ſtricken through his temples.

27 At her feet he bowed, he fell, he lay down: at her feet he bowed, he fell; where he bowed, there he fell down dead.

28 The mother of Siſera looked out at a window, and cried through the latteſs, Why is his chariot ſo long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariots?

29 Her wiſe ladies anſwered her, yea, ſhe returned anſwer to her ſelf,

30 Have they not ſped? have they not divided the prey, to every man a damſel or two? to Siſera a prey of divers colours, a prey of divers colours of needle-work, of divers colours of needle-work on both ſides, meet for the necks of them that take the ſpoil?

31 So let all thine enemies periſh, O LORD: but let them that love him, be as the ſun when he goeth forth in his might. And the land had reſt forty years.

' Ver. 1. Then ſang Deborah, and Barak the ſon of Abinoam, on that day, ſaying.] This incomparable ſong of triumph was compoſed by Deborah (ver. 7.) as a propheteſs, one of whoſe ſpecial gifts was to ſing God's praiſes (1 Chron. xxv. 1, 2, 3.) and it was commanded to be ſung by the authority of Barak; who was now, we ſuppoſe, become a judge, upon this great deliverance God had wrought by him. For it is not to be thought, that theſe two perſons alone ſang this ſong; but all the elders of the people were called together in one aſſembly, to ſing it with them: and they afterward delivered it to all the people. In all probability it was compoſed and ſung after they had compleated their victory by the deſtruction of Jabin's kingdom. For the prophets were taught ſuch ſublimity of thought and ſpeech, as are uſed in theſe ſongs, by their admiration of ſuch wonderful events as they obſerved.

Ver. 2. Praiſe ye the Lord for the avenging of Iſrael, when the people willingly offered themſelves.] It is evident to all, that this hymn is expreſſed in another kind of language, than the hiſtorical part of this book; and in a language ſo majeſtick, in ſuch variety of elegant figures, and ſuch native expreſſions of thoſe affections which the occaſion required, that none of the ancient Greek, or Latin poets have equall'd the noble flow of theſe divine ſtrains; at leaſt, it appears, there was a moſt excellent ſpirit of poetry among the Hebrews, eſpecially ſuch of them as were inſpired by heaven, when the Greeks lay in dark ignorance.

And firſt, She excites all the people to give thanks to God, and acknowledge his wiſdom and power, in taking vengeance of their oppreſſors, and in moving the hearts of ſo many, eſpecially in Naphtali and Zebulun, to liſt themſelves in a voluntary manner, in order to fight againſt the Lord's enemies: Where it is to be obſerv'd, that ſhe very wiſely excites them ſo to aſcribe the victory to God, as not to forget the inſtruments he uſed to obtain it; for that ſhe knew would be a great encouragement to others in time to come, to engage themſelves in ſuch enterprizes, when they ſaw theſe men ſo highly praiſed, and looked upon as employed by God in his ſervice.

Ver. 3. Hear, O ye kings, give ear, O ye princes.] Next, ſhe calls upon all the neighbouring potentates, to be attentive to her ſong; whereby they might underſtand what God had accompliſhed in favour of Iſrael, and learn from thence not to oppreſs them, leſt the ſame vengeance which God had taken upon Jabin, ſhould be inflicted on them.

——— I, even I will ſing unto the Lord, I will ſing praiſe to the Lord God of Iſrael.] Who, ſhe would have the world know, was ſuperior to all in power, and would defend his people, while they depended on him alone.

Ver. 4. Lord, when thou wenteſt out of Seir, when thou marchedſt out of the field of Edom.] This is but a repetition of the ſame thing; Edom and Seir ſignifying the country where the poſterity of Eſau dwelt, who refuſed to give Iſrael a paſſage through their land, as the Lord led them into Canaan; and therefore he conducted them from thence another way, and made them encompaſs that land: (Numb. xxi. 4. Deut. ii. 1.) And when they had left it behind them (which is here called marching out of the field of Edom) then he wrought for them aſtoniſhing things, as it follows in the next words.

——— The earth trembled, and the heavens dropped, the clouds alſo dropped water.] Theſe are poetical phraſes, to expreſs the great conſternation in which all thoſe countries were, when they ſaw Sihon king of the Amorites, and Og the king of Baſhan, overthrown on a ſudden by the Iſraelites, and utterly deſtroy'd, ſee Numb. xxi. 21, &c.

Ver. 5. The mountains melted from before the Lord.] All the inhabitants of thoſe mountains.

——— Even that Sinai from before the Lord God of Iſrael.] Juſt as Sinai trembled and quaked at the giving of the law.

In theſe two verſes ſhe directs her ſpeech to God, and commemorates his wonderful acts in former times, with which ſhe compares the glorious deliverance he had given them now: As much as to ſay, his power was not at all decayed, but he was as terrible to his enemies in her days, as he had been in former times.

Ver. 6. In the days of Shamgar the ſon of Anath, In the days of Jael] The ſenſe of this verſe will be very plain, if we tranſlate theſe words, as we think the Hebrew will bear, from the days of Shamgar, &c. After his death the Iſraelites relapſed into their former ſins and ſuſtained great calamities. Jael is here mentioned, not as a judge, (as Raſi and Ralbag fancy) but as an illuſtrious woman of a maſculine and heroic ſpirit, who yet could do nothing to hinder thoſe ſpoils that were committed.

—The highways were unoccupied.] The people being corrupted in their religion, broke out into all manner of violence, and turned robbers; ſo that men durſt not travel in in the common road, to tranſact their neceſſary affairs; but were compelled to ſeek for by-paths, becauſe the high-ways were infeſted by thieves. Or this may be meant of robberies, which Jabin's ſoldiers committed, after he had brought the Iſraelites in ſubjection to him.

——And the travellers walked through by-ways.] In the Hebrew (as in the margin of our Bibles is obſerved) the words are the walkers of paths: By which we may underſtand men accuſtomed to travel, who, tho' they went in great companies together, yet durſt not venture in the direct road, but went about through crooked ways, (as the Hebrew word ſignifies, which we tranſlate by-ways) by which means commerce was very much obſtructed.

Ver. 7. The inhabitants of the villages ceaſed, they ceaſed in Iſrael.] Men were not ſafe in their own houſes; which were forced open, if they lived in villages, and therefore they forſook them, and fled to walled towns, and fortified places.

——Until that I Deborah aroſe.] This, ſome of the Jews take to be a proud and arrogant expreſſion, for which the Holy Spirit was taken from her. But Raſi (who reports this conceit) ſoberly acknowledges, that they are not words of boaſting, but of joy and gladneſs.

——That I aroſe a mother in Iſrael.] A judge, or ruler of God's people. For as men that governed were called fathers of their country, ſo it was proper for her, being a woman, to call herſelf a mother in Iſrael; among whom ſhe did ſuch great things, and governed with ſo much prudence, that it made her famous in other countries. For very learned men think, as we formerly obſerved, that the ſtory of the Sphinx among the Greeks, was formed out of the hiſtory of Deborah, that Sphinx being a judge among the Bœotians, as Deborah was in Iſrael.

Ver. 8. They choſe new gods.] That is, the Iſraelites, after the death of Ehud, forſook the Lord, and ſerved Baalim and Aſhtaroth (as they had done formerly, chap. ii. 13. iii. 7.) or perhaps, they introduced the worſhip of ſome other gods, whom they had not ſerved before, fancying they might be more powerful than the former had proved.

——Then was war in the gates.] This was the fountain of all their calamities; for God immediately delivered them into the hand of ſome enemy or other, who poſſeſſed themſelves of their cities and ſtrong holds; for that's the meaning of war in the gates. Their enemies ſeized on their cities and fortreſſes; for their ſtrength was in their gates; where ſat alſo the courts of juſtice.

——Was there a ſhield or ſpear ſeen among forty thouſand in Iſrael?] They were generally diſarmed, for their more effectual ſubjection to the Canaanites; as afterward the Philiſtines took the ſame courſe with them, 1 Sam. xiii. 19. Here the Targum makes a ſtrange excurſion in enumerating the many thouſand commanders, together with the ſword and ſpear-men, and archers, &c. that were in the army of Siſera.

Ver. 9. My heart is toward the governors of Iſrael, that offered themſelves willingly among the people.] It ſeems there were ſome of the greateſt men in the tribes of Naphtali and Zebulun, who, of their own accord, hazarded their lives, among the common people, in this ſervice: Toward whom Deborah expreſſes a ſingular affection; and with the praiſes of God, intermixes the commendation of thoſe who were his inſtruments in this deliverance.

——Bleſs ye the Lord.] This is added, like a propheteſs, who, when ſhe commends the moſt deſerving men, raiſes their thoughts up to God, who gave them that courage and good ſucceſs. Abarbinel had a conceit come into his head, as he tells us, when he was commenting on theſe words, that by chokkee Iſrael (which Kimchi interprets as we do, the great men of Iſrael) are meant the ſcribes, whoſe office it was to regiſter all memorable paſſages, particularly the cauſes of wars, and their events; whom Deborah exhorts to bleſs the Lord, and when they wrote the hiſtory of this war, to aſcribe the ſucceſs to the Divine Favour. But it is not likely they had ſuch ſcribes in theſe ages, as they had in future times; much leſs ſuch plenty of them now in theſe confuſed days, that Deborah ſhould make a particular addreſs to them to diſcharge their duty.

——Speak.] That is, give thanks to God.

—Ye that ride on white aſſes.] She calls upon ſuch men as the governors before-mentioned, to proclaim aloud the praiſes of the Moſt High. There were no horſes in Judæa, but what were brought out of other countries, ſo that the greateſt perſons rode on aſſes, as appears by the Sacred Hiſtory, but in this country they were commonly of a red colour, (whence an aſs hath the name of chamor, as Bochart obſerves, l. 2. Hieroz. cap. 12.) and therefore white aſſes, (or, as he tranſlates this word, whitiſh, or that were of a colour inclining to white,) were highly eſteem'd for their rarity, and uſed only by honourable perſons; who could not appear in any ſplendor during their ſervitude under Jabin, but now were reſtored to their dignity; for which ſhe would have them praiſe the Lord.

——Ye that ſit in judgment.] With whom ſhe exhorts the judges to join, who now ſat in the gates, which were no longer poſſeſſed by their enemies, ver. 8. or perhaps this belongs to the foregoing clauſe, it being probable that theſe judges rode about the country on white aſſes to execute juſtice.

——And walk by the way.] All the merchants, who now travelled ſafely about their buſineſs, which they durſt not do before this deliverance, ver. 6. for which therefore they were bound to praiſe the Lord.

Ver. 11. They that are delivered from the noiſe of archers in the places of drawing water.] Together with the princes, judges, and merchants, ſhe would have the ſhepherds praiſe the Lord, every time they came to water their flocks; remembering how they were formerly diſturbed by the archers, that lurked in woods or thickets, and ſhot whole quivers of arrows at them and at their cattle, which now they brought ſafely to the ſprings of water.

——There ſhall they rehearſe the righteous acts of the Lord.] Who had taken a juſt vengeance on their oppreſſors, and moſt graciouſly delivered them from their tyranny; for righteouſneſs frequently ſignifies the great goodneſs of God.

——Even the righteous acts towards the inhabitants of his villages in Iſrael.] She would have the meaneſt peaſants bear them company in the praiſes of God; for now they lived as quietly in their open villages, as if they had been in the ſtrongeſt cities.

——Then ſhall the people of the Lord go down to the gates.] The great propheteſs ſums up all in theſe words; that the whole country was bound to praiſe the Lord, who had given the law its free courſe; every man having liberty to go down ſafely to the gate of his own city, where judgment was adminiſtred.

Ver. 12. Awake, awake, Deborah: Awake, awake, utter a ſong.] Having call'd upon all others to praiſe the Lord, ſhe now excites herſelf, with the moſt earneſt and zealous affection (expreſs'd by the repetition of the ſame thing four times) to celebrate the wonderful works of God, by compoſing a ſong in his praiſe.

——Ariſe Barak, and lead thy captivity captive, thou ſon of Abinoam.] She calls upon Barak to go in triumph, carrying (as the manner was in antient times) his principal captives and ſpoils along with him unto the houſe of God: For one cannot think ſhe meant merely a ſecular pompous proceſſion; ſince the Romans themſelves in their triumphs marched to the capitol, and there offered ſacrifice to Jupiter. Some ask what captives he had to lead, when the whole army of Siſera was cut off? iv. 16. To which the anſwer is eaſy, that when Barak, after he had routed their army, purſued his victory as far as Haroſheth, he brought ſeveral perſons, and perhaps of the beſt quality, captive with him, out of that country.

Ver. 13. Then he made him that remaineth have dominion over the nobles among the people.] Or, then he ſhall make him that remaineth, &c. that is, when Barak triumphed, that ſmall remnant of Iſrael (as the beſt of the Jews interpret him that remaineth) who were not utterly diſpirited by the oppreſſion of Jabin, but had ſome courage left in them, triumphed together with Barak over the nobles of Canaan.

——The Lord made me have dominion over the mighty.] She who was but a weak woman, triumphed alſo over the moſt powerful enemies.

Ver. 14. Out of Ephraim was there a root of them againſt Amalek.] Now ſhe makes a catalogue of thoſe who any way aſſiſted in this war, as Homer doth of thoſe people who equipped ſhips for the war againſt Troy: And we find no ſenſe of theſe words ſo plain, as this; that the Amalekites coming to aſſiſt Siſera, as they had done the Moabites, iii.

(iii. 13.) a ſmall party of the Ephraimites (called here a root) oppoſed their paſſage, and prevented them from joining their forces with the Canaanites. Peter Martyr by a root underſtands a great captain among them, as in Iſa. xi. 10. the word is thought to be uſed. But the moſt learned Dr. Alix, admoniſhes us, that Amalek doth not only ſignify the people deſcended from Amalek, but a mountain in the tribe of Ephraim, mentioned xii. 15. And if we underſtand it ſo in this place, it makes this clear ſenſe, far eaſier and more natural than the other, out of Ephraim was their beginning (ſo the word root may be interpreted) about Amalek. That is, the Ephraimites, who came to the aſſiſtance of Barak, began their liſting of men near this mountain. And ſo the particle beth ſignifies as well near or about, as in or againſt.

—After thee, Benjamin, among thy people.] Following the example of the tribe of Benjamin; who ſeem to have all of them engaged in this quarrel, with whom a few of the Ephraimites joined.

——Out of Machir.] An eminent family in Manaſſeh; which is put here for all that tribe on the other ſide Jordan, where Machir was ſettled, (Numb. xxxii. 39. Joſh. xiii. 31.) which made their zeal the more remarkable, in coming ſo far to the aid of their brethren; when they heard they were engaged in this enterprize.

——Came down governors.] Some of the principal perſons of that country; who, no doubt, had their followers, that accompanied them in this expedition.

——And out of Zebulun they that handle the pen of the writer.] They were nearer to mount Tabor, than any of the forenamed; but are therefore highly commended, that tho' they were better skilled in books than in arms, yet they offered their ſervice to Barak on this occaſion. For ſcribes in ſcripture ſignify men of letters, that ſtudied the law, and expounded it.

Ver. 15. And the princes of Iſachar were with Deborah.] came and offered their ſervice when they heard that Barak, by her order, had ſummoned their neighbours Zebulun and Naphtali to come to him. iv. 10.

——Even Iſachar.] And the people of that tribe followed the example of their princes.

——And alſo Barak.] The Hebrew chen (tranſlated here and alſo) ſignifies as, or like unto; that is, they were as forward as Barak to march into the field, tho' they had no ſummons.

——He was ſent on foot into the valley.] That is, when he was ſent down from mount Tabor, by the order of Deborah (iv. 14) to fall upon Siſera in the valley; whither he went on foot, againſt his chariots and horſemen: Or, he went with his footmen (as the LXX tranſlate it) and engaged that vaſt number of chariots, which were of greateſt uſe in the valley.

——For the diviſions of Reuben there were great thoughts of heart.] But the Reubenites were ſo divided in their counſels, that they ſtaid at home (as if they were ſeparated from their brethren in their affections as they were in their ſituation, beyond Jordan) which created many ſad thoughts in the hearts of the reſt of the Iſraelites; who could not underſtand the reaſon of ſuch an unfriendly proceeding.

Ver. 16. Why abodeſt thou among the ſheep-folds, to hear the bleatings of the flocks?] It was altogether unmanly and not to be accounted for, that they ſhould be wholly attentive to their private buſineſs (which was feeding cattle, Numb. xxxii. 1.) and neglect the publick good.

——For the diviſions of Reuben there were great ſearchings of heart.] And therefore ſhe could not ſufficiently bewail them; which ſhe here doth, by repeating what a great trouble it was to all their brethren; who were not able to diſcover the reaſon; for their being no more concerned than their beaſts, for their common religion and liberties.

Ver. 17. Gilead abode beyond Jordan.] She complains alſo of the Gileadites, who were men of valour; and yet ſat ſtill, and would not ſtep over Jordan to help their brethren. Under the name of Gilead, are comprehended the Gadites, who had half of Gilead, (Joſh. xiii) as the other half was given to the children of Machir, who came to the aid of their brethren; at leaſt their governors engaged with them, ver. 14. which hath induced ſome to read theſe words interrogatively, Did Gilead abide beyond Jordan? as if ſhe ſtill upbraided the Reubenites, who had no this to alledge for themſelves, that they were far off, beyond Jordan; for ſo were the Gileadites, (that is, thoſe deſcended from Machir) who they ſuppoſe comprehend the reſt; and yet the beſt and moſt worthy of them came to join with their brethren, in the common cauſe of the nation.

——And why did Dan remain in ſhips?] She reproves this tribe, which was near the ſea, (the famous port of Joppa belonging to it) that they minded nothing but their merchandize, while their brethren hazarded their lives in the field.

——Aſher continued on the ſea ſhore.] This tribe alſo bordered upon the Mediterranean; Tyre and Sidon being part of their portion. Which tho' they did not poſſeſs, yet they undoubtedly held ſeveral leſſer places upon that ſea; from which they would not ſtir in this common danger.

——And abode in his breaches.] Or, in his creeks, as it is in the margin; and as the LXX take it, who expound the Hebrew word Maphratſim (Fractures) by διεξόδους, Out-lets, or ſmall havens, where veſſels lay, to go out to ſea. Some take the words to ſignify, that they were buſy in repairing the breaches made in their walled towns, by length of time, or other cauſes.

Ver. 18. Zebulun and Naphtali were a people that jeoparded their lives unto the death.] They were the only people (which was much for their honour) who unanimouſly deſpiſed life, in compariſon with the liberty of their country and religion. For the Hebrew word Charaph does not ſignify merely to expoſe ones ſelf to danger; but likewiſe to reproach, as we obſerve in the margin of our Bibles: And here denotes that they made no account of their lives, &c.

——In the high places of the field.] They went down from Mount Tabor, where they were drawn up in a large plain (as we obſerved upon iv. 6.) with a reſolution to conquer or die.

It is obſervable, that in this narration, there is not a word ſaid of Judah, or Simeon, or Gad, (unleſs comprehended under Gilead, as we ſaid before) and that as Reuben, Dan, and Aſher are taxed for their puſilanimous remiſſneſs in this caſe, ſo Ephraim, Benjamin, part of Manaſſeh, and Iſſachar did afford ſome aſſiſtance; but nothing comparable to what Zebulun and Naphtali did; who, as one man, engaged to hazard their lives and fortunes for the recovery of their liberty, which was the more highly commendable, becauſe they were but a handful of men when they firſt engaged, in compariſon with the vaſt army which they undertook to aſſault.

Ver. 19. The kings came and fought.] When the Iſraelites conquered Canaan, Hazor had ſeveral kingdoms ſubject to it, or depending on it, Joſh. xi. 10. And now, it is likely, there were ſeveral kings, who were, at leaſt, Jabin's confederates, and came to join their forces with his, in order to reduce the Iſraelites to his obedience.

——Then fought the kings of Canaan in Taanach by the waters of Megiddo.] Theſe were two cities belonging to the Manaſſites; but in the tribe of Iſſachar, Joſh. xvii. 11. Between which, as Raſi underſtands it, the army of Siſera lay, and extended from Taanach to Megiddo, by which the river Kiſhon ran.

——They took no gain of money.] The natural ſenſe ſeems to be, that they were kings of ſuch bravery, as fought not for money, but only for glory and dominion. So Raſi and Ralbag among the Jews underſtand it: They fought not for pay, but came in a gratuitous manner to the aſſiſtance of Jabin. But the Vulgate takes it otherwiſe; they got nothing but blows; no ſpoil or prey at all, as they expected. And Kimchi ſtill much differently (which the words will bear) they came ſo enraged againſt the Iſraelites, that they would have ſpared no man's life, tho' he offered great ſums of money for his redemption, becauſe they thirſted only after their blood.

Ver. 20. They fought from heaven.] But, on the other ſide, God fought for the Iſraelites, by ſending thunder and lightning, and hail-ſtones from heaven upon the Canaanites (as he did in the days of Joſhua) and, perhaps, as P. Martyr conjectures, raiſing a great duſt, which a ſtorm of wind blew ſo violently into their eyes, that they could not ſee. As Livy ſaith, it happened to the Romans in the great battle of Cannæ.

——The ſtars in their courſes fought againſt Siſera.] Some take theſe words literally, and render them not, in their courſes, but, in their exaltations, that is, with with all their power, and ſtrongeſt influences: Whence the ſaying of Rabbi, on this place, the head, or beginning of the ſtars is in heaven; but the feet, or the end of them is upon the earth: That is, hither they ſend their influences. But others think theſe words ſignify, that all this was done by the miniſtry of the angels, who are here called ſtars (as in the book of Job xxxvii. 7.) becauſe mention is made of heaven; from whence they came to raiſe this terrible tempeſt, and by other means, which we are ignorant of, to trouble the hoſt of Jabin, as they did that of Pharaoh in the Red-ſea; and this they did in that rank and order, as is obſerved in the heavenly hoſt.

It may be alſo thought, that this battle laſting till night, the ſtars may be ſaid to fight againſt Sisera, becauſe they ſhone brightly to give light to the Iſraelites, to purſue and compleat their victory.

Ver 21. The river Kiſhon ſwept them away.] It ſo ſwelled at this time, that tho' otherwiſe it was very ſhallow, many of them were drowned in it, being carried away with a rapid ſtream; for ſo the word Jerapham ſignifies, which we tranſlate ſwept them away. It is no where elſe found, but frequent among Arabic authors, who commonly uſe it only in this ſenſe; as Bochart ſhews lib. 1. Canaan, cap. 16. and 42. It is likely there was a great flood, which was made by that ſudden and violent rain, which fell in the forenamed tempeſt.

——That ancient river, the river Kiſhon] It is an elegancy uſed by orators themſelves (as we find in Cicero) to repeat the ſame words, when there is great occaſion. And here Deborah makes an addition to the ſame word, by calling Kiſhon that ancient river, becauſe of ſome other great exploit performed there in ancient time, the memory of which is now loſt. But Kedumim, ſome take to be another name of the ſame river Kiſhon.

——O my ſoul, thou haſt trodden down ſtrength] This is an elegant Apoſtrophe (or turning of her ſpeech) to herſelf: whoſe happineſs ſhe applauds, in beholding her moſt powerful enemies quite vanquiſhed, by her commiſſion which ſhe gave from God, and by her prayers to him. For none can doubt, that ſhe implored help from heaven, while Barak fought with Siſera.

Ver. 22. Then were the horſe-hoofs broken.] They could not ſave themſelves by flight, their horſe-hoofs being broken in ſtony places, when they ran away as faſt as they were able.

——By the means of their pranſings.] The more haſte they made, the leſs ſucceſsful they proved, for when they ran full gallop (ſo the Jews interpret the Hebrew word Dabar [Pranſings] to ſignify the ſwifteſt courſe) they trod the harder on the ground, and were in greater danger to break their hoofs.

——The pranſings.] The Hebrews wanting a ſuperlative degree in their language, are wont to double a word (as Peter Martyr obſerves) and therefore pranſings, pranſings, he thinks, are not here an ornament of ſpeech, but ſignify a moſt vehement motion, when an horſe is in his full ſpeed.

——Of their mighty ones.] Of their beſt and ſtrongeſt horſes: For the word Abbirim, in Hebrew, as Bochart obſerves, ſignifies not only ſtrong bulls, but horſes alſo. See Hierozoicon, p. 1. lib. 2. cap. 6.

Ver. 23 Curſe ye Meroz.] Moſt interpreters, both jewiſh, and Chriſtian, underſtand by Meroz, a city not far from the place where the fight was. Which ſeems to be proved by the following words, where mention is made of the inhabitants thereof. But R. Sol. Jarchi thinks Meroz ſignifies a potent perſon in thoſe parts, who being able to give great aſſiſtance to Barak, and living near mount Tabor, refuſed to do any thing. And this is the opinion of the Talmudiſts (whom Jarchi is wont to follow) as Mr. Selden ſhews out of the Gemara Babylon, Lib. 1. de Synedriis, cap. 6. p. 123. &c. where they fancy that this great man was excommunicated by Deborah, with all his adherents; and hence they derive the ground and original of the excommunication in uſe among them, which is an idle conceit; there being no ſuch thing as excommunication practis'd among them, till they had quite loſt their civil government, and it was in the hands of the Heathen.

——Said the angel of the Lord.] She would not have it thought that this curſe proceeded from her anger, but from the authority of God, who, by his angel, which ſpake to her, denounced it againſt Meroz. And who ſhould this angel be, but the captain of the Lord's hoſt? mentioned Joſh. v. 14.

——Curſe ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof.] They who take Meroz for a perſon, by inhabitants underſtand thoſe that dwelt near him, and were his dependants or aſſociates, which is very forc'd.

——Becauſe they came not to the help of the Lord.] The battle was the Lord's, as the ſcripture elſewhere ſpeaks, and therefore they that refuſed to engage in it, refuſed to maintain his cauſe: And the people of this place are ſo heavily curſed, when all others that came not in to the aſſiſtance of their brethren, are only diſcommended; becauſe they lived ſo near, that they might eaſily have joined their forces with them, whereas ſome others lived a great way off, which might ſomething excuſe them.

——To the help of the Lord againſt the mighty.] According to this tranſlation of the laſt word, ſhe means their moſt powerful enemies; but the Hebrew may as well be tranſlated, with the mighty, that is, with other valiant men, who freely offered their ſervice in this enterprize. This aggravated their guilt, that when they had ſuch noble examples of zeal from others, who were leſs able to aid their brethren, they themſelves would afford no aſſiſtance.

Ver 24. Bleſſed above women ſhall Jael the wife of Heber the Kenite be.] On the other hand, Deborah deſires Jael may be ever praiſed; or rather, foretells ſhe ſhall always continue famous, and her husband too, in future generations.

——Bleſſed ſhall ſhe be above women in the tent.] This is thought to be a promiſe, that all happineſs ſhould attend her in her domeſtic affairs. But P Martyr thinks it may be interpreted, Bleſſed ſhall ſhe be for what ſhe did in her tent. Which was no leſs glorious than what others did in the field.

Ver. 25. He asked water, and ſhe gave him milk.] Her prudence is firſt commended, in treating him with great reſpect, that he might entertain no ſuſpicion of danger.

——She brought forth butter.] Milk from which the cream was not ſeparated.

——In a lordly diſh.] The Hebrew word ſephel, which we tranſlate diſh, is no where elſe to be found, but in the hiſtory of Gideon, in the next chapter, ver. 38. where we tranſlate it a bowl. From whence Bochart rightly concludes, it ſignifies a large and wide veſſel, (P. 1. Hieroz. lib. 2. cap. 49.) which explains the word lordly or princely; which doth not ſignify, that ſhe had any gold or ſilver veſſel in her tent, (which was not agreeable to their rural manner of living) but that ſhe brought him milk in the beſt veſſel ſhe had, and that very capacious: For it was cuſtomary for great men to drink out of ſuch, as P. Martyr obſerves out of Cicero againſt M. Antony.

Ver. 26. She put her hand to the nail.] Next, her courage and fortitude is celebrated: and by hand is to be underſtood her left, wherewith ſhe held the nail, as with her right hand the hammer.

——And her right hand to the workmens hammer.] A lively deſcription how ſhe went about this work; juſt as if ſhe had been faſtening her tent.

——And with the hammer ſhe ſmote Siſera.] The Hebrew word halam, which we tranſlate ſmote, ſignifies ſuch a blow as makes a contuſion.

——She ſmote off his head.] The word machak, which is commonly tranſlated cut off, cannot have that ſignification here; becauſe there is not the leaſt indication in this ſtory of her cutting off his head from the body, but only of ſtriking it through, as here it muſt be underſtood.

——When ſhe had pierced and ſtricken through his temples.] Here are two words more, machatz and chalaph, ſignifying, penetrating and boring quite through. And the place is ſpecified where his head was perforated, which was in the temples, that part affording the eaſieſt entrance to the nail.

Ver. 27. At her feet he bowed, he fell, he lay down.] In the Hebrew, between her feet, &c. which ſome of the Talmudiſts have abuſed to an indecent ſenſe, juſtly cenſured by Kimchi, who obſerves, that this is according to the ſtile of the Hebrew language, which reduplicates words, for the ſtronger affirmation of what is ſaid; and theſe words, he bowed, he fell, ſignify (he thinks) ſuch a fall that he never roſe up again. But taking all theſe expreſſions together, he bowed, he fell, he lay down, they ſeem to us to import, that at the firſt ſtroke he ſtarted, and lifted up his body, but being very much ſtunned, he ſoon lay down again.

——At her feet he bowed, he fell.] Then we ſuppoſe ſhe repeated her ſtroke, which perfectly diſabled him from moving any more.

——Where he bowed, there he fell down dead.] At the third ſtroke, it is likely, ſhe riveted his head to the ground. But this repetition doth not certainly imply, that ſhe gave ſo many blows; (tho' it may paſs for a probable conjecture) for it is an uſual elegancy in ſuch poetical compoſures; and Deborah intended to repreſent this fact of Jael with the higheſt encomiums. Some may fancy indeed that it deſerved reprehenſion rather than commendation, upon many accounts, being a breach of the laws of hoſpitality, and of the peace which was between her family and Jabin, &c. But this action is not to be eſtimated by the common rules which govern us, it being an extraordinary, heroic, and divine work, unto which ſhe was excited by God; whoſe people Jabin oppreſſed with a rigorous and cruel ſervitude, from which God order'd Barak to be their deliverer; who having defeated all the forces of that king in a miraculous manner, Jael underſtood there was a divine hand in this victory, and was actuated by the ſame ſpirit which excited Deborah and Barak; and tender'd her aſſiſtance to compleat the ſhameful overthrow of their enemy: For nothing could be more inglorious, than for a great commander to fall thus by the hand of a woman.

Ver. 28. The mother of Siſera looked out at a window.] Was in earneſt expectation to ſee him return victorious and triumphant.

——And cried through the latteſs.] Either fear of ſome miſcarriage, or impatient deſire, cauſed her to cry out with a doleful voice; as the word jabab in the Hebrew ſignifies.

——Why is his chariot ſo long in coming? why tarry the wheels of his chariot? Having ſuch numerous forces, they promiſed themſelves an eaſy and ſpeedy victory over an handful of the Iſraelites; and therefore the mother of Siſera wondred what retarded his return, with all his train of chariots in triumph.

Ver. 29. Her wiſe ladies anſwered her.] The Vulgate takes the Hebrew words to ſignify, one of the wiſeſt of his wives (who was not ſo apt to deſpair as his mother) replied to her. For it is well obſerved by Terence, in his Adelphi, (as Pet. Martyr here notes) Multo ſatius eſt, ea evenire nobis quæ de abſentibus ſuſpicantur uxores, quam ea quæ parentes; It is much better thoſe things ſhould happen to abſent husbands which their wives ſuſpect, than thoſe which their parents fear. But we ſee no reaſon to depart from our tranſlation, which is the ſame with the LXX, αἱ ϛοφαὶ ἄρχουσαι, the prudent noble women who attended her, &c.

——Yea, ſhe returned anſwer to herſelf.] Upon farther conſideration, her hopes exceeded her fears.

Ver. 30. Have they not ſped?] She did not think it poſſible they ſhould miſcarry.

——Have they not divided the prey?] She was willing to be confident they had obtained the victory; and therefore imputed their ſtay to the time which muſt needs be taken up in making an equal diſtribution of the ſpoil. For thoſe days were not like ours, wherein every man keeps to himſelf whatever he can ſecure; but after the battle, they were obliged to bring all they had acquired to the general of the army, who conſidered every man's quality and deſert, and accordingly divided the prey among them.

——To every man a damſel or two.] Young virgins, by all hiſtorians and poets, are reckoned as a principal part of the ſoldier's prey. And ſhe here makes uſe of an unuſual word for a damſel, which is racham; for it properly ſignifies a womb, and ſeems here to be ſpoken by way of contempt, as if they were good for nothing but to gratify their impure appetites.

——To Siſera a prey of divers colours, a prey of divers colours of needle-work, of divers colours of needle-work on both ſides.] Theſe were the richeſt part of the ſpoil, being highly eſteemed by all people, as Pliny obſerves, lib. 8. cap. 48. where he mentions great variety of them, both in his own, and in ancient time: For he takes notice, that Homer mentions pictas veſtes, as he calls them, painted garments, glowing with flowers and trees in beautiful colours; which the Phrygians afterward wrought with needles; and Attalus invented the interweaving gold in them. But for divers colour'd garments Babylon was famous above all places, from whence they had the name of Babyloniſh garments, which were in great eſtimation even in thoſe early times, as appears by the ſtory of Achan, Joſh. vii. 21. and they were of ſuch account in after-times, that every one was not permitted to wear them, but only the better ſort of perſons, (as P. Martyr obſerves, out of the Roman Laws) which may be the reaſon why here they are appropriated to Siſera, as a part of his ſpoil.

——Meet for the necks of them that take the ſpoil.] That is, of the chief commanders, to whom, as we ſaid, the ſpoil was brought to be divided. In the Hebrew the words are, for the necks of the ſpoil, which Kimchi expounds, for the head of the prey; as if ſhe had ſaid, theſe are to be put in the head of the prey, and therefore fit to be given only to the general of the army.

Ver. 31. So let all thine enemies periſh, O Lord.] From hence the inſpired Deborah takes occaſion to direct her ſpeech to God, beſeeching him, that all his enemies may be thus diſappointed in their vain hopes.

——But let them that love him, be as the ſun when he goeth forth in his might.] Increaſe in power and force like the ſun from the time of its riſing, till it come to its meridian height.

——And the land had reſt forty years.] Theſe forty years are to be computed from the time of Ehud, as the great Uſher thinks, who thus tranſlates theſe words, The land reſted on the fortieth year, after the former reſt which was reſtored to it by Ehud. But it is far more reaſonable to compute them from the conqueſt of Jabin by the northern tribes; after which, the whole country lived in tranquility for the ſpace of forty years, till the Midianites, ſeverely oppreſſed them.

We conclude this chapter in the ſtrain of Conradus Pellicanus; Let ſome Homer or Virgil go now, and compare his poetry, if he be able, with the ſong of this woman. And if there be any one that excels in eloquence and learning, and hath more leiſure than others, let him celebrate the praiſes and learning of this panegyric in a more copious manner.

CHAP. VI.

1 The Iſraelites for their ſins are oppreſſed by Midian. 8 A prophet rebuketh them. 11 An angel ſendeth Gideon for their deliverance. 27 Gideon's preſent is conſumed with fire. 24 Gideon deſtroyeth Baals altar, and offereth a ſacrifice upon the altar Jehovah-ſhalom. 28 Joaſh defendeth his ſon and calleth him Jerubbaal. 33 Gideon's army. 36 Gideons ſigns.

AND the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the LORD: and the LORD delivered them into the hand of Midian ſeven years.

2 And the hand of Midian prevailed againſt Iſrael: and becauſe of the Midianites, the children of Iſrael made them the dens which are in the mountains, and caves, and ſtrong holds.

3 And ſo it was when Iſrael had ſown, that the Midianites came up, and the Amalekites, and the children of the eaſt, even they came up againſt them:

4 And they encamped againſt them, and deſtroyed the increaſe of the earth, till thou come unto Gaza, and left no ſuſtenance for Iſrael, neither ſheep, nor ox, nor aſs.

5 For

5 For they came up with their cattle, and their tents, and they came as graſhoppers for multitude, for both they and their camels were without number: and they entred into the land to deſtroy it.

6 And Iſrael was greatly impoveriſhed becauſe of the Midianites; and the children of Iſrael cried unto the LORD.

7 ¶ And it came to paſs when the children of Iſrael cried unto the LORD, becauſe of the Midianites;

8 That the LORD ſent a prophet unto the children of Iſrael, which ſaid unto them, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, I brought you up from Egypt, and brought you forth out of the houſe of bondage,

9 And I delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all that oppreſſed you, and drave them out from before you, and gave you their land;

10 And I ſaid unto you, I am the LORD your God, fear not the gods of the Amorites, in whoſe land ye dwell: but ye have not obeyed my voice.

11 ¶ And there came an angel of the LORD, and ſat under an oak which was in Ophrah, that pertained unto Joaſh the Abiezrite: and his ſon Gideon threſhed wheat by the wine-preſs, to hide it from the Midianites.

12 And the angel of the LORD appeared unto him, and ſaid unto him, The LORD is with thee, thou mighty man of valour.

13 And Gideon ſaid unto him, Oh my lord, if the LORD be with us, why then is all this befallen us? and where be all his miracles which our fathers told us of, ſaying, Did not the LORD bring us up from Egypt? but now the LORD hath forſaken us, and delivered us into the hands of the Midianites.

14 And the LORD looked upon him, and ſaid, Go in this thy might, and thou ſhalt ſave Iſrael from the hand of the Midianites: have not I ſent thee?

15 And he ſaid unto him, Oh my lord, wherewith ſhall I ſave Iſrael? behold, my family is poor in Manaſſeh, and I am the leaſt in my fathers houſe.

16 And the LORD ſaid unto him, Surely I will be with thee, and thou ſhalt ſmite the Midianites, as one man.

17 And he ſaid unto him, If now I have found grace in thy ſight, then ſhew me a ſign that thou talkeſt with me.

18 Depart not hence, I pray thee, until I come unto thee, and bring forth my preſent, and ſet it before thee. And he ſaid, I will tarry until thou come again.

19 And Gideon went in, and made ready a kid, and unleavened cakes of an ephah of flour: the fleſh he put in a basket, and he put the broth in a pot, and brought it out unto him under the oak, and preſented it.

20 And the angel of God ſaid unto him, Take the fleſh, and the unleavened cakes, and lay them upon this rock, and pour out the broth. And he did ſo.

21 ¶ Then the angel of the LORD put forth the end of the ſtaff that was in his hand, and touched the fleſh, and the unleavened cakes: and there aroſe up fire out of the rock, and conſumed the fleſh and the unleavened cakes: then the angel of the LORD departed out of his ſight.

22 And when Gideon perceived that he was an angel of the LORD, Gideon ſaid, Alas, O Lord GOD: for becauſe I have ſeen an angel of the LORD face to face.

23 And the LORD ſaid unto him, Peace be unto thee, fear not, thou ſhalt not die.

24 Then Gideon built an altar there unto the LORD, and called it Jehovah-ſhalom: unto this day it is yet in Ophrah of the Abi-ezrites.

25 ¶ And it came to paſs the ſame night, that the LORD ſaid unto him, Take thy fathers young bullock, even the ſecond bullock, of ſeven years old, and throw down the altar of Baal, that thy father hath, and cut down the grove that is by it:

26 And build an altar unto the LORD thy God upon the top of this rock, in the ordered place, and take the ſecond bullock, and offer a burnt-ſacrifice with the wood of the grove which thou ſhalt cut down.

27 Then Gideon took ten men of his ſervants, and did as the LORD had ſaid unto him: and ſo it was, becauſe he feared his fathers houſhold, and the men of the city, that he could not do it by day, that he did it by night.

28 ¶ And when the men of the city aroſe early in the morning, behold the altar of Baal was caſt down, and the grove was cut down that was by it, and the ſecond bullock was offered upon the altar that was built.

29 And

29 And they ſaid one to another, Who hath done this thing? And when they enquired and asked, they ſaid, Gideon the ſon of Joaſh hath done this thing.

30 Then the men of the city ſaid unto Joaſh, Bring out thy ſon, that he may die: becauſe he hath caſt down the altar of Baal, and becauſe he hath cut down the grove that was by it.

31 And Joaſh ſaid unto all that ſtood againſt him, Will ye plead for Baal? will ye ſave him? he that will plead for him, let him be put to death, whilſt it is yet morning: if he be a god, let him plead for himſelf, becauſe one hath caſt down his altar.

32 Therefore on that day he called him Jerubbaal, ſaying, Let Baal plead againſt him, becauſe he hath thrown down his altar.

33 ¶ Then all the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and the children of the eaſt were gathered together, and went over and pitched in the valley of Jezreel.

34 But the ſpirit of the LORD came upon Gideon, and he blew a trumpet, and Abiezer was gathered after him.

35 And he ſent meſſengers throughout all Manaſſeh, who alſo was gathered after him, and he ſent meſſengers unto Aſher, and unto Zebulun, and unto Naphtali, and they came up to meet them.

36 ¶ And Gideon ſaid unto God, If thou wilt ſave Iſrael by mine hand, as thou haſt ſaid.

37 Behold, I will put a fleece of wooll in the floor: and if the dew be on the fleece only, and it be dry upon all the earth beſide, then ſhall I know that thou wilt ſave Iſrael by mine hand, as thou haſt ſaid.

38 And it was ſo: for he roſe up early on the morrow, and thruſt the fleece together, and wringed the dew out of the fleece a bowl-full of water.

39 And Gideon ſaid unto God, Let not thine anger be hot againſt me, and I will ſpeak but this once: Let me prove, I pray thee, but this once with the fleece; let it now be dry only upon the fleece, and upon all the ground let there be dew.

40 And God did ſo that night: for it was dry upon the fleece only, and there was dew on all the ground.

Ver. 1. And the children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the Lord: And the Lord delivered them into the hand of Midian ſeven years.] The ungrateful Iſraelites having forgot the ſignal deliverance which God had wrought for them by the miniſtration of Deborah and Barak, were condemned to a new ſtate of deſpicable ſervitude, to which that under Jabin, may almoſt be called freedom, Deborah being then allowed to judge Iſrael in the face of the ſun, whereas now they were not only deſtitute of a judge, but were even without any habitation, except thoſe they were forced to ſeek for among the clefts and caverns of rocks, ver. 2. and if they found time and convenience for ſowing their land, their enemies poured in upon them and wreſted from them the fruits of their labour, ver. 3. deſtroying the encreaſe of the earth as far as Gaza, ver. 4. That is, they made a univerſal devaſtation from one end of the country to the other; for they began their invaſion from the eaſtern quarter, and deſtroyed all till they came to the weſtern coaſt where Gaza was ſituated.

The Midianites were the old enemies of Iſrael, and diſcovered their antipathy to them as they came through the wilderneſs, after which having been in a manner utterly deſtroyed by the Iſraelites (Numb. xxxi.) they were very much diſpoſed to take a ſharp revenge: For that thoſe Midianites who were neighbours to Moab, are here meant, is evident from their ſituation, which was beyond Jordan (vii. 24, 25. viii. 4) and by the people that joined with them, who are called the children of the eaſt, ver. 3. and were ſome of the people of Arabia, for this country lay eaſt of Egypt, where the Iſraelites learnt to ſpeak in this manner: Whereas the other Midianites, among whom Jethro lived, were in the ſouth, near the Red Sea. Some fancy indeed, that when the Midianites, who were neighbours to Moab, were cut off by Moſes, their nation was intirely exterminated; but it muſt be conſidered, that ſome of them ſaved themſelves by flight into other countries, from whence they returned, after the Iſraelites were ſettled in Canaan; and in the ſpace of almoſt two hundred years, may well be thought to have re-peopled their country, eſpecially by the conjunction of other people, who, in all probability, came and planted among them, and being ſeated in the ſame country, are all called Midianites.

Ver. 7. And it came to paſs when the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord, &c.] Tho' the poverty which pinched them was their only motive for imploring relief from God, yet he was ſo gracious as to ſend one to make them ſenſible of their ſins.

Ver. 8. That the Lord ſent a prophet unto the children of Iſrael.] The Jews fancy this prophet was Phinehas, which is altogether improbable, it not being then common for men to live to the age of two hundred years, which muſt have been his at leaſt, if he were the prophet now diſpatched to the Iſraelites. It is therefore far more likely, that God ſtill continued other prophets among them, beſide the high prieſt, to remind them of their duty, and ſummon them to a ſincere repentance when they apoſtatiſed from him. And it appears by the preceding hiſtory of Deborah, that the ſpirit of prophecy was imparted even to a woman; which ſhews, that, at leaſt upon ſpecial occaſions, God raiſed up prophetical perſons among them.

——Which ſaid unto them, Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael.] This is the ſtyle in which it was uſual for the prophets to deliver themſelves to the people: And this prophet now reminds them of their indiſpenſible obligation to be devoted to the ſervice of God, ſince he had delivered them from the Egyptian bondage, and ſettled them in the land which he had promiſed to beſtow upon them. He then tells them that they had not obeyed the voice of God, ver. 10. which was the cauſe of all the calamities they had ſuſtained, and would ſtill continue to involve them in its fatal effects, if they now neglected to hearken unto him, after they had implored him to hear the cries they ſent up to him in the anguiſh of their ſouls. This the prophet undoubtedly preſſed upon them in more words than are here recorded, theſe ſeeming to be only the heads of his ſpeech.

Ver. 11. And there came an angel of the Lord.] The Iſraelites, we may ſuppoſe, laid the application of the prophet's ſpeech to heart, and began to reform their conduct, which inclined the Deity to ſend an angel to appoint them a deliverer.

——And ſat under an oak.] In a grove of trees, as Arias Montanus underſtands it, where there was one wellſpread oak, with a ſeat beneath its boughs.

——Which was in Ophrah.] This was the city where the famous Gideon was born, and the Sacred Text adds, adds, that it pertained unto Joash the Abiezrite, in order to distinguish the Ophrah which is here meant, for there was another in the tribe of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 23. but the family of Abiezer belonged to the tribe of Manasseh, Josh. xvii. 2.

——And his son Gideon threshed wheat, &c.] The Hebrew word chabat, in this place, signifies to thresh out with a staff, as Kimchi observes, and the LXX accordingly render it by the word ῥαβδίζων, which has the same import. But the common way of forcing corn out of the ear, was by the feet of oxen, which they called dash, 1 Chron. xxi. 20. This method was not used by Gideon, partly for privacy, but chiefly because he had but a small quantity of corn to beat out of the ear.

——By the wine-press.] Where none would suspect he was employed in this manner.

This angel of the Lord saluted Gideon, saluted him with the title of the valiant Saviour of his people, and assured him, that Israel, whom he now looked upon as forsaken by God, should by the instrumentality of Gideon be restored in a speedy and a miraculous manner, to the freedom for which they so long had sighed. Gideon, perhaps, was too experienced a warrior, and thought himself too well acquainted with the dejected condition of this nation, to imagine that such a deliverance could be accomplished by an arm of flesh; and was so far from expecting such a supernatural assistance, that he seemed even to distrust the truth of all those wonders which God had wrought in favour of Israel. At length, to confirm his wavering faith, he desired the angel's permission to prepare a sacrifice, and offer it at his feet, ver. 18, &c. which he had no sooner done, but upon the angels touching it with the end of his staff, a miraculous fire sprung from the rock on which it was laid, and consumed the whole sacrifice; immediately after which the angel vanished out of his sight, ver. 21. Gideon was then seized with consternation at the thoughts of the Divine Presence which he had beheld; but God was pleased to dissipate his fears, in memory of which condescention, this great man raised an altar on the place, and called it Jehovah-shalom (ver. 24.) which signifies the Lord here pronounced peace to me as he did when he said unto him, peace be unto thee, fear not, thou shalt not die, ver. 23. Or it may import, according to the marginal version, The Lord grant peace; which Gideon had the greatest reason to expect, when God himself had declared it to him, at the very time when he expected nothing less than death.

Ver. 25. And it came to pass the same night, that the Lord said unto him take thy fathers young bullock, even the second bullock.] Our translation supposes there was but one bullock, which Gideon was ordered to take, because we read in the next verse, that this alone was sacrificed; but in the Hebrew, the Septuagint, and the Vulgate, as also in our margin, the words are, and the second bullock; which was next to the first in age.

——Of seven years old,] Which was calved, as Arias Montanus observes, when their oppression under the Midianites began, and was now ordered to be sacrificed, in token that it should end with the death of this bullock.

——And throw down the altar of Baal that thy father hath:] Which was in his ground, and perhaps erected at his expence, tho' it was for public use, as appears from ver. 28.

God commands Gideon to begin his heaven-appointed task with the destruction of the altar of Baal, the fatal source of Israel's defection and punishment; and to expiate their crime by a sacrifice, in the place where they had render'd Divine Honours to that despicable deity of the Midianites.

——And cut down the grove that is by it.] Or rather, upon it, for so the Hebrew word alau signifies; and the LXX accordingly render it ἐπ' αὐτῷ, upon the altar before-mentioned. And therefore by asherah, which we translate grove, must be meant the image in the grove, and which was placed on the altar. This, Mr. Selden conjectures, with great probability, was the image of Ashtaroth, or Astarte, for she was worshipped together with Baal. There could be no hope of deliverance, till religion was reformed, with which God therefore orders Gideon to begin.

Gideon was very desirous to obey this Divine Command; but knowing the hazard of such an enterprize, should he set about it in the day time, he resolved to finish it that very night, which he accordingly did, by the assistance of ten of his servants, whom he called to the work. This unexpected demolition was no sooner perceived the next morning, than the whole city came to the house of Joash, and in an insolent manner required him to deliver up his son, to be put to death, for his sacrilege against Baal; but the grave old man soon made them sensible of their absurd zeal for an impotent deity, which could not defend his own honour and altar against Gideon. It is probable, he used some other topic to repress their fury; and that this is only mentioned in the Sacred Text, because his son acquired the name of Jerubbaal by it, which signifies, let Baal plead against him, or let Baal contest with him, who has thus thrown down his altar.

In the mean time, the Midianites, and their confederates, whether from the jealousy which this bold act of Gideon might create in their minds, or any other tendency they might observe in the Israelites to revolt, began to cover the spacious plain of Jezreel with their troops. Gideon, on the other hand, had summoned the tribes of Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali, to appear in arms; but whether the sight of so numerous an host, as was preparing against him, had weakened his faith, or that of his troops, he begged for another miraculous proof of the Divine Assistance, which was, that the fleece of wool, which he spread that night on the threshing-floor, might be found the next morning covered with the dew of heaven, whilst all the ground about it remained dry. He had no sooner obtained this miracle, and wrung a bowl full of water out of the fleece, but he intreated God, that for a further confirmation of the miracle, and of their faith, the fleece might be the only thing that received no water, whilst all the circumjacent ground was wet. This was also granted at his request; and by these quite contrary signs his faith was fully confirmed: and perhaps there might be some need of it, when he saw the number of his followers reduced to an inconsiderable handful of three hundred men, chap. vii. 10. There are those who think Gideon chose a fleece of wool for this purpose, not only because it was ready at hand, but the better to express how the earth was shorn by the Midianites, as the sheep had been by him; and when he begged that the dew (a sign of the Divine Favour) might descend upon the fleece, it was to represent the goodness of God to him; and when he begged it might fall upon the whole extent of ground, it intimated the Divine Favour to all the people: and, lastly, that these two miracles, opposite one to the other, do remarkably set forth the state of that nation, who were moisten'd with the dew of heaven, (the knowledge of God) when the rest of the world were dry; and now they themselves are dry, when the rest of the earth are filled with the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

CHAP. VII.

1 Gideons army of two and thirty thousand is brought to three hundred. 9 He is encouraged by the dream and interpretation of the barley cake. 16 His stratagem of trumpets and lamps in pitchers. 24 The Ephraimites take Oreb and Zeeb.

THEN Jerubbaal (who is Gideon) and all the people that were with him, rose up early and pitched beside the well of Harod: so that the host of the Midianites were on the north-side of them by the hill of Moreh, in the valley.

2 And the LORD said unto Gideon, The people that are with thee, are too many for me to give the Midianites into their hands, lest Israel vaunt themselves against me, saying, Mine own hand hath saved me.

3 Now therefore go to, proclaim in the ears of the people, ſaying, Whoſoever is fearful and afraid, let him return and depart early from mount Gilead: and there returned of the people twenty and two thouſand, and there remained ten thouſand.

4 And the LORD ſaid unto Gideon, The people are yet too many: bring them down unto the water, and I will try them for thee there: and it ſhall be, that of whom I ſay unto thee, This ſhall go with thee, the ſame ſhall go with thee; and of whomſoever I ſay unto thee, This ſhall not go with thee, the ſame ſhall not go.

5 So he brought down the people unto the water: and the LORD ſaid unto Gideon, Every one that lappeth of the water with his tongue as a dog lappeth, him ſhalt thou ſet by himſelf; likewiſe every one that boweth down upon his knees to drink.

6 And the number of them that lapped, putting their hand to their mouth, were three hundred men: but all the reſt of the people bowed down upon their knees to drink water.

7 And the LORD ſaid unto Gideon, By the three hundred men that lapped will I ſave you, and deliver the Midianites into thine hand: and let all the other people go every man unto his place.

8 So the people took victuals in their hand, and their trumpets: and he ſent all the reſt of Iſrael, every man unto his tent, and retained thoſe three hundred men: and the hoſt of Midian was beneath him in the valley.

9 ¶ And it came to paſs the ſame night, that the LORD ſaid unto him, Ariſe, get thee down unto the hoſt, for I have delivered it into thine hand.

10 But if thou fear to go down, go thou with Phurah thy ſervant down to the hoſt.

11 And thou ſhalt hear what they ſay, and afterward ſhall thine hands be ſtrengthened to go down unto the hoſt. Then went he down with Phurah his ſervant, unto the outſide of the armed men that were in the hoſt.

12 And the Midianites, and the Amalekites, and all the children of the eaſt, lay along in the valley like graſhoppers for multitude: and their camels were without number, as the ſand by the ſea-ſide for multitude.

13 And when Gideon was come, behold, there was a man that told a dream unto his fellow, and ſaid, Behold, I dreamed a dream, and lo, a cake of barley-bread tumbled into the hoſt of Midian, and came unto a tent, and ſmote it that it fell, and overturned it, that the tent lay along.

14 And his fellow anſwered and ſaid, This is nothing elſe ſave the ſword of Gideon the ſon of Joaſh a man of Iſrael; for into his hand hath God delivered Midian, and all the hoſt.

15 ¶ And it was ſo, when Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation thereof, that he worſhipped, and returned into the hoſt of Iſrael, and ſaid, Ariſe, for the LORD hath delivered into your hand the hoſt of Midian.

16 And he divided the three hundred men into three companies, and he put a trumpet in every mans hand, with empty pitchers, and lamps within the pitchers.

17 And he ſaid unto them, Look on me, and do likewiſe: and behold, when I come to the outſide of the camp, it ſhall be, that as I do, ſo ſhall ye do.

18 When I blow with a trumpet, I and all that are with me, then blow ye the trumpets alſo on every ſide of all the camp, and ſay, The ſword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

19 ¶ So Gideon, and the hundred men that were with him, came unto the outſide of the camp, in the beginning of the middle watch; and they had but newly ſet the watch; and they blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers that were in their hands.

20 And the three companies blew the trumpets, and brake the pitchers, and held the lamps in their left hands, and the trumpets in their right hands to blow withall: and they cried, The ſword of the LORD, and of Gideon.

21 And they ſtood every man in his place, round about the camp: and all the hoſt ran, and cried, and fled.

22 And the three hundred blew the trumpets, and the LORD ſet every mans ſword againſt his fellow, even throughout all the hoſt: and the hoſt fled to Beth-ſhittah, in Zererath, and to the border of Abel-meholah, unto Tabbath.

23 And the men of Iſrael gathered themſelves together out of Naphtali, and out of Aſher, and out of all Manaſſeh, and purſued after the Midianites.

24 ¶ And Gideon ſent meſſengers throughout all mount Ephraim, ſaying, Come down againſt the Midianites, and take before them the waters unto Beth-barah rah and Jordan. Then all the men of Ephraim gathered themſelves together, and took the waters unto Beth-barah and Jordan.

25 And they took two princes of the Midianites, Oreb and Zeeb; and they ſlew Oreb upon the rock Oreb, and Zeeb they ſlew at the wine-preſs of Zeeb, and purſued Midian, and brought the heads of Oreb and Zeeb to Gideon, on the other ſide Jordan.

Ver. 1. Then Jerubbaal (who is Gideon) and all the people that were with him roſe up early.] The very next morning, we may naturally ſuppoſe after the laſt miracle.

—— And pitched beſide the well of Harod) Which well was in the great plain at the foot of mount Gilboa.

—— So that the hoſt of the Midianites were on the north-ſide of them, by the hill of Moreh.] The Vulgate takes the word Moreh, to ſignify high; and then this lofty hill can be no other than Gilboa. Here Pellicanus obſerves, that prudence and diligent forecaſt are to be uſed, even when perſons are under the Divine Conduct; for he thinks Gideon acted like a skilful commander, when he quarter'd his army ſo, as to have the enemy on the north of him, rather than on the eaſt or ſouth.

—— In the valley.] Namely, of Jezreel, which had Hermon on the north, and Gilboa on the ſouth.

Ver. 2. And the Lord ſaid unto Gideon, the people that are with thee are too many, &c.] The army of Gideon conſiſted of thirty-two thouſand men, who were but a poor handful, in compariſon with thoſe confederate forces of Midian, Amalek, and the Arabians; but God who intended to take away all occaſion, both from the ungrateful Jews and their enemies, to attribute the ſucceſs to their number or valour, commanded Gideon to make a proclamation through his army, and to diſband all that were faint; upon which twenty-two thouſand of his daſtardly troops were immediately diſmiſſed.

Ver. 4. And the Lord ſaid unto Gideon, the people are yet too many: bring them down unto the water, &c.] Gideon might probably think that his army was already ſufficiently reduced; when he was again commanded to lead the troops to the water-ſide, and there ſeparate thoſe who ſunk down upon their knees to drink, from thoſe who lapped the water out of the hollow of their hand. There were found but three hundred of the latter, and God promiſed him the victory by them, and ordered the reſt to be ſent away. It is not eaſy to gueſs from this different manner of quenching their thirſt, whether the three hundred were choſen for any particular vertue which was indicated by this action, or for the reverſe. Some authors think, that 9700 who kneeled down, gave a ſpecimen of their courage, in that they were not afraid of the nearneſs of their enemy, but choſe to drink at their eaſe; whilſt the others betrayed their timidity, by being contented with taking a haſty handful of water, and that God made choice of theſe latter, to make the victory appear more miraculous. Others, on the contrary, think that thoſe who were weak and diſpirited, kneeled down, while the courageous and ſtrong took the water up with their hand. It is hard to decide which opinion is entitled to the preference. But the Jews have gone much farther for a reaſon, why theſe three hundred were preferred; namely, that there was a ſtatue of Baal on the other ſide of the water, ſo that they ſcrupled to kneel down to drink, leſt they ſhould be thought to render any act of worſhip to that idol; whilſt the others, more concerned for their own eaſe than for the honour of God, were ſet aſide, as unworthy to have a ſhare in ſo ſignal a victory.

Ver. 9. And it came to paſs the ſame night, that the Lord ſaid unto him, Ariſe, get thee down unto the hoſt, &c.] God, for a farther confirmation of Gideon's faith, commanded him to go to the Midianitiſh camp, attended only by a ſervant, and aſſured him that he ſhould be informed what opinion his enemies entertained of him. Upon his coming thither, he heard one ſoldier relating a dream to his companion, of a barley cake rolling into their camp, and overturning a tent; upon which, the other interpreted this of Gideon's ſword diſcomfiting the confederate hoſt. This is nothing elſe, ſaid he, ſave the ſword of Gideon, ver. 14. The barley cake was a proper emblem of Gideon and his ſoldiers, who were very inconſiderable in number, as a cake is made of a ſmall quantity of flower kneaded together, and was mean alſo, and contemptible, in compariſon with the Midianites, as a barley cake is in compariſon with wheaten bread. But the man could not have underſtood this, unleſs God had ſuggeſted it to him, for the confirmation of Gideons faith and reſolution.

Gideon delayed not to verify ſo favourable an omen, but returned to his three hundred men, whom he commanded to take every man a horn in one hand, and a pitcher with a light concealed in it in the other, and led them into the enemies camp in the beginning of the middle watch, as the Sacred Texts expreſſes it, ver. 19. That is, in the dead of the night. There were three watches among the Hebrews, and the reſt of the eaſtern nations, the night being divided into three parts: And when the firſt part was ended, they who had watched betook themſelves to reſt, and another company ſucceeded them till the morning watch. The Romans afterward divided the night into four parts, from whence we read in the goſpel of the fourth watch.

The brave leader of this little band ſucceeded in his ſtratagem, and totally defeated the confederate army; in conſequence of which, the Iſraelites not only recovered their freedom, but gained an immenſe quantity of the richeſt ſpoils.

Ver. 25. And they took two princes of the Midianites, Oreb, and Zeeb.] Some expoſitors conclude from hence, that the Midianitiſh language did not much differ from the Hebrew, in which Oreb ſignifies a crow, and Zeeb, a wolf; from which creatures, and others of the like nature, great men anciently thought fit to take the names of their families; as in after-times was likewiſe cuſtomary among the Romans, among whom we read of the Corvini, and Gracchi, and Aquilini, &c. Such names were, perhaps, conſidered by them, as omens, or monuments of their intrepidity and alſo of their ſuperior dexterity in military atchievements.

CHAP. VIII.

1 Gideon pacifieth the Ephraimites. 4 Succoth and Penuel refuſe to relieve Gideons army. 10 Zeba and Zalmunna are taken. 13 Succoth and Penuel are deſtroyed. 17 Gideon revengeth his brethrens death on Zebah and Zalmunna. 22 He refuſeth government. 24 His Ephod cauſeth idolatry. 28 Midian ſubdued. 29 Gideons children, and death. 33 The Iſraelites idolatry, and ingratitude.

AND the men of Ephraim ſaid unto him, Why haſt thou ſerved us thus, that thou calledſt us not when thou wenteſt to fight with the Midianites? and they did chide with him ſharply.

2 And he ſaid unto them, What have I done now in compariſon of you? Is not the gleaning of the grapes of Ephraim better than the vintage of Abiezer?

3 God hath delivered into your hands the princes of Midian, Oreb, and Zeeb: and what was I able to do in compariſon of you? Then their anger was abated toward him, when he had ſaid that.

4 ¶ And Gideon came to Jordan, and paſſed over, he, and the three hundred men men that were with him, faint, yet purſuing them.

5 And he ſaid unto the men of Succoth, Give, I pray you, loaves of bread unto the people that follow me, for they be faint, and I am purſuing after Zebah and Zalmunna, kings of Midian.

6 ¶ And the princes of Succoth ſaid, Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we ſhould give bread unto thine army?

7 And Gideon ſaid, Therefore when the LORD hath delivered Zebah and Zalmunna into mine hand, then I will tear your fleſh with the thorns of the wilderneſs, and with briers.

8 And he went up thence to Penuel, and ſpake unto them likewiſe: and the men of Penuel anſwered him, as the men of Succoth had anſwered him.

9 And he ſpake alſo unto the men of Penuel, ſaying, When I come again in peace, I will break down this tower.

10 ¶ Now Zeba and Zalmunna were in Karkor, and their hoſts with them, about fifteen thouſand men, all that were left of all the hoſts of the children of the eaſt: for there fell an hundred and twenty thouſand men that drew ſword.

11 ¶ And Gideon went up by the way of them that dwelt in tents, on the eaſt of Nobah and Jogbehah, and ſmote the hoſt: for the hoſt was ſecure.

12 And when Zeba and Zalmunna fled, he purſued after them, and took the two kings of Midian, Zeba and Zalmunna, and diſcomfited all the hoſt.

13 ¶ And Gideon the ſon of Joaſh returned from battel before the ſun was up,

14 And caught a young man of the men of Succoth, and enquired of him: and he deſcribed unto him the princes of Succoth, and the elders thereof, even threeſcore and ſeventeen men.

15 And he came unto the men of Succoth, and ſaid, Behold, Zeba and Zalmunna, with whom ye did upbraid me, ſaying, Are the hands of Zeba and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we ſhould give bread unto thy men that are weary?

16 And he took the elders of the city, and thorns of the wilderneſs, and briers, and with them he taught the men of Succoth.

17 And he beat down the tower of Penuel, and ſlew the men of the city.

18 ¶ Then ſaid he unto Zebah and Zalmunna, What manner of men were they whom ye ſlew at Tabor? And they anſwered, As thou art, ſo were they, each one reſembled the children of a king.

19 And he ſaid, They were my brethren, even the ſons of my mother: as the LORD liveth, if ye had ſaved them alive, I would not ſlay you.

20 And he ſaid unto Jether his firſt-born, Up, and ſlay them: but the youth drew not his ſword: for he feared, becauſe he was yet a youth.

21 Then Zebah and Zalmunna ſaid, Riſe thou, and fall upon us: for as the man is, ſo is his ſtrength. And Gideon aroſe, and ſlew Zebah and Zalmunna, and took away the ornaments that were on their camels necks.

22 ¶ Then the men of Iſrael ſaid unto Gideon, Rule thou over us, both thou, and thy ſon, and thy ſons ſon alſo: for thou haſt delivered us from the hand of Midian.

23 And Gideon ſaid unto them, I will not rule over you, neither ſhall my ſon rule over you: the LORD ſhall rule over you.

24 And Gideon ſaid unto them, I would deſire a requeſt of you, that you would give me every man the ear-rings of his prey: (for they had golden ear-rings, becauſe they were Iſhmaelites.)

25 And they anſwered, We will willingly give them. And they ſpread a garment, and did caſt therein, every man the ear-rings of his prey.

26 And the weight of the golden ear-rings that he requeſted, was a thouſand and ſeven hundred ſhekels of gold, beſide ornaments, and collars, and purple raiment, that was on the kings of Midian, and beſide the chains that were about their camels necks.

27 And Gideon made an ephod thereof, and put it in his city, even in Ophrah; and all Iſrael went thither a whoring after it: which thing became a ſnare unto Gideon, and to his houſe.

28 ¶ Thus was Midian ſubdued before the children of Iſrael, ſo that they lifted up their heads no more: and the country was in quietneſs forty years in the days of Gideon.

29 ¶ And Jerubbaal the ſon of Joaſh went and dwelt in his own houſe.

30 And Gideon had threeſcore and ten ſons of his body begotten: for he had many wives.

31 And

31 And his concubine that was in Shechem, ſhe alſo bare him a ſon, whoſe name he called Abimelech.

32 ¶ And Gideon the ſon of Joaſh died in a good old age, and was buried in the ſepulchre of Joaſh his father, in Ophrah of the Abi-ezrites.

33 And it came to paſs aſſoon as Gideon was dead, that the children of Iſrael turned again, and went a whoring after Baalim, and made Baal-berith their god.

34 And the children of Iſrael remembred not the LORD their God, who had delivered them out of the hands of all their enemies on every ſide:

35 Neither ſhewed they kindneſs to the houſe of Jerubbaal, namely Gideon, according to all the goodneſs which he had ſhewed unto Iſrael.

Ver. 1. And the men of Ephraim ſaid unto him, why haſt thou ſerved us thus.] They thought themſelves ſlighted by their brethren of the tribe of Manaſſeh, which they reſented the more, becauſe they eſteemed themſelves ſuperior to them in every reſpect, by the priority given to the founder of their tribe in the bleſſing of Jacob.

——— That thou calledſt us not when thou wenteſt to fight with the Midianites?] This they conſidered as a very contemptuous treatment, ſince Gideon had ſent to other tribes that were meaner, and not ſo able to aſſiſt him as themſelves.

Ver. 2. And he ſaid unto them, What have I done now in compariſon of you?] Perſons of haughty diſpoſitions are extremely fond of flattering praiſes and adulation; Gideon therefore magnifies their actions as far ſurpaſſing his own.

——— Is not the gleaning of the grapes of Ephraim, better than the vintage of Abiezer?] This, we ſuppoſe, was a proverbial expreſſion in thoſe days, whereby it was cuſtomary for thoſe who uſed it, to commend the ſmalleſt action of one, as ſuperior to the greateſt of another. And it is here applied with all the propriety imaginable,; for it is as if he had ſaid, Theſe ſcattered parties that you have gleaned and picked up at the fords of Jordan, are much more conſiderable than thoſe which I and my whole hoſt have deſtroyed.

Ver. 3. God hath delivered into your hands the princes of Midian, Oreb, and Zeeb.] Which he was content they ſhould think more conſiderable than all the common men whom he had vanquiſhed.

——— And what was I able to do in compariſon of you?] To yield to others the glory they affect, has a wonderful tendency to calm their higheſt diſpleaſure.

——— Then their anger was abated toward him, when he ſaid that.] According to that fine maxim of Solomon, A ſoft anſwer turneth away wrath.] Prov. xiv. 1. This conduct of Gideon is an aimable evidence of his ſingular modeſty and prudence, which were no leſs conſpicuous in him than his martial bravery. Theſe excellent qualities are ſeldom blended together, but their compoſition is abſolutely neceſſary to form a truly great man, who never appears in ſo advantageous and noble a light, as when he treats inſolent men with humility, and angry men with meekneſs.

Ver. 4. And Gideon came to Jordan, and paſſed over.] Or, rather, had paſſed over; for he went over Jordan before Oreb and Zeeb were taken; but it is not inſerted till now, that what concerned the Ephraimites might be related altogether, without interruption.

——— He and the three hundred men that were with him, faint, yet purſuing them.] Tho' they were extremely fatigued with a long march, and eager purſuit, they ſtill perſevered in the enterprize they had undertaken, being much more ſollicitous for the public ſafety, than their own.

Ver. 5. And he ſaid unto the men of Succoth, give; I pray you, loaves of bread unto the people that follow me.] This was a ſmall requeſt, conſidering the great merit of thoſe in whoſe favour it was made; and yet Gideon had the mortification to be denied by the inhabitants, who ſent him word, that it would be time enough for him to exact ſuch a ſupply of proviſion, when he brought with him the two princes Zebah and Zalmunna, whom he ſaid he was then purſuing.

Ver. 7. And Gideon ſaid, Therefore when the Lord hath delivered Zebah and Zalmunna into mine hand.] As he was confident would ſoon be the caſe.

——— Then will I tear your fleſh with the thorns of the wilderneſs, and with briers.] This city was near a wilderneſs that abounded with thorns and briars; with which he threatens to threſh their fleſh, as the word is in the Hebrew: Which ſome think ſignifies, that laying briers and thorns on their naked bodies, he intended to bring the cart-wheel over them, to faſten the thorns deep in their fleſh, and then cruſh them to death: Such a puniſhment as this was inflicted on the Ammonites by David, 2 Sam. xii. 31.

Ver. 8. And he went up thence.] He would no longer ſtay to avenge this inhuman repulſe at preſent, but ſacrificed his private reſentment to the public ſervice, and therefore continued his purſuit of the enemy.

——— To Penuel.] Which was another city in the tribe of Gad, not far from Succoth; each of theſe cities received its name from Jacob, Gen. xxxii. 30. xxxiii. 17.

——— And ſpake unto them likewiſe.] Deſired ſome proviſion of them, for the reaſon he had before alledged to the inhabitants of Succoth.

——— And the men of Penuel anſwered him as the men of Succoth had anſwered him.] It is likely they were Idolaters, and therefore hated Gideon, who began to reform religion; and truſting to the ſtrength of their tower, deſpiſed the inconſiderable body of forces he had with him.

Ver. 9. And he ſpake alſo unto the men of Penuel, ſaying, when I come again in peace, I will break down this tower.] In which they greatly confided; and perhaps pointed to it, when they gave him their rude anſwer.

Ver. 10. Now Zebah and Zalmunna were in Karkor.] We read of this place no where elſe; and therefore it is but a conjecture, that it was in the confines of the tribe of Gad. St. Jerom declares, there was a caſtle in his time called Carcaria, about a days journey from the city Petra, and Euſebius ſays the ſame.

——— And their hoſts with them, about fifteen thouſand men, &c.] Tho' theſe were the ſhatter'd remains of an army of 120000 men, yet they were ſo vaſtly ſuperior to the forces of Gideon, that the inhabitants of Succoth and Penuel took occaſion from thence to deride Gideon for thinking himſelf able with three hundred men, who were all greatly fatigued, to vanquiſh fifteen thouſand, and that he ſhould demand ſupplies of proviſion from them, as if he had his enemies already in his power.

Ver. 11. And Gideon went up by the way of them that dwelt in tents.] He fetched a compaſs by the country of the Arabians called Scenitæ, becauſe they dwelt in tents: And ſo poured in upon the rear of Zebah and Zalmunna, where they ſuſpected no danger.

— On the eaſt of Nobah, and Jogbehah.] Two cities, the laſt of which is expreſly ſaid to be in the tribe of Gad, Numb. xxxii. 35. and the former in the tribe of Manaſſeh, on the borders of Gad, as may be collected from this paſſage.

——— And ſmote the hoſt: for the hoſt was ſecure.] He fell upon them, it is very probable, in the night, as he had done upon their main army at firſt; and they having fled as faſt as they could the day, and part of the preceding night, were gone to take their reſt; ſuppoſing themſelves out of all danger of diſturbance, now they were ſo far diſtant from the place of battle.

Ver. 12. And when Zebah and Zalmunna fled, he purſued after them.] We read of no refreſhment that he and his men had taken all this time; but they either met with ſome by the way, or God miraculouſly ſupported them.

—— And took the two kings of Midian, Zebah, and Zalmunna, and diſcomfited all the hoſt.] Having routed their army, the two kings could make but little reſiſtance.

Ver. 13. And Gideon the ſon of Joaſh returned from battle before the ſun was up.] The text in the original is ſomewhat obſcure in this place, the words was up, not being there, ſo that it is not eaſy to determine, whether the words before the ſun, mean before its going down on that day, or its riſing on the next morning. Our verſion underſtands it in the latter ſenſe, but the Jews and the generality of Chriſtian interpreters, in the firſt. And indeed, it is ſcarce credible, that Gideon and his men could continue one day and two whole nights in action; and if we remember that it was about mid-night when he put the enemies camp to the rout, he had time enough the next day to perform all the reſt.

Ver. 14. And caught a young man of the men of Succoth, and enquired of him.] Surprized him in the field, and examined him who were the principal men of the city.

—— And he deſcribed unto him the princes of Succoth, and the elders thereof, even threeſcore and ſeventeen men.] He wrote down (as the Hebrew word for deſcribe ſignifies) the names, and, perhaps, the dwellings of the great men of the city, and of the judges; who were the perſons that derided him, and whom alone he intended to puniſh; not all the people, who were not guilty.

Ver. 15 And he came unto the men of Succoth.] Enter'd the city very early, and ſummon'd thoſe men before him who had ſo lately inſulted him in ſuch a provoking manner.

—— And ſaid, behold, Zebah and Zalmunna, with whom ye did upbraid me.] He preſerv'd theſe two kings alive, that the princes of Succoth might ſee the Lord had delivered them into his hand: Gideon now makes them ſenſible, that their late deriſion of him would turn to their own confuſion.

—— Saying, Are the hands of Zebah and Zalmunna now in thine hand, that we ſhould give bread unto thy men that are weary?] He repeats their own words to them, ver. 6. that he might reproach them with their inhumane uſage of him, when he was in diſtreſs, and had accompliſhed ſuch wonders for their preſervation.

Ver. 16 And he took the elders of the city.] Under this general term of elders, are comprehended all their great men.

—— And thorns of the wilderneſs, and briers.] Which he had ready at hand.

—— And with them he taught the men of Succoth.] He threſhed, or tore their fleſh with theſe thorns (as he had threatned ver. 7. and as ſome copies here have it) and by this ſevere correction, taught them better manners, and more wiſdom. It is not ſaid that he tormented them till they expired (as ſome think he did, ſee ver. 7.) for then it would have been as plainly ſaid, as it is in the next verſe of the men of Penuel.

Ver. 17. And he beat down the tower of Penuel, and ſlew the men of the city.] It is not ſaid, the princes and elders, and therefore this looks as if the whole city had been acceſſary to the indignity that was offered him, and conſequently puniſhed by him. But the men of the city in this hiſtory, hath ſignified only the principal perſons of it. See ver 8. 15, 16. and therefore it is probable no other men are here intended. They fled into the tower, perhaps, for ſafety (conſcious of their own guilt, and the danger they were in of ſuffering for it) and were there ſlain.

Ver. 18 Then ſaid he unto Zebah and Zalmunna, What manner of men were they whom ye ſlew at Tabor?] What particular place it was where Gideon brought them before him to be judged, is uncertain; and when it was that they ſlew ſome Iſraelites at Tabor, we can only conjecture. It is probable he brought them out to receive their ſentence, after he came home; and that ſome who hid themſelves in dens and caves which were in the mountains, ver. 2. being found out, were ſlain by the Midianites. And Gideon's brethren being miſſing, he deſired to find out, whether they were the perſons whom they ſlew.

—— And they anſwered, as thou art, ſo were they.] They were very like him, and perhaps reſembled him in their countenance.

—— Each one reſembled the children of a king.] By this it appears, that Gideon was of a goodly preſence; carrying greatneſs and majeſty in his aſpect: And that kings took care, in thoſe days, to match only with graceful perſons; by whom they might hope to have children like themſelves.

Ver. 19. And he ſaid, they were my brethren, even the ſons of my mother.] Though, perhaps, not by the ſame father.

—— As the Lord liveth, if ye had ſaved them alive. Generous men frequently ſpare comely and graceful perſons, who look like men of quality; according to our modern phraſe.

——I would not ſlay you.] For not being of the race of Canaan, the law did not oblige him to cut them off.

Ver. 20. And he ſaid unto Jether his firſt-born, Up, and ſlay them.] It was not unuſual for great perſons to do execution upon offenders, in ancient times; no more than it unbecame them to ſentence them to death: And therefore they had not, as now, ſuch as the Romans call carnifices, publick executioners; but Saul commanded ſuch as waited on him to kill the prieſts; and Doeg, one of his great officers, performed that office, 1 Sam. xxii. 17, 18. And Samuel himſelf is ſaid to have hewed Agag to pieces in Gilgal; and Benaiah, the general of the army, to have fallen upon Joab at the horns of the altar. Accordingly Gideon would have had his ſon do this execution, that he might be early animated againſt the enemies of Iſrael; as Hannibal is reported, when a boy, to have been incenſed againſt the Romans.

——But the youth drew not his ſword; for he feared, becauſe he was yet a youth.] The two kings were men, it is likely, of great ſtature, and of a fierce and ſtern countenance, who (as appears by the ſtory) feared not death; which made the youth afraid even to look upon them.

Ver. 21. Then Zebah and Zalmunna ſaid, Riſe thou, and fall upon us: for as the man is, ſo is his ſtrength.] They thought it more honourable to die by the hand of Gideon, who was as eminent for his ſtrength, as his dignity; and would diſpatch them with more ſpeed than a ſtripling could.

—— And Gideon aroſe, and ſlew Zebah and Zalmunna, and took away the ornaments that were on their camels necks.] As well as all the ornaments they themſelves wore. The word ſaharonim is found no where but here, and ver. 26. and in Iſaiah iii. 18. where we tranſlate it, round Tires like the moon. So our margin alſo in this place, ornaments like the moon; following the LXX, who tranſlate it μηνίσκους, little moons. So ancient was the cuſtom of wearing ornaments of this figure, which was ſpread afterward over many nations. Huetius thinks it came originally from the Phœnicians, who were the worſhippers of Aſtarte, or the moon; and went from them to the Arabians, who were ancient devotees to the ſame planet. The Brachmans alſo are ſaid to have adorned their heads with the ſame figure.

Ver. 22. Then the men of Iſrael ſaid unto Gideon, Rule thou over us, both thou, and thy ſon, and thy ſon's ſon alſo.] They would have rendered his dominion over them, hereditary.

——For thou haſt delivered us from the hand of Midian.] They pretended to make this offer, out of gratitude to him; but in reality they were diſpoſed now (as their poſterity were afterward) to throw off the divine government, being deſirous to ſet a king over themſelves, like the reſt of the nations around them. And now they thought a fit opportunity offer'd; when ſo extraordinary a judge was raiſed up, as had performed wonders beyond all his predeceſſors; and might, they thought, be ambitious enough to eſtabliſh the ſupreme authority in his family.

Ver. 23. And Gideon ſaid unto them, I will not rule over you, neither ſhall my ſon rule over you.] He abſolutely rejected their offer; becauſe he looked upon God as their king, who appointed what deputy, he pleas'd, to govern them: And therefore he conſidered this propoſal as an effort to alter that form of government which God had inſtituted, and had given them no authority to change.

——The Lord ſhall rule over you.] As he had done hitherto. This ſhews, that theſe two could not conſiſt together; namely, a ſucceſſive dominion of kings, and ſuch governors as they now had by the divine appointment. Such a one was Gideon, raiſed up by God when they they ſtood in need of a deliverer; and therefore he durſt not accept the authority they offered him, becauſe it was a thing ſacred, and proper only to the divine majeſty to order who ſhould govern: Whence it is, that the judgment which was adminiſtred among that people, is called God's judgment, Deut. i. 17. And Solomon is ſaid to ſit upon the throne of the Lord, 1 Chron. xxix. 23. and the kingdom of his poſterity is called the kingdom of the Lord, 2 Chron. xiii 8. becauſe, before kings were ſettled in Iſrael, the Lord was their king; from whom the government was derived to the houſe of David, by a ſpecial act of God.

One would hardly think that this refuſal of regal honours, which teſtified ſo much modeſty, piety, and diſintereſtedneſs, ſhould be the prelude to an action that ſullied all the glory which Gideon had acquired; and yet he had no ſooner refuſed their firſt offer, than he deſired them, as an acknowledgment of his late ſervices, to preſent him with what golden earings they had taken from their enemies. His requeſt was readily complied with, and a garment being ſpread on the ground, was preſently covered with thoſe ornaments, amounting to 1700 ſhekels, or 850 ounces of gold, beſide collars, chains, and other ornaments of the ſame metal. We need not wonder at this great quantity of golden ſpoils, if we remember, that all thoſe eaſtern nations were fond of ſuch ornaments, and that the Midianites in particular, not only wore them themſelves, but adorned the necks of their camels with them, of which they brought vaſt droves into the field.

Ver. 27. And Gideon made an ephod thereof.] There were two ſorts of ſacerdotal garments which were called by this name of ephod, from the Hebrew word aphad, to tye, becauſe they were tied about with a girdle: The one was a plain linnen veſt, ſuch as not only the prieſts, but even young Samuel wore when he miniſtred at the altar, 1 Sam. ii. 18. and David, when he marched before the ark, 2 Sam. vi. 14. The other, which was much richer, was peculiar to the High-prieſt. Some learned men have indeed affirmed, tho' without any foundation, that the Jewiſh kings were allowed to wear them, when they conſulted the Divine Majeſty by Urim, but as this is only a mere ſuppoſition, ſo there can be no ground for imagining that Gideon had this made for the ſame end, as being head of Iſrael, neither indeed could ſuch a garment, how rich ſoever, have taken up ſo great a quantity of gold. Some authors therefore think it to have been an idol; (Procop. & al. ap. Toſtat.) others, only a kind of trophy in memory of the ſignal victory he had now obtained. (Cajetan. N. Delyr. Jun. Munſt.) Some ancient fathers (Auguſt. Theodoret. & al.) who are followed by many moderns, believe it to have been ſome ſuch trophy or monument; and add that it was made in imitation of the compleat habit of the High-prieſt, by which he only intended to perpetuate the memory of their miraculous deliverance, without ſuſpecting that the Iſraelites would go a whoring after it; ſo that according to theſe expoſitors, he was only the innocent cauſe of their idolatry, as Moſes himſelf was, when he made the brazen ſerpent, which became the object of religious worſhip in after-times. We need not obſerve the diſparity between theſe two caſes, Gideon's action being altogether voluntary, whereas that of Moſes was in obedience to the Divine Command. We may add too, that the words, which thing became a ſnare unto Gideon, and to his houſe, ſeem to imply ſomething worſe than a monumental trophy, whatever may be the ſignification of the word ephod.

—And all Iſrael went thither a whoring after it.] This, we ſuppoſe, was after the death of Gideon, when the people relapſed into idolatry, and entertained this fancy, among others, that God would anſwer them in the place where this ephod was depoſited, as well as at his own tabernacle in Shiloh, where he condeſcended to reſide.

———Which thing became a ſnare unto Gideon and to his houſe.] Occaſioned the ruin of him and his family, for tho' they periſhed after his death, yet he may be ſaid to have ſuffered with them, becauſe his name and memory, which are preſerved in mens poſterity, were in a manner extinct in Iſrael.

Ver. 28. Thus was Midian ſubdued before the children of Iſrael, &c.] Gideon returned to his own inheritance and judged Iſrael forty years; during which none of their enemies dared to moleſt them; and as to the Midianites, they received ſo total an overthrow from him, that they never made any attempt againſt Iſrael from that time.

———And the country was in quietneſs forty years in the days of Gideon.] The great Archbiſhop Uſher interprets theſe words thus, "In the fortieth year after the reſt "reſtored by Deborah and Barak, the land began to reſt "again in the days of Gideon, after he ſubdued the Mi-"dianites, who had oppreſſed them ſeven years." But the plaineſt account is, that after ſeven years oppreſſion by the Midianites, the country enjoyed a happy tranquility for the ſpace of forty years, in the days of Gideon; whom God had rendered ſo inſtrumental in the deliverance of Iſrael, and who died in a good old age, 1236 years before the incarnation of our bleſſed Saviour. He had ſeventy legitimate ſons born of many wives, and one natural ſon by a concubine. The name of this latter was Abimelech, which ſignifies, my father a king, and perhaps his mother conferred it upon him out of arrogance and oſtentation, and that ſhe might be conſidered as the wife of one who was thought to deſerve a kingdom, tho' he declined the acceptance of it.

Some learned men have thought that Gideon, who had the name of Jerubbaal conferred upon him by his father, chap. vi. 32. is the ſame with Jerumbaal, prieſt to the god Jao, whom Sanchoniathon declares he had conſulted concerning the Phœnician antiquities. Sanchoniathon, whoſe name in the Phœnician language ſignifies, The zeal of the law, is ſaid to have lived in the reign of Ithobal, king of Tyre, and a little after, Jerumbaal, or Gideon, but the generality of the learned world are now convinced, that Sanchoniathon, is a fabulous author, and that he who wrote the book, of which we have ſome fragments under his name, was an impoſtor, who maliciouſly intermixed ſeveral paſſages of the Sacred Hiſtory with the fables of the Phœnicians with an intention to diſcredit the Sacred Scriptures of the Hebrews.

Jerubbaal is by David called Jeruboſheth, 2 Sam. xi. 21. becauſe by that time the name of Baal was grown deteſtable among the Jews, ſo that in all the names that ended with it, they ſubſtituted the termination boſheth, which ſignifies ſhame; as Iſhboſheth, for Iſhbaal, and the like.

Ver. 33. And it came to paſs aſſoon as Gideon was dead, that the children of Iſrael turned again.] This great man ſeems, by the manner in which this verſe is expreſſed; to have preſerved the Iſraelites in the true religion while he lived; but they had no great affection to it, as is evident by their revolting from it aſſoon as he was dead.

———And went a whoring after Baalim.] This ſeems to have been the general name of all the falſe gods which the Iſraelites worſhipped; particularly of Dæmons, as Mr. Mede thinks, book 3. p. 777. and which, according to him, were all called Baalim, from the firſt Dæmon, or deified king, Belus or Baal. Several critics have thought the Belus of the Chaldæans and Babylonians was no other than Nimrod their firſt king; others have taken him for Belus the Aſſyrian, father of Ninus; others again for one of the ſons of Semiramis: Laſtly, many have ſuppoſed Belus to be the ſame with Jupiter. Father Calmet is of opinion, and aſſigns good reaſons for entertaining it, that Baal was worſhipped for the ſun among the Phœnicians and Canaanites, and that he was often taken in general for the great God of the eaſtern people. As to the Chaldeans, it is very credible that Belus was one of their firſt kings; but whether Aſhur, or Nimrod, or Thuras, or Belus the father of Ninus, or Belus the ſon of Semiramis, is not known.

———And made Baal-berith their god.] Baal-berith ſignifies Lord of the covenant, and the idol of this name was worſhipped by the Shechemites. There was a temple at Shechem conſecrated to Baal-berith, where the money was depoſited, which was afterward given to Abimelech, the ſon of Gideon. Diodorus Siculus mentions a goddeſs of the Cretans, named Britomartis, which is probably the ſame as Baal-berith; her name is derived from Marath-berith, which ſignifies, Miſtreſs of the covenant.

Philo Biblius declares, that Elion and Beruth are two Phœnician deities, who had a ſon and a daughter, called Heaven, and Earth; and that the beauty of theſe two children was the reaſon of denominating from them the heaven and earth which we ſee. If we might depend at all upon the authority of this author, there would be no occaſion occaſion to ſeek elſewhere for the original of Baal-berith; but both Porphyry, and Sanchoniathon, are at preſent in ſo little credit with men of learning, that none will venture any more to quote them; at leaſt there can be no relying upon their teſtimony.

Bochart is of opinion, that Berith might be very probably the ſame as Beroe, the daughter of Venus and Adonis, deſired in marriage by Neptune, and eſpouſed to Bacchus; that ſhe gave her name to the city of Berith in Phœnicia, and became after the goddeſs of that place. This, however, is no more than a conjecture, for there is no proof that the Goddeſs Berith was ever adored in that city.

The moſt natural manner of explaining the name of Baal-berith, is to take it general for the God who was ſuppoſed to preſide over alliances and oaths. In this ſenſe the true God may be termed the God of the covenant; and if the ſcripture had not added the name of Baal to that of Berith, it might be underſtood of the true God. The moſt barbarous and ſuperſtitious nations, as well as thoſe who were moſt religious and knowing, have always invoked God to witneſs their oaths and covenants. The Greeks had their Jupiter, the witneſs and arbitrator of oaths, whom they called Zeus Horkios; and the Latins, their Deus Fidius, or Jupiter Piſtius, whom they looked upon as the god of honeſty and plain-dealing, and imagined that he preſided at all treaties and alliances. They ſometimes ſwore, even by Jupiter the ſtone, per Jovem lapidem, becauſe the victim appointed for the ratification of the alliance, was ſtruck with a ſtone, or becauſe Jupiter was beſought to throw him headlong down ſome precipice, who ſhould fail in the performance of his promiſe, in the ſame manner as the ſtone which the high prieſt held in his hands, was caſt from the top of the capitol.

Ver. 34. And the children of Iſrael remembred not the Lord their God, who had delivered them out of the hands of all their enemies on every ſide.] Out of the hand of the king of Meſopotamia, and then of the Moabites, and after that of the Canaanites, and now lately of the Midianites, and the children of the eaſt.

——— Neither ſhewed they kindneſs to the houſe of Jerubbaal, namely Gideon.] No wonder they were ſo ungrateful to the family of this illuſtrious man, when they were ſo forgetful of the God of all their mercies; the fear of whom, is the foundation of all virtue.

——— According to the goodneſs which he had ſhewed unto Iſrael.] In hazarding his life for their ſervice, and accompliſhing a glorious deliverance in their favour; and in leaving them in the full enjoyment of their liberty, by refuſing the deſpotic power with which they offered to inveſt him; and in governing them for the ſpace of many years with ſo much prudence, that he left them in a happy ſtate of tranquility, and in the poſſeſſion of God's true religion, when he died.

CHAP. IX.

1 Abimelech by conſpiracy with the Shechemites, and murder of his brethren, is made king. 7 Jotham by a parable rebuketh them, and foretelleth their ruin. 22 Gaal conſpireth with the Shechemites againſt him. 30 Zebul revealeth it. 34 Abimelech overcometh them, and ſoweth the city with ſalt. 46 He burneth the hold of the god Berith. 50 At Thebez he is ſlain by a piece of a mil-ſtone. 56 Jothams curſe is fulfilled.

AND Abimelech the ſon of Jerubbaal went to Shechem, unto his mothers brethren, and communed with them, and with all the family of the houſe of his mothers father, ſaying,

2 Speak, I pray you, in the ears of all the men of Shechem, Whether is better for you, either that all the ſons of Jerubbaal (which are threeſcore and ten perſons) reign over you, or that one reign over you? remember alſo that I am your bone and your fleſh.

3 And his mothers brethren ſpake of him in the ears of all the men of Shechem all theſe words: and their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech; for they ſaid, He is our brother.

4 And they gave him threeſcore and ten pieces of ſilver, out of the houſe of Baal-berith: wherewith Abimelech hired vain and light perſons which followed him.

5 And he went unto his fathers houſe at Ophrah, and ſlew his brethren the ſons of Jerubbaal, being threeſcore and ten perſons, upon one ſtone: notwithſtanding, yet Jotham the youngeſt ſon of Jerubbaal was left; for he hid himſelf.

6 And all the men of Shechem gathered together, and all the houſe of Millo, and went and made Abimelech king, by the plain of the pillar that was in Shechem.

7 ¶ And when they told it to Jotham, he went and ſtood in the top of mount Gerizim, and lift up his voice, and cried, and ſaid unto them, Hearken unto me, you men of Shechem, that God may hearken unto you.

8 The trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them, and they ſaid unto the olive-tree, Reign thou over us.

9 But the olive-tree ſaid unto them, Should I leave my fatneſs wherewith by me they honour God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees?

10 And the trees ſaid to the fig-tree, Come thou, and reign over us.

11 But the fig-tree ſaid unto them, Should I forſake my ſweetneſs, and my good fruit, and go to be promoted over the trees?

12 Then ſaid the trees unto the vine, Come thou, and reign over us.

13 And the vine ſaid unto them, Should I leave my wine which cheereth God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees?

14 Then ſaid all the trees unto the bramble, Come thou, and reign over us.

15 And the bramble ſaid unto the trees, If in truth ye anoint me king over you, then come and put your truſt in my ſhadow: and if not, let fire come out of the bramble, and devour the cedars of Lebanon.

16 Now therefore, if ye have done truly and ſincerely, in that ye have made Abi-

Abimelech king, and if ye have dealt well with Jerubbaal and his houſe, and have done unto him according to the deſerving of his hands:

17 (For my father fought for you, and adventured his life far, and delivered you out of the hand of Midian:

18 And ye are riſen up againſt my fathers houſe this day, and have ſlain his ſons, threeſcore and ten perſons, upon one ſtone, and have made Abimelech the ſon of his maid-ſervant, king over the men of Shechem, becauſe he is your brother)

19 If ye then have dealt truly and ſincerely with Jerubbaal and with his houſe this day, then rejoice ye in Abimelech, and let him alſo rejoice in you:

20 But if not, let fire come out from Abimelech, and devour the men of Shechem, and the houſe of Millo: and let fire come out from the men of Shechem, and from the houſe of Millo, and devour Abimelech.

21 And Jotham ran away and fled, and went to Beer, and dwelt there, for fear of Abimelech his brother.

22 ¶ When Abimelech had reigned three years over Iſrael,

23 Then God ſent an evil ſpirit between Abimelech and the men of Shechem: and the men of Shechem dealt treacherouſly with Abimelech.

24 That the cruelty done to the threeſcore and ten ſons of Jerubbaal might come, and their blood be laid upon Abimelech their brother which ſlew them, and upon the men of Shechem which aided him in the killing of his brethren.

25 And the men of Shechem ſet liers in wait for him in the top of the mountains, and they robbed all that came along that way by them: and it was told Abimelech.

26 And Gaal the ſon of Ebed came with his brethren, and went over to Shechem: and the men of Shechem put their confidence in him.

27 And they went out into the fields, and gathered their vineyards, and trode the grapes, and made merry, and went into the houſe of their god, and did eat and drink, and curſed Abimelech.

28 And Gaal the ſon of Ebed ſaid, Who is Abimelech, and who is Shechem, that we ſhould ſerve him? is not he the ſon of Jerubbaal, and Zebul his officer? ſerve the men of Hamor the father of Shechem: for why ſhould we ſerve him?

29 And would to God this people were under my hand; then would I remove Abimelech. And he ſaid to Abimelech, Increaſe thine army, and come out.

30 ¶ And when Zebul the ruler of the city heard the words of Gaal the ſon of Ebed, his anger was kindled.

31 And he ſent meſſengers unto Abimelech privily, ſaying, Behold, Gaal the ſon of Ebed, and his brethren be come to Shechem; and behold, they fortify the city againſt thee.

32 Now therefore up by night, thou and the people that is with thee, and lie in wait in the field.

33 And it ſhall be, that in the morning, as ſoon as the ſun is up, thou ſhalt riſe early, and ſet upon the city: and behold, when he and the people that is with him come out againſt thee, then mayſt thou do to them as thou ſhalt find occaſion.

34 ¶ And Abimelech roſe up, and all the people that were with him, by night, and they laid wait againſt Shechem in four companies.

35 And Gaal the ſon of Ebed went out, and ſtood in the entring of the gate of the city: and Abimelech roſe up, and the people that were with him from lying in wait.

36 And when Gaal ſaw the people, he ſaid to Zebul, Behold, there come people down from the top of the mountains. And Zebul ſaid unto him, Thou ſeeſt the ſhadow of the mountains as if they were men.

37 And Gaal ſpake again, and ſaid, See, there come people down by the middle of the land, and another company come along by the plain of Meonenim.

38 Then ſaid Zebul unto him, Where is now thy mouth, wherewith thou ſaidſt, Who is Abimelech, that we ſhould ſerve him? is not this the people that thou haſt deſpiſed? go out, I pray now, and fight with them.

39 And Gaal went out before the men of Shechem, and fought with Abimelech.

40 And Abimelech chaſed him, and he fled before him, and many were overthrown and wounded, even unto the entring of the gate.

41 And Abimelech dwelt at Arumah: and Zebul thruſt out Gaal and his brethren, that they ſhould not dwell in Shechem.

42 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that the people went out into the field, and they told Abimelech.

43 And he took the people, and divided them into three companies, and laid wait in the field, and looked, and behold, the people were come forth out of the city, and he roſe up againſt them, and ſmote them.

44 And Abimelech, and the company that was with him, ruſhed forward, and ſtood in the entring of the gate of the city: and the two other companies ran upon all the people that were in the field, and ſlew them.

45 And Abimelech fought againſt the city all that day, and he took the city, and ſlew the people that was therein, and beat down the city, and ſowed it with ſalt.

46 ¶ And when all the men of the tower of Shechem heard that, they entred into an hold of the houſe of the god Berith.

47 And it was told Abimelech, that all the men of the tower of Shechem were gathered together.

48 And Abimelech gat him up to mount Zalmon, he and all the people that were with him; and Abimelech took an axe in his hand, and cut down a bough from the trees, and took it, and laid it on his ſhoulder, and ſaid unto the people that were with him, What ye have ſeen me do, make haſte, and do as I have done.

49 And all the people likewiſe cut down every man his bough, and followed Abimelech, and put them to the hold, and ſet the hold on fire upon them: ſo that all the men of the tower of Shechem died alſo, about a thouſand men and women.

50 ¶ Then went Abimelech to Thebez, and encamped againſt Thebez, and took it.

51 But there was a ſtrong tower within the city, and thither fled all the men and women, and all they of the city, and ſhut it to them, and gat them up to the top of the tower.

52 And Abimelech came unto the tower, and fought againſt it, and went hard unto the door of the tower, to burn it with fire.

53 And a certain woman caſt a piece of a milſtone upon Abimelechs head, and all to brake his skull.

54 Then he called haſtily unto the young man his armour-bearer, and ſaid unto him, Draw thy ſword, and ſlay me, that men ſay not of me, A woman ſlew him. And his young men thruſt him through, and he died.

55 And when the men of Iſrael ſaw that Abimelech was dead, they departed every man unto his place.

56 ¶ Thus God rendred the wickedneſs of Abimelech which he did unto his father, in ſlaying his ſeventy brethren.

57 And all the evil of the men of Shechem did God render upon their heads: and upon them came the curſe of Jotham the ſon of Jerubbaal.

Ver. 1. And Abimelech the ſon of Jerubbaal went.] From his father's houſe, where it is likely he was educated.

——Unto Shechem.] The place of his nativity.

——Unto his mother's brethren.] Tho' the word brethren has many times a large ſignification, yet it is reaſonable here to underſtand it properly, of his uncles by the mother's ſide; for his other near kindred are mentioned in the words following.

——And communed with them, and with all the family of the houſe of his mother's father, ſaying.] Diſcourſed with them, and with all the reſt of his couſins, and his near kinſmen, deſcended from his grandfather.

Ver. 2. Speak, I pray you, in the ears of all the men of Shechem.] By the men of this city are to be underſtood, the chief perſons of authority in it, as in the foregoing chapter the men of Succoth ſignify the princes and elders of that place.

——Whether is better for you, either that all the ſons of Jerubbaal (which are threeſcore and ten perſons) reign over you, or that one reign over you?] He wickedly ſuppoſed, that the ſons of Jerubbaal were ambitious of the kingdom which their father refuſed; and therefore prays them to conſider, what horrible diviſion and confuſion it would make, if ſo many were permitted to pretend to the government; and how much better it would be to chuſe one of them from among the reſt; pointing then (in the next words) to himſelf. He uſes the argument of Homer, mentioned by Ariſtotle, ἐκ ἀγαθὸν πολυκοιρανίη, &c. it is better to be ſubject to the rule of one man, than many.

——Remember alſo that I am your bone and your fleſh.] Since there muſt be a king, he repreſents himſelf as moſt deſireable to them of all other ſingle perſons, he being of the ſame tribe, and their fellow citizen.

Ver. 3. And his mother's brethren ſpake of him in the ears of all the men of Shechem in theſe words.] They were ready enough to promote his deſign, hoping for preferment under him. But neither he nor they conſidered, that it did not belong to them to ſet a judge over the people, much leſs a king, which was to ſhake off the government of God.

——And their hearts were inclined to follow Abimelech; for they ſaid, he is our brother.] This conſideration of their intereſt in him, prevailed with them againſt the cleareſt reaſon. For if it had been in any perſon's power to appoint a king, ſave God alone, the men of Shechem had it not in them, but all the men of Iſrael ought to have been conſulted.

Ver. 4. And they gave him threeſcore and ten pieces of ſilver out of the houſe of Baal-berith.] Out of the public treaſury, which was in this temple. It is uncertain what is meant by pieces of ſilver; but, in all probability, more than ſhekels; for they would have been but a ſmall preſent to make a man a prince. Therefore the Vulgar tranſlate it, ſo many pound weight of ſilver, which learned men approve of, particularly Staniſlaus Grepſius, in his book de Siclo & Talento. For ſeventy ſhekels were too little for his occaſions; and ſo many talents too much for them to give.

And

And thus Joſephus interprets Gen. xxxvii. 28. where it is ſaid, Joſeph was ſold to the Iſhmaelites for twenty pieces of ſilver; that is, for ſo many pound weight of it.

——Wherewith Abimelech hired vain and light perſons.] The Hebrew word rekim, which we tranſlate vain, ſignifies empty; that is, poor and needy perſons: And the other word pochazim, idle vagabond fellows, that could ſettle to no buſineſs, but wandered about the country; who being commonly men of looſe lives, were fitteſt for his purpoſe. Therefore Kimchi underſtands them, light-headed perſons, (as we ſpeak) who have no ſettled principles, but are diſpoſed to do any thing, tho' never ſo wicked. Such, Zephaniah ſaith, the prophets in his time were, iii. 4. light and treacherous.

——Which followed him.] As a conſtant guard to him.

Ver. 5. And he went unto his father's houſe at Ophrah.] With this wicked crew to attend him; who, we ſuppoſe, beſet the houſe, that none might eſcape out of it.

——And ſlew his brethren the ſons of Jerubbaal, being threeſcore and ten perſons.] All of them except Jotham. Thus Romulus ſlew his brother Remus, as Tully obſerves, (lib. 3. de Officiis) Specie quadam utilitatis, under the ſpecious pretence of the publick good; that the kingdom would be governed more happily by one, than by two perſons.

——Upon one ſtone.] Some underſtand this, as if he intended to make them a great victim to Baal; for a ſtone was ſometimes uſed for an altar, 1 Sam. vi. 14, 15. And ſo they take this to have been done in revenge of the ſacrifice of the bullock prepared for Baal upon the rock, (vi. 25, 26.) which crime of Gideon, as theſe idolaters accounted it, they deſigned to expiate by the ſacrifice of all his ſons they could lay hold on. For that the men of Shechem joined in this impious ſlaughter, is manifeſt from ver. 18. and 24. of this chapter.

—Notwithſtanding, yet Jotham the youngeſt ſon of Jerubbaal was left; for he hid himſelf.] Either he had ſome notice of their intention, and ſaved himſelf by flight, or when they came to ſeize him, got into ſome ſecret place in the houſe, where they could not find him; or, by ſome that pitied his youth, he was preſerved from falling into their hands. So the LXX and the Vulgar tranſlate it, He was hid.

Ver. 6. And all the men of Shechem gathered together, and all the houſe of Millo.] None ſeem to have underſtood theſe words better than Corn. Bertram, in his little book de Republ. Jud. cap. 9. Where, by Col-baale Shechem, he underſtands all the principal men or lords of that city; principes civitatis, the princes of the city, by whom it was governed: And by Col-beth Millo, all the citizens, who, in a full aſſembly (for Millo ſignifies fulneſs) agreed upon what follows: And ſo we read in the next chapter, x. 18. that the people and princes of Gilead conſulted together, who ſhould fight for them; that is, all the citizens met together, with their elders (as theſe princes are called, xi. 5.) to adviſe about this matter: For when the Canaanites, and other people, ruled over the Iſraelites, and oppreſſed them, they contented themſelves with ſetting ſuch a power over them, as ſhould make them pay what tribute they impoſed, and other taxes; but left them to their own government and laws, as appears from ch. viii. 14. where we read of the elders of Succoth, in the time of the Midianites.

—And went.] To the place where they were wont to meet for public buſineſs.

——And made Abimelech king.] Voted him their king in full ſenate.

——By the plain of the pillar that was in Shechem.] Or the oak (as St. Jerom commonly tranſlates this word elon) where Joſhua ſet up a pillar, as a token of the covenant between God and them, Joſh. xxiv. 26. that is, in a very remarkable place, as the manner was to do ſuch things: But here, we ſuppoſe, they proclaimed him king, after they had choſen him in the common-hall of the city: And ſome think they intended hereby to declare, that they would not forſake the worſhip of God, to which they were engaged, but only to join the worſhip of Baal with him: And after all, it muſt be confeſſed, that the Hebrew word mutzab doth not certainly ſignify a pillar; for we cannot find it ſo uſed in any other place of ſcripture: And therefore St. Jerom tranſlates this paſſage thus, By the oak which ſtood in Shechem, and the LXX, ἐν βαλάνῳ τῇ ϛάσεως, which ſeems to ſignify as if it was the place where they had their ſtations, or ſolemn aſſemblies. See Mr. Mede's Diſcourſe xviii.

Ver. 7. And when they told it to Jotham.] Who had ſome friends among them, who took care to inform him of what paſſed: But it is an amazing thing, that in all Iſrael there ſhould none be found, to revenge the murder of this noble family; of which no account can be given, but that, with the ſenſe of God and religion, they had loſt all goodneſs and virtue. See chap. viii. 34, 35.

——He went.] From the place where he lay hid.

——And ſtood in the top of mount Gerizim.] Which overlooked the city of Shechem. See Deut. xxvii. 12, 13.

——And lift up his voice, and cried, and ſaid unto them.] This was not on the ſame day that Abimelech was inaugurated, but ſome time after; when he, it is probable, was abſent, and all the people met (as Joſephus ſaith) at a public feſtival, which was a fair opportunity for him to declare his mind to them.

—Hearken unto me, ye men of Shechem, that God may hearken unto you.] It is a form of adjuration, whereby he not only intreats, but obliges them to be as attentive to them, as they deſired God would be to their requeſts.

Ver. 8. The trees went forth on a time.] We think it neceſſary to obſerve here, that this is the firſt inſtance we have of this manner of ſpeaking by parables. We do not indeed take upon us to attribute the invention of it to the Hebrews, becauſe we do not know how far they might have learnt it elſewhere; tho' if that had really been the caſe, one may juſtly wonder that Moſes, who was ſo well verſed in all the learning of his time, and had ſo much occaſion for this excellent method of inſtructing and reproving his untractable and rebellious nation, ſhould yet never make uſe of it in all the forty years of his being their leader. It undoubtedly was uſed by other nations in his time, ſince he mentions thoſe who recorded the overthrow of Sihon and his metropolis in proverbs, and repreſents Balaam as uttering his prophecies in ſome ſuch proverbial ſpeeches: But if we may judge of them at this diſtance, by the ſhort ſpecimen he has given of them, they were vaſtly inferior in elegance and energy to this of Jotham, and others which were uſed by the Jews; ſo that thoſe may be juſtly ſaid to have been the improvers, or rather perfecters of this parabolic language. Nothing, certainly, is more palpable, than the vanity of the Greeks, who boaſt themſelves the authors of it, when it was in greater perfection among the Jews, before thoſe Greeks were civilized from the loweſt degree of ignorance and barbarity, than ever they raiſed it to after their arrival at the higheſt pitch of polite learning; an evident proof of which we have, not only in the ſpeech of Jotham, who lived ſeven hundred years before Æſop, the moſt celebrated of all the Pagan fabuliſts of antiquity, but in that excellent one, by which the prophet Nathan made David pronounce a ſevere ſentence of condemnation againſt himſelf, for a crime which it would have been dangerous ſo much as to have mentioned to him, in any other form of ſpeech, 2 Sam. xii. 1, &c. We find it alſo frequently uſed, not by prophets only, but by courtiers, politicians, and ſoldiers, in the Old Teſtament, 2 Sam. xiv. 1, &c. 1 Kings xx. 38, &c. chap. xxii. 19. and likewiſe by our bleſſed Saviour, in the New.

——To anoint a king over him.] This was two hundred years before the firſt kings of Iſrael, Saul and David, were anointed, which ſhews the great antiquity of this cuſtom; and that it was the ſame thing to anoint a perſon, and to declare him king.

——And they ſaid unto the olive-tree, Reign thou over us.] Some learned men are of opinion, that Jotham by the olive-tree figures out the perſon of Othniel, who was of the tribe of Judah; to which we may add, that this tribe is compared to an olive-tree, Jerem. xi. 16.

——But the olive-tree ſaid unto them, ſhould I leave my fatneſs, &c.] The trees are repreſented as ſpeaking after the manner of men, who, when they find themſelves in a plentiful condition, and live at eaſe, are unwilling to charge themſelves with employments that require much care and trouble.

Ver. 10. And the trees ſaid to the fig-tree, Come thou and reign over us.] It has been thought, that Jotham, by the fig-tree, intended to repreſent Deborah, whoſe name, as we have already obſerved, ſignifies a bee; and certain it is, that nothing reſembles the ſweet flavour of figs more than honey.

Ver.

Ver. 11. But the fig-tree ſaid unto them, Should I forſake my ſweetneſs, &c.] No fruit is more luſcious than a fig, and conſequently it may be conſidered as an apt repreſentation of the ſweet content and ſatisfaction that may be enjoyed in a private life; and which it would be folly to exchange for the tumultuous inquietudes and anxieties which men experience in the conduct of public affairs; if they are not prevailed upon to undertake them, out of a ſincere regard for the welfare of the community.

Ver. 12. Then ſaid the trees unto the vine, Come thou and reign over us.] Gideon is ſuppoſed, by ſome, to be here repreſented by the vine: For he was of the family of Joſeph, which is compared to a fruitful bough, Gen. xlix. 22.

Ver. 13. And the vine ſaid unto them, Should I leave my wine, which cheereth God and man, &c.] This is a form of ſpeech imitated by the Heathens, particularly by Virgil, lib. 2. Georg. ver. 101. where ſpeaking of noble vines, or wine, he declares they were — Menſis & Diis accepta ſecundis, an acceptable regale in the banquets of gods and men. Wine, as the Hebrew doctors obſerve, was not only uſed in their ſacrifices, as it likewiſe was among the Pagans; but Jarchi adds, that till the drink-offering was poured out, they did not begin the hymn which was then ſung to God.

Ver. 14. Then ſaid all the trees unto the bramble, &c.] This was the meaneſt of all plants, and fit for nothing but to be burnt; conſequently it was a proper repreſentation of Abimelech, from whom the Iſraelites could receive no benefit, but much trouble and vexation from his ambitious cruelty.

Ver. 15. And the bramble ſaid unto the trees, If in truth ye anoint me king over you.] This is an excellent repreſentation of Abimelech's diſtruſt of the ſincerity of the Shechemites, for which he had great reaſon, having no title to the kingdom, but what he pretended to derive from the great atchievements of his father; tho' at the ſame time he was the baſeſt of all his ſons.

——— Then come and put your truſt in my ſhadow.] Be aſſured of my protection, if ye live quietly under my government. This repreſents the ridiculous vanity of Abimelech, in imagining that he ſhould be able to maintain the authority of a king. For a bramble never expands it ſelf in ſuch a manner as to afford either ſhade or ſhelter, it being a kind of thorn which the Hebrews call atad; from whence, as Avenarius obſerves, came the word aphris, among the Greeks; and, in Dioſcorides, the word ἀταδίμ. And from hence, he thinks, was derived the word ἀτάω, and ἀταζω, which ſignify to wound.

——— And if not, let fire come out of the bramble and devour the cedars of Lebanon.] This repreſents the vengeance Abimelech would execute on the greateſt among them, if they proved unfaithful to him.

Ver. 16. Now therefore, if ye have done truly and ſincerely, &c.] Now follows Jotham's application of this apologue, as the Greeks call it; and it is to this effect: "I appeal to you, whether your choice of Abimelech, "preferably to any of the ſons of Gideon, your late bene-"factor and deliverer, be either grateful or juſt; or ra-"ther, indeed, whether the barbarous maſſacre of all his "children, for the ſake of a ſlave's ſon, be not an inſtance "of the blackeſt cruelty and ingratitude? If you think it "is not, I congratulate you for your new king, and him "for his new dignity; but if it is, may he prove a curſe "to Shechem and Millo, and you to him."

Jotham, after ſo bold and ſevere a ſpeech, did not think it adviſeable to expoſe himſelf to the reſentment of Abimelech, but fled to Beer, ver. 21. a city in the tribe of Judah, not far from Jebus, or Jeruſalem, where he continued all the time of that tyrant's reign; which, according to his prediction, proved both thorny, and of a ſhort duration; for, beſide the mortification he ſuſtain'd in not being acknowledged by any of the tribes, the Sacred Hiſtorian declares, that God ſent an evil ſpirit, ver. 23. that is, cauſed a ſpirit of jealouſy to be ſown between the Shechemites and him, which ended in a full reſolution to expiate their folly by his death. But God ſuffered him to eſcape for the preſent, that he might ſhortly become the inſtrument of a more ſevere chaſtiſement againſt them Gaal, the ſon of Ebed, whom R. Solomon ſuppoſes to have been a Gentile, and not one of the Jewiſh nation, being informed of the hatred they had conceived againſt their new elected king, came to Shechem, with an intention to ſpirit it into an open rupture; but Zebul, whom Abimelech had intruſted with the government of that city, and who was a fit ſervant for ſuch a maſter, failed not to acquaint him with it, while, in outward appearance, he ſided with Gaal and his party. At length, after ſeveral bickerings on both ſides, Gaal perceived Abimelech marching toward the town, and went out with his men to oppoſe him, but was repulſed; and when he would have re-enter'd Shechem, Zebul drove him back. What became of him and his party, the Sacred Text has not declared; but, upon Abimelech's entering the town, the terrified inhabitants retired into the temple of Baal-berith, as a ſanctuary, where they flattered themſelves with ſecurity from all danger; but they were ſoon made ſenſible to their coſt, what a god they had preferred to that of Iſrael. Abimelech commanded a party of men to follow him into the next wood, where every one, after his example, cut down a bough of a tree, and having piled them round the temple, and ſet fire to them, the people were all ſmothered to death, to the number of about a thouſand men and women. He then cauſed the city and tower to be razed to the ground, and to be ſtrewed with ſalt: And thus was the firſt part of Jotham's prophecy fulfilled, namely, and the fire from the bramble burnt up the cedars of Lebanon.

The next part followed ſoon after, and Abimelech, flushed with his ſucceſs, marched againſt Thebez, a city of Judah, which had alſo taken up arms againſt him, and there met with an ignominious death, where he expected a new conqueſt. The citizens, repulſed by his victorious troops, retired into a tower, where he thought to have burnt them alive, when a woman flung down a ſtone, which lighted upon his head, and delivered her people from his fury. Abimelech finding death to approach, and being more aſhamed from the hand of whom he received it, than of his own parricides and tyranny, commanded his ſervant Baal to diſpatch him, which he immediately did. This was the exemplary end of Abimelech, whoſe ambition made him aſpire to a dignity, which has juſtly branded his memory, and ſullied the liſt of the judges, he being the only one who uſurped and abuſed that dignity. It laſted about three years, after which God made choice of a more worthy perſon to ſucceed him.

Ver. 56 Thus God rendered the wickedneſs of Abimelech which he did unto his father, &c.] This and the following verſe conclude the hiſtory of Abimelech, with a Divine admonition, that no man ſhould think ſuch things come to paſs by chance; but that God, the judge of all, puniſhed both Abimelech and the men of Shechem according to their deſerts, and made them the inſtruments of each others deſtruction. And it is remarkable, that this puniſhment overtook them ſpeedily, within leſs than four years after their crime was committed.

CHAP. X.

1 Tola judgeth Iſrael in Shamir. 3 Jair, whoſe thirty ſons had thirty cities. 6 The Philiſtines and Ammonites oppreſs Iſrael. 10 In their miſery, God ſendeth them to their falſe gods. 15 Upon their repentance, he pitieth them.

AND after Abimelech there aroſe to defend Iſrael, Tola the ſon of Puah, the ſon of Dodo, a man of Iſſachar; and he dwelt in Shamir in mount Ephraim.

2 And he judged Iſrael twenty and three years, and died, and was buried in Shamir.

3 ¶ And after him aroſe Jair, a Gileadite, and judged Iſrael twenty and two years.

4 And he had thirty ſons that rode on thirty aſs-colts, and they had thirty cities, which which are called Havoth-jair unto this day, which are in the land of Gilead.

5 And Jair died, and was buried in Camon.

6 And the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the LORD, and ſerved Baalim, and Aſhtaroth, and the gods of Syria, and the gods of Zidon, and the gods of Moab, and the gods of the children of Ammon, and the gods of the Philiſtines, and forſook the LORD, and ſerved not him.

7 ¶ And the anger of the LORD was hot againſt Iſrael, and he ſold them into the hands of the Philiſtines, and into the hands of the children of Ammon.

8 And that year they vexed and oppreſſed the children of Iſrael: eighteen years all the children of Iſrael that were on the other ſide Jordan in the land of the Amorites, which is in Gilead.

9 Moreover, the children of Ammon paſſed over Jordan, to fight alſo againſt Judah, and againſt Benjamin, and againſt the houſe of Ephraim; ſo that Iſrael was ſore diſtreſſed.

10 ¶ And the children of Iſrael cried unto the LORD, ſaying, We have ſinned againſt thee, both becauſe we have forſaken our God, and alſo ſerved Baalim.

11 And the LORD ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, Did not I deliver you from the Egyptians, and from the Amorites, from the children of Ammon, and from the Philiſtines?

12 The Zidonians alſo, and the Amalekites, and the Maonites did oppreſs you, and ye cried to me, and I delivered you out of their hand.

13 Yet ye have forſaken me, and ſerved other gods: wherefore I will deliver you no more.

14 Go and cry unto the gods which ye have choſen; let them deliver you in the time of your tribulation.

15 ¶ And the children of Iſrael ſaid unto the LORD, We have ſinned, do thou unto us whatſoever ſeemeth good unto thee; deliver us only, we pray thee, this day.

16 And they put away the ſtrange gods from among them, and ſerved the LORD: and his ſoul was grieved for the miſery of Iſrael.

17 Then the children of Ammon were gathered together, and encamped in Gilead: and the children of Iſrael aſſembled themſelves together, and encamped in Mizpeh.

18 And the people and princes of Gilead ſaid one to another, What man is he that will begin to fight againſt the children of Ammon? he ſhall be head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

Ver. 1. And after Abimelech there roſe up to defend Iſrael.] It is not ſaid that God ſtirred him up, as he did the former judges, but it muſt be ſo underſtood, becauſe God would not have ſaved Iſrael by one who took upon him this high office, without a Divine authority.

——Tola the ſon of Puah, the ſon of Dodo.] The Greek and Latin verſions take the word Dodo not as a proper name, but in a grammatical ſenſe, and from dod, which ſignifies uncle, with the letter vau affixed, and accordingly render it his uncle, meaning Abimelech, who is mentioned in the beginning of the verſe, whence they ſuppoſe Tola's father to have been Gideon's brother. The Hebrew, indeed will bear them out in this conſtruction; but there is one difficulty againſt them; namely, that Gideon was of the tribe of Manaſſeh, and Puah, of that of Iſſachar; ſo that they could at moſt be but uterine brothers, nor even ſo, without ſuppoſing that their mother had married firſt in one tribe, and then in the other.

The Sacred Hiſtorian records nothing particular of this judge, except that he dwelt at Shamir upon mount Ephraim, where he was buried, after he had judged Iſrael for the ſpace of twenty-three years.

Ver. 3. And after him aroſe Jair, &c.] Tola was ſucceeded by Jair, a wealthy man of that part of the tribe of Manaſſeh which dwelt on the other ſide Jordan, and poſſeſſed a vaſt territory in the land of Gilead, in which were thirty cities, which he conſigned to his thirty ſons; whence they are called Havoth, or hamlets of Jair.

Ver. 4. And he had thirty ſons that rode on thirty aſs colts.] It was cuſtomary for the nobleſt perſons to ride on thoſe beaſts, and that not only in Judæa, but likewiſe in Arabia, and other countries, even among the Romans. They perhaps were ordered by their father to ride circuits up and down the country, in order to adminiſter juſtice according to the law, as Samuel did when he judged Iſrael, 1 Sam. vii. 16. For the courts of judicature appointed by the law, Deut. xvi. 18. were not yet ſettled.

Jair judged Iſrael twenty-two years, and was buried in the city of Camon in the land of Gilead.

Ver. 6. And the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the Lord.] Or had done evil again, as was ſaid chap. viii. 33. and is now repeated to ſhew the cauſe, why God delivered them up into the hands of their enemies.

——And ſerved Baalim and Aſhtaroth.] As they had frequently done in former times.

——And the gods of Syria.] They added to their former idolatries the worſhip of new gods; particularly thoſe of Syria, which were Bel, or Baal, Aſtarte, Dagon, Moloch, and Thammuz.

——And the gods of Zidon.] The ſupreme gods of the Sidonians were Baal and Aſhtaroth; but it is likely they had more, ſuch as Aſaroth, Aſarim, and Aſarah.

——And the gods of Moab.] The principal of which was Chemoſh, 1 Kings xi. 7.

——And the gods of the children of Ammon.] The chief of which was Milcom, 1 Kings xi. 5. where Aſhtaroth is mentioned as the goddeſs of the Sidonians.

——And the gods of the Philiſtines.] They had more, it ſeems, beſide Dagon, but their names are not mentioned in Scripture.

——And forſook the Lord and ſerved him not.] This was ſo monſtrous an apoſtacy, that it may be worth while to enquire into its cauſe. One reaſon may poſſibly have been, that the ſolemn reading of the law to all the people, once in ſeven years, was neglected: For we do not read that it was publickly done from the time of Joſhua, to the reign of Jehoſhaphat, which was above five hundred years. It doth not follow indeed that it was not done, becauſe it is not recorded; but if we conſider their ſtrange propenſity to idolatry, after the death of every judge, and how ſoon after the death of David, (even in the reign of his ſon Solomon) it began to appear among them, it may naturally incline one to think there was not ſufficient care taken about this matter.

Ver. 7. And the anger of the Lord was hot againſt Iſrael.] This moſt ungrateful conduct of the Iſraelites provoked God to reduce them to a fifth ſtate of ſervitude of eighteen years under the Philiſtines and Ammonites. Their invaſion began in the ſame year, but did not end at the ſame time, for the Ammonites domineer'd over them only eighteen years, but the Philiſtines forty. We muſt not omit the conſtruction which the great Archbiſhop Uſher makes of the words in the Hebrew text, which he tranſlates in this manner. They vexed and oppreſſed the children of Iſrael that year, namely, the eighteenth year. For the oppreſſion, he thinks, began in the fifth year of Jair, and continued till the twenty-ſecond, which was his laſt. But this is ſaid only to ſolve a difficulty, which is, that if we ſuppoſe this oppreſſion to have begun after the death of Jair, and to have laſted eighteen years, as our tranſlation imports, it will be impoſſible to make the years of the government of the judges agree with what we read, 1 Kings vi. 1. That Solomon began to build the temple at Jeruſalem, in the four hundred and eightieth year after the Iſraelites came out of Egypt. But there is a more eaſy method of accounting for this difficulty, by ſuppoſing that ſeveral of the judges were contemporaries, as will be apparent in this very hiſtory: And if we do not take theſe words eighteen years, to ſignify the continuance of the Ammoniti ſh oppreſſion, it is not mentioned any where elſe, as the duration of all other oppreſſions is.

Ver. 9. Moreover the children of Ammon paſſed over Jordan to fight againſt Judah, and againſt Benjamin, and againſt the houſe of Ephraim.] Who were the tribes that lay next to Jordan.

——So that Iſrael were ſore diſtreſſed.] For while the Ammonites afflicted thoſe countries in the eaſtern part of Canaan, the Philiſtines ravaged the countries of Zebulun and Aſher, and the reſt of the tribes that lay on the weſtern coaſt. For ſo the LXX explain theſe words in the preceding verſe, in that year, ἐν τῷ καιρῷ ἐκείνῳ, in that ſame year, the Philiſtines in the weſt, and the Ammonites in the eaſt oppreſſed the children of Iſrael.

Ver. 10. And the children of Iſrael cried unto the Lord, ſaying, we have ſinned againſt thee, both becauſe we have forſaken our God, and alſo ſerved Baalim.] All the reſt of the Pagan gods, mentioned ver. 6. are comprehended under the name of Baalim, which were ſo many and various, that they had entirely alienated the affections of the Iſraelites from their own God, as they now acknowledge, in a penitential ſtrain.

Ver. 11. And the Lord ſaid unto the children of Iſrael.] Either by himſelf, the ſon of God appearing in a viſible ſhape, as was then uſual: Or by ſome prophet, whom he raiſed and ſent to this purpoſe: Or by the prieſt, who was conſulted in the preſent emergency.

——Did I not deliver you from the Egyptians.] Exod. xii.

——And from the Amorites.] Who would have oppoſed their paſſage into the land of Canaan, Numb. xxi.

——And from the Philiſtines?] In the days of Shamgar.

Ver. 12. The Zidonians alſo.] We never read of any invaſion made by them upon the Iſraelites; but only in general, that God left them, among other people, unſubdued, to prove the children of Iſrael, iii. 3. and they took their opportunities, in all likelyhood, to afflict them.

——And the Amalekites.] Who joined both with the Moabites and the Midianites, to oppreſs them, iii. 13. vi. 3.

——And the Maonites did oppreſs you.] Maon is the name of a Nation; the plural of which, Meunim, occurs in many places, particularly in 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7. where they are called in Greek Μιναῖοι A people of Arabia, both in what we call Felix, and in that called Deſerta. Which latter was not far from the Moabites and Ammonites; with whom interpreters have frequently confounded the Meunites, as if by a tranſpoſition of letters, they were the ſame with the Ammonites: Which likewiſe miſled our tranſlators in this verſion of thoſe words 2 Chron. xx. 1. And with them from the Ammonites; which makes no ſenſe; but if we read, with them from Meunim, as it is in Greek, ἐκ Μιναίων, all runs clearly, and makes perfect ſenſe. And thus we ought to tranſlate that paſſage, 1 Chron. iv. 41. where our tranſlators took the word Meunim to ſignify dwellings, and render the words thus, The habitations which we found there; as if where there were tents (which are mentioned before) there were not habitations, which are the ſame. Meunim, therefore, is the name of a people (as the LXX underſtood it) who dwelt in tents, being Arabians: And as they were neighbours to the Moabites and Ammonites, they joined with them in the invaſion of the land of Iſrael, and helped to oppreſs them. But they are plainly diſtinguiſhed from the Ammonites in the place firſt mentioned, and 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7, 8.

God having thus reproached the apoſtate Iſraelites with the various deliverances which he had wrought in their favour, bid them go and cry for aid to thoſe deities they had adopted, ver. 14. This anſwer, and the preſſing danger they were in from the Ammonites, who had already paſſed the Jordan, and were preparing to fall upon Judah and Benjamin, brought them to ſuch a ſenſe of their folly, that they put away their ſtrange gods, and began to ſerve the Lord in earneſt. Upon which the Sacred Text declares that his ſoul was grieved for the miſery of Iſrael. ver. 16. We do not read before of ſuch an expreſſion of the Divine compaſſion toward them. Every one knows the Divine nature is not capable of grief properly ſo called; the meaning therefore is, he in much mercy reſolved to deliver them upon their repentance.

The Iſraelites hereupon aſſembled at Mizpeh, in order to ſtop the career of the children of Ammon. There were two Mizpehs on the other ſide Jordan, one in the tribe of Gad, the other in the half tribe of Manaſſeh, the latter of which may probably be thought to be the place where they now aſſembled; Jephthah, who was afterward choſen their captain, being one of the tribe.

CHAP. XI.

1 The covenant between Jephthah and the Gileadites, that he ſhould be their head. 12 The treaty of peace between him and the Ammonites is in vain. 29 Jephthah's vow. 32 His conqueſt of the Ammonites. 34 He performeth his vow on his daughter.

NOW Jephthah the Gileadite was a mighty man of valour, and he was the ſon of an harlot: and Gilead begat Jephthah.

2 And Gileads wife bare him ſons, and his wifes ſons grew up, and they thruſt out Jephthah, and ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt not inherit in our fathers houſe, for thou art the ſon of a ſtrange woman.

3 Then Jephthah fled from his brethren, and dwelt in the land of Tob: and there were gathered vain men to Jephthah, and went out with him.

4 ¶ And it came to paſs in proceſs of time, that the children of Ammon made war againſt Iſrael.

5 And it was ſo, that when the children of Ammon made war againſt Iſrael, the elders of Gilead went to fetch Jephthah out of the land of Tob:

6 And they ſaid unto Jephthah, Come and be our captain, that we may fight with the children of Ammon.

7 And Jephthah ſaid unto the elders of Gilead, Did not ye hate me, and expel me out of my fathers houſe? and why are ye come unto me now when ye are in diſtreſs?

8 And

Abimelech kill'd by a Milstone

8 And the elders of Gilead ſaid unto Jephthah, Therefore we turn again to thee now, that thou mayſt go with us, and fight againſt the children of Ammon, and be our head over all the inhabitants of Gilead.

9 And Jephthah ſaid unto the elders of Gilead, If ye bring me home again to fight againſt the children of Ammon, and the LORD deliver them before me? ſhall I be your head?

10 And the elders of Gilead ſaid unto Jephthah, The LORD be witneſs between us, if we do not ſo according to thy words.

11 Then Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the people made him head and captain over them: and Jephthah uttered all his words before the LORD in Mizpeh.

12 ¶ And Jephthah ſent meſſengers unto the king of the children of Ammon, ſaying, What haſt thou to do with me, that thou art come againſt me to fight in my land?

13 And the king of the children of Ammon anſwered unto the meſſengers of Jephthah, Becauſe Iſrael took away my land when they came up out of Egypt, from Arnon, even unto Jabbok, and unto Jordan: now therefore reſtore thoſe lands again peaceably.

14 And Jephthah ſent meſſengers again unto the king of the children of Ammon:

15 And ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith Jephthah, Iſrael took not away the land of Moab, nor the land of the children of Ammon:

16 But when Iſrael came up from Egypt, and walked through the wilderneſs, unto the Red-ſea, and came to Kadeſh;

17 Then Iſrael ſent meſſengers unto the king of Edom, ſaying, Let me, I pray thee, paſs through thy land: but the king of Edom would not hearken thereto. And in like manner they ſent unto the king of Moab; but he would not conſent: and Iſrael abode in Kadeſh.

18 Then they went along through the wilderneſs, and compaſſed the land of Edom, and the land of Moab, and came by the eaſt-ſide of the land of Moab, and pitched on the other ſide of Arnon, but came not within the border of Moab: for Arnon was the border of Moab.

19 And Iſrael ſent meſſengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, the king of Heſhbon; and Iſrael ſaid unto him, Let us paſs, we pray thee, through thy land, unto my place.

20 But Sihon truſted not Iſrael to paſs through his coaſt: but Sihon gathered all his people together, and pitched in Jahaz, and fought againſt Iſrael.

21 And the LORD God of Iſrael delivered Sihon and all his people into the hand of Iſrael, and they ſmote them: ſo Iſrael poſſeſſed all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that country.

22 And they poſſeſſed all the coaſts of the Amorites, from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and from the wilderneſs even unto Jordan.

23 So now the LORD God of Iſrael hath diſpoſſeſſed the Amorites from before his people Iſrael, and ſhouldſt thou poſſeſs it?

24 Wilt not thou poſſeſs that which Chemoſh thy god giveth thee to poſſeſs? So whomſoever the LORD our God ſhall drive out from before us, them will we poſſeſs.

25 And now art thou any thing better than Balak the ſon of Zippor king of Moab: did he ever ſtrive againſt Iſrael, or did he ever fight againſt them,

26 While Iſrael dwelt in Heſhbon and her towns, and in Aroer and her towns, and in all the cities that be along by the coaſts of Arnon, three hundred years? why therefore did ye not recover them within that time.

27 Wherefore I have not ſinned againſt thee, but thou doſt me wrong to war againſt me: the LORD the Judge be judge this day between the children of Iſrael and the children of Ammon.

28 Howbeit, the king of the children of Ammon hearkened not unto the words of Jephthah which he ſent him.

29 ¶ Then the ſpirit of the LORD came upon Jephthah, and he paſſed over Gilead and Manaſſeh, and paſſed over Mizpeh of Gilead, and from Mizpeh of Gilead he paſſed over unto the children of Ammon.

30 And Jephthah vowed a vow unto the LORD, and ſaid, If thou ſhalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into mine hands,

31 Then it ſhall be, that whatſoever cometh forth of the doors of my houſe to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, ſhall ſurely be the

LORDS

LORDS, and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering.

32 ¶ So Jephthah paſſed over unto the children of Ammon to fight againſt them, and the LORD delivered them into his hands.

33 And he ſmote them from Aroer, even till thou come to Minnith, even twenty cities, and unto the plain of the vineyards, with a very great ſlaughter. Thus the children of Ammon were ſubdued before the children of Iſrael.

34 ¶ And Jephthah came to Mizpeh unto his houſe, and behold, his daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and with dances, and ſhe was his only child: beſide her he had neither ſon nor daughter.

35 And it came to paſs when he ſaw her, that he rent his clothes, and ſaid, Alas, my daughter, thou haſt brought me very low, and thou art one of them that trouble me: for I have opened my mouth unto the LORD, and I cannot go back.

36 And ſhe ſaid unto him, My father, if thou haſt opened thy mouth unto the LORD, do to me according to that which hath proceeded out of thy mouth; foraſmuch as the LORD hath taken vengeance for thee of thine enemies, even of the children of Ammon.

37 And ſhe ſaid unto her father, Let this thing be done for me: Let me alone two months, that I may go up and down upon the mountains, and bewail my virginity, I and my fellows.

38 And he ſaid, Go. And he ſent her away for two months: and ſhe went with her companions, and bewailed her virginity upon the mountains.

39 And it came to paſs at the end of two months, that ſhe returned unto her father, who did with her according to his vow which he had vowed: and ſhe knew no man. And it was a cuſtom in Iſrael,

40 That the daughters of Iſrael went yearly to lament the daughter of Jephthah the Gileadite four days in a year.

Ver. 1. Now Jephthah the Gileadite was a mighty man of valour, and he was the ſon of a harlot.] Some by the word Zonah, underſtand a concubine, but it never ſignifies ſo in Scripture, but, as we tranſlate it, an harlot, and ſometimes one that kept a publick houſe. But ſeveral of the Jewiſh doctors think, this word may ſignify either one of another tribe, or a ſtranger, one of another nation. And ſo Joſephus himſelf here underſtands it, that he was ξένου περὶ τὴν μητέρα, a ſtranger by the mother's ſide. And Saidas Batricides declares, his mother was an Iſhmaelite. It is certain that ſuch were called γόθαι (baſtards) by the Greeks, who were born of a wife that was not a citizen. But among the Jews, if ſuch perſons embraced the law, their children were not ſtained, but rendered capable of inheriting among the reſt of their brethren; and therefore Jephthah complains of his expulſion ver. 7. looking upon himſelf as unjuſtly treated, which could not have been ſaid had he been a baſtard.

—— And Gilead begot Jephthah.] One of the poſterity of Gilead, the ſon of Manaſſeh, was his father, and was called after the name of his great anceſtor.

Ver. 2. And Gilead's wife bare him ſons, and his wife's ſons grew up, and they thruſt out Jephthah.] When his father was dead; for till then the inheritance was not to be divided; and if he had been living, he would not have ſuffered them to deal ſo injuriouſly by Jephthah, who was the ſon of a wife whom he loved extreamly, as Joſephus relates lib. 5. Antiq. cap. 9.

Ver. 3. And Jephthah fled from his brethren, and dwelt in the land of Tob.] This land was ſituated on the moſt northern part of Manaſſeh's lot, on the other ſide Jordan. It is called Toby, and its inhabitants Tobinians or Tubinians, 1 Maccab. v. 13. 2 Maccab. xii. 17.

—— And there were gathered vain men to Jephthah.] Or empty men; for the word Rekim ſignifies neceſſitous perſons, ſuch as reſorted to David when he fled from Saul. 1 Sam. xxii. 2. So, we ſuppoſe, it is to be here underſtood, and not that they were profligate perſons, for the word pochazim, light men, is not here added as it is in the ſtory of thoſe who followed Abimelech. ix. 4. Grotius, therefore, doth not ſeem to have rightly repreſented Jephthah, when he declares, he was one of thoſe who, ex prædonum ducibus juſti duces facti ſunt, Lib. 3. de jure Belli & pacis. cap. 3. ſect. 3. For theſe were not a band of Robbers, who lived by rapine; but only men of ſmall or no fortune, who were glad of an opportunity to join themſelves to ſo gallant a man as Jephthah was known to be. And ſo the word we tranſlate gathered, imports, that they liſted themſelves under him in a voluntary manner, being ſo induced by the great fame of his humanity and valour. But Grotius herein follows the vulgate, and the word Latrocinates (robbers) is added without any authority, either from the Hebrew, Chaldee, or Septuagint.

Ver. 4. And it came to paſs in proceſs of time.] In the Hebrew it is, after days, that is, as archbiſhop Uſher underſtands it, after thoſe years mentioned, x. 8. namely eighteen years, at the expiration of which, when Jair was dead, the Ammonites invaded Iſrael; but there is no good ground for this interpretation. Therefore by after days, we underſtand, ſometime after their retreat into their own country, for when the Iſraelites upon their ſincere repentance ſeemed to have recovered their ancient courage, and aſſembled at Mizpeh, in order to drive the Ammonites out of their country x. 17. that people ſeemed to have left the ſiege of Gilead, and to have made a retreat into their own land, either to recruit their army, or for ſome other reaſon; for thither Jephthah ſent Meſſengers to them, after he was choſen general of the Iſraelites, and there he fought them, when they would not yield to his juſt arguments, that they invaded the children of Iſrael a very injurious manner.

Ver. 5. And it was ſo, that when the children of Ammon made war againſt Iſrael, that the elders of Gilead went to fetch Jephthah, &c.] Some of the principal perſons of the country, were ſent in the name of the inhabitants of Gilead to invite Jephthah to return to them.

Ver. 6. And they ſaid unto Jephthah, come and be our captain.] They did not pretend to make him their king, (remembering perhaps what had befallen the men of Shechem and Abimelech) but only the leader of their army.

Ver. 7. And Jephthah ſaid unto the elders of Gilead, did not ye hate me, &c.] This ſignifies that his brethren ejected him by the aſſiſtance of the publick authority; or the elders who ſaw the wrong his brethren did him, connived at it, and did not interpoſe, according to their office to render juſtice to him, hereby they made his expulſion their own act.

—— And why are ye come unto me now when ye are in diſtreſs?] Which was as much as if he had ſaid, what reaſon have you to expect that I ſhould have any regard to your requeſt, ſince I am ſenſible your diſtreſs is the only motive that induces you to recal me?

Ver. 8. And the elders of Gilead ſaid unto Jephthah, therefore we turn again unto thee now.] This may relate either to what immediately goes before, and then the ſenſe is, is, we acknowledge ourſelves to be in diſtreſs, and therefore implore thy aid (which if thou wilt afford us, thou ſhalt command us all for ever) or, it may refer to the beginning of the preceding verſe, and the meaning will then be, we are ſenſible of the injury that was offered thee, and are therefore come to repair it by inviting thee to be our leader; for that is meant by their turning again to him: They had altered their mind, and not only revoked that unjuſt act, but offered him a recompence.

Jephthah received this meſſage with ſome miſtruſt, and would not accept of the dignity they offered him, till they had confirmed it to him by an oath ver. 10.

Ver. 11. Then Jephthah went with the elders of Gilead, and the people made him head and captain over them.] In a full aſſembly of the people with the princes, he was made general of their army; with an aſſurance he ſhould continue to be their head after the war was ſucceſsfully ended.

——— And Jephthah uttered all his words before the Lord.] The people had performed their parts, but Jephthah could undertake nothing without the approbation of God, before whom, in a ſolemn prayer, he unfolded all that he had ſaid unto them; and it is likely that God anſwered him by ſome prophet, and authorized him to undertake the conduct and Government of the people, for if he had done it without a Divine Warrant, the ſpirit of the Lord would not have come upon him, as we read it did. ver. 29.

Ver. 12. And Jephthah ſent meſſengers unto the king of the children of Ammon.] Now he plainly acts as a chief governor, in appointing an embaſſy to the king of the Ammonites; which power he would not have aſſumed if it had not been given him by God.

——— Saying what haſt thou to do with me, that thou art come againſt me to fight in my land?] This is the language of the ſupreme governor of the country, unto whom all were ſubject, as their lord: and demonſtrates Jephthah to have been a very equitable prince who was inclinable to debate matters fairly, before he came to blows.

Ver. 13. And the king of the children of Ammon anſwered unto the meſſengers of Jephthah; becauſe Iſrael took away my land when they came up out of Egypt.] The land was none of theirs when the Iſraelites conquered it; but the land of Sihon, king of the Amorites. For as to the country of the Ammonites, God expreſsly charged the children of Iſrael not to meddle with it, Deut. i. 19. It is true this land which they now claimed, had formerly belonged to the Moabites, but Sihon had made a conqeuſt of it, and driven them out, as we read, Numb. xxi. 26. The king of Ammon therefore could not call it his land, unleſs he was alſo king of Moab at this time, which is not improbable. Whence it is, that in the following diſpute between him and Jephthah, there is a promiſcuous mention of the Moabites, together with the Ammonites, as if they were but one people, ver. 15, 17, 18. and Chemoſh, which was the god of the Moabites, is called ver. 24. the god of the king of Ammon: Unto which may be added, that the land which Sihon conquered, did not entirely belong to the Moabites, but ſome of it to the children of Ammon, as is expreſly declared, Joſh. xiii. 25. where we read, that to the Gadites was given half the land of the children of Ammon; therefore ſome part of Sihon's kingdom (where the Gadites were ſettled) formerly belonged to the Ammonites.

———From Arnon even unto Jabbok, and unto Jordan.] Theſe are the bounds of the country to which they laid their claim; the river Arnon on the ſouth, and the brook Jabbok on the north; (which we may call the length of the country) and Jordan on the weſt; unto which afterward is added the eaſtern bounds, when it is ſaid, ver. 22. from the wilderneſs unto Jordan; which is the wilderneſs thro' which the Iſraelites entered into the territories of Sihon.

——— Now therefore reſtore thoſe lands.] Which belonged to the Moabites and Ammonites.

——— Again peaceably.] The meſſengers of Jephthah had declared that he deſired not war, but peace; which the king of Ammon tells him he muſt not expect, unleſs he reſigned theſe countries to him.

Ver. 14. And Jephthah ſent meſſengers again unto the king of the children of Ammon.] This is an argument of a very peaceable diſpoſition, and a noble commendation of a wiſe governor, that he was ſtill deſirous to end this controverſy by reaſon, and not by the ſword.

Ver. 15. And ſaid unto him, thus ſaith Jephthah.] This is his reply; which ſeems to be delivered as from a man in authority.

———Iſrael took not away the land of Moab, nor the land of the children of Ammon.] He denies the matter of fact, upon which they grounded the war: For the Iſraelites found this country in the poſſeſſion of Sihon.

Ver. 16. But when Iſrael came up from Egypt.] He proves the truth of what he affirmed, by a ſhort hiſtory of what paſſed after they came out of Egypt; when the king of Ammon ſaid, ver. 13. they took this land from him.

———And walked through the wilderneſs, unto the red ſea, and came to Kadeſh.] This is not to be underſtood of Kadeſh-barnea, but of that Kadeſh mentioned Numb. xx. 1, 14. which was in the borders of Edom; unto which they came directly from the Red-ſea: Nor of their coming to the Red-ſea, in the firſt year after they paſſed through it, mentioned Numb. xxxiii. 10. but of their laſt arrival at it, in that ſtation they made at Ezion-geber, (after many ſtations in other places) which was upon the ſhore of the Red-ſea; from whence they immediately marched to this Kadeſh, Numb. xxxiii. 35, 36.

Ver. 17. Then Iſrael ſent meſſengers to the king of Edom, ſaying, Let me, I pray thee, paſs through thy land.] This ſhews they were ſo far from invading any prince's country, that they humbly begged leave to paſs through Edom, with a ſolemn promiſe to commit no violence, but to pay for every accommodation they wanted. See Numb. xx. 14, &c.

———But the king of Edom would not hearken thereto.] Notwithſtanding which, the Iſraelites were not provoked by his inhumanity to quarrel with that prince.

——— And in like manner they ſent unto the king of Moab; but he would not conſent.] We do not read of ſuch a meſſage ſent to the Moabites: But when they came from Ezion-geber into the wilderneſs of Moab, we find a command of God to them not to diſtreſs the Moabites, nor to contend with them in battle: Which intimates there was ſome occaſion for it; which was their refuſal to grant them a common civility.

———And Iſrael abode in Kadeſh.] Put up all theſe affronts, and abſtained from every act of violence, continuing quiet in the place where they had pitched their tents.

Ver. 18. Then they went along through the wilderneſs, and compaſſed the land of Edom, and the land of Moab.] When they were denied a paſſage the direct way, they choſe rather to fetch a large compaſs, and travel many miles, with great fatigue and toil, (ſee Numb. xxi. 4.) than give others the leaſt diſturbance.

———And came by the eaſt-ſide of the land of Moab, and pitched on the other ſide of Arnon.] See Numb. xxi. 13.

——— But came not within the border of Moab: for Arnon was the border of Moab.] This is a demonſtration that they offered no injury to the Moabites, into whoſe country they did not enter. For they went no farther than Arnon, which divided their territories from thoſe of the Ammonites.

Ver. 19. And Iſrael ſent meſſengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, the king of Heſhbon] Where his royal palace was. See Numb. xxi. 25, 26.

——— And Iſrael ſaid unto him, Let us paſs, we pray thee, through thy land unto my place.] Being denied a paſſage through Edom and Moab, they ſent a friendly meſſage unto him, craving the favour of being permitted to paſs thro' his country to Canaan, Numb. xxi. 21, 22.

Ver. 20. But Sihon truſted not Iſrael to paſs through his coaſt.] Was jealous they would ſeize on his dominions.

——— But Sihon gathered all his people together, and pitched in Jahaz, and fought againſt Iſrael.] He not only refuſed, after the example of his neighbours, to grant the Iſraelites a paſſage through his country, which they could not inſiſt upon as their abſolute right, but raiſed all his forces, and proudly marched to drive them away from his borders, Numb. xxi. 23, 24.

Ver. 21. And the Lord God of Iſrael delivered Sihon, and all his people into the hand of Iſrael, and they ſmote them.] It was evidently an act of God to give the Iſ-raelites the victory: for they were unprepared for war, and harraſed with a long march about the land of Edom and Moab.

— So Iſrael poſſeſſed all the land of the Amorites, the inhabitants of that country.] They did not diſpoſſeſs the Moabites, but the Amorites, who then inhabited that country, which became the poſſeſſion of the Iſraelites, by the right of a juſt war, in their own defence.

Ver. 22. And they poſſeſſed all the coaſts of the Amorites, from Arnon even unto Jabbok, and from the wilderneſs even unto Jordan.] This is a deſcription of the length and breadth of the land, from ſouth to north, and from eaſt to weſt. See above, ver. 13. None of which was then in the poſſeſſion of the Moabites or Amorites; who could not therefore charge the Iſraelites with taking any of their land from them.

Ver. 23. So now the Lord God of Iſrael hath diſpoſſeſſed the Amorites from before his people Iſrael.] This is a new title to this land; which they not only took in a juſt war, but was alſo given them by God, who rendered them victorious, and then beſtowed it upon them.

——— And ſhouldſt thou poſſeſs it?] It was abſurd to think, that they ſhould take the pains to conquer it, and God ſhould give it to them, only that they might reinſtate the Moabites in the poſſeſſion of it, with whom they had no Alliance.

Ver. 24 Wilt not thou poſſeſs that which Chemoſh thy God giveth thee to poſſeſs?] He doth not call Chemoſh a God; but only argues from the opinion that they had of him, which all nations entertained of their gods, that they owed their conqueſts to them, to whom therefore they gave thanks for all their victories. Now he appeals to them, whether they would not keep what their god had given them, and look upon it as rightfully poſſeſſed by them.

——— So whomſoever the Lord our God ſhall drive out from before us, them will we poſſeſs.] By the very ſame title, whereby the Moabites poſſeſſed the country wherein they now lived; from whence they drove out the ancient inhabitants, Deut. ii. 10, 11.

Ver. 25. And now art thou any thing better than Balak the ſon of Zippor king of Moab?] This is a third argument, that when this conqueſt was newly made by the Iſraelites, the then king of Moab (as potent as the preſent) laid no claim to that country, nor demanded to have it reſtored to him; but only was afraid they would invade the land he ſtill poſſeſſed.

——— Did he ever ſtrive againſt Iſrael..] Diſpute their title with them.

——— Or did he ever fight againſt them.] Endeavour by force of arms to recover this country, as not belonging to them, but to him.

Ver. 26. While Iſrael dwelt in Heſhbon and her towns, and in Aroer and her towns, and in all the cities that be along by the coaſts of Arnon, three hundred years?] In the laſt place he pleads preſcription, and that for three hundred years; in which long ſpace of time none of the kings of Moab pretended a right to this country, much leſs conteſted it with them, which argument was irrefragable. For if ſuch a long undiſputed poſſeſſion cannot create a right to a country, it is impoſſible there ſhould be any end of wars between kings and princes. But all mankind look upon thoſe wars as unjuſt, which are made for the recovery of countries, wherein people have ſettled quietly for many ages; tho' perhaps, in the firſt acquiſition of them, their title was not good. Therefore it is not neceſſary to examine, whether Sihon had a juſt cauſe of war when he conquered this country; nor is it of importance with reſpect to this, to inquire whether the Iſraelites had held this conqueſt juſt three hundred years; for if a few be wanting, it is not material; but with reſpect to ſomething elſe, it is of great conſequence, for the explaining of what we read 1 Kings vi. 2. that Soloman began to build the temple in the four hundred and eightieth year after they came out of Egypt; which ſpace is divided by theſe words of Jephthah into two intervals; the firſt of which contained three hundred and forty years; for they had poſſeſſed this country three hundred years, and they came out of Egypt forty years before its conqueſt: During which time (of three hundred years) they had been ſlaves to the Meſopotamians, Moabites, Canaanites, and Midianites. Now, if the years wherein they were oppreſſed by theſe four nations, and the years of peace and quiet they enjoyed, be put together, from the firſt year of Cuſhan-Riſhathaim, to the laſt year of Jair, they produce but little more than three hundred years; ſo that no time is left for Joſhua's conqueſt of Canaan, and his liſe after it, and for the generation which outlived him. But by ſuppoſing that ſome of theſe things fell out in the very ſame time (as for example, during the fourſcore years reſt, in the eaſtern parts of the land after Eglon's death, they were oppreſſed twenty years in the north by Jabin) this difficulty is removed, and all comes right; as Sir John Marſham hath demonſtrated in his Canon Chronicus; where he ſhews, that from the death of Moſes to this invaſion of the Ammonites, there were three hundred years, allowing five and twenty years (as Joſephus computes) for Joſhua's government after they came into Canaan, and thirty five years to the following generation that ſurvived him. See Seculum 11. Æra Exodi. And concerning the other interval. See here xii. 14.

——— Why therefore did ye not recover them within that time?] There could be no anſwer to this queſtion, why, in ſo long a time they never aſſerted their claim till now?

Ver. 27. Wherefore I have not ſinned againſt thee, but thou doſt me wrong to war againſt me.] Upon all theſe reaſons he concludes, the Ammonites had no cauſe to make this war; but were injurious in it to the Iſraelites.

——— The Lord the judge be judge this day between the children of Iſrael and the children of Ammon.] The meaning is, that if they were not moved by theſe reaſons, but the controverſy muſt be decided by arms, he committed his cauſe to God, the righteous judge of the whole world, who, he doubted not, would do him right. By this day he doth not mean that God would determine the right, by giving him the victory then, when he ſpake theſe words, (for he was not yet ready to give them battle) but that God would judge of the juſtice of his preſent plea, and accordingly give ſentence, when the matter came to be tried in a battle.

Ver. 28. Howbeit, the king of the children of Ammon hearkened not unto the words of Jephthah which he ſent him.] He would not yield to arguments, being obſtinately reſolved to decide his claim by arms.

Ver. 29. Then the ſpirit of the Lord came upon Jephthah.] The people had choſen him for their leader, and promiſed to continue him their chief governor, as they had already made him; and now God publickly declares his approbation of their choice; and appointed him their judge, as he had others before, (chap. iii. 10.) by endowing him with an extraordinary meaſure of courage and wiſdom, and all other qualities neceſſary to render him fit for the ruler of his people.

——— And he paſſed over Gilead, and Manaſſeh.] Went through the whole country of Reuben and Gad, (which are comprehended in Gilead) and likewiſe the half tribe of Manaſſeh, and levied what men he could among them.

——— And paſſed over Mizpeh of Gilead.] Proceeded to the extreme part of the country northward, where Mizpeh was, toward mount Lebanon, and Hermon.

——— And from Mizpeh of Gilead, he paſſed over unto the children of Ammon.] He marched from thence, with ſuch forces as he had gathered, toward the enemies country.

Ver. 30. And Jephthah vowed a vow unto the Lord, &c.] Before Jephthah ventured to engage his enemies, either his fear or ſuperſtition infuſed a ſtrange expedient into his mind, to ſecure the Divine Aſſiſtance in the expedition he was preparing to undertake. He made a vow, that if God would condeſcend to bleſs him with a compleat victory, he would ſacrifice to him (as the generality of commentators expound the expreſſion in the Sacred Text) the firſt living creature that ſhould come out of his houſe to meet him at his return; and this inconſiderate promiſe diveſted him of the glory and pleaſure which would otherwiſe have reſulted to him from the fortunate progreſs of his arms. The Ammonites were indeed totally defeated, and the Iſraelites laden with their ſpoils: But the daughter of Jephthah, a virgin, and his only child; and, if we may credit the Jews, a perſon of exquiſite beauty, and unſpotted virtue, proved the unhappy victim of her fathers precipitate cipitate vow. The grateful tydings of his ſucceſs, had brought her out at the head of a company of maidens, to congratulate his glorious return with timbrels, and dances, and other expreſſions of filial joy; by which means ſhe proved the unhappy object upon which he caſt his eyes, and which he had raſhly vowed to deſtruction (as moſt of the expoſitors will have it). The moment he beheld her, he rent his cloaths, and diſcovered the fatal ſecret to her, in the moſt affecting expreſſions that the anguiſh of a father could ſuggeſt. The generous virgin heard him with a conſtancy as could hardly have been expected from a perſon of her tender age, and only intreated him to grant her a reſpite of two months, to bewail her virginity, it being eſteemed one of the greateſt of misfortunes for a daughter of Iſrael to die unmarried; becauſe each of them entertained the glorious expectation of being the parent of the promiſed Meſſiah. Jephthah having complied with her requeſt, ſhe abſented herſelf during that ſhort ſpace of time, and, at the expiration of it returned to her father who acted by her according to his vow; that is, according to the generality of Jewiſh and Chriſtian interpreters, he offered her up as a burnt ſacrifice: Which gave birth to that cuſtom mentioned in the Sacred Text, for the daughters of Iſrael to go yearly to lament the daughter of Jephthah, for the ſpace of four days; or according to others, he conſecrated her to God, and condemned her to perpetual virginity; ſo that thoſe yearly rites were rendered to her as compliments of condolance for the ſtate of life to which ſhe was doomed; and eſpecially as ſhe was the daughter of a judge of Iſrael.

There is ſomething ſo extraordinary in this vow of Jephthah, that notwithſtanding the Scripture has related it in terms that may be rendered very intelligible, yet ſuch difficulties have occurred concerning it, as have greatly perplexed the commentators. We ſhall therefore endeavour to place the whole tranſaction in ſuch a light as we hope will clear up the ſeveral particulars to the ſatisfaction of a candid reader.

There is great reaſon to believe, that the fable which relates the ſacrifice of Iphigenia, had its birth from this part of the hiſtory of Jephthah; eſpecially if we remember that the ſiege of Troy happened ſoon after the time of this celebrated judge. There is, indeed, this difference, that ſome of the wiſer heathen authors, who record it, have introduced the goddeſs Diana interpoſing her authority to prevent ſo horrid a ſacrifice from being offered to her; whilſt the far greater part of the Jews, even Joſephus, Philo, and the Chaldee paraphraſt, acknowledge Jephthah to have been permitted by God, the high prieſt, and the whole people, to offer the fruit of his own body; an innocent young virgin, an only, as well as a dear and dutiful child, the ſole object of his preſent comfort, and future hopes, in a burnt-offering to the Lord, who had ſo frequently declared his utter abhorrence of all ſuch abominations, and rejected the Canaanites upon that very account. Some even add, that her life was rather ſacrificed to a punctilio of honour, her father thinking it beneath his own dignity to go to the high prieſt, to be abſolved from his unlawful vow; and the latter being above granting him that abſolution, unleſs the other would think fit to apply to him, in order to obtain it. It ſeems, indeed, wonderful that ſo many of the fathers ſhould implicitly follow the Jews, in believing that the daughter of Jephthah was really ſacrificed, notwithſtanding the Apoſtle to the Hebrews ranks him in the claſs of faithful worthies among the Jews. St. Chryſoſtom obſerves, that God, by his all-wiſe providence, permitted this father to make a ſacrifice of his daughter, that his example might be a reſtraint upon thoſe who might hereafter be eaſily induced to make ſuch promiſes. St. Juſtin the martyr, and Theodoret, conſidered this proceeding in the ſame view. Others are not ſatisfied with ſuppoſing the ſacrifice of this innocent maiden, to be a certain fact, but have even approved and highly commended it. The author of, Queſtions to the Orthodox, printed in St. Juſtin's name, is perſuaded that Jephthah's piety to God, which induced him to ſacrifice his daughter, was the reaſon of the Apoſtle's placing him among the righteous. St. Jerom expreſſes himſelf in words to the ſame effect: Jephta obtulit filiam virginem, & idcirco in enumeratione ſanctorum ab Apoſtolo ponitur. And declares in another place, that if the ſacrifice be not laudable, at leaſt the ſpirit and intention of it deſerve approbation. In anſwer to all which authorities from the fathers, it ought to be remember'd, that moſt of them at leaſt, if not all, had no ſufficient means of being ſet right, with reſpect to this tranſaction, for want of being acquainted with the original language in which it is recorded, and conſequently of knowing that the Sacred Text was capable of two different ſenſes, and that the Jews had choſen the leaſt reaſonable of the two. But what is moſt ſurpriſing is, that ſo many learned interpreters ſhould adhere to the wrong conſtruction, ſince a better inſight into the Hebrew tongue has opened an eaſy way to the other ſenſe, which is moſt agreeable both to reaſon, and likewiſe to the tenor of ſcripture. However, as what has been urged on both ſides of the queſtion is too copious, and would ſwell this part of our commentary too much, we ſhall content ourſelves with offering what appears to us to be a reaſonable vindication of the latter ſenſe, as far as it can be juſtified by the original. For we doubt not, but if we can prove it to be capable of ſuch an interpretation, our readers will readily abſolve the Hebrew judge from ſo horrid and unnatural a ſacrifice, under a pretence of religion, even when the Sacred Text expreſsly declares that the ſpirit of God came upon him about the time when he made this vow, ver. 29. What has miſled all the ancient fathers is, that the Septuagint, and the Vulgate, render the words of Jephthah, whatſoever cometh forth to meet me, in the maſculine gender, as if he had ſaid, whoſoever, or what perſon ſoever, cometh forth; whereas the original is here undeterminate. Again, they did not know that the particle vau may properly enough be taken in the disjunctive ſenſe, or, inſtead of the conjunctive and. This, however, is what ſome judicious critics, both Jews and Chriſtians, have clearly ſhewn to be the right ſignification both here and elſewhere. So that Jephthah's words ſhould have been rendered, ſhall ſurely be the Lord's, or, not and, I will offer it up for a burnt-offering; that is, if it be a human creature, he or ſhe ſhall be conſecrated to the ſervice of God, as ſome ſort of Nazarenes were; or, if it prove a beaſt, it ſhall be offered up for a burnt-offering, if it be fit for that ſacred uſe, or, if not, be exchanged for another that is, What confirms the ſenſe of the vow is, 1. That there were but three ſorts of creatures that could be fit for a burnt-offering, according to the Moſaic law; whereas any other creature might as well chance to come out of his doors, as any of theſe three. 2. It might happen to prove ſome unclean beaſt, which could not be offered to the Lord, but muſt be exchanged or redeemed. 3. That human ſacrifice of any kind, except what was vowed to extermination with reſpect to the people condemned by God himſelf to that fate, (and theſe could not be ſaid to be offered up in burnt-offerings) were expreſly prohibited, (Deut. xii. 31. and in other places.) And, 4. That there was an expreſs redemption for vows relating to human creatures, and the price of it appointed by God (Levit. xxvii. 1, &c.) It would be therefore abſurd to ſuppoſe, either that Jephthah would have vowed to offer the firſt creature indifferently that came out of his houſe, as a burnt-offering to God, without diſtinction of clean and unclean, fit or unfit; or if he had, that the prieſts would have ſuffered him to accompliſh it, when the victim proved unlawful and redeemable, and would have been an abomination to God, as well as a ſcandal to all the world. For theſe plain reaſons, we think, that the words ought rather to have been rendered thus: "Then the ſpirit of God came "upon Jephthah— And he vowed a vow unto the Lord, and "ſaid, If thou ſhalt without fail deliver the children of Am-"mon into my hands, it ſhall be, that whatſoever cometh "forth of the doors of my houſe to meet me when I return in "peace—ſhall ſurely be the Lord's, or I will offer it up for "a burnt-offering———. And Jephthah came to Mizpeh to "his houſe, and his daughter came out to meet him with "timbrels and dances, and ſhe was his only child——— "and when he ſaw her he rent his cloaths, and ſaid, Alas, "my daughter, thou haſt brought me very low, thou art "one of thoſe that trouble me; for I have opened my "mouth unto the Lord, and I cannot go back—And ſhe "ſaid unto him, if thou haſt opened thy mouth unto the "Lord, do to me according to thy vow ——— only let "this thing be done for me; let me ——— bewail my "virginity two months.——— And it came to paſs at "the end of two months, that ſhe returned to her father, "who did with her according to his vow, and ſhe never " knew man; that is ſhe continued a virgin. And it be-

" came a ſtatute in Iſrael, that the daughters of Iſrael
" came four days in the year, to condole, or converſe with
" the daughter of Jephthah.

Here then Jephthah's vow is taken in the firſt ſenſe, ſhall be the Lord's; that is, the thing vowed proving to be his daughter, he conſecrated her to the ſervice of God. For this reaſon it is added, vehi lo yadhah iſh, and ſo ſhe did not know man; that is, from that time, to her death. For it would have been ſuperfluous to have added that circumſtance, if he had ſacrificed her as ſoon as ſhe returned from bewailing her virginity. As for the verb Thanah, which ſo many verſions render to bewail, were it capable of no other ſignification, yet it would not imply the bewailing of her death, but her being condemned to perpetual virginity, which was counted one of the greateſt calamities that could happen to an Iſraelitiſh maiden, for the reaſon we have already intimated. But it is plain, that it ſignifies alſo to condole, to converſe with, to declare, or extol. In this laſt ſenſe the reader will find it uſed in the ſame book. chap v. ver. 11. where it is ſaid, that they Jithanu, ſhall rehearſe or extol the righteous acts of the Lord. So that here the virgins of Iſrael might go either to condole the daughter of Jephthah for being ſecluded from the nuptial ſtate, or to celebrate her piety and conſtancy in ratifying her father's vow.

There are but two things objected againſt this ſenſe of the text; the firſt is, that the Moſaic law did not allow parents a power to oblige their children to a ſingle life. But, beſide, that the argument is much ſtronger againſt their power of ſacrificing them to the flames, we find that the children, when of age, might conſent to the vow; and this ſeems to be the reaſon why the text intimates that ſhe readily ratified it. But it is plain, that parents had a very great power, to impoſe ſevere and grating laws, not only on their children, but alſo on their poſterity; as when the ſon of Rechab prohibited all his deſcendants from drinking wine, dwelling in houſes, and the like, Jerem. xxxv. 6. &c. And tho' it were not ſo, one could only ſay, that Jephthah, as a judge, extended his power beyond what might be allowable in him as a father, tho' without ſuch a degree of barbarity as if he had offered up his daughter in the other ſenſe.

The next objection is, That the grief, which Jephthah expreſs'd at the ſight of his daughter, ſeems to imply ſome heavier fate than a bare doom to perpetual virginity. But it ought to be remembered, that he hereby deprived an only child, and a dear one, of the greateſt happineſs of life; for ſuch was marriage, eſpecially when bleſſed with children, eſteemed in Iſrael; and he likewiſe diveſted himſelf of all hopes of any poſterity. Where is then the wonder that he ſhould utter ſuch expreſſions of grief, when his only child was condemned by his own precipitate vow, to ſuch a reproachful and uncomfortable ſtate of life, and himſelf excluded thereby from the proſpect of having the Meſſiah ſpring from his ſeed.

Since then the original is capable of ſo much fairer, and more natural a ſenſe, it would be abſurd to prefer the other, which is contrary to reaſon and nature; contrary to the Moſaic law, and the analogy of faith; and has been the ſource of endleſs diſputes and ſuperfluous inquiries, how far this inhuman ſacrifice was, or was not, commendable and pleaſing to God; and how far Jephthah's barbarous faith entitled him to be ranked among the Hebrew worthies, Heb xi. 32. With reſpect to the fathers who have favoured the notion of the immolation of this innocent virgin, there is only this to be ſaid, namely, that they had no verſion but the Greek and Latin to ſteer by, backed with the teſtimony of the ancient Jews. Father Calmet, however, has ſince endeavoured to vindicate the notion of Jephthah's daughter being really ſacrificed according to the letter, and the opinion of the fathers; tho' without pretending to juſtify, either the vow, or the execution of it. In order to which he inſiſts ſtrenuouſly, that Jephthah did not vow the firſt thing, but the firſt perſon, that came out of his houſe. But we have already, as we hope, proved the contrary; and it is ſurpriſing that this writer, who ſeems well verſed in the Hebrew, ſhould not have been ſenſible of it. He next inſiſts upon an expreſs text in the law concerning vows, Levit. xxxiii. 29. that whatſoever is vowed unto the Lord, of men, ſhall not be redeemed, but ſhall ſurely be put to death. But if this be the purport of that command, there is at once an end of all enquiry, concerning the lawfulneſs both of Jephthah's vow, and of all other human ſacrifices. Had our author conſulted the learned Selden (De Jure Nat. & Gent. ſec. diſcipl. Hæb. c. 4. & ſeq.) he would have found it fully proved, not only againſt Capellus and others, that the parents had no ſuch power over their children, but even againſt the Jews, that maſters had it not over their ſlaves; and that the queſtion in this law, is not about things, or men, vowed for burnt-offerings, which was abſolutely forbidden, but about ſuch as were devoted by cherem anathema, to utter extermination, of which kind were the inhabitants, and all the ſpoils of Jericho, Joſh. vi. of the Amalekites, of king Arad and his people, of the inhabitants of Jabeſh Gilead, (Numb. xxi. 2. Judg. xxi. 9, 10.) and of the ſeven nations of Canaân. It is evident therefore, that theſe two places are nothing to our author's purpoſe, and that the whole tenure of the Sacred Scriptures is againſt it; ſo that we cannot ſee any reaſon to depart from the contrary opinion.

CHAP. XII.

1 The Ephraimites quarreling with Jephthah, and diſcerned by Shibboleth, are ſlain by the Gileadites. 7 Jephthah dieth. 8 Ibzan, who had thirty ſons, and thirty daughters, 11 and Elon, 13 and Abdon who had forty ſons, and thirty nephews, judged Iſrael.

AND the men of Ephraim gathered themſelves together, and went northward, and ſaid unto Jephthah, Wherefore paſſedſt thou over to fight againſt the children of Ammon, and didſt not call us to go with thee? we will burn thine houſe upon thee with fire.

2 And Jephthah ſaid unto them, I and my people were at great ſtrife with the children of Ammon; and when I called you, ye delivered me not out of their hands.

3 And when I ſaw that ye delivered me not, I put my life in my hands, and paſſed over-againſt the children of Ammon, and the LORD delivered them into my hand: wherefore then are ye come up unto me this day to fight againſt me?

4 Then Jephthah gathered together all the men of Gilead, and fought with Ephraim: and the men of Gilead ſmote Ephraim, becauſe they ſaid, Ye Gileadites are fugitives of Ephraim, among the Ephraimites, and among the Manaſſites.

5 And the Gileadites took the paſſages of Jordan before the Ephraimites: and it was ſo, that when thoſe Ephraimites which were eſcaped, ſaid, Let me go over; that the men of Gilead ſaid unto him, Art thou an Ephraimite? If he ſaid, Nay:

6 Then ſaid they unto him, Say now Shibboleth: and he ſaid Sibboleth: for he could not frame to pronounce it right. Then they took him, and ſlew him at the paſſages of Jordan: and there fell at that time of the Ephraimites forty and two thouſand.

7 And

7 And Jephthah judged Iſrael ſix years: then died Jephthah the Gileadite, and was buried in one of the cities of Gilead.

8 ¶ And after him Ibzan of Beth-lehem judged Iſrael.

9 And he had thirty ſons, and thirty daughters, whom he ſent abroad, and took in thirty daughters from abroad for his ſons. And he judged Iſrael ſeven years.

10 Then died Ibzan, and was buried at Beth-lehem.

11 ¶ And after him Elon a Zebulonite judged Iſrael, and he judged Iſrael ten years.

12 And Elon the Zebulonite died, and was buried in Aijalon in the country of Zebulon.

13 ¶ And after him, Abdon the ſon of Hillel a Pirathonite judged Iſrael.

14 And he had forty ſons, and thirty nephews, that rode on threeſcore and ten aſs-colts: and he judged Iſrael eight years.

15 And Abdon the ſon of Hillel the Pirathonite died, and was buried in Pirathon in the land of Ephraim, in the mount of the Amalekites.

Ver. 1. And the men of Ephraim gathered themſelves together.] In the Hebrew, were called, by a public cry, or proclamation, to arm themſelves.

——— And went northward.] To the country of Manaſſeh, on the other ſide Jordan. For this ſufficiently ſhows, that Mizpeh was in that country, and in the northern part of it, toward Lebanon and Hermon, Pet. Martyr thinks they did not march orderly thither, being not gathered together (as far as appears) by the authority of the magiſtrate, but in a tumultuous manner, as is uſual in the motions of ſeditious people.

——And ſaid unto Jephthah] By this, and by what follows, it appears they came to Mizpeh where Jephthah reſided.

———Wherefore paſſedſt thou over.] They do not mean over Jordan, for there he was already; but from hence to the coaſt of the Ammonites.

———To fight againſt the children of Ammon, and didſt not call us to go with thee?] Their pride made them take it ill, that they had not a ſhare in the glory of the late victory. Juſt as formerly they quarrelled with Gideon upon the like occaſion, chap. viii. 1. which ſhews they were very imperious.

———We will burn thine houſe upon thee with fire.] Their arrogance wrought them into ſuch a ſtrange rage, that they ſeem to threaten to burn him, as well as his houſe.

Ver. 2. And Jephthah ſaid unto them, I and my people were at ſtrife with the children of Ammon.] He anſwers their furious language with great mildneſs; and firſt tells them, that he did not undertake this war till he was compelled by the Ammonites, who greatly diſtreſſed them, chap. x. 9.

———And when I called you, ye delivered me not out of their hands.] In the ſecond place, he denies their charge, and affirms the contrary, namely, that he had begged their aſſiſtance, but they refuſed to give it him: Nay, he had cried aloud unto them, with earneſt importunities (as the word we tranſlate called, ſignifies) to aid his people in their diſtreſs.

Ver. 3. And when I ſaw that ye delivered me not]. When I became ſenſible, that there was no hope of your aſſiſtance to preſerve us from ruin.

——I put my life in my hands.] Expoſed myſelf to the utmoſt hazard; for he had but a ſmall part of the people of Iſrael with him, to encounter their powerful oppreſſors. This phraſe ſeems peculiar to the Hebrews, and the eaſtern writers; for among all the Greek and Roman writers, Iſaac Caſauban declares, he never met with it but once in Zenarchus; whom Athenæus alledges, introducing in one of his dramatic pieces, a man ſeized with fear and trembling, ἐν τῇ χειρὶ τὴν ψυχὴν ἔχοντα; having his ſoul in his hand.

——— And paſſed over againſt the children of Ammon.] With ſuch forces alone as he could raiſe on his ſide Jordan, xi. 29, 30.

——And the Lord delivered them into my hand.] God approved his undertaking, by giving him a great victory.

Wherefore then are ye come up unto me this day, to fight againſt me?] Who had defended and preſerved them. For if the Ammonites had defeated Jephthah, they would ſoon have paſſed over Jordan, and fallen upon the Ephraimites; as they had before attempted.

Ver. 4. Then Jephthah gathered together all the men of Gilead, and fought with Ephraim.] When he ſaw they were not pacified by this fair and peaceable apology, but ſtill continued their menaces; he immediately, like a man of ſpirit, had recourſe to arms, and raiſed as many men as he could to oppoſe them.

——And the men of Gilead ſmote Ephraim.] Put them to flight, and made a great ſlaughter.

———Becauſe they ſaid, Ye Gileadites are fugitives of Ephraim.] That which provoked the army of Jephthah to kill ſo many of them, was their inſulting language, added to their threats, whereby they reproached the men of Gilead (who were the chief managers of the late war, xi. 29.) as if they were but the ſcum and dregs of the tribe of Ephraim, among whom they were the principal.

———Among the Ephraimites, and among the Manaſſites.] That is, among ſuch of them as dwelt in the land of Canaan; who looked upon the Gileadites, and the reſt of the Manaſſites, on the other ſide Jordan, and in the moſt northerly part of it, as the refuſe of their nation. But it muſt be acknowledged, that the words in the Hebrew are capable of another ſenſe, and may be thus tranſlated: Therefore (ſo the particle Ki is frequently rendered) they ſaid, fugitives of Ephraim are ye: that is, the men of Gilead having defeated the Ephraimites, called them run-aways. And it is certain, that theſe, and not the Gileadites, are branded with this appellation, for they are repreſented as having eſcaped by flight in the next verſe: And then the following words may be thus tranſlated, Gilead got between the Ephraimites and the Manaſſites. It is very probable, that the Manaſſites in Canaan joined with the Ephraimites, in this preſumptuous attempt upon the Gileadites; who being well acquainted with their own country, got between them and the river Jordan, to intercept their paſſage over it, as we read in the following verſe.

Ver. 5. And the Gileadites took the paſſages of Jordan, before the Ephraimites.] So that none could paſs over at thoſe fords, without their permiſſion.

———And it was ſo, that when thoſe Ephraimites which were eſcaped.] They are the very ſame words in the Hebrew, which are uſed in the foregoing verſe, The fugitives of Ephraim.

——— ſaid, let me go over.] Who were ſtationed to guard the paſſages.

———That the men of Gilead ſaid unto him, Art thou an Ephraimite?] They examined him what countryman he was; whether a Reubenite, Gadite, Manaſſite, on their ſide Jordan, or one of the Ephraimites on the other.

——— If he ſaid nay,] For fear would make him deny it.

Ver. 6. Then ſaid they unto him, ſay now Shibboleth.] To find the truth, they put him to this teſt; whether his pronunciation of ſome words was like that of the Gileadites: For people of the ſame nation, who ſpeak the ſame language, differ very much in the pronunciation of it, in ſeveral parts of the country: As in Greece, all ſpoke Greek; but the Ionians, Attics, Dorians, and Æolians ſpoke it very differently. And ſo they did among the Romans, with reſpect to their language; for at Prœneſte, which was not far from Rome, inſtead of Ciconia, they pronounced Konia. And ſo the Ephraimites ſaid Sibboleth, but could not pronounce Shibboleth. There were many other words like this, which they could not articulate as the Gileadites did; but this was choſen, in all probability, becauſe it was ſuitable to the purpoſe; Shibboleth ſignifying not only an ear of corn, but alſo floods of water, (Pſalm lxix. 2.) ſo that the teſt the Gileadites compelled them to ſubmit to, was this, namely, to bid them ſay, Let me paſs over the water.

——And he ſaid Sibboleth; for he could not frame to pronounce it right.] If he was an Ephraimite, he preſently diſcovered himſelf; for he could not pronounce the Hebrew letter ſchin; which proceeded, we ſuppoſe, from the long habitude of that people to expreſs themſelves in a different manner; ſo that they could not frame the organs of ſpeech to pronounce as the Gileadites did: which we ſee at this day among all nations, who in different provinces greatly differ in their ſpeech, tho' they uſe the very ſame language.

——Then they took him, and ſlew him at the paſſages of Jordan.] They uſed this mark of diſtinction on purpoſe, leſt they ſhould kill any of another tribe.

——And there fell at that time of the Ephraimites, forty and two thouſand.] In the fight, and at the paſſages of Jordan, this number periſhed: Which was a juſt puniſhment, and very proper to humble their pride and inſolence, in deſpiſing ſo great a man as Jephthah, and threatning to deſtroy his houſe, after ſo glorious a victory, whereby he had preſerved all the people of Iſrael; and for reproaching their brethren alſo, whom they invaded without any cauſe, and ſeem to have intended to drive them out of their country.

Ver. 7. And Jephthah judged Iſrael ſix years.] After this humiliation of the Ephraimites, all the tribes whom the Ammonites had oppreſſed ſubmitted themſelves to him as their judge; and he continued ſix years in the government.

——Then died Jephthah the Gileadite, and was buried in one of the cities of Gilead.] The Jews have ſeveral ridiculous conceits concerning his death and burial, becauſe it is ſaid, he was buried in the cities of Gilead, as the words are in the Hebrew: Which they would have underſtood, as if he rotted (as a puniſhment for offering his daughter) and that one piece of him, when it dropt off, was buried in one city, and another in the next city, &c. when the plain meaning is expreſſed in our tranſlation, that he was buried in one of the cities, that is, in Mizpeh, where he lived. And ſo Aben Ezra and Ralbag interpret it; tho' the latter of theſe Rabbins could not forbear to incline to one of their Talmudical fables; That he having no iſſue to propagate his name, order'd his body to be cut into ſo many parts, and buried in ſo many cities of Gilead; that every one might preſerve his memory. Other fancies there are, in which men indulge themſelves, and Peter Martyr hath thought fit to interpoſe his conjecture, that the word iram, which we tranſlate cities, may poſſibly be the proper name of Gilead, where he was buried.

Ver. 8. And after him Ibzan of Beth-lehem judged Iſrael.] It is not ſaid upon what occaſion he was made judge; for, perhaps, he was raiſed up by God, immediately after Jephthah's death, only to preſerve the Iſraelites in the true religion, which was in ſome meaſure reſtored. Some of the Jews imagine him to have been the ſame with Boaz, who eſpouſed Ruth the Moabiteſs; but this conjecture is without any ground at all, as far as we are able to judge.

Ver. 9. And he had thirty ſons, and thirty daughters.] A numerous iſſue was accounted a great bleſſing in thoſe days: And tho' we read of no memorable act which this judge performed, yet this particular is recorded, in order to ſhew, that he was a perſon eminently favoured by God.

——Whom he ſent abroad.] The Vulgate refers this to his daughters, for whom he provided husbands; and ſent his daughters to their houſes, as the manner was, Gen. xxiv. 67. xxxi. 50.

——And took in thirty daughters from abroad, for his ſons.] This compleated the bleſſing of God, in the gift of ſo many children; who all lived to the ſtate of maturity, and were all diſpoſed by him in marriage; for that was in the power of parents. See Gen. xxiv.

——And he judged Iſrael ſeven years.] Not all the Iſraelites, but thoſe whom Jephthah had judged; and none diſputed his authority.

Ver. 10. Then died Ibzan, and was buried at Bethlehem.] There were two Beth-lehems, one in the tribe of Zebulun, and the other in the tribe of Judah; the latter of which, it is generally thought, is here meant, where Izban was born and buried.

Ver. 11. And after him, Elon a Zebulonite judged Iſrael, and he judged Iſrael ten years.] It is obſerved by many, that Euſebius, in his Chronicon, is ſilent with reſpect to this judge, becauſe he declares the LXX make no mention of him; tho' the Hebrew text doth: But as all our preſent copies of the LXX now mention him, ſo did thoſe whom a very ancient writer uſed, namely, Theophilus Antioch. lib. 1. ad Autolicum; and which is more to be wondered at, thoſe copies alſo which Euſebius himſelf followed in his tenth book, de Præpar. Evang. cap. 14. as Uſher hath obſerved in his Chronologia Sacra, pars 1. cap. ult.

Ver. 12. And Elon the Zebulonite died, and was buried in Aijalon in the country of Zebulon.] Theſe words were added, to diſtinguiſh this Aijalon here mentioned, from another in the tribe of Dan, chap. i. 35.

Ver. 13. And after him, Abdon the ſon of Hillel a Pirathonite judged Iſrael.] The place where he was born, ſhews that he was of the tribe of Ephraim, whom God at laſt honoured with a judge of their own country, after their pride had been humbled by Jephthah: For Pirathon is expreſsly ſaid, ver. 15. to be in the land of Ephraim.

Ver. 14. And he had forty ſons, and thirty nephews.] That is, grandſons.

——That rode on threeſcore and ten aſſes colts.] See ver. 10. This is ſaid to ſhew, not only that God bleſſed him with a numerous poſterity, but let them all grow up to be men. See chap. x. 4.

——And he judged Iſrael eight years.] The intention of this book is chiefly to ſhew how God puniſhed the Iſraelites for their ſins, and delivered them upon their repentance: But nothing remarkable of this kind falling out in the time of theſe three laſt mentioned judges, the Sacred Hiſtorian has not related their other acts, which had no relation to the deſign he had in view.

Here it may be fit to obſerve, that the other interval of the two mentioned upon chap. xi. 26. conſiſting of an hundred and forty years, (which added to three hundred and forty, in the foregoing interval, make up the four hundred and eighty years, mentioned 1 Kings vi. 2.) it is evident that the latter part of them, namely, eighty four years, were made up by the reigns of Saul and David, each of whom reigned forty years, (2 Sam. v. 4. Acts xiii. 21.) and by the four firſt years of Solomon: Therefore the remaining fifty ſix years are made up of part of the eighteen years wherein the Ammonites oppreſſed Iſrael, after the death of Jair, and the years wherein theſe four laſt named perſons, and Samuel, judged Iſrael.

Ver. 15. And Abdon the ſon of Hillel the Pirathonite died, and was buried in Pirathon in the land of Ephraim, in the mount of the Amalekites.] Some think this mount retained the name of Mount Amalek, (as the words are in the Hebrew) from ancient times; the Amalekites having poſſeſſed it heretofore, when the Canaanites were the inhabitants of this country: But it may as well be thought (ſince all that is ſaid is but conjecture) that it was ſo called from ſome famous overthrow, which the children of Ephraim gave the Amalekites in this place: For, in the time of the Judges, they more than once joined with others againſt the Iſraelites. See chap. iii. 13. vi. 3.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Iſrael is in the hand of the Philiſtines. 2 An angel appeareth to Manoahs wife. 8 The angel appeareth to Manoah. 15 Manoahs ſacrifice, whereby the angel is diſcovered. 24 Sampſon is born.

AND the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the LORD, and the LORD delivered them into the hand of the Philiſtines forty years.

2 ¶ And there was a certain man of Zorah, of the family of the Danites, whoſe name name was Manoah, and his wife was barren, and bare not.

3 And the angel of the LORD appeared unto the woman, and ſaid unto her, Behold now, thou art barren, and beareſt not: but thou ſhalt conceive, and bear a ſon.

4 Now therefore beware, I pray thee, and drink not wine, nor ſtrong drink, and eat not any unclean thing.

5 For lo, thou ſhalt conceive, and bear a ſon, and no raſor ſhall come on his head: for the child ſhall be a Nazarite unto God from the womb: and he ſhall begin to deliver Iſrael out of the hand of the Philiſtines.

6 ¶ Then the woman came and told her husband, ſaying, A man of God came unto me, and his countenance was like the countenance of an angel of God, very terrible: but I asked him not whence he was, neither told he me his name.

7 But he ſaid unto me, Behold, thou ſhalt conceive, and bear a ſon; and now drink no wine, nor ſtrong drink, neither eat any unclean thing: for the child ſhall be a Nazarite to God, from the womb to the day of his death.

8 ¶ Then Manoah intreated the LORD, and ſaid, O my Lord, let the man of God which thou didſt ſend, come again unto us, and teach us what we ſhall do unto the child that ſhall be born.

9 And God hearkened to the voice of Manoah; and the angel of God came again unto the woman as ſhe ſat in the field: but Manoah her husband was not with her.

10 And the woman made haſte, and ran, and ſhewed her husband, and ſaid unto him, Behold, the man hath appeared unto me, that came unto me the other day.

11 And Manoah aroſe, and went after his wife, and came to the man, and ſaid unto him, Art thou the man that ſpakeſt unto the woman? And he ſaid, I am.

12 And Manoah ſaid, Now let thy words come to paſs: How ſhall we order the child, and how ſhall we do unto him?

13 And the angel of the LORD ſaid unto Manoah, Of all that I ſaid unto the woman, let her beware.

14 She may not eat of any thing that cometh of the vine, neither let her drink wine nor ſtrong drink, nor eat any unclean thing: all that I commanded her, let her obſerve.

15 ¶ And Manoah ſaid unto the angel of the LORD, I pray thee, let us detain thee until we ſhall have made ready a kid for thee.

16 And the angel of the LORD ſaid unto Manoah, Though thou detain me, I will not eat of thy bread: and if thou wilt offer a burnt-offering, thou muſt offer it unto the LORD: for Manoah knew not that he was an angel of the LORD.

17 And Manoah ſaid unto the angel of the LORD, What is thy name, that when thy ſayings come to paſs, we may do thee honour?

18 And the angel of the LORD ſaid unto him, Why askeſt thou thus after my name, ſeeing it is ſecret?

19 So Manoah took a kid, with a meat-offering, and offered it upon a rock unto the LORD: and the angel did wondrouſly, and Manoah and his wife looked on.

20 For it came to paſs, when the flame went up toward heaven from off the altar, that the angel of the LORD aſcended in the flame of the altar: and Manoah and his wife looked on it, and fell on their faces to the ground.

21 (But the angel of the LORD did no more appear to Manoah and to his wife.) Then Manoah knew that he was an angel of the LORD.

22 And Manoah ſaid unto his wife, We ſhall ſurely die, becauſe we have ſeen God.

23 But his wife ſaid unto him, If the LORD were pleaſed to kill us, he would not have received a burnt-offering and a meat-offering at our hands, neither would he have ſhewed us all theſe things, nor would as at this time have told us ſuch things as theſe.

24 ¶ And the woman bare a ſon, and called his name Sampſon: and the child grew, and the LORD bleſſed him.

25 And the ſpirit of the LORD began to move him at times in the camp of Dan, between Zorah and Eſhtaol.

Ver. 1. And the children of Iſrael did evil again in the ſight of the Lord, and the Lord delivered them into the hand of the Philiſtines forty years.] This is the longeſt oppreſſion the Iſraelites ever ſuſtained; but we think with the learned Sr. John Marſham, that it is not different from that mentioned, chap. x. 7, 8. but one and the ſame; the Philiſtines harraſſing the children of Iſrael in the weſt, when the Ammonites oppreſſed them in the eaſt; for tho' their tyrannical treatment by the Philiſtines laſted longer, yet it began at the very ſame time with the other, and rendered their diſtreſs the greater. And therefore that preface contained in chap. x. 7. relates not only to the events that immediately follow, concerning the Ammonites and Jephthah, but to what is here recorded with reference ference to the Philiſtines and Sampſon, which the Sacred Hiſtorian could not relate together without confuſion; for which reaſon he firſt recites the iſſue of the war with the Ammonites, and then introduces the other part of the hiſtory which relates to the Philiſtines. By this ſynchroniſm, or connection of time, all difficulties may eaſily be ſolved, and the years which ſeem redundant, are hereby contracted within their true compaſs.

Ver. 2. And there was a certain man of Zorah, of the family of the Danites.] The word family is ſometimes uſed for a tribe, Joſh. vii. 17. Or the meaning here may be, of a family among the Danites: from whom it was very proper to have a deliverer raiſed up, for the Danites were near neighbours to the Philiſtines.

——Whoſe name was Manoah, and his wife was barren.] Joſephus gives us a very conſiderable idea of Manoah, for he not only declares that he was a prince, but likewiſe repreſents him as endued with many ſhining qualities: He likewiſe aſſures us that the wife of Manoah was as much diſtinguiſhed by her beauty, as her husband was by his vertues and reputation. [Antiq. lib. v. cap. 8. pag. 20.] Philo relates at large the genealogy of Manoah, and likewiſe that of his wife whom that author calls Eluma, and ſays ſhe was the daughter of Remac. He then adds that Manoah was ſo diſpleaſed at his wife's infertility, that he reproached her in a very ſevere manner, which made ſuch an impreſſion upon her, that ſhe fervently implored God to bleſs her with an offspring.

Ver. 3. And the angel of the Lord appeared unto the woman.] This Divine Perſon was probably the ſon of God, as may be collected from ver. 18. but he is here diſtinguiſhed from the Lord, becauſe he appeared on this occaſion in the form of a ſervant, and as a meſſenger ſent from God.

——And ſaid unto her, Behold now, thou art barren and beareſt not: But thou ſhalt conceive and bear a ſon.] Some of the greateſt men of the Jewiſh nation were the off-ſpring of women who had long been barren; Such in ancient times were Iſaac, and Samuel, and John the Baptiſt later.

Ver. 4. And now therefore beware, I pray thee, and drink not wine, nor ſtrong drink.] She was to conform to the manner of life obſerved by the Nazarites, while ſhe carried her infant in her womb, and perhaps while ſhe nurſed him; becauſe as it follows in the next verſe, he was to be a perpetual Nazarite to God, from his conception to his death; which would have been impoſſible if ſhe had drank wine or ſtrong drink, becauſe a child in the womb and its mother ſubſiſt on the ſame nouriſhment.

——And eat not any unclean thing.] The Iſraelites in all probability, were too negligent at that time in obſerving the precepts with relation to meats, otherwiſe there would have been no need to mention this.

Ver. 5. For lo, thou ſhalt conceive and bear a ſon and no razor ſhall come on his head, for the child ſhall be a nazarite, &c.] We have given a large account of the Nazarites in our commentary on Numb. vi. ver 2. to which we therefore refer our readers, that we may avoid unneceſſary repetitions.

——And he ſhall begin to deliver Iſrael out of the hand of the Philiſtines.] He did not compleat the deliverance of the Iſraelites from the ſervile yoke of the Philiſtines; but it was accompliſhed after his death by Samuel; who put an end to this tyranny of forty years by the memorable victory of Eben Ezer, 1 Sam. vii. 13. as Sir John Marſham obſerves. He likewiſe ſuppoſes, that Eli died in the midſt of this ſervitude, that is, twenty years before this victory: Sampſon therefore only galled the Philiſtines ſeverely, but they ſtill continued to oppreſs the Iſraelites, as they did when he was born.

Ver. 6. Then the woman came and told her husband.] The angel ſeems to have appeared to her in the field, and ſhe acquainted her husband with the particulars, when ſhe came home.

——Saying, a man of God came unto me.] So the prophets were uſually called.

——And his countenance was like the countenance of an angel of God, very ſenſible.] That is, exceedingly venerable, or full of awful majeſty; for ſo, we ſuppoſe the men of God ſometimes appeared; as may be collected from the hiſtory of St. Stephen, who being full of the Holy Ghoſt when he ſtood before the council of Jeruſalem, his face ſhon as if it had been the face of an angel, Acts iv. 15.

——But I asked him not whence he was, neither told he me his name.] The luſtre of his aſpect infuſed ſuch an awe into her, as render'd her incapable of making ſuch enquiries; tho' the Vulgate, in direct contradiction to the Hebrew text, the Chaldee and the Septuagint, hath it thus, She asked him who he was, and whence he came, and what was his name, but he would not tell her.

Ver. 7. And he ſaid unto me, &c.] She recites to her husband the words of the angel; but Manoah, as Joſephus fancies, hearing her highly commend the perſon who appeared to her, for his beauty and majeſtic mien, began to ſuſpect her chaſtity, which is a conceit that ought to be ridicul'd rather than anſwer'd.

Ver. 8. Then Manoah intreated the Lord, and ſaid, O my Lord, let the man of God which thou didſt ſend, come again unto us.] Joſephus, in order to juſtify the idle fancy he had conceived, with reſpect to Manoah, affirms, that the words in this verſe were his wife's prayer, that a ſatisfactory account of her conduct might be given to her husband by the man of God; which is a direct contradiction to what is here expreſly ſaid, namely, that Manoah made this requeſt.

God graciouſly anſwered this humble petition; the angel again appeared, and repeated the directions he before had given, ſhe ſhall not eat of any thing that cometh of the vine, &c. Manoah offered to entertain the angel with food, but he declined it, and appointed it to be converted into a ſacrifice; which he graciouſly accepted. Manoah intreats the angel to acquaint him with his name, ver. 17. that they might honour him with ſome teſtimonial of gratitude, for his condeſcending goodneſs; to which the celeſtial Being replies, Why askeſt thou thus after my name, ſeeing it is ſecret, or rather (as it is in the margin) it is wonderful: So the LXX expreſs it, Θαυμαστόν, admirable; whoſe eſſence (for that is meant by name in ſcripture) is indeed to be admired by all, but is not to be comprehended by the moſt exalted imagination of men or angels.

By the whole conduct of this Divine Perſon, he appears to have been the meſſenger of the covenant, the ſon of God himſelf, as a fore-runner of his own myſterious incarnation; for he is called Jehovah, ver. 23. a name incommunicable to a creature, even to the moſt radiant Archangel; and he likewiſe received and accepted of religious worſhip, which no meer meſſenger of God would have preſumed to have encouraged. Manoah was ſtruck with a reverend dread when he ſaw the angel aſcend in the flame of the altar, ver 20. but his wife, tho' the weaker veſſel, was the ſtronger believer, and argued well when ſhe ſaid, If the Lord were pleaſed to kill us, he would not have received a burnt offering, and a meat offering at our hands, &c. ver. 23. He would not have accepted our ſacrifice, by conſuming it to aſhes, nor have given us ſuch manifeſtations and gracious promiſes, now when viſion is rare, and we are under a rigorous oppreſſion.

Ver. 24. And the woman bare a Son, and called his name Sampſon.] The Divine promiſe was ſoon accompliſhed, and the woman who had ſo long been barren became now the joyful mother of a living ſon, to whom ſhe gave the name of Sampſon.

It is not eaſy to trace out the etymology of this name; even that which ſeems to come neareſt to it, is ſtill ſomewhat forced, being derived from the Hebrew word Shemeſh the ſun, and the feminine Syriac pronoun An, which ſignifies their; namely their ſuns; which, as ſome pretend, prognoſticated the riſing of the Hebrews, and ſetting of the Philiſtines. Others derive it from the Chaldee Shameſh, in the conjugation Piel, which ſignifies to miniſter or ſerve, as the ſun miniſters to the welfare of the world. Joſephus tells us, that the word Sampſon ſignifies robuſt (Antiq. lib. 5. c. 10.) by which it is evident that he knew little or nothing of Hebrew or its derivatives.

The great archbiſhop Uſher places the birth of Sampſon in the ſecond year of the ſervitude to which the Iſraelites were reduced by the Philiſtines; and gives this ſubſtantial reaſon for it, that Sampſon is ſaid to have judged the Iſraelites twenty years, chap. xv. 20. and that he can ſcarcely be ſuppoſed to have enter'd into this office before the 18th year of his age.

Ver. 25. And the ſpirit of the Lord began to move him.] To accompliſh ſome extraordinary actions, above the common ſtretch of human abilities, and which were ſo many illuſtrious ſpecimens of a virtue truly heroic. The Targum tranſlates it, The ſpirit of fortitude began to move him.

——At times.] Upon certain occaſions, when it would be viſible to the people, that God intended to begin the work of their deliverance by the miniſtration of this extraordinary perſon.

——— In the camp of Dan, between Zorah and Eſhtaol.] There was no army of the Danites encamped where Samſon diſplayed his valour; but this is the name of a place, called Machana-Dan, the camp of Dan; in which, perhaps, Samſon lived. The reaſon of this name is given afterward in the xviiith chapter, ver. 12. where the author of this book gives an hiſtorical account of an expedition of the Danites, which tho' placed after this, yet was really before the time of Samſon. This camp did not lie between Zorah and Eſhtaol, but in the tribe of Judah, or in the very borders of it. Therefore the word and muſt be here ſupplied, thus, in the camp of Dan, and between Zorah and Eſhtaol, toward which that camp lay. If this be not allowed, we muſt then ſuppoſe, that the 600 men, mentioned, chap. xviii. 11. made their encampment between Zorah and Eſhtaol, before they marched out of their own country, and gave that place the ſame name, which the other had near Kirjath-jearim, where they encamped the firſt night.

CHAP. XIV.

1 Samſon deſireth a wife of the Philiſtines. 6 In his journey he killeth a lion. 8 In a ſecond journey he findeth honey in the carcaſe. 10 Samſons marriage-feaſt. 12 His riddle by his wife is made known. 19 He ſpoileth thirty Philiſtines. 20 His wife is married to another.

AND Samſon went down to Timnath, and ſaw a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philiſtines.

2 And he came up and told his father and his mother, and ſaid, I have ſeen a woman in Timnath of the daughters of the Philiſtines: now therefore get her for me to wife.

3 Then his father and his mother ſaid unto him, Is there never a woman among the daughters of thy brethren, or among all my people, that thou goeſt to take a wife of the uncircumciſed Philiſtines? And Samſon ſaid unto his father, Get her for me, for ſhe pleaſeth me well.

4 But his father and his mother knew not that it was of the LORD, that he ſought an occaſion againſt the Philiſtines: for at that time the Philiſtines had dominion over Iſrael.

5 Then went Samſon down, and his father and his mother, to Timnath, and came to the vineyards of Timnath: and behold, a young lion roared againſt him.

6 And the ſpirit of the LORD came mightily upon him, and he rent him as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand: but he told not his father or his mother what he had done.

7 And he went down, and talked with the woman and ſhe pleaſed Samſon well.

8 ¶ And after a time he returned to take her, and he turned aſide to ſee the carcaſe of the lion: and behold, there was a ſwarm of bees, and honey in the carcaſe of the lion.

9 And he took thereof in his hands, and went on eating, and came to his father and mother, and he gave them, and they did eat: but he told not them that he had taken the honey out of the carcaſe of the lion.

10 ¶ So his father went down unto the woman, and Samſon made there a feaſt: for ſo uſed the young men to do.

11 And it came to paſs when they ſaw him, that they brought thirty companions to be with him.

12 ¶ And Samſon ſaid unto them, I will now put forth a riddle unto you: if you can certainly declare it me within the ſeven days of the feaſt, and find it out, then I will give you thirty ſheets, and thirty change of garments.

13 But if ye cannot declare it me, then ſhall ye give me thirty ſheets, and thirty change of garments. And they ſaid unto him, Put forth thy riddle, that we may hear it.

14 And he ſaid unto them, Out of the eater came forth meat, and out of the ſtrong came forth ſweetneſs. And they could not in three days expound the riddle.

15 And it came to paſs on the ſeventh day, that they ſaid unto Samſons wife, Entice thy huſband, that he may declare unto us the riddle, leſt we burn thee and thy fathers houſe with fire: have ye called us to take that we have? is it not ſo?

16 And Samſons wife wept before him, and ſaid, Thou doſt but hate me, and loveſt me not: thou haſt put forth a riddle unto the children of my people, and haſt not told it me. And he ſaid unto her, Behold, I have not told it my father nor my mother, and ſhall I tell it thee?

17 And ſhe wept before him the ſeven days, while their feaſt laſted: and it came to paſs on the ſeventh day, that he told her, becauſe ſhe lay ſore upon him: and ſhe told the riddle to the children of her people.

18 And the men of the city ſaid unto him on the ſeventh day, before the ſun went down, What is ſweeter than honey? and what is ſtronger than a lion? And he ſaid unto them, If ye had not plowed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle.

19 ¶ And the ſpirit of the LORD came upon him, and he went down to Aſhkelon, and ſlew thirty men of them, and took their ſpoil, and gave change of garments unto them which expounded the riddle: and his anger was kindled, and he went up to his fathers houſe.

20 But Samſons wife was given to his companion, whom he had uſed as his friend.

Ver. 1. And Samſon went down to Timnath, &c.] Samſon now enters upon the great ſcene of action which he was pre-ordained to accompliſh. He was guided and directed by a particular providence; and, by the great exploits he performed, God made it appear, that it was not for want of power, that he ſuffered his people to be ſo long oppreſſed by the Philiſtines. He was able to verify his promiſe, that one of them ſhould chaſe a thouſand; but their apoſtacy from him was the cauſe of his forſaking them. He however was now inclinable to accompliſh his promiſe, that Sampſon ſhould begin to deliver Iſrael out of the hand of the Philiſtines, and a ſuitable occaſion for this purpoſe offered it ſelf in due time; for Samſon went to Timnath, a city in his own tribe, but ſubjected, it is probable, to the Philiſtines, who oppreſſed the Iſraelites, and made them their tributaries; which, however, did not diſcontinue, but rather promote, all manner of commerce between them.

Samſon there ſaw one of the daughters of the Philiſtines, and conceived ſo great a paſſion for her, that he determined to eſpouſe her. This, indeed, was contrary to the letter of the law, which prohibited all alliances of this nature with the daughters of Pagans, Exod. xxxiv. 16. Deut. vii. 3. For tho' the Philiſtines did not conſtitute any of the ſeven nations of Canaan, yet they were included in the ſame condemnation, and their land was given to the Iſraelites.

But though Samſon ſeems to have acted in this particular contrary to an expreſs law, it would yet be decent to allow his conduct the moſt favourable conſtruction it will bear. The Deity might, perhaps, diſpenſe with his conformity to that law; or, at leaſt, it may paſs for a general rule, that when we ſee, in the Sacred Scriptures, ſome extraordinary men acting in a ſeeming oppoſition to certain ceremonial laws, or to ſuch as derive all their morality from ſome particular and arbitrary circumſtances, we ought to ſuſpend our judgment, with reference to the nature of their conduct, and may venture to ſuppoſe, that God excuſed their non-conformity to thoſe ceremonial inſtitutions, and had guarded againſt the particular circumſtance which rendered the violation of them criminal. That law which prohibited the Iſraelites from contracting marriages with Pagan women, might poſſibly have been a precept of this nature. It was moral, with relation to this particular circumſtance, namely, that the perſon who eſpouſed a heathen woman, might be tempted by her to embrace idolatry; but God, in the courſe of his providence, might regulate circumſtances in ſuch a manner, as to prevent this ill effect with reſpect to Samſon, either by inclining his wife to become a convert to the true religion, which is what the Jews affirm, or by preſerving him from the dangerous conſequences of ſuch a marriage.

The manner in which the Sacred Hiſtorian has related this tranſaction, ſeems to juſtify our conjecture, that Samſon was influenced by a providential impreſſion, and that his affection for this daughter of the Philiſtines, was not his only inducement to eſpouſe her: For it is expreſly ſaid, (ver. 4) But his father and mother knew not that it was of the Lord, that he ſought an occaſion againſt the Philiſtines, &c. The meaning of which is this; Samſon was deſirous of an opportunity to avenge the ſervitude of his countrymen, upon their oppreſſors the Philiſtines, and was wrought upon, by a divine impulſe, to that effect. It was natural, therefore, for him to conclude, that his contracting ſo intimate an alliance with them, might tempt them to offer him ſome inſult which would furniſh him with the opportunity he deſired, of chaſtiſing them for their inhuman treatment of the Iſraelites, and without violating the conditions on which theſe latter may be ſuppoſed to have ſubmitted to their dominion over them.

Ver. 5. Then went Samſon down, and his father and his mother to Timnath.] His parents were prevailed upon by his importunity, and perhaps he himſelf had acquainted them with the Divine Impulſe that inclined him to this match.

——— And behold a young Lion roared againſt him.] While Samſon and his parents were in their way to Timnath, he performed an exploit, which was a noble prelude to thoſe he was afterward to accompliſh. A lion rouzed from his covert, and was on the point of launching upon him with open jaws. Judæa abounded with theſe fierce creatures; and there was a city, in the tribe of Judah, which was called Lebaoth, or the City of Lions, probably becauſe it was ſituated in a part of the country, that was much infeſted by theſe animals. The lion, mentioned in this verſe, roared againſt Samſon, and was young, as the Hebrew words kephir arajoth import, and it is then that theſe creatures are moſt formidable. This terrifying ſpectacle did but animate Samſon to make the firſt eſſay of his ſupernatural ſtrength; tho' he was not provided with any weapon for his defence. He ſprung upon the raging ſavage, and rent him as if he had been a tender kid. Joſephus ſays, that Samſon ſtrangled him; but the Hebrew word, ſchaſſah, ſignifies, to rend in pieces.

An exploit, of ſo extraordinary a nature, may ſeem incredible to thoſe who delight in contradiction; but what could be impracticable to a man who glowed with the energy of the divine Spirit!

Samſon concealed this action from his father and mother, being unwilling, perhaps, it ſhould come to the ears of the Philiſtines, ſince it might create ſuch a jealouſy of him in their minds, as would diſconcert his premeditated deſign. He therefore proceeded with his parents to Timnath, where he had an interview with his intended bride, and found her as agreeable as he could wiſh.

Ver. 8. And after a time he returned to take her, and he turned aſide to ſee the carcaſe of the lion; and behold there was a ſwarm of bees and honey in the carcaſe of the lion.] This paſſage has exerciſed the learning of critics and commentators not a little; ſome of them are ſhocked at it, as thinking it favours the old notion of animals being engendered from putrefaction, which is now very juſtly exploded. But they muſt be extremely penetrating indeed, who can diſcover any ſuch import in the paſſage before us. Others pretend, that bees have a natural averſion for all corrupted fleſh, and conſequently that a ſwarm of thoſe creatures would never ſettle in the carcaſe of a lion. In anſwer to which, we think it very reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the fleſh of the lion which Samſon ſlew, was ſoon dried to powder, and the juices of it evaporated by the glowing ſun-ſhine in Paleſtine, and that nothing remained but the dry skeleton of the creature, in which the bees might have no averſion to ſettle, whatever antipathy they had to corrupted fleſh.

Profane hiſtory acquaints us with ſeveral events that have ſome correſpondence with this. Herodotus declares, that the Amathuſians having cut off the head of Oneſilus, the ſon of Cherſis, brought it into their city, and fixed it on one of their gates; and that after it had remained there for ſome time, and every part of it, except the skull, was conſumed, a ſwarm of bees ſettled in this, and filled it with honey. The Amathuſians conſulted the oracle on this occaſion, and were commanded by it, to offer yearly ſacrifices to Oneſilus, as to a hero. The people obeyed the order of the oracle, and the annual ſacrifices were ſtill continued in the time of Herodotus, (Vide Herodot. lib. 5 cap. 114. pag. 329) It is likewiſe ſaid, that honey was made by bees in the ſkull of Hippocrates, Vide Hippocrat. Coi vita ex Sorano, vol. 1. Oper. Hippocr. & Galen. a Charter. edit. p. 2. Others will have it, that a ſwarm of bees was found in the ſepulchre of that great phyſician.

Samſon ate of the honey he found in the carcaſe of the lion, and gave part to his father and mother, but did not inform inform them in what manner he had procured it, leſt they ſhould divulge it, as he might poſſibly imagine, by which means the ſolution of his intended riddle would be rendered eaſy to the Philiſtines.

Ver. 10. So his father went down unto the woman, and Samſon made there a feaſt, &c.] This was according to the cuſtom of all countries; and ſuch a feaſt was called by the Jews, the nuptial joy, with which no other was to be intermixed, and all labour ceaſed as long as it laſted.

Ver. 11. And it came to paſs when they ſaw him, that they brought thirty companions to be with him.] Theſe may be conſidered as bride-men, whom the friends of Samſon's ſpouſe brought, in order to honour his nuptials. Some interpreters have imagined that theſe thirty men were rather guards appointed by the Philiſtines, to obſerve his conduct, tho' under a pretext of rendering him the uſual honours on thoſe occaſions; but the Sacred Hiſtorian has related nothing that favours this opinion.

The Jews have aſſigned ſtrange functions to bride-men, one of which was to paſs the night in the bridal chamber: Ne ſcilicet alter alteri afferret damnum: ne ſponſus etiamſi agnoſcat ſanguinem virginitatis illum celaret aut tolleret, & ne ſponſa ſecum afferrat ſindonem intinctum.

Ver. 12. And Samſon ſaid unto them, I will now put forth a riddle unto you, &c.] The eſtabliſhed cuſtom of thoſe times, and which was tranſmitted to ſucceeding ages, was to propoſe ſome ænigmatical queſtions to the gueſts, in order to render the feaſt more agreeable. Queſtions of this nature were diſtinguiſhed into two ſorts; the firſt, which were properly called ænigma's, related to ſome entertaining ſubject; the others, which were ſtyled γρίφοι, were calculated for ſerious topics. Γρίφος is defined by the ſcholiaſt upon Ariſtophanes, to be παρόινιον ζήτημα, a queſtion propoſed at an entertainment of drinking; and a prize was reſerved for thoſe who unfolded the myſtery that was couched in it.

That which Samſon propoſed to his gueſts was intended for ſomething of much more importance than the exerciſe of their capacities. Out of the eater, ſaid he, came forth meat, and out of the ſtrong came forth ſweetneſs, ver. 14 Some, in order to keep up the oppoſition in the words, tranſlate the latter part of the riddle thus; and out of that which was bitter came forth ſweetneſs. Samſon allowed them ſeven days to expound this ænigma, and with this condition, that if they ſucceeded, he would give them thirty ſheets, and thirty change of garments; or, as it may be otherwiſe expreſſed, thirty pieces of fine linnen, and thirty compleat ſuits of cloaths, which conſiſted of a coat, or gown, and a cloak; but if they were unable to ſolve it, they ſhould charge themſelves with the ſame forfeit to him.

In vain did the young men attempt the ſolution of this dark queſtion, which was altogether inexplicable, and ſeems to deviate from the uſual genius of riddles, where ſome obſcurity ſhould indeed be intermixed, but not of ſuch a nature as to require the art of divination to unfold it.

When the ſeven days were expired, the Philiſtines addreſſed th mſelves to the bride, and complained that they had been invited to the nuptial feaſt, with no other intention, than to be impoveriſhed by an enſnaring riddle; they therefore threatned to burn her, and her father's houſe, if ſhe did not prevail upon her husband to explain it to her. There is ſome ambiguity in the expreſſions uſed by the Sacred Hiſtorian, to ſpecify the time when ſhe was thus applied to by the Philiſtines: It is ſaid, in the fifteenth verſe, that it was on the ſeventh day, which was the laſt day of the feaſt: But it is added in the 17th verſe, that the wife of Samſon wept before him the ſeven days, while their feaſt laſted. We need not cut the knot, like the Arabian interpreter, who pretends, that one number of days is uſed for another, tho' even this ſuppoſition will not clear up the difficulty; and we think a fair and natural ſolution may be offered, which is this. It is ſaid, ver. 14. that they could not in three days expound the riddle. We may therefore ſuppoſe, that they then began to deſpair of ſucceeding, and immediately made their application to the wife of Samſon, intreating her, in the moſt obliging language, to draw the ſecret from her husband. This ſhe promiſed to undertake; but finding Samſon not inclinable to gratify her curioſity, ſhe affected an air of grief and dejection during the remainder of the ſeven days; which we take to be the true meaning of the expreſſion, ſhe wept before him the ſeven days while the feaſt laſted, ver. 17. and it is accordingly render'd in the margin of our Engliſh Bible, or the reſt of the ſeven days.

The gueſts finding on the laſt day of the feaſt, that the wife of Samſon had not as yet prevailed upon him to impart to her the explication of his riddle, thought fit to threaten her and her father's houſe with fire, if ſhe did not accompliſh her promiſe to them; upon which, her importunities to her husband were redoubled, and ſhe had recourſe to all the enſnaring power of tears: Theſe even Samſon himſelf thought irreſiſtable, his reſolution was vanquiſhed by the captivating flow, and his riddle was now no longer a ſecret to his wife. He even forgot to order her not to divulge it to any one; but, in all probability, any ſuch order would have been as ineffectual as his own reſolution to conceal the ſenſe of his ænigma. His wife made the moſt ungenerous uſe of the confidence he repoſed in her; ſhe doubtleſs was elated with her triumph over the ſtrongeſt of men, and thought it a glorious circumſtance in her favour, that ſhe could now convince the bridemen, that her tears and careſſes had extorted the ſecret from her husband.

When the time came for the gueſts to give their anſwer to Samſon, they expreſſed it in theſe terms, What is ſweeter than honey, and what is ſtronger than a lion? ver. 18. To which Joſephus, and St. Ambroſe after him, pretend, that Samſon immediately added, And what is more perfidious than a woman? But the Sacred Hiſtorian only repreſents him as replying, If ye had not ploughed with my heifer, ye had not found out my riddle; intimating by this metaphor, that he was ſenſible the diſcovery was not owing to their penetration, but to the mean artifice they had practiſed.

If Samſon thought himſelf obliged to make good the engagements that had been ſtipulated between them, he however did it in ſuch a manner, as made thoſe to whom he gave the prize repent of the fraud they had committed in order to obtain it, ſince it proved fatal to thirty of their countrymen. Samſon went down to Askelon, which was the capital city of one of the five lordſhips of the Philiſtines, and he there ſlew thirty men, whoſe ſpoils he gave to the pretended expoſitors of his riddle.

Samſon's conduct, in this tranſaction, has been cenſured by ſome as altogether unjuſtifiable; and it is alledged, that whatever puniſhment ſome particular Philiſtines might deſerve from him, that could never authorize him to maſſacre the thirty men of Askelon. In anſwer to which, we think we may venture to affirm, that even theſe latter were criminal as well as the reſt of their countrymen, and ought to be conſidered as a branch of thoſe Philiſtines who had ſo long oppreſſed the Iſraelites with a moſt injurious ſervitude. The fraudulent proceeding therefore of the thirty men of Timnath was only the circumſtance which excited Samſon's reſolution to deſtroy thoſe of Askelon, who as a ſet of tyrannical oppreſſors merited the death they ſuffer'd: To which we may add, what the Sacred Text declares, namely, that the ſpirit of the Lord came upon him, ver. 19. before he executed this act of vengeance. Solomon Jarchi, and the Chaldee Paraphraſt, expound thoſe words thus; the ſpirit of fortitude which proceeds from the Lord came upon him. This makes no great alteration in the ſenſe; for if the Deity infuſed new fortitude into Samſon on this occaſion, no one will preſume to ſay, that God intended this fortitude ſhould be unemployed; and againſt whom could it be ſo juſtly directed, as againſt the implacable enemies and oppreſſors of Samſon's countrymen?

Ver. 19. ——And his anger was kindled.] Againſt his wife, for betraying him, and againſt his companions, for this diſ-ingenuous and fraudulent proceeding.

Ver. 20. And Samſon's wife was given to his companion whom he had uſed as his friend.] This aggravated the inſult that was offered him, for he had been more familiar with this perſon, and had treated him in a more friendly and engaging manner, than he did the reſt who afforded him their company. This ungenerous friend might poſſibly be the principal brideman, who was diſtinguiſh'd by the appellation of the friend of the bridegroom, as we read in the Goſpel of St. John, iii. 29. Samſon was therefore the more incenſed againſt this people, ſince he found them to be a ſet of perfidious wretches.

CHAP.

CHAP. XV.

1 Samſon is denied his wife. 3 He burneth the Philiſtines corn with foxes and firebrands. 6 His wife and her father are burnt by the Philiſtines. 7 Samſon ſmiteth them hip and thigh. 9 He is bound by the men of Judah, and delivered to the Philiſtines. 14 He killeth them with a jaw-bone. 18 God maketh the fountain En-hakkore for him in Lehi.

BUT it came to paſs within a while after, in the time of wheat-harveſt, that Samſon viſited his wife with a kid, and he ſaid, I will go in to my wife into the chamber. But her father would not ſuffer him to go in.

2 And her father ſaid, I verily thought that thou hadſt utterly hated her, therefore I gave her to thy companion: is not her younger ſiſter fairer than ſhe? take her, I pray thee, inſtead of her.

3 ¶ And Samſon ſaid concerning them, Now ſhall I be more blameleſs than the Philiſtines, though I do them a diſpleaſure.

4 And Samſon went and caught three hundred foxes, and took fire-brands, and turned tail to tail, and put a fire-brand in the midſt between two tails.

5 And when he had ſet the brands on fire, he let them go into the ſtanding corn of the Philiſtines, and burnt up both the ſhocks, and alſo the ſtanding corn, with the vineyards and olives.

6 ¶ Then the Philiſtines ſaid, Who hath done this? And they anſwered, Samſon the ſon-in-law of the Timnite, becauſe he had taken his wife, and given her to his companion. And the Philiſtines came up, and burnt her, and her father with fire.

7 ¶ And Samſon ſaid unto them, Though ye have done this, yet will I be avenged of you, and after that I will ceaſe.

8 And he ſmote them hip and thigh with a great ſlaughter; and he went down and dwelt in the top of the rock Etam.

9 ¶ Then the Philiſtines went up, and pitched in Judah, and ſpread themſelves in Lehi.

10 And the men of Judah ſaid, Why are ye come up againſt us? And they anſwered, To bind Sampſon are we come up, to do to him, as he hath done to us.

11 Then three thouſand men of Judah went to the top of the rock Etam, and ſaid to Samſon, Knoweſt thou not that the Philiſtines are rulers over us? What is this that thou haſt done unto us? And he ſaid unto them, As they did unto me, ſo have I done unto them.

12 And they ſaid unto him, We are come done to bind thee, that we may deliver thee into the hand of the Philiſtines. And Samſon ſaid unto them, Swear unto me, that ye will not fall upon me yourſelves.

13 And they ſpake unto him, ſaying, No: but we will bind thee faſt, and deliver thee into their hand: but ſurely we will not kill thee, And they bound him with two new cords, and brought him up from the rock.

14 ¶ And when he came unto Lehi, the Philiſtines ſhouted againſt him: and the ſpirit of the LORD came mightily upon him, and the cords that were upon his arms, became as flax that was burnt with fire, and his bands looſed from off his hands.

15 And he found a new jaw-bone of an aſs, and put forth his hand and took it, and ſlew a thouſand men therewith.

16 And Samſon ſaid, With the jaw-bone of an aſs, heaps upon heaps, with the jaw of an aſs have I ſlain a thouſand men.

17 And it came to paſs, when he had made an end of ſpeaking, that he caſt away the jaw-bone out of his hand, and called that place Ramath-lehi.

18 ¶ And he was ſore athirſt, and called on the LORD, and ſaid, Thou haſt given this great deliverance into the hand of thy ſervant: and now ſhall I die for thirſt, and fall into the hand of the uncircumciſed?

19 But God clave an hollow place that was in the jaw, and there came water thereout; and when he had drunk, his ſpirit came again, and he revived: wherefore he called the name thereof En-hakkore, which is in Lehi unto this day.

20 And he judged Iſrael in the days of the Philiſtines twenty years.

Ver. 1. But it came to paſs within a while after.] The Hebrew word mijamim, which we tranſlate a while after, ſignifies, in other places, after a year, at which time the anger of Samſon was appeaſed.

——In the time of wheat harveſt.] This was about the feaſt of Pentecoſt, which was celebrated with great joy by the Iſraelites.

—— That Samſon viſited his wife with a kid.] Which was no deſpicable preſent, as appears by what is related of Judah and Tamar, Gen. xxxviii 17. for it was eſteem'd very delicious food, not only in Judæa, but likewiſe in other countries, as Bochart has proved, in his Hierozoicon, P. 1. lib. 2. cap. 2.

——And he ſaid, I will go in to my wife into the chamber: but her father would not ſuffer him to go in.] The father-in-law of Sampſon denied him admittance to his wife; but as he had reaſon to be apprehenſive of his reſentment for ſuch an indignity, he endeavoured to calm him with all the ſoftening expreſſions he could uſe. He repreſented to him, for inſtance, that his long abſence had had given him cauſe to ſuſpect, that the affection he once entertained for his daughter was changed into averſion; for which reaſon he had eſpouſed her to another. But in order to make him ſome compenſation for the loſs he had ſuſtained, he offered him his younger daughter, and declared ſhe was more amiable than her ſiſter. This propoſal appeared as odious to Samſon, as the excuſe in general was frivolous. Inceſtuous marriages of this nature were very cuſtomary among the Pagans, but they were expreſly condemned by God; Samſon therefore looked upon this offer as a new inſult, inſtead of any reparation for the injuſtice he had already ſuffered; and determined, that the inhabitants of Timnath ſhould expiate the ill treatment he had received from his father-in-law, and which perhaps was approved of by them.

Ver. 3. And Samſon ſaid concerning them, Now ſhall I be more blameleſs than the Philiſtines, tho' I do them a diſpleaſure.] He ſeems to have turned away in ſcorn and indignation, and without making a reply to his father; but perhaps told the firſt perſons he met, that he would certainly be revenged on the Philiſtines, and that they might blame themſelves for the miſchief he intended them. It ſeems natural to conclude from hence, that the people of that place approved of his wife's ſecond marriage, and honour'd it with their preſence. Samſon therefore reſolved to chaſtiſe them, not as a private perſon, but as one appointed by God to vindicate the oppreſſion of the Iſraelites, who had received a new inſult, by the contemptuous injury that was offered to him.

Ver. 4. And Samſon went and caught three hundred foxes, &c.] Theſe creatures were extremely numerous in Judæa, and ſeveral places received their names from them, particularly, Hazar-ſhual, or, the gate of the fox, in the tribe of Judah; and Shaalbim, or Shaalabbim, in the tribe of Dan, Joſhua xix. 42. Judges i. 35. Under this name of foxes may be comprehended a ſpecies of creatures call'd thoes, and by the Hebrews ijim, which go together in large herds, ſo that two hundred, as good authors report, have been ſeen in a company. The Hebrew word ſhual, a fox, will likewiſe comprehend other animals, and perhaps all wild beaſts of prey of the ſame ſize. The word ſhual, in the Perſian language, ſignifies alſo a beaſt call'd a jackall, which was very common in Aſia.

It is not ſaid, that Samſon caught all theſe foxes at one time, or in a day and a night; but there might be a week, or even a month's time, allowed for the accompliſhment of his deſign, in which his ſervants and friends may be ſuppoſed to have aſſiſted him, by which means ſuch a number might be taken in a ſhort time: For they were not caught, as ſome imagine, only by hunting, but in ſnares and nets, as Bochart has demonſtrated, in his Hierozoicon, lib. 3. cap. 13. where, in anſwer to thoſe who enquire, why Samſon choſe foxes rather than dogs, or ſome other creatures, that great author thinks it ſufficient to ſay, that he brought about two ends by this proceeding, ſince he at once freed the country from a large number of noxious animals, and made them inſtrumental in his revenge on the Philiſtines.

——And took firebrands, and turned tail to tail, and put a firebrand in the midſt between two tails.] It was an artful contrivance of Samſon, to fix the brands to the foxes in pairs, becauſe their efforts to run different ways, or not directly in the ſame track, would prevent the brands from being too ſoon extinguiſhed, as it likewiſe would the foxes from expatiating farther than he intended, for his deſign was to conſume only the corn of the Philiſtines, and not that of the Iſraelites, which was ſecured by this politic precaution.

The effect entirely anſwered his intention, for he had no ſooner let theſe creatures looſe, than they naturally ran among the ſtanding corn, to ſhelter themſelves from the fire, of which foxes are obſerved to be much afraid. And as they were coupled, it was impoſſible for them to ſhrowd themſelves in their reſpective holes.

Bochart has taken notice of a very famous monument of this fact, in the fourth book of Ovid's Faſti, where he declares, that it was cuſtomary for the Romans, every year in the middle of April, to let looſe ſeveral foxes in the Circus, with burning torches faſtened to their backs, the original of which cuſtom could not, as this great author juſtly thinks, proceed from ſo inconſiderable a circumſtance as Ovid mentions, from the report of an old man whom he met in his travels. This paſſage is worth citing, as being curious in its kind.

Car igitur miſſæ vinctis ardentia tædis
Terga ferant vulpes, cauſa docenda mihi.

"It is incumbent on me, ſays the poet, to aſſign the "reaſon, why foxes are let looſe with flaming torches "faſtened on their backs." He then proceeds:

Frigida Carſeoli nec clivis apta ferendis
Terra, ſed ad ſegetes ingenioſus ager.
Hac ego Pelignos natalia rura petebam,
Parva, ſed aſſiduis uvida ſemper aquis.
Hoſpitis antiqui ſolitas intravimus ædes.

Filius hujus erat primo laſcivus in ævo;
Addideratque annos ad duo luſtra duos.
Is capit extremi vulpem ſub valle ſalicti,
Abſtulerat multas illa cohortis aves.
Captivam ſtipula fœnoque involvit, & ignes
Admovet: urentes effugit illa manus.
Qua fugit, incendit veſtitos meſſibus agros:
Damnoſis vires ignibus aura dabat.
Factum abiit: monumenta manent: nam vivere captam
Nunc quoque lex vulpem Carſeolana vetat.
Utque luat pœnas gens hæc, cerealibus ardet:
Quoquo modo ſegetes perdidit, ipſa perit.

"The country of Carſeoli (continues Ovid) is cold, "and unfavourable to olives, but fertile in corn. From "hence I ſet out for my native land, whoſe extent indeed "is inconſiderable, but the ſoil is water'd with ſtreams "that ever flow. I came, as uſual, to the houſe of my "ancient hoſt ——Whoſe ſon was in the lively flower "of his youth, and had not then exceeded the twelfth "year of his age. A fox, whoſe ravages had thin'd the "coops of our hoſt, had been lately taken by the youth, "who fixed a quantity of hay and ſtraw on the body of "this animal, and then ſet it on fire. The fox feeling "the flame, immediately fled through the fields, and laid "the harveſt in aſhes wherever ſhe paſſed, the wind con-"tributing to the violence of the fire. Much time has "elapſed, ſince this fact was committed, but the monu-"ments of it ſtill remain. The people of Carſeoli made "a law for deſtroying all the foxes that ſhould happen to "be taken; ſince which it has been cuſtomary to fix "flaming torches to their bodies, that they may periſh in "the ſame manner as the corn was deſtroyed by one of "their tribe."

Bochart has very judiciouſly refuted the opinion of Ovid, with relation to the original of this cuſtom; notwithſtanding which, Biſhop Patrick can hardly believe it was derived from this action of Samſon; and tho' the foxes were let looſe in the Roman Circus, at the ſame time of the year in which Samſon committed this fact, as that prelate acknowledges, yet, ſays he, "one can give no reaſon why "the Phænicians, from whom the Romans muſt be ſup-"poſed to borrow it, ſhould celebrate the memory of this "miſchief which Samſon did them, in ſuch a repreſenta-"tion of it."

We think, on the contrary, that a reaſon may be aſſign'd for the eſtabliſhment of this cuſtom: What could be more natural, than for the Philiſtines to perpetuate the memory of the miſchief they had ſuſtain'd, by this action of Samſon, in order to tranſmit to their lateſt poſterity a national averſion to the Jews? Had this cuſtom been any monument of their own diſhonour, the Philiſtines would have been very imprudent in ordaining it; but the beſt and braveſt nation in the world might, without any reproach to them, have been involved in the ſame calamity, by the worſt and meaneſt of mankind. There were other inſtances in which the Philiſtines were great ſufferers by Samſon, but this was the only one they could commemorate, without any diſgrace to themſelves.

Ver. 6. Then the Philiſtines ſaid, Who hath done this? And they anſwered, Samſon the ſon-in-law of the Timnite, &c.] They were amazed at ſo terrible a diſaſter, and we may ſuppoſe them to have been not a little confounded, when they heard that Samſon was the author of it, in revenge for the inſult they and his father-in-law had offered him at Timnath, by depriving him of his wife.

——And the Philiſtines came up, and burnt her and her father with fire.] When they were informed of the motives which had induced Samſon to uſe them ſo cruelly, they looked upon his father-in-law as the incendiary, in a great meaſure; and therefore they burnt him, together with his daughter, who alſo might be conſidered as the chief cauſe of this miſchief.

This puniſhment, therefore, ſeems to have been inflicted on the father and daughter, by way of retaliation; for as through their indiſcretion they drew on their country ſo ſad a revenge by fire, the reſt might think it but juſt and natural, that they ſhould periſh thereby, to expiate their crime. We find too, that puniſhing or revenging by fire was a notorious practice in thoſe days; for the thirty young men, as may be remembred, when they found themſelves incapable of explaining Samſon's riddle, threatned the bride, to burn her and her father's houſe, if ſhe did not aſſiſt them on that occaſion. But ſhe now ſuffered the ſame calamity ſhe ſought to avoid by betraying her huſband.

Ver. 7. And Samſon ſaid unto them, Though ye have done this, yet will I be revenged on you, and then I will ceaſe.] I ſhall not conſider the puniſhment ye have inflicted on my perfidious wife, and father-in-law, as a ſufficient reparation for the injury I have ſuſtain'd from them, and likewiſe from you; ye may therefore be certain, that I will avenge myſelf on you by ſome other action, that ſhall bear ſome proportion to my wrongs; I will then ceaſe my reſentment, and the quarrel between us ſhall end, unleſs ye offer me a new provocation.

This we conceive to be the true meaning of the paſſage before us, as it is render'd by our tranſlators; but the words in the Hebrew are a very conciſe form of ſpeech, where ſomething muſt be ſupplied; and their proper import is this, if ye had done after this manner, that is, if ye had puniſhed them ſooner for their baſeneſs to me, I ſhould have imagined you had acted with a ſtrict regard to juſtice; but as you have only ſacrificed them to your own reſentment, I am determined to be revenged upon you, even for this proceeding.

Ver. 8. And he ſmote them hip and thigh with a great ſlaughter.] The different ſentiments of interpreters on this paſſage are almoſt innumerable; and it muſt be confeſſed, that the words in the original are very obſcure. Joſephus only declares, that Samſon ſlew a great number of this people, ἐν πεδίῳ τῶν Παλαιστινῶν, in a field of the Philiſtines; but is ſilent as to the import of hip and thigh. The expoſition given by the Chaldee Paraphraſt is, That he ſmote both footmen and horſemen, the one reſting on their legs, as the Hebrew word ſchock ſignifies; and the other on their thighs, as they ſat cloſe to their horſes. Others take the meaning to be, that he ſmote them both on their legs and thighs, as they fled away, ſo as to diſable them from any ſervice, tho' he did not kill them. And it is certain, that the words which we tranſlate great ſlaughter, ſignify a great ſtroke. But whatever may be the true verſion of this paſſage as it appears in the original, Samſon certainly haraſſed the Philiſtines very ſeverely on this occaſion.

——And he went down.] With reſpect to the country of the Philiſtines, he went up, as appears by the next verſe; but from the mountainous part of Judæa, where he was, he firſt went down.

——And dwelt in the top of the rock Etam.] This was a ſtrong place in the tribe of Judah, as Joſephus informs us, to the ſummit of which no more than one man could aſcend in front. By all the circumſtances of this hiſtory, it is evident that Samſon had no commiſſion from God to raiſe an army, and make open war, like Gideon, Jephthah, and others, for the deliverance of Iſrael from the yoke of the Philiſtines; but was only authorized to weaken them, and keep them in awe, that their dread of him might cauſe them to relax their cruelty.

This retreat of Samſon was looked upon by the Philiſtines as a flight, and it inſpired them with more courage than they naturally poſſeſſed. In conſequence of which, they formed a camp in the tribe of Judah, and extended themſelves to Lehi, which received its denomination from the jaw-bone with which Samſon ſlaughter'd a thouſand of their men, and it is thought to have been about ſeven leagues from Askelon.

The men of Judah complained of this incurſion, ver. 10. but when they underſtood that it was intended only againſt Samſon, they meanly undertook to deliver up a man whoſe exploits were likely to prove ſo fatal to the nation in whoſe favour they were performed. They aſcended the rock to which Samſon had retreated, and reproached him for violating the conditions on which they had ſubjected themſelves to the Philiſtines. Samſon replied, that he had only requited the wrongs he had received from that people; but ſo inſenſible were the Iſraelites of his ability to be their protector, that they told him, they came thither with an intention to bind him, in order to deliver him up to his enemies. Samſon thought it beneath him to reproach them for their puſilanimous ſpirit, and only inſiſted on their taking an oath not to be themſelves his executioners. We cannot think, with moſt of the commentators, that he really dreaded ſuch a caſtardly crew, but rather ſpoke to them with a ſarcaſtical air, and his words may be paraphraſed thus: As for the Philiſtines, I have no apprehenſions of them, but I think my ſelf in danger, from ſuch gallant men as you, and therefore muſt deſire, for my own ſafety, that you will ſwear to do no more than bind me, for I am very unwilling to fall by the hands of my countrymen, whoſe cauſe I have eſpouſed againſt their oppreſſors. The men of Judah readily complied with Samſons requeſt; and after they had bound him with ſtrong cords, they baſely delivered him up to his implacable enemies.

The Philiſtines ſhouted for joy at the ſight of their prey, and led Samſon in triumph, as if they had conquered him by their own valour. It was then that the ſpirit of the Lord came mightily upon him, ver. 14. that irreſiſtible ſpirit which had formerly enabled him to rend a lion, and lay a number of Philiſtines in the duſt. He ſuddenly burſt the bands of his captivity; and the Sacred Hiſtorian, in order to repreſent the facility with which he thus diſengaged himſelf, declares, that the cords which were upon his arms, became as flax that was burnt with fire, ver. 14.

Ver. 15. And he found a new jaw-bone of an aſs, and put forth his hand and took it, and ſlew a thouſand men therewith.] Samſon now experienced the benediction with which God had formerly promiſed to recompence the Iſraelites for their fidelity and devotedneſs to his ſervice. One man of you ſhall chaſe a thouſand, Joſh. xxiii. 10. Samſon, unaided by any mortal arm but his own, purſued and ſlaughter'd a thouſand Philiſtines; and with ſo inconſiderable a weapon as the jaw-bone of an aſs. In order to commemorate ſo ſignal a victory, he called the place where he obtained it, Ramath-lehi, ver. 17. which ſignifies the projection, or caſting away of the jaw.

The mighty victor expreſſed his joy at this glorious action, in a ſong of triumph, With the jaw-bone of an aſs, heaps upon heaps; with the jaw-bone of an aſs have I ſlain a thouſand men, ver. 16. but it is not ſaid whether Samſon, by theſe expreſſions, celebrated his own praiſe, or teſtified his gratitude to God. Joſephus, indeed, aſſerts the former; and as Samſon was ſeized with a violent thirſt after his victory, that hiſtorian declares, that as God had endued him with ſupernatural ſtrength, ſo he now intended to make him ſenſible, by one of the painful infirmities of human nature, that he was but a meer man. But as the Sacred Text has not charged Samſon with any criminal elation of mind, we think it very unbecoming any commentator, or hiſtorian, to impute it to him.

Ver. 18. And he was ſore a thirſt, and he called on the Lord, &c.] If Samſon had really loſt, the idea of God, amidſt the firſt tranſports of his joy, which we, however, cannot allow; yet it is certain, that he now experienced how much he needed his aſſiſtance; and therefore poured out the pathetic prayer recorded in this verſe: Upon which that ever gracious Being, who delights in granting the lawful ſupplications of his ſervants, preſented a wonderful ſpring of water to the view of Samſon, and preſerved his life by a new miracle. There is indeed ſome ambiguity in the expreſſions by which the hiſtorian has repreſented this circumſtance. The original may be thus rendered word for word; God clave Machteſh which was in Lehi; water ſprang from it: Samſon drank. All the difficulty in this paſſage is occaſioned by the two words Machteſh, and Lehi, the firſt of which ſometimes ſignifies the ſocket in which a tooth is inſerted, or even a jaw tooth,

Samson at his Death kills his Enemies

tooth, and in this ſenſe it is here taken by ſeveral learned Rabbins. If we acquieſce with this explication, as the generality of interpreters have done, the meaning will be, that God, in order to quench the thirſt of Samſon, cauſed water to flow from a cavity of the jaw with which that hero had defeated the Philiſtines. But this word often ſignifies a cavity in general, and we may ſuppoſe, with the Septuagint, that God diſcovered ſome clett to Samſon, either in the earth or in ſome rock, and we think this expoſition preferable to the former, for it is expreſly ſaid, that Samſon caſt away the jaw-bone out of his hand, ver. 17. after he had finiſhed his ſong, and it is not unreaſonable to think, that he ſoon quitted that place, in order to ſeek for ſome ſpring to ſlake his thirſt, and that he did not implore the Deity to interpoſe in his favour, till his thirſt became inſupportable to him, and after he had ſearched all about, tho' in vain, for water.

If the firſt term be equivocal, the ſecond is likewiſe ſo, for Lehi, which, as we have obſerved, ſometimes ſignifies a jaw, is taken by many to be the very jaw with which Samſon gained his victory. But it may likewiſe ſignify the place itſelf to which Samſon gave that name in order to commemorate the action of that day, and this ſeems to us to be the moſt natural ſenſe. The ſpring which preſerved the life of Samſon is ſaid to have been ſeen in the time of St. Jerom, [Hierom. tom. iv. par. 2. in Epitaph. Paulæ] and long after, in the days of St. Paula, who viſited that and other places in the Holy Land. It muſt however be acknowledged, that neither travellers, nor hiſtorians, are agreed with reſpect to the true ſituation of this miraculous ſpring. Glycas, and Antoninus the martyr, have mentioned it, and declared that it is to be ſeen in the ſuburbs of Eleutheropolis.

We ſhall cloſe this annotation, with obſerving, that the Hebrews ſometimes called naked and ſteep rocks, by the name of teeth, 1 Sam. xiv. 4, 5. Job. xxxix. 28. in each of which places the word in the original ſignifies a tooth. God therefore opened a rock called Mackteſh, or the cheek tooth, which was ſituated in the place where Samſon obtained his victory with the jaw-bone of an aſs, and which, for this reaſon, he called Lehi, or the jaw-bone. The appellation of this ſpring has induced ſeveral perſons to believe that it flowed from a ſocket in the jaw-bone, which Samſon had thrown away, and this it muſt be confeſſed would have been a moſt extraordinary miracle, but we think ſuch wonders are not to be multiplied without neceſſity.

Samſon called this fountain En-hakkore aſher belehi, which ſignifies the fountain of him who called, which is in the jaw, or rather in Lehi.

Ver. 20. And he judged Iſrael in the days of the Philiſtines twenty years.] The Iſraelites remained, all his time under the power of the Philiſtines, who they confeſs, ver. 11. were their rulers; and ſuch they continued for the ſpace of forty years, chap. xiii. 1. of which theſe twenty were paſt. Samſon was not permitted to compleat their deliverance, and only began it by the ſeveral defeats he gave the Philiſtines, and the detriment they ſuſtained from him in other inſtances. The Iſraelites therefore were ſtill left under the dominion of that people at the death of Samſon, nor did any deliverer ariſe till Samuel, who accompliſhed what Samſon began, 1 Sam. vii. 3.

CHAP. XVI.

1 Samſon at Gaza eſcapeth, and carrieth away the gates of the city. 4 Delilah corrupted by the Philiſtines, enticeth Samſon. 6 Thrice ſhe is deceived. 15 At laſt ſhe overcometh him: 21 The Philiſtines take him, and put out his eyes. 22 His ſtrength renewing, he pulleth down the houſe upon the Philiſtines, and dieth.

THEN went Samſon to Gaza, and ſaw there an harlot, and went in unto her.

2 And it was told the Gazites, ſaying, Samſon is come hither. And they compaſſed him in, and laid wait for him all night in the gate of the city, and were quiet all the night, ſaying, in the morning when it is day we ſhall kill him.

3 And Samſon lay till midnight, and aroſe at midnight, and took the doors of the gate of the city, and the two poſts, and went away with them, bar and all, and put them upon his ſhoulders, and carried them up to the top of an hill that is before Hebron.

4 ¶ And it came to paſs afterward, that he loved a woman in the valley of Sorek, whoſe name was Delilah.

5 And the lords of the Philiſtines came up unto her, and ſaid unto her, Entice him, and ſee wherein his great ſtrength lieth, and by what means we may prevail againſt him, that we may bind him to afflict him: and we will give thee every one of us eleven hundred pieces of ſilver.

6 And Delilah ſaid to Samſon, Tell me, I pray thee, wherein thy great ſtrength lieth, and wherewith thou mighteſt be bound to afflict thee.

7 And Samſon ſaid unto her, If they bind me with ſeven green withs, that were never dried, then ſhall I be weak, and be as another man.

8 Then the lords of the Philiſtines brought up to her ſeven green withs, which had not been dried, and ſhe bound him with them.

9 (Now there were men lying in wait, abiding with her in the chamber) And ſhe ſaid unto him, the Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon. And he brake the withs, as a thread of tow is broken when it toucheth the fire: ſo his ſtrength was not known.

10 And Delilah ſaid unto Samſon, Behold, thou haſt mocked me, and told me lies: now tell me, I pray thee, wherewith thou mighteſt be bound.

11 And he ſaid unto her, If they bind me faſt with new ropes that never were occupied, then ſhall I be weak, and be as another man.

12 Delilah therefore took new ropes, and bound him therewith, and ſaid unto him. The Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon (And there were liers in wait abiding in the chamber) And he brake them from off his arms like a thread.

13 And Delilah ſaid unto Samſon, Hitherto thou haſt mocked me, and told me lies: tell me wherewith thou mighteſt be bound. And he ſaid unto her, If thou weaveſt weaveſt the ſeven locks of my head with the web.

14 And ſhe faſtned it with the pin, and ſaid unto him, The Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon, And he awaked out of his ſleep, and went away with the pin of the beam, and with the web.

15 ¶ And ſhe ſaid unto him, How canſt thou ſay, I love thee, when thine heart is not with me? Thou haſt mocked me theſe three times, and haſt not told me wherein thy great ſtrength lieth.

16 And it came to paſs, when ſhe preſſed him daily with her words, and urged him, ſo that his ſoul was vexed unto death;

17 That he told her all his heart, and ſaid unto her, There hath not come a raſour upon mine head; for I have been a Nazarite unto God, from my mothers womb: If I be ſhaven, then my ſtrength will go from me, and I ſhall become weak, and be like any other man.

18 And when Delilah ſaw that he had told her all his heart, ſhe ſent and called for the lords of the Philiſtines, ſaying, Come up this once, for he hath ſhewed me all his heart. Then the lords of the Philiſtines came up unto her, and brought money in their hand.

19 And ſhe made him ſleep upon her knees, and ſhe called for a man, and ſhe cauſed him to ſhave off the ſeven locks of his head, and ſhe began to afflict him, and his ſtrength went from him.

20 And ſhe ſaid, The Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon. And he awoke out of his ſleep, and ſaid, I will go out as at other times before, and ſhake myſelf. And he wiſt not that the LORD was departed from him.

21 ¶ But the Philiſtines took him, and put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and bound him with fetters of braſs, and he did grind in the priſon-houſe.

22 Howbeit the hair of his head began to grow again, after he was ſhaven.

23 Then the lords of the Philiſtines gathered them together, for to offer a great ſacrifice unto Dagon their god, and to rejoice: for they ſaid, Our god hath delivered Samſon our enemy into our hand.

24 And when the people ſaw him, they praiſed their god: for they ſaid, Our god hath delivered into our hands our enemy, and the deſtroyer of our country, which ſlew many of us.

25 And it came to paſs, when their hearts were merry, that they ſaid, Call for Samſon, that he may make us ſport. And they called for Samſon out of the priſon-houſe; and he made them ſport: and they ſet him between the pillars.

26 And Samſon ſaid unto the lad that held him by the hand, Suffer me that I may feel the pillars whereupon the houſe ſtandeth, that I may lean upon them.

27 Now the houſe was full of men and women; and all the lords of the Philiſtines were there: and there were upon the roof about three thouſand men and women, that beheld while Samſon made ſport.

28 And Samſon called unto the LORD, and ſaid, O Lord GOD, remember me, I pray thee, and ſtrengthen me, I pray thee, only this once, O God, that I may be at once avenged of the Philiſtines for my two eyes.

29 And Samſon took hold of the two middle pillars, upon which the houſe ſtood, and on which it was born up, of the one with his right hand, and of the other with his left.

30 And Samſon ſaid, Let me die with the Philiſtines: and he bowed himſelf with all his might; and the houſe fell upon the lords, and upon all the people that were therein: ſo the dead which he ſlew at his death, were more than they which he ſlew in his life.

31 Then his brethren, and all the houſe of his father, came down and took him, and brought him up, and buried him between Zorah and Eſhtaol, in the burying place of Manoah his father? and he judged Iſrael twenty years.

Ver. 1. Then went Samſon to Gaza.] This great hero of the Jews, after the ſignal inſtance of the Divine Protection, which had been vouchſafed to him when he was on the point of periſhing by thirſt, took a journey to Gaza, where he diſtinguiſhed himſelf by a new exploit. Gaza was then a city of the Philiſtines, but it had formerly been aſſigned to the tribe of Judah, by Joſhua, (Joſh. xv. 47.) It conſtituted one of the five principalities of the Philiſtines, and was ſituated in the ſouthern extremity of the promiſed land. In the Hebrew text it is called Aza, or Haſa, with the letter Hain, or Ain, which the Septuagint ſometimes expreſs by a G. Stephens, the geographer, declares, that the Syrians, in his time, called it Aza. It was ſeated between Raphia and Askelon, and its advantageous ſituation occaſioned the many revolutions to which it has been ſubject. It firſt of all belonged to the Philiſtines, and then to the Hebrews. It recovered its liberty in the reigns of Jotham and Ahaz, and was reconquered by Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 8. It was likewiſe ſubject to the Chaldeans, who conquered Syria and Phœnicia; after which it fell into the hands of the Perſians, who were maſters of it till Alexander the Great beſieged and deſtroyed it. This city, or the little town of Gaza, which is ſituated on the ſea-ſhore, and called Majuma, was at length rebuilt. It was afterward poſſeſſed by the kings of Egypt, and was alſo alſo taken and ſacked by Antiochus the Great, (Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 13. c. 21.) The Aſmoneans, or Maccabees, wreſted it ſeveral times from the Syrians; and Alexander Jannæus, king of the Jews, took and deſtroyed it, (1 Mac. chap. xi. 61. xiii. 43.) Gabinius repaired it; and there are coins to be ſeen which were ſtamped in this city. Auguſtus gave it to Herod the Great, but it was not under the obedience of his ſon Archelaus. St. Luke ſays, that Gaza, in his time, was a deſert place, Acts viii. 26. but, in all probability, he meant the great city of Gaza, which was ſituated on a mountain, twenty miles from the ſea; and not Majuma, or Little Gaza, which was very populous. The emperor Conſtantine gave Majuma the name of Conſtantia, in honour of his ſon, and granted it the honours and privileges of a city independent on Gaza; but the emperor Julian deprived it both of its name and prerogatives.

As we entered upon this work with an intention to illuſtrate the geography of the Sacred Books, as well as all other particulars that require explication, we hope this account of Gaza will not be unacceptable to our readers.

—— And ſaw there an harlot, and went in unto her.] We have already obſerved, more than once, that the Hebrew word, which is rendered harlot, by our tranſlators, properly ſignifies a woman who keeps an inn. This woman, at whoſe houſe Samſon took up his reſidence, might be, like many others of her profeſſion, a perſon of an irregular life, and, according to the expreſſion in the ſacred text, it is ſuppoſed that his commerce with her was not altogether innocent. Others, however, judge more favourably of their conduct, and believe that the hiſtorian only intended to repreſent Samſon as lodging at an Inn.

Ver. 2. And it was told the Gazites, ſaying, Samſon is come hither: And they compaſſed him in, &c.] The arrival of ſo extraordinary a man at Gaza could not be long concealed; and his enemies were willing to improve ſo favourable an opportunity to deſtroy him. They accordingly ſurrounded the houſe in the night, while Samſon was aſleep, and with an intention to aſſaſſinate him, as ſoon as day ſhould appear. Samſon, however, eluded their barbarous vigilance, and roſe at midnight, when the Gazites, who could hardly expect he would quit the houſe at that late hour, had perhaps retired, with a deſign to return before day-break. He was not ſatisfied with meerly eſcaping from his enemies, but, in order to teſtify his contempt of them, he tore the city gates from the hinges, wrenched up the two poſts, forced out the bar, and carried them all on his ſhoulders to the top of a hill before Hebron.

It is not eaſy to determine the exact diſtance between Gaza, and the hill to whoſe ſummit Samſon carried this enormous load. If we may credit ſome ancient geographers, Hebron was ſomething more than half a day's journey from Gaza; but tho' this ſhould be true, it will not ſettle the true diſtance from Gaza to the hill which was not contiguous to Hebron, but only fronted it. This, however, is certain, that half a day's journey was a ſtupendous length for Samſon to carry his cumberſome ſpoils.

Ver. 4. And it came to paſs afterward, that he loved a woman in the valley of Sorek, whoſe name was Delilah.] Samſon eſcaped the danger of aſſaſſination, to which he had been expoſed, but he ſoon ſuffered himſelf to be betrayed into other perils that were altogether as fatal. He had committed, till now, but a few ſlight acts of incontinence, if any; but he now reſigned himſelf entirely to that criminal conduct, and laid down all his ſullied glories at the feet of an abandoned proſtitute, who ſoon deprived him of his liberty, and heaven-imparted ſtrength, and ſtript him, in the moſt inglorious manner, of all the prerogatives that reſulted to him from his Nazaritical ſtate. Some of the ancient expoſitors have indeed ſuppoſed, but for what reaſon, we can't conceive, that ſhe was lawfully eſpouſed to Samſon; tho' the ſcripture is far from intimating any ſuch particular; and we therefore conclude, with the generality of commentators, that ſhe was an infamous woman, like all thoſe of her profeſſion. If ſhe really was his wife, all will allow that he made a wretched choice; and if ſhe was his concubine, as we ſuppoſe, ſhe made him pay a fatal price for his pleaſure. Her very name was a fatal preſage to Samſon, for Delilah ſignifies one who impairs another.

The valley of Sorek, where this pernicious harlot dwelt, according to Euſebius, was not far from Zorah, and Eſhtaol, where Samſon uſually dwelt, and not above a mile and a half from Eſchol, whence the ſpies brought a bunch of grapes as a ſpecimen of the lands fertility.

Ver. 5. And the Lords of the Philiſtines came up unto her, and ſaid unto her, Entice him, and ſee wherein his great ſtrength lieth, &c.] Some think this woman was of Jewiſh extraction, but the generality of commentators believe, with more reaſon, that ſhe was the daughter of Philiſtine parents: This, however, is certain, that her avarice was equal to her unchaſtity. The Philiſtines eaſily prevailed upon her, by the promiſe of a large preſent in money, to tempt Samſon to inform her wherein his great ſtrength conſiſted; for, in all probability, he had frequently declared, that the ſource of it was a ſecret known to none but himſelf.

The lips of a ſtrange woman, ſays the wiſeſt of mortal men, drop as an honey-comb, and her mouth is ſmoother than oil. But her end is bitter as wormwood, ſharp as a two-edged ſword, Prov. v. 3, 4. This remark is made by Solomon, who experienced the truth of it, and the unfortunate Samſon was at laſt convinced of it by fatal experience. The mercenary Delilah, impatient for the recompence of her perfidy, had recourſe to all the enſnaring arts that are ſo peculiar to perſons of her character; and told Samſon that ſhe ſhould diſtruſt the aſſurances he had given her of his affection, if he did not acquaint her from whence he derived that ſtrength, in which he ſo much ſurpaſſed the reſt of mankind.

Such a demand might ſurely have opened the eyes of Samſon, if he had not been infatuated by the deluſive charms and careſſes of this ſelf-intereſted ſtrumpet. The curioſity of a woman had already coſt him dear; and yet he wanted reſolution to ſilence the importunity of Delilah, by a manly reſentment. 'Tis true, he did not immediately comply with her deſires, and only told her, that if they bound him with ſeven green withs, that were never dried, then ſhould he be weak, and be as another man, ver. 7. Delilah believing ſhe had drawn the ſecret from him, began to put her treachery in practice, and bound him, perhaps when he was aſleep, with the ſeven green withs ſhe received from the lords of the Philiſtines, to whom ſhe had imparted her ſuppoſed diſcovery. When ſhe had ſo far ſucceeded to her wiſh, ſhe ſuddenly cried out, The Philiſtines be upon thee, Samſon, ver. 9. upon which they immediately ruſhed from the apartment where they had been concealed by Delilah, and thought to ſeize their intended prey. Samſon, however, deceived them in a ſurpriſing manner, for he ſuddenly burſt his unavailing bands, with as much facility as a thread of tow is broken, when it toucheth the fire, ver. 9.

Delilah then reproached him for his inſincerity, and Samſon, in return, deceived her with a ſecond falſhood. He aſſured her, that if they bound him faſt with new ropes, which had never been uſed before, he ſhould then be as weak as another man, ver. 11. This experiment was ſoon made by the unbluſhing harlot, but ſhe ſucceeded as little as ſhe had done before. This undoubtedly threw her into a new dejection and rage; when Samſon, in order to be relieved from their effects, directed her to weave the ſeven locks of his head with the web, ver. 13. as the certain means to deprive him of his ſtrength.

The Nazarites being prohibited from cutting their hair, did not, as we ſuppoſe, ſuffer it to hang looſe, but wound it up in locks, or plaited it into the form of a chain. Samſon's hair was diſtributed into ſeven of theſe plaited locks, and he ſeems to have directed Delilah, to fold them round a weaver's beam (as the Chaldee repreſents the fact) or to weave them one within another, ſo as to conſtitute no more than a ſingle lock; and then he ſhould be like another man; and in this particular he came a little nearer to the truth, tho' Delilah was ſtill deceived. For when ſhe had performed all that Samſon had directed, and had called in the Philiſtines to ſeize him, he ſtarted up as ſtrong as ever, with the pin of the beam, and with the web, ver. 14. and his enemies undoubtedly ſlunk away in the utmoſt confuſion.

Delilah then loſt all remains of patience, and ſhocked the ears of Samſon with a new ſtorm of inſolent reproaches. Theſe were ſucceeded by a train of enſnaring blandiſhments and ſoft importunity, which ſhe continued till the ſoul of this mighty hero was vexed unto death, ver. 16.

Readers of ſound underſtanding are aſtoniſhed at the incredible weakneſs and complacency of this great man, and think the relation of it is attended with inexplicable difficulties. Thrice happy are thoſe who never found a ſolution of thoſe difficulties in the hiſtory of their own frailties!

Ver. 17. That he told her all his heart, &c.] Who can forbear lamenting this unhappy man; who after he had already been betrayed, by a treacherous wife, could yet ſuffer himſelf to be enſnared by a mercenary proſtitute, who was only intent on his ruin and diſhonour! Why did he not diſtruſt the inſatiable curioſity of this deſpicable woman! How could the hero, whoſe irreſiſtable ſtrength had rent a raging lion, and laid ſuch number of Philiſtines bleeding and breathleſs in the duſt, ſuffer ſo mean a harlot to triumph over him in this fatal and degrading manner! In a word, by what means did this diſtinguiſhed favourite of heaven, render himſelf ſo obnoxious to the imputation, with which God, in a much later period, reproached the whole nation of the Jews! How weak is thine heart, ſeeing thou doſt all theſe things, the work of an imperious whoriſh woman? Ezek. xvi. 30. Happy is the perſon ſay we, once more, whoſe conduct has not furniſhed him with an explication of theſe difficulties!

Some have thought the behaviour of Samſon in this conjuncture ſo entirely unaccountable, that they have even imagined it was the effects of ſome magic art, which Delilah had practiſed upon him, but there is no need to have recourſe to ſuch a wild ſuppoſition, ſince a ſeries of artful complacency, in conjunction with affected tears, diſſembled rage, and ſtudied reconciliations, were the only acts of ſorcery that were practiſed by this deluding enchantreſs. Samſon doated on Delilah, and ſhe employed her unlimited aſcendant over him to his ruin. This is the propereſt commentary on the part of his hiſtory now before us.

How pathetical are his expreſſions, when he at laſt diſcloſes to her the fatal ſecret! There hath not, ſays he, come a razor upon my head; for I have been a Nazarite unto God from my mother's womb: If I be ſhaven, then my ſtrength will go from me, and I ſhall become weak, and be like any other man, ver. 17. The energy with which he expreſſed himſelf, undoubtedly convinced Delilah, that he had unfolded the truth to her at laſt.

The Jews have advanced an odd notion on this occaſion, and tell us that Samſon removed all her ſuſpicions of his ſincerity, by uttering the venerable name of Jehovah, in his diſcourſe. If this remark ſhould not be allowed to have any ſolidity, it at leaſt affords us a very commendable evidence of their veneration for that awful name of the Almighty, and preſents us Chriſtians with a leſſon of much greater importance, than the explication of the paſſage before us.

Delilah immediately informed the Philiſtines of her ſucceſs; after which ſhe cauſed Samſon to ſleep with his head reclined on her knees, and then ſent for a man to ſhave off the ſeven locks of his head. The fatal office was ſoon performed, and the mighty Samſon then became as weak as another man.

It is here enquired, whether Samſon's hair was the natural cauſe of his amazing ſtrength, or whether it was only the moral cauſe, and as it were the pledge of the Divine Spirit which infuſed ſuch prodigious force into him, as a permanent quality, ſo long as he ſhould obſerve the law of Nazariteſhip, and preſerve his hair untouched, as a viſible token of it. Moſt of the fathers and interpreters maintain this laſt opinion: For tho' a ſtrong and thick flowing head of hair, may be an indication of natural ſtrength, yet that ſtrength will not be abated after the hair is cut off. But it was not ſo with Samſon, and therefore his hair was neither the cauſe, nor the ſign of his great ſtrength, which was altogether ſupernatural and miraculous, and God thought fit to connect it with Samſon's hair; or rather with his due conformity to that ſtate of Nazariteſhip which had been enjoyned him.

The effect produced in Samſon by the loſs of his hair, might perhaps give riſe to a ſtrange notion, which prevailed for ſeveral ages; namely, that all thoſe who had entered into any compact with the devil, in order to acquire ſome ſupernatural talents, were careful to conceal the particular mark which enabled them to exerciſe thoſe powers, and which was impreſſed on ſome part of their body, where one would leaſt ſuſpect to find it. As ſingular as this opinion may ſeem, it is certain that one of the precautions anciently taken by the judges for the detection of any one who was charged with a crime of this nature, was to ſearch all his cloaths and the ſeveral parts of his body, where they imagined this pretended mark might be fixed. That which the judges did with regard to ſorcerers, was likewiſe practiſed with reſpect to dæmoniacs, and thoſe who are inclinable to ſatisfy their curioſity, with the ſeveral particulars of this proceeding, may conſult Martin Delrio, who has related them at large in his Diſquiſitiones Magicæ, lib. 5. ſect. 9. pag. 741. for we think them too improper to be tranſcribed into this commentary.

When Delilah had thus cauſed the hair of Samſon to be cut off, ſhe cried out for the laſt time, The Philiſtines be upon thee Samſon; upon which he ſtarted out of his fatal ſlumber, and imagined he ſhould eſcape as uſual. He could not but be ſenſible, indeed, that his miraculous ſtrength depended on his perſeverance in the Nazaritical ſtate, and therefore ſome may be apt to ask, how it was poſſible for him, after the violation of his vow, to flatter himſelf with the enjoyment of thoſe favours that were connected with it? We think the proper anſwer to this enquiry is, that Samſon did not immediately diſcover the treacherous part which had been acted by him, but it was not long before he perceived it to his ſorrow.

The Philiſtines, who had been very attentive to the conduct of Delilah, immediately ruſhed upon this unfortunate hero, who was now diveſted of all the ſtrength that was once ſo formidable to their whole nation. They ſeized him with inhuman joy, and condemned him to the moſt ſevere and deſpicable puniſhment, to which none but ſlaves and maleſactors were ever doom'd. They bound him with brazen fetters, and then compelled him to turn a mill, which was worked by the arms of men, before the admirable art of putting mills in motion by wind and water was diſcovered. This degrading puniſhment was preceded by another, which now compleated his calamity. They had the barbarity to put out his eyes, that he might be for ever render'd incapable of thoſe heroic exploits, which had proved ſo fatal to his enemies. This, perhaps, was the uſual puniſhment of thoſe who were condemned to work in the mill, and was a barbarous precaution to prevent their becoming giddy by frequently turning about. In this manner did the Scythians treat thoſe who were employed by them in turning certain veſſels filled with milk, and which are mentioned by Herodotus, lib. 4. cap. 2. p. 343.

Samſon continued in priſon at Gaza for about a year, when his hair being grown again, God was pleaſed to reſtore him his former ſtrength. It is ſomething ſurpriſing, that the Philiſtines would ſuffer it to grow to any length, when they were ſenſible of the ſtupendous ſtrength with which it had formerly been attended. One would be apt to think they were either infatuated, or elſe muſt imagine that this violation of his Nazariteſhip would for ever deprive him of the power connected with it. This latter, however, ſeems not to have been the caſe, becauſe they afterward ſent for him, to divert the great aſſembly in the temple of Dagon with experiments of his ſtrength; we muſt therefore ſuppoſe, that an over-ruling providence had render'd them ſo imprudent, as to believe they could ſuſtain no damage from him, in his ſtate of blindneſs.

Ver. 23. Then the Lords of the Philiſtines gathered them together, for to offer a great ſacrifice to Dagon their god, &c.] The unfortunate Samſon had not yet ſuſtained all the inſults his implacable enemies intended he ſhould ſuffer. They aſſembled to render homage to their idol, for their triumph over a man, who as much deteſted their idolatry, as he did their barbarous oppreſſion of his countrymen. This idol was called Dagon; whoſe form, worſhip, and ſex, would lead us into endleſs enquiries, were we to examine all the conjectures of learned men on this ſubject. Selden has largely tranſcribed them into his noble treatiſe of the gods of Syria; and the late Monſieur Jurieu has refined upon them, with the uſual inſolidity of ſome others of his nation, who imagine they have more learning than they really poſſeſs.

The fabulous Sanchoniathon, whoſe pretended work was tranſlated by Philo of Biblos, derives the name Dagon from the Hebrew word dagan, which ſignifies corn. Others are of opinion, that it comes from dag, a fiſh; and Kimchi, who who eſpouſes this etymology, affirms, on the authority of an ancient tradition, that Dagon was formed like a fiſh from the navel downward, but was ſhaped like a man in his upper parts. Thoſe who adhere to this derivation of the word, believe Dagon was a ſea-god, to whom the ſeveral tribes of fiſh were conſecrated; and the famous father Montfaucon takes it for granted, that an antique figure of a fiſh, which is preſerved in the cabinet belonging to the congregation of St. Maur, is a repreſentation of this idol.

There is one objection, however, againſt the opinion of Dagon's being ſhaped like a fiſh, in his lower parts; for he is repreſented as having feet, in a Greek reading of the Septuagint, cited by the learned Fuller, (in his Piſgah-ſight, book 2. c. 10. ſect 32. in the margin.) The paſſage is that, where mention is made of this idol's mutilation; and it runs thus, ἀμφότερα τὰ ἴχνη τῶν ποδῶν αὐτοῦ ἀφῃρημένα, the ſoles of his feet were off, that is, his feet. In the edition from the Vatican copy we indeed find τὰ ἴχνη τῶν χειρῶν, the ſoles of his hands; which ſeems abſurd, for we have never obſerved, that the Greek word ἴχνη is uſed for the palm of the hand. And we the rather reject this reading, becauſe it is followed by a very ſenſeleſs tautology; for it is added, that the wriſts of his hands were gone alſo. Whence it muſt appear, that hands, in the firſt place, are corruptly inſerted into the Vatican copy inſtead of feet, and that Dagon had theſe, as well as a head, and other parts of a human body. And indeed it ſeems a little extraordinary to us, that ſo many learned men ſhould rather chuſe to derive his name from dag, a fiſh, than from dagan, which ſignifies corn, the uſe of which he is ſaid to have invented. From this laſt etymology it may be rationally enough ſuppoſed, that the Philiſtines borrowed their idolatry from the Egyptians, and that Dagon is a copy of their Iſis, to whom the ſame invention is likewiſe aſcribed.

——For they ſaid, Our God hath delivered into our hands our enemy, and the deſtroyer of our country, which ſlew many of us.] All nations were ſenſible, that they owed all they enjoyed to the goodneſs of ſome Divine power, and therefore they render'd their acknowledgments to ſuch gods as they worſhipped, for the victories they obtained over their enemies. The words here uſed by the Philiſtines were part of their ſong which the Greeks call Paan; and theſe triumphant oppreſſors give the very ſame epithet to Samſon, which Homer has beſtowed on Hector, whom he frequently calls ἀνδροφόνον, the ſlayer of men.

Ver. 25. And it came to paſs when their hearts were merry, that they ſaid, Call for Samſon, that he may make us ſport, &c.] They thought the pleaſures of their feſtival would be incompleat, if they did not take this opportunity to inſult him anew. They therefore ſent for their illuſtrious captive, and compelled him to degrade himſelf, by diverting them in the manner they commanded. Some interpreters have ſuppoſed, that Samſon counterfeited madneſs on this occaſion, that he might the better conceal the great deſign he was then forming in his mind, and which would have been render'd impracticable to him, if he had ſeemed to have been maſter of his reaſon. This opinion is far from being improbable, and we have never met with any material objection againſt it.

Ver. 27. Now the houſe was full of men and women; and all the lords of the Philiſtines were there; and there were upon the roof about three thouſand men and women, that beheld while Samſon made ſport.] It is difficult to determine, whether the building was a temple, a palace, or a theatre; but ſeveral learned men are inclined to think it was the latter, and that it bore ſome ſimilitude to the theatres formerly contrived by the Romans, and which were almoſt incredibly capacious. But as this edifice was covered with a roof, capable of containing three thouſand perſons, it muſt have had a particular ſtructure, like the Egyptian hall in Vitruvius (lib. 6. 1. 5.) and conſequently could not reſemble the theatres of the ancient Greeks or Romans. We therefore think this houſe was one of their temples, where the people aſſembled, in order to praiſe their falſe god, and then to feaſt, as was cuſtomary in thoſe days, upon the ſacrifices which were offered on ſuch occaſions. The Pagan temples were in many places, exceeding ſpacious, and capable of containing a vaſt number of people. To this we may add, that the roofs of houſes and temples, were flat in thoſe times, but how the populace (for ſuch we ſuppoſe them to have been) who placed themſelves on the roof of this temple could ſee the actions of Samſon from thence, is difficult to conceive, unleſs we imagine there were windows to open upon occaſion, and afford a view into the temple; or perhaps there might be a range of cells in the upper part of the ſtructure, like thoſe in the abby of Weſtminſter, and other cathedrals. The Hebrew word Gag, indeed, generally ſignifies a flat roof, but there are thoſe who think it may here mean the upper part or ſtory of the building.

Ver. 28. And Samſon called unto the Lord, &c.] The Vengeance which Samſon, in this prayer, begs to accompliſh on the Philiſtines, is not to be conſidered as the effect of a lawleſs paſſion, that would trample on the rights of ſovereigns, whoſe prerogative it is to puniſh acts of injuſtice and oppreſſion; nor did he ſacrifice the general order of ſociety, and the laws of compaſſion and humanity to his private reſentment, in the inſtance before us. Samſon was a judge of the Iſraelites, and had a right, as ſuch, to oppoſe and avenge the oppreſſions his people had ſuſtained from the Philiſtines; and even to implore the Divine Aſſiſtance in this act of juſtice, which he was preparing to perform at the expence of his own life. That we have not been partial to Samſon in this repreſentation of his conduct, is evident by the enſuing effect. For God, who hears not the prayers of ſinners, and never imploys his omnipotence to gratify any mans impotent malice, was pleaſed to manifeſt on this occaſion, that he accepted the prayer of Samſon, as the dictate of his own ſpirit. Samſon, indeed, mentions only the perſonal injury he had received by the loſs of his eyes, and not the indignities offered to God, and his people, by the Philiſtines; but this muſt be aſcribed to the prudent and generous care he had teſtified in former inſtances, to derive the rage and hatred of the Philiſtines upon himſelf alone, and to divert it from his countrymen. We therefore ſuppoſe, he utter'd this prayer with an audible voice.

Ver. 29. And Samſon took hold of the two middle pillars, upon which the houſe ſtood, &c.] How could a building which contained ſuch a vaſt number of people, reſt upon two pillars which were placed at ſo ſmall a diſtance from each other? Here infidels triumph, as if they had got an unanſwerable argument againſt the truth of the Sacred Scripture in this particular. But it is far more incredible and ridiculous to imagine, that the author of this book ſhould have the boldneſs to inſert ſuch a circumſtance as this, if it had been falſe, ſince thereby he would have utterly overthrown the credit of the whole book; and that he ſhould do this amidſt a people who could eaſily have confuted him, and that they yet ſhould entertain ſo high a veneration for that book, in which they knew ſo notorious a falſhood was foiſted, is altogether inconceivable, and much more abſurd to believe, than the truth of this relation. There are inſtances of much larger buildings than this, which were ſupported only by one pillar. Pliny, in the 15th chapter of the third book of his Natural Hiſtory, mentions two theatres built by Curio, each of which reſted only on one pillar, or pin, or hinge, tho' it contained ſeveral thouſand perſons; and that author expreſſes his ſurprize at the madneſs of the people, who would venture into a place for their pleaſure, where they ſat, tam infida inſtabilique ſede, in ſuch an uncertain and unſtable ſituation, for if that ſimple ſupport of each theatre had failed, it would have occaſioned a greater ſlaughter than was made at the battle of Cannæ. This we mention, in order to ſilence the cavils of thoſe, who fancy that no ſuch capacious building as this, where the Philiſtines were aſſembled, could reſt only on two pillars. But we have no occaſion to ſuppoſe that this edifice was ſupported by no more than two pillars, ſince thoſe which Samſom graſped, are ſaid in the verſe before us, to be the two middle pillars, which ſeems to imply that there were more, tho' the chief weight of the ſtructure was ſuſtained by thoſe two. It may likewiſe be ſuppoſed, that this houſe was built of wood, and ſupported by columns of the ſame ſubſtance, and that the extremities of the two capital beams on which the roof was raiſed, reſted on the two middle pillars mentioned in this verſe, and which conſequently muſt be near one another; another; by which means, when thoſe two main pillars were wrenched from their places, the beams which they ſupported muſt unavoidably fall, and draw after them all the other parts of the building.

Ver. 30. And Samſon ſaid let me die with the Philiſtines, &c.] This action is far from being any juſtification of ſelf murder, and it cannot be conſidered as ſuch in Samſon. That great Hero did not ruſh upon death, becauſe he could no longer ſupport the calamities to which he had been fated; but he generouſly devoted his own life to the welfare of his countrymen, whoſe oppreſſions he was authorized to avenge on the Philiſtines. When Samſon therefore cries out, let me die with the Philiſtines, 'tis as if he had ſaid, I am contented to loſe my own life, if thereby I can but contribute any thing to the vindication of God's glory, which is trampled upon in this idolatrous place; and to the deliverance of his people, who have been ſo long, and ſo unjuſtly enſlaved by theſe imperious Philiſtines.

——— And he bowed himſelf with all his might; and the houſe fell upon all the lords, and upon all the people that were therein.] This houſe was ſubverted, not by the meer might of Samſon, but by a miraculous power of God infuſed into him, in conſequence of which, all the impious inſulting mirth of the Philiſtines was extinguiſhed in a moment.

——— So the dead which he ſlew at his death, were more than he ſlew in his life.] As there were three thouſand perſons on the upper part of his houſe, and perhaps many more below, Samſon may very juſtly be ſaid to have ſlain more of his enemies by this laſt action of his life than he ever deſtroyed before. This therefore was the greateſt exploit he ever performed, for he not only ſlew more, but perſons of much greater note, namely, the principal rulers and governors of the Philiſtines, and deſtroyed one of their temples (as we ſuppoſe this ſtructure to have been) together with their idol, which muſt needs fill thoſe who ſurvived, with the greateſt conſternation and confuſion.

Ver. 31. Then his brethren, and all the houſe of his father,] By brethren, are commonly meant in ſcripture, the neareſt kindred, and the houſe of his father ſignifies all the reſt of his relations. Or perhaps God might, after the birth of Samſon, beſtow the bleſſing of other children on Manoah and his wife: as he did upon Hannah, after the birth of Samuel.

———Came down and took him.] By the permiſſion of the Philiſtines; for all nations had ſo much humanity, in ancient times, as not to prohibit enemies from burying their dead. The Iſraelites were now in ſubjection to the Philiſtines, and did not joyn with Samſon in any of his enterprizes; which he performed ſolely by himſelf. The Philiſtines may likewiſe be ſuppoſed to have been much humbled and mollified by this late diſaſter.

———And brought him up, and buried him between Zorah and Eſhtaol, in the burying place of Manoah his father, &c.] To be buried in the ſepulchres of their anceſtors, was accounted a great bleſſing among all nations, as Spanhemius obſerves in his notes on the hymn of Callimachus to Diana, ver. 131, 132. and we have examples of it in Scripture, Gen. xlvii. 29, 30. Nehem. ii. 3, 5. and the contrary was accounted a curſe, 1 Kings xii. 22.

We think there is no reaſon to doubt of the ſalvation of Samſon, for how ever ſome writers may have cenſured him for being the author of his own death, and which we have already conſider'd, it is certain, that he is ranked in the number of the Saints, ſince St. Paul himſelf places him among thoſe whoſe faith was commended and recompenced, Heb. xi. 32, &c.

The figure which Samſon made in the world was very great, and at the ſame time very peculiar in ſeveral reſpects; for we never find him at the head either of a court or an army; but he was in his own perſon a great patriot of his country, and a terrible ſcourge to its enemies and oppreſſors; and he has been conſidered as a type of him, who with his own arm wrought ſalvation. He often, as a public perſon, expoſed himſelf to dangers, in oppoſition to the declared enemies of the Church of God. He pleaded the cauſe of Iſrael, and avenged them on their enemies in many wonderful actions, which deſerve credit, becauſe what is impoſſible with man, is certainly poſſible with God. He was even willing to reſign his own life, in order to obtain a ſignal victory over the oppreſſors of his country; and if Iſrael was not delivered in a more effectual manner, under the conduct of ſuch a matchleſs captain, it was owing to their ſins and want of courage. His life however, is not deſigned to be a pattern for us, for we are to live by rules, more than by examples.

The particulars of the death of Samſon are repreſented in ſuch noble and exalted ſtrains, and with ſo much natural perſpicuity by our inimitable Milton, in his Samſon Agoniſtes, that if he had even been a ſpectator of that great event, he could hardly have deſcribed it in a more emphatical and circumſtantial manner. The paſſage we have in view is ſo much above all the praiſes we can beſtow upon it, that we hope we may venture to tranſcribe it, as not being inconſiſtent with the gravity that ought to be preſerved in this work.

A perſon, who is ſuppoſed to have been preſent when Samſon performed his ſportive acts before the Philiſtines, and at laſt buried them under the ruins of the houſe in which they were aſſembled, relates the particulars in theſe terms.

Occaſions drew me early to this city,
And as the gates I enter'd with ſun-riſe,
The morning trumpets feſtival proclaim'd
Through each high ſtreet: Little had I diſpatch'd,
When all abroad was rumour'd that this day
Samſon ſhould be brought forth to ſhew the people
Proof of his mighty ſtrength in feats and games.
I ſorrow'd at his captive ſtate, but minded
Not to be abſent at that ſpectacle.
The building was a ſpacious theatre,
Half-round, on two main pillars vaulted high,
With ſeats where all the Lords, and each degree
Of ſort, might ſit in order to behold;
The other ſide was open, where the throng
On banks and ſcaffolds under sky might ſtand;
I among thoſe aloof obſcurely ſtood.
The feaſt and noon grew high, and ſacrifice
Had fill'd their hearts with mirth, high cheer and wine,
When to their ſports they turn'd. Immediately
Was Samſon as a public ſervant brought,
In their ſtate livery clad; before him pipes
And timbrels; on each ſide went armed guards,
Both horſe and foot, before him and behind
Archers, and ſlingers, cataphracts, and ſpears.
At ſight of him the people with a ſhout
Rifted the air, clamouring their God with praiſe,
Who had made their dreadful enemy their thrall.
He patient, but undaunted, where they led him,
Came to the place; and what was ſet before him,
Which without help of eye might be aſſay'd,
To heave, pull, draw, and break, he ſtill perform'd
All with incredible ſtupenduous force,
None daring to appear antagoniſt.
At length for intermiſſion-ſake they led him
Between the pillars; he his guide requeſted
(For ſo from ſuch as nearer ſtood we heard)
As over-tir'd, to let him lean a while
With both his arms on thoſe two maſſie pillars,
That to the arched roof gave main ſupport.
He unſuſpicious led him; which then Samſon
Felt in his arms, with head a while inclin'd,
And eyes faſt fixt, he ſtood as one who pray'd,
Or ſome great matter in his mind revolv'd;
At laſt with head erect cry'd thus aloud.
Hitherto, Lords, what your commands impos'd
I have perform'd, as reaſon was, obeying,
Nor without wonder or delight beheld:
Now of my own accord ſuch other trial
I mean to ſhew you of my ſtrength, yet greater,
As with amaze ſhall ſtrike all who behold.
This utter'd, ſtraining all his nerves he bow'd,
As with the force of winds and waters pent,
When mountains tremble, thoſe two maſſie pillars
With horrible confuſion to and fro,
He tugg'd, he ſhook, till down they came, and drew
The whole roof after them, with burſt of thunder,
Upon the heads of all who ſat beneath,
Lords, ladies, captains, counſellors, or prieſts,
Their choice nobility and flower, not only
Of this but each Philiſtian city round,

Met

Met from all parts to ſolemnize this feaſt.
Samſon with theſe immixt, inevitably
Pull'd down the ſame deſtruction on himſelf;
The Vulgar only 'ſcap'd, who ſtood without.

CHAP. XVII.

1 Of the money that Micah firſt ſtole, then reſtored, his mother maketh images, 5 And he ornaments for them. 7 He hireth a Levite to be his prieſt.

AND there was a man of mount Ephraim, whoſe name was Micah.

2 And he ſaid unto his mother, The eleven hundred ſhekels of ſilver, that were taken from thee, about which thou curſedſt, and ſpakeſt of alſo in mine ears; behold, the ſilver is with me, I took it. And his mother ſaid, Bleſſed be thou of the LORD, my ſon.

3 And when he had reſtored the eleven hundred ſhekels of ſilver to his mother, his mother ſaid, I had wholly dedicated the ſilver unto the LORD, from my hand, for my ſon to make a graven image, and a molten image: now therefore I will reſtore it unto thee.

4 Yet he reſtored the money unto his mother, and his mother took two hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and gave them to the founder, who made thereof a graven image, and a molten image: and they were in the houſe of Micah.

5 And the man Micah had an houſe of gods, and made an ephod, and teraphim, and conſecrated one of his ſons, who became his prieſt.

6 In thoſe days there was no king in Iſrael, but every man did that which was right in his own eyes.

7 ¶ And there was a young man out of Beth-lehem-judah, of the family of Judah, who was a Levite, and he ſojourned there.

8 And the man departed out of the city from Beth-lehem-judah, to ſojourn where he could find a place: and he came to mount Ephraim to the houſe of Micah, as he journeyed.

9 And Micah ſaid unto him, Whence comeſt thou? And he ſaid unto him, I am a Levite of Beth-lehem-judah, and I go to ſojourn where I may find a place.

10 And Micah ſaid unto him, Dwell with me, and be unto me a father and a prieſt, and I will give thee ten ſhekels of ſilver by the year, and a ſuit of apparel, and thy victuals. So the Levite went in.

11 And the Levite was content to dwell with the man, and the young man was unto him as one of his ſons.

12 And Micah conſecrated the Levite, and the young man became his prieſt, and was in the houſe of Micah.

13 Then ſaid Micah, Now know I that the LORD will do me good, ſeeing I have a Levite to my prieſt.

Ver. 1. And there was a man of mount Ephraim, whoſe name was Micah.] Whilſt Caleb, and his ſon-in-law, were employed in enlarging their inheritance, the other tribes were taking the ſame meaſures in their ſeveral lots. But whether out of compaſſion to the poor Canaanites, doom'd to deſtruction, or out of an ambitious deſire of having vaſſals under them, they wholly neglected the expreſs order of their law-giver, and, inſtead of extirpating them, contented themſelves with laying them under tribute. This proved the ſource of all their misfortunes, and of thoſe many ſlaveries that enſued; for the oppreſſed Canaanites did, at leaſt in appearance, ſo patiently ſubmit to their yoke, that they became leſs cautious of them; they grew, by degrees, more intimate with them, and by theſe means were ſo far enſnared by the beauty of their women, as to contract affinities with them. Theſe unhappy inter-marriages ſoon debauched them into all their idolatries, and reconciled them to the worſhip of Baal, Aſhtaroth, and other gods of Canaan; and at once provoked God to forſake them, and gave their enemies an opportunity of regaining their liberties, and of oppreſſing them in their turns.

It was during this time of apoſtacy and confuſion, that Micah, a wealthy man, of the tribe of Ephraim, is ſuppoſed to have erected that idol in his houſe, which was ſoon after taken from him by the Danites, and ſet up at Dan. The ſtory of it is indeed related at the latter end of this book, from whence ſome have concluded, that it happen'd after Samſon's death, while others place it about the latter end of Joſhua's life: but the far greater part, between Caleb's death, and Othniel's being choſen judge. Till that time, the idolatrous Iſraelites ſeem to have contented themſelves with the idols of the Canaanites, without ſetting up any of their own. Micah was the firſt we read of, who took it into his head to outdo them, by ſetting up the falſe gods mentioned in this chapter, as likewiſe by conſecrating an apartment of his houſe to them, and procuring a wandering Levite to officiate as their prieſt. This part of the Sacred Hiſtory affords us a lively idea of the monſtrous abſurdities that were crowded into the religion of thoſe times; and the degeneracy of the Iſraelites, who could ſo ſoon give into them, is altogether aſtoniſhing and inexcuſable.

Micah felt a remorſe for having wronged a covetous and ſuperſtitious mother of 1100 pieces of ſilver, which amounted to ſomething above that number of ſhillings in our money, and for which ſhe had beſtowed ſome ſevere curſes upon him. But ſhe conceived ſuch joy at his reſtoring them to her, that ſhe reſolved to conſecrate the greateſt part of the ſum to what ſhe thought a religious uſe, ſuch as might prove an equivalent bleſſing to him, for the curſes he had extorted from her. Accordingly, with part of that ſilver, ſhe and her ſon purchaſed two idols, one molten, and the other carved; and with the reſt they built a chapel to ſet them up in, together with ſome teraphim, which they had, in all likelihood, already in the houſe; they being a kind of little ſtatues, or houſhold gods, which the corrupted Iſraelites had in common with other nations. To this they added an ephod, or ſacerdotal garment, with which Micah inſtalled his ſon in the prieſthood to his new gods. Soon after this, a young indigent Levite wandering that way, was hired by Micah, as a more proper perſon for that office than his own ſon; and Micah thought he could not fail of the Divine Bleſſing, ſince he had got a Levite to miniſter for him; but the ſequel of his hiſtory will ſhew how much he deceived himſelf.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 The Danites ſend five men to ſeek out an inheritance. 3 At the houſe of Micah they conſult with Jonathan, and are encouraged in their way. 7 They ſearch Laiſh, and bring back news of good hope. 11 Six hundred men are ſent to ſurpriſe it. 14 In the way they rob Micah of his prieſt, and his conſecrate things. 27 They win Laiſh and call it Dan. 30 They ſet up idolatry, wherein Jonathan inherited the prieſthood.

IN thoſe days there was no king in Iſrael: and in thoſe days the tribe of the Danites ſought them an inheritance to dwell in: for unto that day all their inheritance had not fallen unto them among the tribes of Iſrael.

2 And the children of Dan ſent of their family five men from their coaſts, men of valour, from Zorah, and from Eſhtaol, to ſpy out the land, and to ſearch it; and they ſaid unto them, Go, ſearch the land: who when they came to mount Ephraim, to the houſe of Micah, they lodged there.

3 When they were by the houſe of Micah, they knew the voice of the young man the Levite: and they turned in thither, and ſaid unto him, Who brought thee hither? and what makeſt thou in this place? and what haſt thou here?

4 And he ſaid unto them, Thus and thus dealeth Micah with me, and hath hired me, and I am his prieſt.

5 And they ſaid unto him, Ask counſel, we pray thee, of God, that we may know whether our way which we go ſhall be proſperous.

6 And the prieſt ſaid unto them, Go in peace: before the LORD is your way wherein ye go.

7 ¶ Then the five men departed, and came to Laiſh, and ſaw the people that were therein, how they dwelt careleſs, after the manner of the Zidonians, quiet and ſecure, and there was no magiſtrate in the land, that might put them to ſhame in any thing: and they were far from the Zidonians, and had no buſineſs with any man.

8 And they came unto their brethren to Zorah and Eſhtaol: and their brethren ſaid unto them, What ſay ye?

9 And they ſaid, Ariſe, that we may go up againſt them: for we have ſeen the land, and behold, it is very good: and are ye ſtill? be not ſlothful to go, and to enter to poſſeſs the land.

10 When ye go, ye ſhall come unto a people ſecure, and to a large land: for God hath given it into your hands: a place where there is no want of any thing that is in the earth.

11 ¶ And there went from thence of the family of the Danites out of Zorah, and out of Eſhtaol, ſix hundred men appointed with weapons of war.

12 And they went up, and pitched in Kirjath-jearim, in Judah: wherefore they called that place Mahaneh-dan, unto this day: behold, it is behind Kirjath-jearim.

13 And they paſſed thence unto mount Ephraim, and came unto the houſe of Micah.

14 ¶ Then anſwered the five men that went to ſpy out the country of Laiſh, and ſaid unto their brethren, Do ye know that there is in theſe houſes an ephod, and teraphim, and a graven image, and a molten image? now therefore conſider what ye have to do.

15 And they turned thitherward, and came to the houſe of the young man the Levite, even unto the houſe of Micah, and ſaluted him.

16 And the ſix hundred men appointed with their weapons of war, which were of the children of Dan, ſtood by the entring of the gate.

17 And the five men that went to ſpy out the land went up, and came in thither, and took the graven image, and the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image: and the prieſt ſtood in the entring of the gate, with the ſix hundred men that were appointed with weapons of war.

18 And theſe went into Micahs houſe, and fetched the carved image, the ephod, and the teraphim, and the molten image: then ſaid the prieſt unto them, What do ye?

19 And they ſaid unto him, Hold thy peace, lay thine hand upon thy mouth, and go with us, and be to us a father and a prieſt: is it better for thee to be a prieſt unto the houſe of one man, or that thou be a prieſt unto a tribe and a family in Iſrael?

20 And the prieſts heart was glad, and he took the ephod, and the teraphim, and the graven image, and went in the midſt of the people.

21 So they turned and departed, and put the little ones, and the cattle, and the carriage before them.

22 ¶ And when they were a good way from the houſe of Micah, the men that were in the houſes near to Micahs houſe, were gathered together, and over-took the children of Dan.

23 And

23 And they cried unto the children of Dan: and they turned their faces, and ſaid unto Micah, What aileth thee, that thou comeſt with ſuch a company?

24 And he ſaid, Ye have taken away my gods which I made, and the prieſt, and ye are gone away: and what have I more? and what is this that ye ſay unto me, What aileth thee?

25 And the children of Dan ſaid unto him, Let not thy voice be heard among us, leſt angry fellows run upon thee, and thou loſe thy life with the lives of thy houſhold.

26 And the children of Dan went their way: and when Micah ſaw that they were too ſtrong for him, he turned and went back unto his houſe.

27 And they took the things which Micah had made, and the prieſt which he had, and came unto Laiſh, unto a people that were at quiet, and ſecure: and they ſmote them with the edge of the ſword, and burnt the city with fire.

28 And there was no deliverer, becauſe it was far from Zidon, and they had no buſineſs with any man; and it was in the valley that lieth by Beth-rehob, and they built a city, and dwelt therein.

29 And they called the name of the city Dan, after the name of Dan their father, who was born unto Iſrael: howbeit the name of the city was Laiſh at the firſt.

30 ¶ And the children of Dan ſet up the graven image: and Jonathan the ſon of Gerſhom, the ſon of Manaſſeh, he and his ſons were prieſts to the tribe of Dan, until the day of the captivity of the land.

31 And they ſet them up Micahs graven image, which he made, all the time that the houſe of God was in Shiloh.

Ver. 1. And in thoſe days there was no king in Iſrael.] Theſe words ſeem to be repeated, in order to aſſign the reaſon of ſuch enormous practices as are mentioned in this and the preceding chapter.

——— And in thoſe days the tribe of the Danites ſought them an inheritance to dwell in.] Or rather, a tribe; for the word ſchebet is ſometimes uſed for a family in a tribe, as in the xxth chapter of this book, ver. 12. it is ſaid, the tribes of Iſrael ſent meſſengers to all the tribes of Benjamin, that is, to all the families of that tribe. We may likewiſe add, that when the whole tribe is ſpoken of, it is not ſaid in the Hebrew, ſchebet hadani, as it is here, but ſchebet Dan. Therefore hadani ſignifies, a family derived from that tribe.

Some of this tribe, which was much ſtraitned by the old inhabitants of the land, who confined them to a narrow tract not ſufficient for them, enquired where they might find a commodious ſettlement, in ſome other place.

——— For unto that day all their inheritance had not fallen unto them, &c.] An inheritance had been allotted them as well as the reſt of the tribes, Joſh. xix. 40, &c. but partly by their indolence, and partly for want of that brotherly aſſiſtance, which ought to have been afforded them by other tribes, a conſiderable portion of this inheritance could not be acquired by them. Wanting room therefore for all their people and cattle, and being unable to contend with the Amorites, they ſent ſome, as it here follows, to ſearch out a new dwelling elſewhere.

Ver. 2. And the children of Dan ſent of their family, five men from their coaſts, &c.] It is no improbable conjecture of Arias Montanus, that there were five families of the Danites, out of each of which one man was delegated to make the following diſcovery. The ſpies acquitted themſelves of their commiſſion, and, in their journey, came to the mountain on which the houſe of Micah was ſeated. They there met the Levite who officiated as a prieſt, and who undoubtedly acquainted them with the particulars of his miniſtration. Upon which they deſired him to conſult his oracle with relation to the affair they had undertaken, for they were ſo ſtupid as to believe God would impart an anſwer there, as well as in his own houſe. The Levite complied with their requeſt, and then pretended that the Divine Majeſty had promiſed ſucceſs to their enterprize. The men then departed, and came to the city of Laiſh, which was ſituated at the foot of mount Libanus, near the ſources of Jordan, and forty miles from Paneas, according to Euſebius and St. Jerom. This city is called Leſhem, Joſh. xix. 47. where the hiſtory of this expedition is briefly related by way of anticipation. The Jews ſay, this laſt name was given it, becauſe the Iſraelites had there found a precious ſtone, which was afterward fixed on the breaſt of the high-prieſt; and that the name of Dan was inſcribed upon the ſtone, from whence they knew that Laiſh appertained to this tribe.

The ſpies ſaw this was a flouriſhing city, and that the inhabitants were as little upon their guard, as their neighbours the Sidonians, living in a full perſuaſion of their own ſecurity, which furniſhed any enemy with a fair opportunity of ſubjecting them. The five Danites, ſatisfied with the diſcovery they had made, returned, in order to impart it to thoſe who had ſent them; and a reſolution was then formed, to detach ſix hundred men for the conqueſt of Laiſh. Theſe ſet out accordingly, and when they came to the houſe of Micah, the five ſpies gave them an account of the idolatrous equipage he had got in his houſe, but which they thought as ſacred as Micah himſelf could poſſibly imagine them to be. They therefore deſired their companions to conſider what they had to do, ver. 14. namely, whether it might not be expedient to carry thoſe ſacred things along with them, which they fancied would ſecure them the Divine Preſence. In conſequence of this advice, the houſe of Micah was inveſted by the Danites, while the five ſpies enter'd it; and after they had ſaluted Micah in a friendly manner, immediately ſtripped it of its idols and ſacerdotal habits. The Levite, who miniſter'd there, endeavour'd at firſt to diſſuade them from a ſacrilegious and inhoſpitable proceeding; but his complaints and arguments were ſoon ſilenced, by the promiſe he received from them, that inſtead of being a prieſt to one houſe only, he ſhould officiate in that character for a whole tribe: He then took the ephod, and the teraphim, together with the graven images, and joined himſelf to the Danites without any farther heſitation. All the neighbours of Micah complained loudly of this injurious proceeding, and accompanied him till he had overtaken the men who had robbed him of his idolatrous equipage of gods and prieſtly veſtments. Micah bitterly reproached them for carrying off his deities, but they commanded him to be ſilent on pain of death; and he found himſelf obliged to return without obtaining any reparation for his loſs.

The Danites continued their march to Laiſh, and as the inhabitants were far from ſuſpecting a viſit of this nature, their city was taken and deſtroyed without reſiſtance, and they were all maſſacred by the conqueror. The Danites built a new city on the ruins of the other, and gave it the name of Dan, their great progenitor; verifying at the ſame time, by the cruel execution they had committed, the prophecy of Moſes; Dan is a lions whelp: He ſhall leap from Baſhan, Deut. xxxiii. 22. which is as much as if he had ſaid, Dan ſhall ſpring upon his enemies as the lions on the mountains of Baſhan lanch upon their prey.

Ver. 30. And the children of Dan ſet up the graven image: and Jonathan the ſon of Gerſhom, the ſon of Manaſſeh; naſſeh, he and his ſons were prieſts to the tribe of Dan.] The Danites having compleated their new city, made no ſcruple to conſecrate the idols they had taken from the houſe of Micah; and they choſe a miniſter to officiate for them in the worſhip of thoſe deſpicable gods. The Levite who had acted as prieſt for Micah, was now appointed to execute the ſame office for thoſe apoſtate families of Dan. He is called in this verſe, Jonathan the ſon of Gerſhom, the ſon of Manaſſeh. So the name is expreſſed not only in the Hebrew, and Chaldee, but likewiſe in the Septuagint verſion (both in the Roman and Baſil Editions, and alſo in the Palatine manuſcript) we may therefore be certain that this is the true reading. Tho' the Vulgate hath inſerted the name of Moſes inſtead of Manaſſeh, in conformity to a ridiculous conceit of ſome Rabbins, who ſay the Hebrew letter nun, in the middle of the word, is not written even with, but is ſuſpended above the other letters, in order to intimate, that tho' Gerſhom was indeed the ſon of Moſes, yet he ſhould rather be called the ſon of Manaſſeh; becauſe he did the works of Manaſſeh, and not of Moſes, that is, he was an idolater. So Kimchi declares, and therein follow the Talmudiſts in Bava Bathra. And thus they make this Jonathan to be the grandchild of Moſes, for Gerſhom was his ſon: But it is not likely he would have been left in ſo deſtitute a condition, if he had been thus nearly related to their great Lawgiver; nor would he have received ſo ill an education. And, being now but a youth, it is not probable that he was the ſon of that Gerſhom, but of ſome other, who had the name of his famous anceſtor conferred upon him, tho' his father's name was Manaſſeh.

——Until the day of the captivity of the land.] Some cavillers have endeavoured to frame an argument from hence, that this book was written in later times, after the ten tribes were carried away by Salmanaſſer; or, as ſome of the Jews, in Seder Olam, interpret the captivity of the land to ſignify that by Nebuchadnezzar: But Kimchi and Ralbag very well object againſt this, that it is altogether unlikely theſe images ſhould be ſuffered to continue in the days of David, who was a man after God's own heart, and was ſedulous to advance true religion to the utmoſt of his power, all the country over, from Dan to Beerſheba: Therefore Kimchi, with great reaſon, concludes, that by the captivity of the land, is meant the taking of the ark by the Philiſtines, and carrying it captive into the temple of Dagon: This ſenſe of the words is confirmed, as our famous Selden obſerves (Syntag. 1 de Diis Syris, cap. 2.) by the next verſe, which declares, that till Shiloh was deſtroyed, theſe images remained. And this taking of the ark the Pſalmiſt expreſly calls a captivity, when he ſaith, Pſal. lxxviii. 60, 61. He forſook the tabernacle of Shiloh, &c. and delivered his ſtrength into captivity, his glory into the enemies hands. As for the interpretation of Ralbag, who takes this captivity to have been in the days of Jabin king of Canaan, it is not worth confuting.

Ver. 31. And they ſet them up Micah's graven image, which he made, all the time that the houſe of God was in Shiloh.] Which was all the time of the judges mentioned in this book; who, tho' zealous reformers, could not, it ſeems, extend their authority to the very skirts of the country, where idolatry ſtill lurked in this corner of the land: For ſcarce any one of the judges ruled over the whole country of Iſrael; but only over ſuch tribes as they delivered from imminent danger. This appears by the armies which Barak and Gideon had raiſed; and in the double oppreſſion the Iſraelites lay under, both in the weſt and eaſt, by the Philiſtines and the Ammonites, when Jephthah was raiſed up againſt the latter, and Samſon againſt the former: No wonder therefore that none of them could make a general reformation, nor aboliſh the idolatry in this place: But God employed the Philiſtines as inſtruments to put an end to it; for when they deſtroyed Shiloh, where the true houſe of God was, they likewiſe deſtroyed this houſe of gods (as they eſteemed it, ſee chap. xvii. 5.) being a reſemblance of it: And perhaps, as they brought the ark into the field againſt the Philiſtines, ſo the Danites brought theſe images, with the ephod and teraphim, and the prieſt, who was ſlain with Hophni and Phineas; or, as Huetius thinks, carry'd captive into the land of the Philiſtines, with a great many other Iſraelites. But this place remained ſtill ſo famous for the reſort of people thither to worſhip, that when Jeroboam ſet up his golden calves, he erected one of them here in Dan, and another in Beth-el: Where there having been a real appearance of God, in ancient time, to Jacob, the people were eaſily induc'd to believe there had been the like to Dan, in the time here mentioned.

CHAP. XIX.

1 A Levite goeth to Beth-lehem to fetch home his wife. 16 An old man entertaineth him at Gibeah. 22 The Gibeathites abuſe his concubine to death. 29 He divideth her into twelve pieces, to ſend them to the twelve tribes.

AND it came to paſs in thoſe days, when there was no king in Iſrael, that there was a certain Levite ſojourning on the ſide of mount Ephraim, who took to him a concubine out of Beth-lehem-judah.

2 And his concubine played the whore againſt him, and went away from him unto her fathers houſe to Beth-lehem-judah, and was there four whole months.

3 And her husband aroſe, and went after her to ſpeak friendly unto her, and to bring her again, having his ſervant with him, and a couple of aſſes: and ſhe brought him into her fathers houſe, and when the father of the damſel ſaw him, he rejoiced to meet him.

4 And his father-in-law, the damſels father, retained him, and he abode with him three days: ſo they did eat and drink, and lodged there.

5 And it came to paſs on the fourth day, when they aroſe early in the morning, that he roſe up to depart: and the damſels father ſaid unto his ſon-in-law, Comfort thine heart with a morſel of bread, and afterward go your way.

6 And they ſat down and did eat and drink both of them together: for the damſels father had ſaid unto the man, Be content, I pray thee, and tarry all night, and let thy heart be merry.

7 And when the man roſe up to depart, his father-in-law urged him: therefore he lodged there again.

8 And he aroſe early in the morning on the fifth day to depart: and the damſels father ſaid, Comfort thine heart, I pray thee. And they tarried until afternoon, and they did eat both of them.

9 And when the man roſe up to depart, he and his concubine, and his ſervant; his father-in-law, the damſels father, ſaid unto him, Behold, now the day draweth towards evening, I pray you tarry all night: behold the day groweth to an end, lodge here, that thine heart may be merry; and to morrow get you early on your way, that thou mayſt go home.

10 But the man would not tarry that night, but he roſe up and departed, and came over-againſt Jebus (which is Jeruſalem) and there were with him two aſſes ſaddled, his concubine alſo was with him.

11 And when they were by Jebus, the day was far ſpent, and the ſervant ſaid unto his maſter, Come, I pray thee, and let us turn in unto this city of the Jebuſites, and lodge in it.

12 And his maſter ſaid unto him, We will not turn aſide hither into the city of a ſtranger, that is not of the children of Iſrael; we will paſs over to Gibeah.

13 And he ſaid unto his ſervant, Come, and let us draw near to one of theſe places to lodge all night, in Gibeah, or in Ramah.

14 And they paſſed on, and went their way, and the ſun went down upon them when they were by Gibeah, which belongeth to Benjamin.

15 And they turned aſide thither, to go in and to lodge in Gibeah: and when he went in, he ſat him down in a ſtreet of the city: for there was no man that took them into his houſe to lodging.

16 ¶ And behold, there came an old man from his work out of the field at even, which was alſo of mount Ephraim; and he ſojourned in Gibeah, but the men of the place were Benjamites.

17 And when he had lift up his eyes, he ſaw a way-faring man in the ſtreet of the city: and the old man ſaid, Whither goeſt thou? and whence comeſt thou?

18 And he ſaid unto him, We are paſſing from Beth-lehem-judah, toward the ſide of mount Ephraim, from thence am I: and I went to Beth-lehem-judah, but I am now going to the houſe of the LORD, and there is no man that receiveth me to houſe.

19 Yet there is both ſtraw and provender for our aſſes; and there is bread and wine alſo for me and for thy handmaid, and for the young man which is with thy ſervants: there is no want of any thing.

20 And the old man ſaid, Peace be with thee; howſoever, let all thy wants lie upon me; only lodge not in the ſtreet.

21 So he brought him into his houſe, and gave provender unto the aſſes: and they waſhed their feet, and did eat and drink.

22 ¶ Now as they were making their hearts merry, behold, the men of the city, certain ſons of Belial, beſet the houſe round about, and beat at the door, and ſpake to the maſter of the houſe, the old man, ſaying, Bring forth the man that came into thine houſe, that we may know him.

23 And the man, the maſter of the houſe, went out unto them, and ſaid unto them, Nay, my brethren, nay, I pray you, do not ſo wickedly; ſeeing that this man is come into mine houſe, do not this folly.

24 Behold, here is my daughter, a maiden, and his concubine, them I will bring out now, and humble ye them, and do with them what ſeemeth good unto you: but unto this man do not ſo vile a thing.

25 But the men would not hearken to him: ſo the man took his concubine, and brought her forth unto them; and they knew her, and abuſed her all the night until the morning: and when the day began to ſpring, they let her go.

26 Then came the woman in the dawning of the day, and fell down at the door of the mans houſe, where her lord was, till it was light.

27 And her lord roſe up in the morning, and opened the doors of the houſe, and went out to go his way: and behold, the woman his concubine was fallen down at the door of the houſe, and her hands were upon the threſhold.

28 And he ſaid unto her, Up, and let us be going: but none anſwered. Then the man took her up upon an aſs, and the man roſe up, and gat him unto his place.

29 ¶ And when he was come into his houſe, he took a knife, and laid hold on his concubine, and divided her together with her bones, into twelve pieces, and ſent her into all the coaſts of Iſrael.

30 And it was ſo, that all that ſaw it, ſaid, There was no ſuch deed done nor ſeen, from the day that the children of Iſrael came up out of the land of Egypt, unto this day: conſider of it, take advice, and ſpeak your minds.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs in thoſe days.] That is, in the time before-mentioned, chap. xvii. 6. xviii. 1.

———That there was a certain Levite ſojourning on the ſide of mount Ephraim, who took to him a concubine, &c.] Theſe words may ſignify, either that he took a woman with an intention to make her his concubine, or elſe, that he eſpouſed her, tho' ſhe had been a concubine to ſome other perſon before: The firſt ſenſe however ſeems preferable to the other, and all that we can infer from it is, that he married a wife of the ſecondary ſort, without the ſolemn eſpouſals, or dowry, as thoſe ſtrictly called wives had. So the Talmudiſts generally think; but Abarbinel is of opinion, that a concubine was taken with the uſual eſpouſals, and only wanted a dowry. Certain it is, ſuch perſons were really wives, and it was adultery in any

17 And when he had lift up his eyes, he ſaw a way-faring man in the ſtreet of the city: and the old man ſaid, Whither goeſt thou? and whence comeſt thou?

18 And he ſaid unto him, We are paſſing from Beth-lehem-judah, toward the ſide of mount Ephraim, from thence am I: and I went to Beth-lehem-judah, but I am now going to the houſe of the LORD, and there is no man that receiveth me to houſe.

19 Yet there is both ſtraw and provender for our aſſes; and there is bread and wine alſo for me and for thy handmaid, and for the young man which is with thy ſervants: there is no want of any thing.

20 And the old man ſaid, Peace be with thee; howſoever, let all thy wants lie upon me; only lodge not in the ſtreet.

21 So he brought him into his houſe, and gave provender unto the aſſes: and they waſhed their feet, and did eat and drink.

22 ¶ Now as they were making their hearts merry, behold, the men of the city, certain ſons of Belial, beſet the houſe round about, and beat at the door, and ſpake to the maſter of the houſe, the old man, ſaying, Bring forth the man that came into thine houſe, that we may know him.

23 And the man, the maſter of the houſe, went out unto them, and ſaid unto them, Nay, my brethren, nay, I pray you, do not ſo wickedly; ſeeing that this man is come into mine houſe, do not this folly.

24 Behold, here is my daughter, a maiden, and his concubine, them I will bring out now, and humble ye them, and do with them what ſeemeth good unto you: but unto this man do not ſo vile a thing.

25 But the men would not hearken to him: ſo the man took his concubine, and brought her forth unto them; and they knew her, and abuſed her all the night until the morning: and when the day began to ſpring, they let her go.

26 Then came the woman in the dawning of the day, and fell down at the door of the mans houſe, where her lord was, till it was light.

27 And her lord roſe up in the morning, and opened the doors of the houſe, and went out to go his way: and behold, the woman his concubine was fallen down at the door of the houſe, and her hands were upon the threſhold.

28 And he ſaid unto her, Up, and let us be going: but none anſwered. Then the man took her up upon an aſs, and the man roſe up, and gat him unto his place.

29 ¶ And when he was come into his houſe, he took a knife, and laid hold on his concubine, and divided her together with her bones, into twelve pieces, and ſent her into all the coaſts of Iſrael.

30 And it was ſo, that all that ſaw it, ſaid, There was no ſuch deed done nor ſeen, from the day that the children of Iſrael came up out of the land of Egypt, unto this day: conſider of it, take advice, and ſpeak your minds.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs in thoſe days.] That is, in the time before-mentioned, chap. xvii. 6. xviii. 1.

———That there was a certain Levite ſojourning on the ſide of mount Ephraim, who took to him a concubine, &c.] Theſe words may ſignify, either that he took a woman with an intention to make her his concubine, or elſe, that he eſpouſed her, tho' ſhe had been a concubine to ſome other perſon before: The firſt ſenſe however ſeems preferable to the other, and all that we can infer from it is, that he married a wife of the ſecondary ſort, without the ſolemn eſpouſals, or dowry, as thoſe ſtrictly called wives had. So the Talmudiſts generally think; but Abarbinel is of opinion, that a concubine was taken with the uſual eſpouſals, and only wanted a dowry. Certain it is, ſuch perſons were really wives, and it was adultery in any man, but thoſe who married them, to come to their bed. This Levite is expreſly called her husband, in the next chapter, ver. 4. and her father is ſtiled his father-in-law, in this chap. ver. 4, 7.

Ver. 2. And his concubine played the whore againſt him, and went from him unto her father's houſe, &c.] There are thoſe who, by the word tizneh, which we tranſlate played the whore, will have no more to be meant, than that ſhe was of a perverſe and contumacious ſpirit, and had conceived ſuch an averſion for her husband, that ſhe forſook him, and retired to her father's houſe. The Chaldee plainly inclines to this expoſition; and the LXX render the words ὠργίσθη αὐτῷ, ſhe conducted herſelf to him with an implacable ſpirit; and Joſephus declares, that ſhe ἀλλοτρίως εἶχε, behaved herſelf in a very untractable manner.

Whatever her real conduct may have been, (for we ſhall not take upon us to determine that point) it is certain that ſhe withdrew from the Levite, and placed herſelf under the protection of her father, with whom ſhe continued for the ſpace of four months; at which time her abſence became inſupportable to her husband; and he could not enjoy any ſatisfaction of mind, till a reconciliation between them had been effected. With this view he repaired to her father's houſe, where every thing was ſettled to his content; and he continued there almoſt five days, in compliance with the importunity of his father-in-law; but toward the evening of the fifth day he ſet out with his wife and a ſervant, in order to return to his own habitation at mount Ephraim.

The day was far ſpent when they came over-againſt Jebus, ver. 10. or the famous city of Jeruſalem, which was anciently called Jebus. This city had been taken by the children of Judah, chap. i. 8. but the Jebuſites ſtill kept the ſtrong fort of Sion, till the reign of David, and thereby ſo commanded the lower town, that they compelled the children of Judah and Benjamin to let them dwell with them there; and it appears by the paſſage before us, that they were the ruling party at this time.

The Levite, tho' the night began to advance, had no inclination to enter this city, and could not be prevailed upon to take up his lodging among an idolatrous people; in which he acted very differently from the other Levite in the preceding chapter. He therefore travelled two leagues farther, to Gibeah, a city belonging to the tribe of Benjamin, and ſituated to the north of Jeruſalem. The inhabitants of this place were a very inhoſpitable people to ſtrangers, as appears by the event; and as inns were not very common in thoſe early times, the Levite ſat down in one of the ſtreets, with a deſign to paſs the night there. But before it was quite dark an old man, who was alſo of mount Ephraim, came from his work in the field, and perceiving the inconveniences to which theſe ſtrangers were likely to be expoſed, for want of a lodging, invited them with great humanity to his own houſe, where he entertained them with an hoſpitality which was peculiar to himſelf in that city. He however had the mortification to find his good intentions render'd ineffectual, for while he and his gueſts were ſitting at table, the inhabitants of that place ſurrounded his houſe, and called upon him to bring out the man whom he had invited to paſs the night with him, that they might know him. Theſe laſt words would have been capable of an innocent meaning, if they had not been uttered by ſuch profligate wretches; for they might have ſignified no more, than that they deſired to examine him, in order to know who he was, and whence he came; but the good old man, who was ſufficiently acquainted with their impure intentions, had recourſe to an expedient which had ſome reſemblance to that uſed by Lot, in a conjuncture of the ſame infamous nature, Gen. xix. 6. Behold, ſaid he to them, ver. 24. here is my daughter, a maiden, and his concubine, them will I bring out now, and humble ye them, and do with them what ſeemeth good unto you: but unto the man do not ſo vile a thing. His earneſt deſire to preſerve the laws of hoſpitality from violation, made him forget the care he ought to have had for the preſervation of his daughter's purity. He hoped alſo, perhaps, that they were not grown ſo exceedingly abandon'd, as to offer ſuch an injury to a neighbour, tho' they were regardleſs of their conduct to ſtrangers. He likewiſe proffer'd them the Levite's concubine, ſuppoſing it better than to let them offer any unnatural violence to her husband. He however muſt be conſidered as acting with the utmoſt perplexity and confuſion, in ſuch an odious emergency, when much preſence of mind could not well be expected from one in his ſituation.

Theſe impious men would not hearken to him, ver. 25. And the Levite, we may naturally ſuppoſe, abſolutely refuſed to have either the old man's daughter, or his own concubine, expoſed to their brutal paſſion.

This occaſioned a quarrel, and they both threatened and intended to kill the Levite, as he himſelf relates the ſtory, chap. xx. ver. 5. which, it is likely, moved the old man to perſuade him not to be ſo obſtinate, but rather to make ſome conceſſions to thoſe wretches, in order to preſerve his own life, which was in ſuch imminent danger. The Levite was at laſt prevailed upon; and the men of the city finding him ſo obſtinately determined to defend himſelf, conſented at laſt to compound the matter, and were contented to have only his concubine, whoſe beauty, Joſephus ſays, they admired when they firſt ſaw her come into their city. This unfortunate woman was therefore delivered up to them, but they treated her, during the whole night, with ſuch unparallel'd indignity, that ſhe expired the next morning at the door of the old man's houſe. The firſt object, therefore, which preſented it ſelf to the afflicted Levite, when he came out, was the dead body of the perſon he loved ſo tenderly. He at firſt imagined, ſhe was only aſleep, but when he ſaw ſhe was dead, he made no out-cry, but (as Joſephus obſerves) prudently conveyed her away as faſt as he could to his own habitation.

He then began to meditate revenge for the barbarous treatment he had ſuſtained; and, in order to engage all the tribes of Iſrael to eſpouſe his cauſe, he divided the dead body of his concubine into twelve parts, and ſent one to each tribe, ver. 29. not excepting that of Benjamin, among whom he might have reaſon to hope there were ſome who would reſent ſo ſhocking an outrage, tho' committed by their own brethren. The event anſwered his expectation, for the Iſraelites not only expreſſed their deteſtation of the fact, but were highly incenſed at it, as a crime that exceeded all that had been heard of ſince they were a people: For it was a mixture of adultery and murder, aggravated with the vileſt attempt upon a Levite, who was a perſon conſecrated to the Divine Service, in ſome ſubordinate miniſtration. They therefore exhorted one another to this effect, Conſider of it, take advice, and ſpeak your minds, ver. 30. Which is as if they had ſaid, Form a deliberate judgment of this ſurpriſing affair, and declare your opinions freely, in what manner a crime of this nature ought to be puniſhed, in order to deter others from committing the ſame.

CHAP. XX.

1 The Levite in a general aſſembly declareth his wrong. 8 The decree of the aſſembly. 12 The Benjamites being cited, make head againſt the Iſraelites. 18 The Iſraelites in two battles loſe forty thouſand. 26 They deſtroy by a ſtratagem all the Benjamites, except ſix hundred.

THEN all the children of Iſrael went out, and the congregation was gathered together, as one man, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba, with the land of Gilead, unto the LORD in Mizpeh.

2 And the chief of all the people, even of all the tribes of Iſrael, preſented themſelves in the aſſembly of the people of God, four hundred thouſand footmen that drew ſword.

3 (Now the children of Benjamin heard that the children of Iſrael were gone up to Mizpeh.) Then ſaid the children of Iſrael, Tell us how was this wickedneſs?

4 And the Levite, the husband of the woman that was ſlain, anſwered and ſaid, I came

I came into Gibeah that belongeth to Benjamin, I and my concubine to lodge.

5 And the men of Gibeah roſe againſt me, and beſet the houſe round about upon me by night, and thought to have ſlain me: and my concubine have they forced, that ſhe is dead.

6 And I took my concubine, and cut her in pieces, and ſent her throughout all the country of the inheritance of Iſrael: for they have committed lewdneſs and folly in Iſrael.

7 Behold, ye are all children of Iſrael, give here your advice and counſel.

8 ¶ And all the people aroſe as one man, ſaying, We will not any of us go to his tent, neither will we any of us turn into his houſe.

9 But now, this ſhall be the thing which we will do to Gibeah, we will go up by lot againſt it:

10 And we will take ten men of an hundred throughout all the tribes of Iſrael, and an hundred of a thouſand, and a thouſand out of ten thouſand, to fetch victual for the people, that they may do, when they come to Gibeah of Benjamin, according to all the folly that they have wrought in Iſrael.

11 So all the men of Iſrael were gathered againſt the city, knit together as one man.

12 ¶ And the tribes of Iſrael ſent men through all the tribe of Benjamin, ſaying, What wickedneſs is this that is done among you?

13 Now therefore deliver us the men, the children of Belial, which are in Gibeah, that we may put them to death, and put away evil from Iſrael. But the children of Benjamin would not hearken to the voice of their brethren the children of Iſrael:

14 But the children of Benjamin gathered themſelves together out of the cities, unto Gibeah, to go out to battle againſt the children of Iſrael.

15 And the children of Benjamin were numbred at that time out of the cities, twenty and ſix thouſand men that drew ſword, beſide the inhabitants of Gibeah, which were numbred ſeven hundred choſen men.

16 Among all this people there were ſeven hundred choſen men left-handed, every one could ſling ſtones at an hair-breadth, and not miſs.

17 And the men of Iſrael, beſide Benjamin, were numbred four hundred thouſand men that drew ſword; all theſe were men of war.

18 ¶ And the children of Iſrael aroſe, and went up to the houſe of God, and asked counſel of God, and ſaid, Which of us ſhall go up firſt to the battle againſt the children of Benjamin? And the LORD ſaid, Judah ſhall go up firſt.

19 And the children of Iſrael roſe up in the morning, and encamped againſt Gibeah.

20 And the men of Iſrael went out to battle againſt Benjamin, and the men of Iſrael put themſelves in aray to fight againſt them at Gibeah.

21 And the children of Benjamin came forth out of Gibeah, and deſtroyed down to the ground of the Iſraelites that day, twenty and two thouſand men.

22 And the people the men of Iſrael encouraged themſelves, and ſet their battle again in aray, in the place where they put themſelves in aray the firſt day.

23 (And the children of Iſrael went up and wept before the LORD until even, and asked counſel of the LORD, ſaying, Shall I go up again to battle againſt the children of Benjamin my brother? And the LORD ſaid, Go up againſt him.)

24 And the children of Iſrael came near againſt the children of Benjamin, the ſecond day.

25 And Benjamin went forth againſt them out of Gibeah the ſecond day, and deſtroyed down to the ground of the children of Iſrael again, eighteen thouſand men; all theſe drew the ſword.

26 ¶ Then all the children of Iſrael and all the people went up, and came unto the houſe of God, and wept, and ſat there before the LORD, and faſted that day until even, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the LORD.

27 And the children of Iſrael enquired of the LORD (for the ark of the covenant of God was there in thoſe days, 28 And Phineas, the ſon of Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron, ſtood before it in thoſe days) ſaying, Shall I yet again go out to battle againſt the children of Benjamin my brother, or ſhall I ceaſe? And the LORD ſaid, Go up; for to-morrow I will deliver them into thine hand.

29 And Iſrael ſet liers in wait round about Gibeah.

30 And the children of Iſrael went up againſt the children of Benjamin on the third day, and put themſelves in aray againſt Gibeah, as at other times.

31 And the children of Benjamin went out againſt the people, and were drawn away from the city, and they began to ſmite of the people, and kill as at other times, in the high-ways, of which one goeth up to the houſe of God, and the other to Gibeah in the field, about thirty men of Iſrael.

32 And the children of Benjamin ſaid, They are ſmitten down before us as at the the firſt. But the children of Iſrael ſaid, Let us flee, and draw them from the city, unto the high-ways.

33 And all the men of Iſrael roſe up out of their place, and put themſelves in aray at Baal-tamar: and the liers in wait of Iſrael came forth out of their places, even out of the meadows of Gibeah.

34 And there came againſt Gibeah ten thouſand choſen men out of all Iſrael, and the battle was ſore: but they knew not that evil was near them.

35 And the LORD ſmote Benjamin before Iſrael: and the children of Iſrael deſtroyed of the Benjamites that day, twenty and five thouſand and an hundred men; all theſe drew the ſword.

36 So the children of Benjamin ſaw that they were ſmitten: for the men of Iſrael gave place to the Benjamites, becauſe they truſted unto the liers in wait which they had ſet beſide Gibeah.

37 And the liers in wait haſted, and ruſhed upon Gibeah, and the liers in wait drew themſelves along, and ſmote all the city with the edge of the ſword.

38 Now there was an appointed ſign between the men of Iſrael and the liers in wait, that they ſhould make a great flame with ſmoke to riſe up out of the city.

39 And when the men of Iſrael retired in the battle, Benjamin began to ſmite and kill of the men of Iſrael about thirty perſons; for they ſaid, Surely they are ſmitten down before us, as in the firſt battle.

40 But when the flame began to ariſe up out of the city, with a pillar of ſmoke, the Benjamites looked behind them, and behold the flame of the city aſcended up to heaven.

41 And when the men of Iſrael turned again, the men of Benjamin were amazed: for they ſaw that evil was come upon them.

42 Therefore they turned their backs before the men of Iſrael, unto the way of the wilderneſs, but the battle overtook them: and them which came out of the cities, they deſtroyed in the midſt of them.

43 Thus they encloſed the Benjamites round about, and chaſed them, and trode them down with eaſe over-againſt Gibeah toward the ſun-riſing.

44 And there fell of Benjamin eighteen thouſand men; all theſe were men of valour.

45 And they turned and fled toward the wilderneſs unto the rock of Rimmon: and they gleaned of them in the high-ways five thouſand men, and purſued hard after them unto Gidom, and ſlew two thouſand men of them.

46 So that all which fell that day of Benjamin, were twenty and five thouſand men that drew the ſword; all theſe were men of valour.

47 But ſix hundred men turned and fled to the wilderneſs unto the rock Rimmon, and abode in the rock Rimmon four months.

48 And the men of Iſrael turned again upon the children of Benjamin, and ſmote them with the edge of the ſword, as well the men of every city, as the beaſt and all that came to hand: alſo they ſet on fire all the cities that they came to.

Ver. 1. Then all the children of Iſrael went out, and the congregation was gathered together as one man, &c.] The aſtoniſhed tribes aſſembled themſelves from all parts of Iſrael to Mizpeh, to the number of 400,000 footmen that drew the ſword; for the armies of the Jews conſiſted of infantry, they not having any horſes bred in their country. The Levite now gave them a more particular account of the cruel injury which had been offered to his concubine, but artfully concealed his own cowardiſe in ſacrificing her to his ſafety. The whole people had ſcarcely heard the relation out, when they roſe up as one man, and reſolved not to return to their reſpective habitations, till they had puniſhed the authors of that unparallel'd wickedneſs with the utmoſt ſeverity. Whilſt therefore they deputed every tenth man to their reſpective tribes, to fetch them arms and proviſion for the war, they ſent deputies to the heads of the tribe of Benjamin, to demand the delivery of thoſe profligate Gibeathites. But that haughty tribe, inſtead of complying with their requeſt, armed 26000 of their beſt warriors, beſide 700 of the inhabitants of Gibeah, in order to confront the other tribes in the field. Among this army of the Benjamites were 700 choſen men, who were left-handed, every one of whom could ſling ſtones to the breadth of an hair, as the Sacred Hiſtorian informs us, ver. 16. Such excellent markſmen have been in other countries, particularly in the iſlands called Baleares, where the inhabitants were bred from their infancy to hit a mark with a ſtone lanched from a ſling, or elſe to loſe their morning's meal, as Strabo relates. This extraordinary skill of the Benjamites, in the management of their arms (for it is likely they handled other other weapons with the ſame dexterity) and their natural courage embolden'd them to undertake a war with ſo ſmall a number of men, againſt ſuch a vaſt multitude of their brethren; and this warlike diſpoſition of theirs was predicted by Jacob, when he declared, Benjamin ſhall raven as a wolf, which is an undaunted fearleſs creature, Gen. xlix. 27.

This unexpected ſtubbornneſs of the Benjamites did but the more exaſperate the other tribes, and made them vow to take a fuller revenge: antecedent to which they, however, thought it highly proper to conſult the Lord, not whether they ſhould engage in a war againſt their brethren, for that they took for granted was both lawful and incumbent on them, but which of the tribes ſhould go out firſt againſt Benjamin; and God anſwered, that Judah ſhould go firſt. Accordingly, this tribe gave battle to the Benjamites, on the next morning, in full confidence of obtaining a compleat victory; but the event proved very different from their expectations, and Judah was repulſed with the loſs of 22,000 men. It may ſeem ſtrange, that they ſhould be thus defeated, after they had been authorized by God to go up againſt the Benjamites; but it ought to be remembred, that he did not promiſe they ſhould ſucceed in that expedition. Some of the Jews ſay, that they ſought the Lord imperfectly, and therefore he gave them an imperfect anſwer. They did not ask him if he would favour their enterprize, as they did at laſt, when they ſaid, Shall we go up, or ſhall we deſiſt? And then a clear anſwer is returned, Go up, for to-morrow I will deliver them into thy hand, ver. 28. Abarbinel thinks they did not ask counſel in a due place, nor by the proper perſon, but by ſome other than Phineas the high-prieſt, of whom there is no mention, till the third time they went to conſult the Divine Oracle, ver. 28. But a better reaſon is aſſigned, in Pirke Elieſer, where it is ſaid, that God was angry with the Iſraelites for their neglect of him, in ſuffering ſpiritual adultery among them, while they were ſo impatient to puniſh that which was carnal.

This unexpected defeat extremely ſurprized the men of Judah, and cauſed them to apply themſelves a ſecond time to the Sacred Oracle, to know whether they ſhould purſue the war againſt their brethren of Benjamin. God gave them leave to go up, but without any promiſe of ſucceſs, which they ought to have ſued for in an humble manner; and upon their advancing againſt Gibeah, they were again defeated with the loſs of 18,000 men, in a vigorous ſally which the inhabitants made upon them, ver. 25. This ſecond diſappointment almoſt drove them to deſpair; but at length they reſolved to return to Shiloh, in order to proſtrate themſelves before the ark all that night, and by ſacrifices, faſting and fervent prayer, to intreat the Lord, either to grant them a victory, or to declare his diſapprobation of the war in which they had engaged. This humble behaviour obtained a favourable anſwer, and the high prieſt promiſed them, that God would deliver the Benjamites into their hands, in the next engagement. The high prieſt, who communicated this promiſe to them, is ſaid to have been Phineas, the ſon of Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron, ver. 28. From whence ſome conclude, that this circumſtance was recorded, in order to point out the time of this war, which could not be long after the death of Joſhua; for if it had been after the time of the Judges, Phineas muſt now have been above three hundred years old; which is far beyond the age to which men lived at that time.

This favourable anſwer inſpired them with freſh courage, but yet they thought it adviſeable to add policy to their ſtrength. To this end, a ſtratagem was put in execution, which had its deſired effect. They divided themſelves into three bodies, one of which was, to form an ambuſcade, and be ready to enter the city and fire it, as ſoon as the inhabitants had ſallied out; and after another party had made a feigned aſſault, on purpoſe to draw the men of Gibeah out of their city to purſue their enemies; while the third and main body was to lie concealed in the neighbourhood of Baal-tamar, a place near Gibeah, in order to be ready to fall upon the inhabitants. The children of Benjamin eaſily gave into the ſnare, and finding themſelves unexpectedly ſurprized in their purſuit, by the main body, were preparing to retreat into their town, when upon turning themſelves about, they beheld it all in flames, and were ſo intimidated at the ſight, that they were cut off, to the number of 25,000. About 600 eſcaped by flight, and fortified themſelves on the rocks of Rimmon, for the ſpace of four months, that is, till they were called down by the other tribes in an amicable manner. But the fury of theſe latter did not cool, till they had burnt down all the cities and villages of the Benjamites, and deſtroyed the inhabitants, without diſtinction of age or ſex; their rage likewiſe extended to the very cattle; and was not abated till they had almoſt extirpated this tribe.

CHAP. XXI.

1 The people bewail the deſolation of Benjamin. 8 By the deſtruction of Jabeſh-gilead they provide them four hundred wives. 16 They adviſe them to ſurprize the virgins that danced at Shiloh.

NOW the men of Iſrael had ſworn in Mizpeh, ſaying, There ſhall not any of us give his daughter unto Benjamin to wife.

2 And the people came to the houſe of God, and abode there till even before God, and lift up their voices, and wept ſore:

3 And ſaid, O LORD God of Iſrael, why is this come to paſs in Iſrael, that there ſhould be to day one tribe lacking in Iſrael?

4 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that the people roſe early, and built there an altar, and offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings.

5 And the children of Iſrael ſaid, Who is there among all the tribes of Iſrael, that came not up with the congregation unto the Lord? for they had made a great oath concerning him that came not up to the LORD to Mizpeh, ſaying, He ſhall ſurely be put to death.

6 And the children of Iſrael repented them for Benjamin their brother, and ſaid, There is one tribe cut off from Iſrael this day:

7 How ſhall we do for wives for them that remain, ſeeing we have ſworn by the LORD that we will not give them of our daughters to wives?

8 ¶ And they ſaid, What one is there of the tribes of Iſrael, that came not up to Mizpeh to the LORD? and behold, there came none to the camp from Jabeſh-gilead, to the aſſembly.

9 For the people were numbred, and behold, there were none of the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead there.

10 And the congregation ſent thither twelve thouſand men of the valianteſt, and commanded them, ſaying, Go, and ſmite the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead with the edge of the ſword, with the women and the children.

11 And this is the thing that ye ſhall do, Ye ſhall utterly deſtroy every male, and every woman that hath lien by man.

12 And they found among the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead, four hundred young virgins that had known no man by lying with any male: and they brought them unto the camp to Shiloh, which is in the land of Canaan.

13 And the whole congregation ſent ſome to ſpeak to the children of Benjamin that were in the rock Rimmon, and to call peaceably unto them.

14 And Benjamin came again at that time; and they gave them wives which they had ſaved alive of the women of Jabeſh-gilead: and yet ſo they ſufficed them not.

15 And the people repented them for Benjamin, becauſe that the LORD had made a breach in the tribes of Iſrael.

16 ¶ Then the elders of the congregation ſaid, How ſhall we do for wives for them that remain, ſeeing the women are deſtroyed out of Benjamin?

17 And they ſaid, There muſt be an inheritance for them that be eſcaped of Benjamin, that a tribe be not deſtroyed out of Iſrael.

18 Howbeit we may not give them wives of our daughters: for the children of Iſrael have ſworn, ſaying, Curſed be he that giveth a wife to Benjamin.

19 Then they ſaid, Behold, there is a feaſt of the LORD in Shiloh yearly, in a place which is on the north-ſide of Beth-el, on the eaſt-ſide of the high-way that goeth up from Beth-el to Shechem, and on the ſouth of Lebonah.

20 Therefore they commanded the children of Benjamin, ſaying, Go and lie in wait in the vineyards:

21 And ſee, and behold, if the daughters of Shiloh come out to dance in dances, then come ye out of the vineyards, and catch you every man his wife of the daughters of Shiloh, and go to the land of Benjamin.

22 And it ſhall be, when their fathers or their brethren come unto us to complain, that we will ſay unto them, Be favourable unto them for our ſakes: becauſe we reſerved not to each man his wife in the war: for ye did not give unto them at this time, that you ſhould be guilty.

23 And the children of Benjamin did ſo, and took them wives according to their number, of them that danced, whom they caught: and they went and returned unto their inheritance, and repaired the cities, and dwelt in them.

24 And the children of Iſrael departed thence at that time, every man to his tribe, and to his family, and they went out from thence every man to his inheritance.

25 In thoſe days there was no king in Iſrael: every man did that which was right in his own eyes.

Ver. 1. Now the men of Iſrael had ſworn in Mizpeh, ſaying, There ſhall not any of us give his daughter unto Benjamin to wife, &c.] This oath was taken by the Iſraelites when they firſt aſſembled in Mizpeh, and before they entered upon the war againſt the Benjamites. But they now began to reflect with great remorſe on the ſeverity with which they had proceeded againſt their brethren, ver. 2, &c. They then went to the houſe of God at Shiloh, and there expoſtulated with the Divine Majeſty, for having ſuffered ſuch a univerſal deſtruction to be accompliſhed by their hands. They here erected a large altar, probably, becauſe that of the tabernacle was not capacious enough for the large number of their intended victims; and when they were informed, that the ſix hundred men who had eſcaped from the late ſlaughter, were ſtill upon the rocks of Rimmon, they were deſirous of recalling them in an amicable manner, that the deſolate tribe might be reſtored by their means: but the main impediment to the execution of this deſign was the raſh oath they had taken at Mizpeh, that none of them would give their daughters to any of the Benjamites. This oath however, being unlawful in itſelf, might have been diſſolved by the high prieſt, who was there preſent; but whether their conſcience was more tender in this reſpect than it generally was in all others; they had recourſe to another expedient, which they imagined would anſwer their end, without involving them in the heinous crime of perjury, tho' in reality it was hardly ſo juſtifiable as the breach of ſuch an oath would have been, even tho' they had no Phineas to have abſolved them from it. They cauſed a ſtrict ſearch to be made in their muſter rolls, whether any of the confederate tribes had neglected to come to the camp at Mizpeh, and upon enquiry it was found, that the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead, belonging to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, on the other ſide Jordan, had not come to the general aſſembly. One would have expected therefore, that as they had no ſhare in the oath with the other tribes, theſe would only have obliged them to furniſh thoſe 600 Benjamites with wives; inſtead of which they proceeded in a much more cruel manner: For they ſent 12000 armed men with orders to deſtroy all the inhabitants of the place except the virgins. This body of men ſoon went and executed their inhuman commiſſion, and brought away four hundred maidens, who were conſigned to as many of the remaining men of Benjamin. But as two hundred of them were ſtill unprovided for, and there were no more towns to be condemned to the fate of Jabeſh, the Iſraelites, rather than violate their oath for the ſake of this inconſiderable number of their brethren, found out a method to evade it, by permitting them to ſeize that by force, which they thought unlawful to give them of their own accord. "Behold, ſaid they, there is a feaſt of the Lord in Shiloh "yearly, in a place which is on the north-ſide of Beth-el, "on the eaſt-ſide of the highway that goeth up from "Beth-el to Shechem, and on the ſouth of Lebonah. "Go therefore and lie in wait in the vineyards: And ſee, "and behold if the daughters of Shiloh come out to "dance in dances, then come ye out of the vineyards, "and catch you every man his wife of the daughters of "Shiloh, and go to the land of Benjamin. And it ſhall "be

" be when their fathers or their brethren come unto us " to complain, that we will ſay unto them, Be favoura- " ble unto them for our ſakes: becauſe we reſerved not " to each man his wife in the war", ver. 19, 20, 21, 22.

The feaſt here ſpoken of is thought by ſome to have been the Paſſover, but others with much more reaſon conclude it to be the feaſt of Tabernacles, which was a time of univerſal and uncommon joy, becauſe they had newly gather'd-in their vintage, and then dwelt in booths, behind which the Benjamites might lurk in a commodious manner, and improve the beſt opportunity for carrying off the virgins. This feaſt of Tabernacles alſo was the only ſeaſon in the year, wherein the Jewiſh virgins were allow'd to dance.

The Benjamites purſued the advice of their brethren, and lay concealed in the vineyards adjacent to Shiloh: and when the young maidens came out with tabrets and dances, every man ſeized upon one of them, and they were all carried to the habitations of their raviſhers.

The rape of the Sabine virgins, in the reign of Romulus, has been compared by ſome to this action of the Benjamites; but there is certainly much diff rence between them, for thoſe were ſtrangers over whom Romulus had now power, and therefore that act of the Romans occaſion'd a war: But theſe were Iſraelites, ſubject to the authority of the elders, and what was tranſacted by the Benjamites was in order to eſtabliſh a new tranquillity among the ſeveral tribes. The elders indeed, by recommending this proceeding, may be juſtly ſaid to have wronged thoſe parents, whoſe children were thus forced away without their conſent; but this was thought better than breaking the ſolemn oath they had taken, or ſuffering the tribe of Benjamin to be extinct.

In one particular, however, they acted well, ſince they permitted the Benjamites to take wives only according to their number, that is, every man a ſingle wife, and no more. So that tho' poligamy was tolerated in other inſtances, yet they would neither adviſe nor countenance it now, not even for the ſpeedy reſtoration of a tribe.

Theſe ſix hundred men ſoon rebuilt their cities; and the tribe of Benjamin, thus reſtored by degrees to its former valour and ſtrength, adhered ever after to that of Judah, and gave the ſecond judge, and firſt king to Iſrael.

The End of the Book of JUDGES.

Critical

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS On the BOOK of RUTH.

The ARGUMENT.

The book of Ruth is placed, in our Bibles, between that of Judges and the two books of Samuel, as being the ſequel of the former, and an introduction to the latter. It derives its title from the perſon, whoſe hiſtory conſtitutes the principal part of the book, and highly deſerves our admiration. It is very probable, that the hiſtorian who compiled the book of Judges, was likewiſe the author of this, namely, Samuel, who by adding this to the end of that book, brought down the hiſtory to his own times. St. Jerom informs us, that the Jews annexed it to the book of Judges, becauſe the tranſactions of which it treats happened in the time of the Judges of Iſrael: And ſeveral of the ancient fathers comprehended the hiſtory of the Judges and of Ruth in one book. But the modern Jews commonly place in their Bibles, after the Pentateuch, the five Megilloth, (which word ſignifies Rolls, or Volumes) and theſe are, the Song of Songs, the book of Ruth, the Lamentations of Jeremiah, Eccleſiaſtes, and the book of Eſther. Sometimes Ruth is placed the firſt of the five, ſometimes the ſecond, and ſometimes the fifth.

The intention of the author of this book was to unfold the genealogy of David; and we Chriſtians may evidently diſcover the wiſdom of God, in cauſing this account of it to be compiled. It had been foretold to the Jews, Gen. xlix. 10. that the Meſſiah ſhould ſpring from the tribe of Judah; and a much later revelation declared, that he ſhould be of the family of David, Pſalm lxxxix. 34, 35, &c. and therefore it was neceſſary, in order to a right conception of thoſe important prophecies, that a hiſtory of David's family in that tribe ſhould be written before the promulgation of the latter prophecy, that points out the deſcent of the ever-bleſſed Redeemer from David. Thus there could not be the leaſt ſuſpicion of any fraud, or diſingenuous deſign; and thus the book of Ruth, the prophecies relating to the Meſſiah, and their exact accompliſhment, ſerve to illuſtrate each other.

The Sacred Hiſtorian obſerves, at the beginning of this work, that the hiſtory he was preparing to relate happened at the time when the Judges governed Iſrael, whoſe tribes therefore were no longer under that form of juriſdiction, when this book was written. The author likewiſe mentions David at the cloſe of this work, which ſhews that it could not be written before the time of David.

If Boaz was born to Salmon, by Rahab, about forty-two years after the Iſraelites had enter'd into Canaan, as Mr. Bedford thinks he has proved, in his Scripture Chronology, and Obed was born to Boaz when the latter was about 54 years of age, the birth of Obed will nearly coincide with the ninety-ſixth year after the entrance into Canaan, which was, when the Iſraelites had reſt under Othniel, the firſt of their Judges, Judg. iii. 9, 10, 11. and if ſo, the book of Ruth would regularly follow thoſe verſes. But we rather think, that this hiſtory ſhould be referred to the time of Gideon, for a reaſon we ſhall offer in the enſuing Commentary.

The canonicalneſs of this book was never conteſted, for which reaſon it deſerves the grateful attention of all thoſe who conſider the redemption wrought by the Divine Jeſus, as the moſt ineſtimable bleſſing that could poſſibly be vouchſafed to fallen man.

CHAP.

CHAP. I.

1 Elimelech driven by famine into Moab, dieth there. 4 Mahlon and Chilion, having married wives of Moab, die alſo. 6 Naomi returning homeward, 8 diſſwadeth her two daughters-in-law from going with her. 14 Orpah leaveth her, but Ruth with great conſtancy accompanieth her. 19 They two come to Beth-lehem, where they are gladly received.

NOW it came to paſs in the days when the judges ruled, that there was a famine in the land: and a certain man of Beth-lehem-judah went to ſojourn in the country of Moab, he and his wife, and his two ſons.

2 And the name of the man was Elimelech, and the name of his wife Naomi, and the name of his two ſons Mahlon and Chilion, Ephrathites of Beth-lehem-judah: and they came into the country of Moab, and continued there.

3 And Elimelech Naomi's husband died, and ſhe was left, and her two ſons.

4 And they took them wives of the women of Moab: the name of the one was Orpah, and the name of the other Ruth: and they dwelled there about ten years.

5 And Mahlon and Chilion died alſo both of them; and the woman was left of her two ſons, and her husband.

6 ¶ Then ſhe aroſe with her daughters-in-law, that ſhe might return from the country of Moab: for ſhe had heard in the country of Moab, how that the LORD had viſited his people in giving them bread.

7 Wherefore ſhe went forth out of the place where ſhe was, and her two daughters-in-law with her: and they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah.

8 And Naomi ſaid unto her two daughters-in-law, Go, return each to her mothers houſe: the LORD deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead, and with me.

9 The LORD grant you that you may find reſt, each of you in the houſe of her husband. Then ſhe kiſſed them: and they lift up their voice, and wept.

10 And they ſaid unto her, Surely we will return with thee unto thy people.

11 And Naomi ſaid, Turn again, my daughters: why will ye go with me? are there yet any more ſons in my womb, that they may be your husbands?

12 Turn again, my daughters, go your way, for I am too old to have an husband: if I ſhould ſay, I have hope, if I ſhould have a husband alſo to night, and ſhould alſo bear ſons:

13 Would ye tarry for them till they were grown? would ye ſtay for them from having husbands? nay, my daughters: for it grieveth me much for your ſakes, that the hand of the LORD is gone out againſt me.

14 And they lift up their voice, and wept again: and Orpah kiſſed her mother-in-law, but Ruth clave unto her.

15 And ſhe ſaid, Behold, thy ſiſter-in-law is gone back unto her people, and unto her gods: return thou after thy ſiſter-in-law.

16 And Ruth ſaid, Intreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goeſt, I will go; and where thou lodgeſt, I will lodge: thy people ſhall be my people, and thy God my God:

17 Where thou dieſt, will I die, and there will I be buried: the LORD do ſo to me, and more alſo, if ought but death part thee and me.

18 When ſhe ſaw that ſhe was ſtedfaſtly minded to go with her, then ſhe left ſpeaking unto her.

19 ¶ So they two went until they came to Beth-lehem. And it came to paſs when they were come to Beth-lehem, that all the city was moved about them, and they ſaid, Is this Naomi?

20 And ſhe ſaid unto them, Call me not Naomi, call me Mara: for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me.

21 I went out full, and the LORD hath brought me home again empty: why then call ye me Naomi, ſeeing the LORD hath teſtified againſt me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me?

22 So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabiteſs her daughter-in-law with her, which returned out of the country of Moab: and they came to Beth-lehem in the beginning of barley-harveſt.

Ver. 1. Now it came to paſs in the days when the judges ruled, that there was a famine in the land.] It ſeems reaſonable to conclude from hence, that moſt of the particulars of this hiſtory were tranſacted in the days of Gideon; for that is the only time in which we read of a famine, during the juriſdiction of the Judges; when the Midianites and Amalekites, in conjunction with the children of the eaſt, came and deſtroyed the increaſe of the earth, and left no ſuſtenance for Iſrael, not for their cattle, Judges vi. 34.

——— And a certain man of Beth-lehem-judah.] Beth-lehem, or Beth-lechem, ſignifies the houſe of bread; and it was a city in the tribe of Judah, generally called Beth-lehem of Judah, to diſtinguiſh it from another Bethlehem in the tribe of Zebulun. It was likewiſe called Ephrath, Gen. xlviii. 7 from the fruitfulneſs of the adjacent country. This city was not conſiderable, either for its riches or extent, but was render'd moſt illuſtrious, for being the place where the Divine Redeemer of mankind condeſcended to be born of a woman. It is ſituated on the declivity of a hill, ſix miles from Jeruſalem. Joſephus indeed ſeems to place it at the diſtance of thirty furlongs, or three miles and ſeven hundred and fifty paces, from Jeruſalem, (Antiq. lib. 5. c. 2.) Juſtin Martyr, at thirty-five furlongs, (Apol. 2.) which are equal to four miles three hundred and ſeventy-five paces. But it is very probable, that the numerical figures, which denote this diſtance, are changed in thoſe two authors; for all others, as well ancient as modern, conſtantly repreſent the diſtance between Jeruſalem and Beth-lehem to be ſix miles. St. Jerom makes it forty-ſix miles from Joppa to Beth-lehem, (Hieron. Ep. ad Dardanum.)

Beth-lehem of the tribe of Zebulun is ſcarce known, but by its bearing the ſame name as that city which gave birth to king David, and to the great Meſſiah, the King of kings.

——Went to ſojourn in the land of Moab.] This country derived its name from Moab the ſon of Lot, by his eldeſt daughter. The poſterity of this perſon ſettled in the tract of land that border'd on the mountain where their progenitor was born, and ſome authors make it part of Cœle-Syria, (Joſeph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 12.) others of Arabia, (Stephan. de Urb. in Μωάβ.) When theſe deſcendants from Moab had driven out the old inhabitants, they poſſeſſed a large extent of country, thence called Moabitis, or the land of Moab, bounded on the weſt by the mountains that riſe to the eaſt of the lake Aſphaltitis, commonly called the Dead-ſea, and likewiſe by the river Jordan; its northern limit was the land poſſeſſed by the Ammonites, the offspring of Ammon, the ſon of Lot by his younger daughter; it was terminated on the ſouth by the brook, or little river, Zered, which flows into the Dead-ſea, and by the countries of Midian and Edom; and the deſarts of Arabia border'd it to the eaſt. Its whole extent comprehended about forty miles in length, and as many in breadth.

Ver. 2. And the name of the man was Elimelech, and the name of his wife Naomi.] The Jews have been very careful to inform us, that Elimelech had been maſter of great riches, but that he miſ-improved them in a variety of inſtances; was uncharitable to the poor, amidſt the profuſion he enjoyed; and by his vices brought down the wrath of heaven upon himſelf. To this they add, that his noble extraction, and the rank he bore in the world, procured him the favour of Eglon king of the Moabites, and inclined him to unite the royal family with that of this Jew, by giving his daughter in marriage to Mahlon, one of the ſons of Elimelech, (Salom Jarchi, in Ruth i.)

The Jews have likewiſe ſpoken in as pompous a manner of Naomi, to whom they have aſſigned an illuſtrious race; and add, that Nahſhon was her uncle, and Salmon, the brother of this prince of Judah, her father; but as the Sacred Hiſtorian is ſilent with reſpect to all theſe particulars, we leave our readers to judge of them as they think proper.

——And the names of his two ſons Mahlon and Chilion, Ephrathites of Beth-lehem-judah.] They are called Ephrathites, becauſe they, in all probability, were not only born, but were likewiſe bred up, and lived in the ſame place with their father, which, as we have already obſerved, was called Ephrath, from its great fertility.

Tho' Elimelech had eſcaped the calamities of famine, by retiring into the land of Moab, he yet was unable to elude the ſtroke of death, ver. 3. and he, perhaps, ended his days, ſoon after his arrival in that country. His two ſons continued with their mother Naomi, and in order to procure themſelves ſome protection in a land wherein they were ſtrangers, they each of them eſpouſed a Moabitiſh woman, ver. 4. The wife of Chilion was named Orpah, and the Rabbins, tho' without any foundation, affirm, that ſhe was the mother of Goliath. Prudentius, the Chriſtian poet, has likewiſe adopted the ſame opinion, in conſequence of which he reproaches Orpah, for being more ſollicitous to ſupport the race of that giant, ſemiferi ſtirpem nutrire Goliæ, than to accompany her mother-in-law to her native land, (Prudent. Hamartigenia, ver. 78 4 The wife of Mahlon was called Ruth, and the Jews pretend ſhe was the daughter of king Eglon, (Talmud. Tractat. Bereſchith, fol. 7. Bava Batra, fol. 14. Sota, fol. 42.)

The ſons of Elimelech were excuſable in marrying wives of this nation, if, as Aben Ezra affirms, they firſt became proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion, and that they did ſo, he concludes from thoſe very words, from whence others have attempted to prove the contrary, namely, ver. 15. where it is ſaid, Orpah returned unto her people, and unto her gods. This, ſays he, is a teſtimony, that ſhe had been converted to Judaiſm. But the Chaldee Paraphraſt is of a different opinion, and repreſents the death of theſe two brothers, in the flower of their age, as a puniſhment for their contracting a prohibited affinity with idolaters.

The death of theſe young men compleated the diſtreſs of Naomi. She was then a helpleſs widow in a ſtrange land, and ſaw herſelf deprived of two ſons whom ſhe tenderly loved; ſhe therefore determined to return to her native country, as the only reſource that was left her, to alleviate her misfortunes. Her daughters-in-law expreſſed their deſires to accompany her in that journey, but ſhe endeavoured to diſſuade them from all thoughts of that nature, merely out of regard to their own intereſt, and not for want of affection to them. She ſtrongly preſſed each of them to return to the houſe of her own mother, where they might reaſonably expect a better ſupport than they could receive from an aged mother-in-law, who was going to a country which had been laid deſolate by a long famine. The thoughts of ſo affecting a ſeparation drew tears from the mother and daughters-in-law; but Orpah at laſt ſuffered herſelf to be prevailed upon by the reaſons alledged by Naomi. Theſe, however, had not the ſame effect on Ruth, who perſevered in her reſolution to accompany her mother-in-law, and ſhe then made the moſt tender proteſtations that ſhe would never forſake her. "Intreat me not, ſaid ſhe, to leave thee, or to return from "following after thee: for whither thou goeſt, I will go; "and where thou lodgeſt, I will lodge: thy people ſhall "be my people, and thy God my God: where thou dieſt "will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do ſo "to me, and more alſo, if ought but death part thee and "me," ver. 16, 17.

Theſe words, thy people ſhall be my people, and thy God my God, ſeem to prove, that Ruth had not yet been a proſelyte to the Jewiſh religion, but determined to embrace it for the time to come. The paſſage we juſt now cited is paraphraſed by the Jews in the following manner. "Naomi made this declaration to Ruth. We are forbidden "to travel farther than a ſabbath day's journey on the "ſeventh day. To which Ruth replied, I will accompany "you wherever you go. Naomi then added, We are not "allowed to converſe with any but our husbands. Upon "which Ruth rejoined, I will paſs the night wherever "you yourſelf ſhall propoſe to paſs it. But there are ſix "hundred and thirteen precepts, continued Naomi, which "ſeparate our people from all other nations. Thy people, then ſaid Ruth, ſhall be my people. Naomi upon "this told her, That they were commanded not to worſhip idols. To which Ruth anſwered, Thy God ſhall "be my God."

Naomi being no longer able to reſiſt the affectionate importunity of her daughter-in-law, conſented that ſhe ſhould accompany her to her own land; upon which they ſet out from the country of Moab, and arrived at Beth-lehem, in the beginning of barley-harveſt.

The return of Naomi was not a little ſurpriſing to the inhabitants of that place. They came in crowds to viſit her, on that occaſion, but could hardly believe it was ſhe, when they beheld ſo great a change in her habit and countenance. The Arabic and Syriac verſions indeed declare, that all the city rejoiced, and ſaid, This is Naomi; and the LXX, whom they follow, has this expreſſion, ἤχησε ἡ πόλις, the city rang with the news; and they asked if this were Naomi? for tho' ſeveral had ſeen her formerly, yet they did not now remember her.

Naomi then told them her old name was not ſuitable to her preſent condition, which required ſhe ſhould be called by one of a contrary ſignification. Some collect from hence, that Naomi was not the name ſhe received from her parents, but one conferred upon her by her neighbours, on account of her amiable appearance, and engaging behaviour. Call me not Naomi, ſaid ſhe, call me Mara,

Ruth gleaneth in the Fields of Boaz.

Mara, for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me, ver. 20. This is the reaſon why ſhe was ſo deſirous of the new name of Mara, which ſignifies bitter. Joſephus affirms, that Naomi, in their language, ſignifies ἀτυχίαν, proſperity, and Mara, ὀδύνην, anxiety and pain.

Naomi adds, I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty, ver. 21. The Targum takes this to relate to her husband and children, with whom ſhe went out to the country of Moab, and who were now taken from her; but it is reaſonable to extend it likewiſe to the eſtate they had carried with them for their ſupport in a ſtrange country, and which was now entirely exhauſted. Why then, continued ſhe, call ye me Naomi, ſeeing the Lord hath teſtified againſt me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me? ver. 21. God is ſaid to teſtify againſt any perſons, when he paſſes ſentence upon them, and makes afflictions their lot. Naomi was far from murmuring at this diſpenſation, and humbly acknowledges, that God had inflicted ſevere puniſhments upon her, which, ſhe thought, teſtified his diſpleaſure.

CHAP. II.

1 Ruth gleaneth in the fields of Boaz. 4 Boaz taking knowledge of her, 8 ſheweth her great favour. 18 That which ſhe got, ſhe carrieth to Naomi.

AND Naomi had a kinſman of her huſbands, a mighty man of wealth, of the family of Elimelech; and his name was Boaz.

2 And Ruth the Moabiteſs ſaid unto Naomi, Let me now go to the field, and glean ears of corn after him, in whoſe ſight I ſhall find grace. And ſhe ſaid unto her, Go, my daughter.

3 And ſhe went, and came, and gleaned in the field after the reapers: and her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech.

4 ¶ And behold, Boaz came from Bethlehem, and ſaid unto the reapers, The LORD be with you: and they anſwered him, The LORD bleſs thee.

5 Then ſaid Boaz unto his ſervant that was ſet over the reapers, Whoſe damſel is this?

6 And the ſervant that was ſet over the reapers, anſwered and ſaid, It is the Moabitiſh damſel that came back with Naomi out of the country of Moab:

7 And ſhe ſaid, I pray you, let me glean, and gather after the reapers amongſt the ſheaves: ſo ſhe came, and hath continued even from the morning until now, that ſhe tarried a little in the houſe.

8 Then ſaid Boaz unto Ruth, Heareſt thou not, my daughter? Go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence, but abide here faſt by my maidens.

9 Let thine eyes be on the field that they do reap, and go thou after them: have I not charged the young men, that they ſhall not touch thee? and when thou art athirſt, go unto the veſſels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn.

10 Then ſhe fell on her face, and bowed her ſelf to the ground, and ſaid unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou ſhouldſt take knowledge of me, ſeeing I am a ſtranger?

11 And Boaz anſwered and ſaid unto her, It hath fully been ſhewed me, all that thou haſt done unto thy mother-in-law ſince the death of thine husband: and how thou haſt left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knoweſt not heretofore.

12 The LORD recompenſe thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the LORD God of Iſrael, under whoſe wings thou art come to truſt.

13 Then ſhe ſaid, Let me find favour in thy ſight, my lord, for that thou haſt comforted me, and for that thou haſt ſpoken friendly unto thine handmaid, though I be not like unto one of thine handmaidens.

14 And Boaz ſaid unto her, At mealtime come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morſel in the vinegar. And ſhe ſat beſide the reapers: and he reached her parched corn, and ſhe did eat, and was ſufficed, and left.

15 And when ſhe was riſen up to glean, Boaz commanded his young men, ſaying, Let her glean even among the ſheaves, and reproach her not.

16 And let fall alſo ſome of the handfuls of purpoſe for her, and leave them, that ſhe may glean them, and rebuke her not.

17 So ſhe gleaned in the field until even, and beat out that ſhe had gleaned: and it was about an ephah of barley.

18 ¶ And ſhe took it up, and went into the city: and her mother-in-law ſaw what ſhe had gleaned: and ſhe brought forth, and gave to her that ſhe had reſerved, after ſhe was ſufficed.

19 And her mother-in-law ſaid unto her, Where haſt thou gleaned to day? and where wroughteſt thou? bleſſed be he that did take knowledge of thee. And ſhe ſhewed her mother-in-law with whom ſhe had wrought, and ſaid, The mans name with whom I wrought to day is Boaz.

20 And Naomi ſaid unto her daughter-in-law, Bleſſed be he of the LORD, who hath not left off his kindneſs to the living

ing and to the dead. And Naomi ſaid unto her, The man is near of kin unto us, one of our next kinſmen.

21 And Ruth the Moabiteſs ſaid, He ſaid unto me alſo, Thou ſhalt keep faſt by my young men, until they have ended all my harveſt.

22 And Naomi ſaid unto Ruth her daughter-in-law, It is good, my daughter, that thou go out with his maidens, that they meet thee not in any other field.

23 So ſhe kept faſt by the maidens of Boaz to glean, unto the end of barley-harveſt, and of wheat-harveſt; and dwelt with her mother-in-law.

Ver. 1. And Naomi had a kinſman of her husband's, a mighty man of wealth.] So gibhor chail is well tranſlated, for men are render'd mighty and powerful by riches. The Chaldee Paraphraſt, however, would have the expreſſion in the Hebrew ſignify, a man mighty in the law; by which a man of great wiſdom and goodneſs is not meant, but, as the ſame Paraphraſt explains it, upon 1 Chron. iv, 22,23. after the manner of the Jews (whoſe heads are full of their academies and Sanhedrim) he was the Rab, or chief ruler of the academy of wiſe men at Beth-lehem.

——And his name was Boaz.] His anceſtors are mentioned at the concluſion of this book, and his deſcendants alſo, who lived at Beth-lehem, as he did. The Sacred Hiſtory has not acquainted us with the particular degree of affinity between Elimelech and Boaz, and therefore we cannot pretend to aſcertain it. It is certain, that Elimelech had a nearer relation than Boaz, as will appear by the ſequel of this hiſtory.

Some Rabbins pretend, that Ibzan, who was judge of Iſrael, and is mentioned, Judges xii. 8. is the ſame with Boaz; but the foundation of that opinion is no more than this, that Ibzan was of Beth-lehem, and that there is ſome relation between his name and that of Boaz. But Ibzan having governed Iſrael from the year of the world 2823 to 2830, according to the Hebrew computation, he cannot be the ſame as Boaz, whoſe father Salmon married Rahab, in the year 2553; for if Boaz was born ſo late as the year 2620, he muſt have been two hundred and ten years old in 2830, which ſeems altogether incredible, conſidering how much the age of man was contracted even in thoſe days.

Ver. 2. And Ruth the Moabiteſs ſaid unto Naomi, Let me now go into the field, and glean ears of corn, &c.] Ruth did not think it ſufficient, that ſhe had quitted the land of her nativity, to follow her mother-in-law; but thought it incumbent upon her to provide for the ſubſiſtance of a perſon who was ſo dear to her. With this view, therefore, ſhe went to glean after the reapers in the field. This was a charitable reſource for indigent perſons, and three ſorts of them were intitled to it; namely, ſtrangers, orphans, and widows; and all theſe pity-moving titles were united in the perſon of Ruth. God himſelf commanded a regard to be paid to thoſe, whoſe neceſſities compelled them to have recourſe to this privilege. When thou cutteſt down thine harveſt in thy field, and haſt forgot a ſheaf in the field, thou ſhalt not go again to fetch it: it ſhall be for the ſtranger, the fatherleſs, and for the widow: that the Lord thy God may bleſs thee in all the work of thine hands, Deut. xxiv. 19. The Jews paid an extraordinary veneration to this precept, and even extended it to all thoſe productions of the earth, which contribute to the nouriſhment of man. This is an inſtance of humanity in thoſe people, which can never be ſufficiently commended.

It was natural for Ruth to be deſirous of gleaning, for the ſupport of her aged mother-in-law and herſelf; but ſhe little expected the ſucceſs with which an ever-gracious God was preparing to reward her pious diſpoſition. His Providence conducted her to the field which belonged to Boaz, who ſoon followed her; and the firſt words that paſſed between him and his reapers were ſufficient to give her hopes of a favourable reception there. The Lord be with you, ſaid Boaz to his ſervants, and they anſwered him, The Lord bleſs thee, ver. 4. Such was the piety of thoſe early ages; and tho' this is the firſt time we meet with this religious ſalutation, The Lord be with you, we may yet ſuppoſe it was not unfrequent in thoſe days. It was likewiſe very familiar in ſucceeding ages, and was continued to the time of our Saviour, when the angel ſaluted the bleſſed virgin after the ſame manner, Luke i. 28.

Boaz having enquired of the ſervant he had ſet over his reapers, who Ruth was, and underſtanding ſhe was the generous foreigner who had quitted her own country to follow Naomi, his ſoul was touched with compaſſion, when he conſidered the indigent condition to which ſhe was reduced; he deſired her, in the moſt obliging manner, not to glean in any field but his own, and order'd all his ſervants to treat her with a particular reſpect.

Ruth teſtified her gratitude to her benefactor by an humble proſtration on the earth, and intreated him to acquaint her with the reaſons which had induced him to treat her with ſo much goodneſs and humanity. He then gave her to underſtand, that he had been informed of her misfortunes and virtues, together with the particulars of her generous behaviour to his relation Naomi; and concludes with theſe pious expreſſions, The Lord recompence thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Iſrael, under whoſe wings thou art come to truſt, ver. 12. Boaz conſidered it as an high act of faith and virtue in her, to leave the land of her nativity, and her neareſt relations there, in order to become a member of their church; and he prays God amply to requite her for that conduct. The phraſe of truſting under the wings of the Divine Majeſty is frequently uſed by the Pſalmiſt, Pſalm xvii. 8. xxxvi. 7. lvii. 1. lxi. 4. lxii. 7. xci. 4. In all which places mention is made of the ſhadow, or covert of his wings, which ſeems to be a metaphor taken from the Cherubim, who ſpread their wings from one ſide of the holy place to the other.

Boaz having thus acquainted Ruth with his motives for treating her as he had done, enlarges his favour to her, and invites her to eat with his people in the field. At meal time, ſaid he, come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morſel in the vinegar, ver. 14. Under the name of bread is comprehended all the proviſion which was prepared for the reapers, and with which vinegar was intermixed as a palatable and refreſhing ſauce, it being very cooling and agreeable, in ſuch a ſultry ſeaſon as the time of harveſt. So Pliny obſerves, lib. xxiii. c. 1. Aceto ſumma vis in refrigerando, Vinegar is not to be exceeded by any liquor in the refreſhing coolneſs it affords. This quality of it is likewiſe taken notice of by Raſi and others, upon this place.

We cannot imagine, how the ancient Jews came to apply theſe words of Boaz, in the 14th verſe juſt now cited, to the kingdom of the Meſſiah, and to his ſuffering condition in this world. Certain it is, however, that the Midraſch, upon this place, repreſents theſe words, Come thou hither, as ſignifying, Come to thy kingdom; and the morſel dipt in vinegar, as denoting, the reproaches and torments of the Meſſiah. Which is a moſt evident proof, that they expected ſuch a king as ſhould be expoſed to the ſame kind of ſufferings as were endured by our bleſſed Saviour, who declares, by the inſpired Pſalmiſt, They gave me vinegar to drink, Pſalm lxix. 21. Which perhaps was the original of this application of the words of Boaz to the Meſſiah, for whoſe coming they were exceedingly ſollicitous, and found it foretold in more places than we perhaps are aware of.

Ruth made no difficulty to comply with the invitation of Boaz, but ſeated herſelf beſide the reapers, and he reached her parched corn, ver. 14. This ſeems to intimate, that Boaz himſelf ate with them, or at leaſt ſtood by them, to ſee they were well provided for; and he was ſo particularly careful of her, that he ſupplied her with ſome of the parched corn that was brought to table, which was no mean food in thoſe countries, as appears from 2 Sam. xvii. 28

The goodneſs of Boaz to Ruth did not end here, for when ſhe was riſen up from the repaſt, he commanded his ſervants to let her glean, not only in that part of the field which was allotted to the poor, but even among the ſheaves.

ſheaves. Joſephus takes the ſenſe to be, that ſhe ſhould be permitted, if ſhe pleaſed, to cut down corn for her own uſe. He likewiſe order'd them to let fall ſome of the handfuls on purpoſe for her; and we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that he directed them to act in ſuch a manner, that the corn they ſcatter'd in the field might ſeem to be the effect of inadvertency, that ſo Ruth might be preſerved from the confuſion of ſeeing herſelf the object of ſo much premeditated charity. The daughter-in-law of Naomi did not neglect to improve this generoſity of Boaz, in the manner it was intended for her benefit. For the Sacred Hiſtorian informs us, that ſhe gleaned in the field until even, and beat out that ſhe had gleaned; and it was about an ephah of barley, ver. 17. It ſeems it was not cuſtomary in thoſe days to carry home the gleanings, as they were gathered in the ear, but to beat the corn out with a ſmall pole, and after freeing it from the chaff, to carry it away pure, and with much leſs trouble than it otherwiſe would have created. An ephah is commonly taken to be about a buſhel of our meaſure; and as it contained ten omers, Exod. xvi. 36. one of which was ſufficient for the ſuſtenance of a ſingle perſon for a whole day, Ruth therefore had gathered as much corn as would ſupport her and her mother-in-law, for the ſpace of five days. She then returned to Naomi, with no little ſatisfaction of mind, as may be well imagined, and after ſhe had acquainted her with all the particulars of the generous treatment ſhe had received from Boaz, her mother-in-law adviſed her to accompany his maidens in their harveſt labours, and not to be found gleaning in any other field, ver. 22. where her preſence might not be ſo acceptable; and beſide, Boaz might think ſhe diſregarded his kindneſs, if ſhe neglected to comply with the friendly offers he had made her. Ruth accordingly conducted herſelf, by the directions of her mother-in-law, to the end of the barley and wheat harveſt, which continued ſeveral days; and ſhe undoubtedly found the ſame kind entertainment, tho' the particulars are not recorded by the Sacred Hiſtorian.

CHAP. III.

1 By Naomi her inſtruction, 5 Ruth lieth at Boaz his feet. 8 Boaz acknowledgeth the right of a kinſman. 14 He ſendeth her away with ſix meaſures of barley.

THEN Naomi her mother-in-law ſaid unto her, My daughter, ſhall I not ſeek reſt for thee, that it may be well with thee?

2 And now is not Boaz of our kindred, with whoſe maidens thou waſt? Behold, he winnoweth barley to night in the threſhing-floor.

3 Waſh thy ſelf therefore, and anoint thee, and put thy raiment upon thee, and get thee down to the floor: but make not thy ſelf known unto the man, until he ſhall have done eating and drinking.

4 And it ſhall be when he lieth down, that thou ſhalt mark the place where he ſhall lie, and thou ſhalt go in, and uncover his feet, and lay thee down; and he will tell thee what thou ſhalt do.

5 And ſhe ſaid unto her, All that thou ſayeſt unto me, I will do.

6 ¶ And ſhe went down unto the floor, and did according to all that her-mother-in law bade her.

7 And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and his heart was merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn: and ſhe came ſoftly, and uncovered his feet, and laid her down.

8 ¶ And it came to paſs at midnight, that the man was afraid, and turned himſelf: and behold, a woman lay at his feet.

9 ¶ And he ſaid, Who art thou? And ſhe anſwered, I am Ruth thine handmaid: ſpread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid, for thou art a near kinſman.

10 And he ſaid, Bleſſed be thou of the LORD, my daughter: for thou haſt ſhewed more kindneſs in the latter end, than at the beginning, inaſmuch as thou followedſt not young men, whether poor or rich.

11 And now, my daughter, fear not, I will do all to thee that thou requireſt: for all the city of my people doth know, that thou art a virtuous woman.

12 And now it is true, that I am thy near kinſman: howbeit there is a kinſman nearer than I.

13 Tarry this night, and it ſhall be in the morning, that if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinſman, well, let him do the kinſmans part; but if he will not do the part of a kinſman to thee, then will I do the part of a kinſman to thee, as the LORD liveth: lie down until the morning.

14 ¶ And ſhe lay at his feet until the morning: and ſhe roſe up before one could know another. And he ſaid, Let it not be known that a woman came into the floor.

15 Alſo he ſaid, Bring the vail that thou haſt upon thee, and hold it. And when ſhe held it, he meaſured ſix meaſures of barley, and laid it on her: and ſhe went into the city.

16 And when ſhe came to her mother-in-law, ſhe ſaid, Who art thou, my daughter? and ſhe told her all that the man had done to her.

17 And ſhe ſaid, Theſe ſix meaſures of barley gave he me; for he ſaid to me, Go not empty unto thy mother-in-law.

18 Then ſaid ſhe, Sit ſtill, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall: for the man will not be in reſt, until he have finiſhed the thing this day.

Ver. 1. Then Naomi her mother-in-law ſaid unto her, my daughter, ſhall I not ſeek reſt for thee, &c.] Naomi conſidered the favourable treatment her daughter-in-law had received from Boaz, as a happy introduction to the great deſign ſhe had formed in her mind, of eſpouſing her to him. She accordingly imparted that deſign to Ruth and directed her, in what manner to conduct herſelf, in order to render it effectual. The particulars of Naomi's advice to her on this important occaſion, may perhaps appear very ſingular to thoſe who form a judgment of them by the genius of the preſent age, and have no idea of the ſimplicity that attended a rural life, and of the cuſtoms which prevailed at the time when Ruth lived. We cannot think it was the intention of Naomi, that her daughter-in-law, ſhould have recourſe to any criminal arts for the accompliſhment of the purpoſe in view; ſhe firſt recommends to her a few innocent precautions to ſet off the natural amiableneſs of her perſon in the moſt advantageous manner. Waſh thy ſelf therefore, ſaid ſhe, and anoint thee, and put thy raiment upon thee, and get thee down to the floor: Hitherto Naomi had ſaid nothing that can be thought exceptionable, but the advice which immediately follows, ſeems to be of a very different nature. Make not thy ſelf known unto the man, continues ſhe, until he ſhall have done eating and drinking. And it ſhall be when he lieth down, that thou ſhalt mark the place where he ſhall lie, and thou ſhalt go in, and uncover his feet, and lay thee down; and he will tell thee what thou ſhalt do, ver. 3, 4.

The commentators have formed various opinions with reſpect to this advice, and it has been thought by ſeveral, that the conduct recommended to Ruth, in this conjuncture, was a very odd expedient to induce a man to eſpouſe the widow of his near relation. A modern expoſitor makes no ſcruple to declare, that tho' Naomi and Ruth ſeem to have been very vertuous women, and their intent was lawful and honeſt, yet the manner of putting it in execution, ſeems chargeable with ſeveral irregularities. "Firſt, ſays this author, it ſeems to be againſt that "modeſty which ſhould be eminent in that ſex, and in "unmarried perſons. Secondly, againſt honeſty, both "becauſe it was an injury to another perſon, who was "nearer a-kin, and whoſe right this was; which Naomi "could not be ignorant of; and becauſe it was a pre-"poſterous and precipitant method, not agreeable either "to the rules of ſcripture, or the uſage of well manner'd "nations, or that decency which even nature requires. "Thirdly, againſt prudence; for it might have proved "the occaſion, as of many ſins, ſo of great ſhame to all "of them; and a means to alienate his affection from "her, which ſhe ſought to engage. And tho' there be "ſome circumſtances which alleviate the fact, as the ex-"perience which Naomi had of the wiſdom and ſobriety "both of Boaz and Ruth, yet ſhe knew not what the "event would be; and that there was ſomething of "ſhamefulneſs in the thing, may be gathered both from "Naomi's choice of the night for it, as if it were a work "of darkneſs; and from Boaz his fear leſt this ſhould "be known, ver. 14. And it is an aggravation of it, that "this courſe was unneceſſary, and ſhe had a plain and "likely way, which was directly to addreſs herſelf to "Boaz, as the next kinſman, and to require the duty "which by God's law, he was bound to perform, and this "before witneſſes, as Boaz did. And her clandeſtine "proceeding ſeems to have ariſen from a diſtruſt of God's "providence, to bring about what ſhe deſired in the or-"dinary way." Theſe are the ſentiments of Mr. Poole, in his commentary on the paſſage before us. But we think it may reaſonably be ſuppoſed, that the conduct recommended to Ruth on this occaſion, by her Mother-in-law, was nothing more than what was practiſed in thoſe times by widows, who intended to claim the privilege of being eſpouſed by the neareſt relations of their deceaſed husbands. 'Tis true, the Sacred Hiſtorian has not mentioned any ſuch cuſtom, but it is evident, that the Jews at this time, had made ſome additions to the Moſaic law, with reſpect to the Levirate, or the marriage of a brother's widow. Moſes ordains, Deut. xxv. 5. That, if brethren dwell together, and one of them die and have no child, the wife of the dead ſhall not marry without unto a ſtranger: her husband's brother ſhall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, &c. This duty therefore, according to that great law-giver, ſeems originally to have been incumbent on no relation but the brother of the deceaſed husband; and one would be apt to conclude, from the words uſed by Moſes, if brethren dwell together, that this law was intended only for ſuch as ſtill dwelt in their father's houſe. Accordingly, the Rabbies have underſtood it in a very reſtrained ſenſe, both in this and ſome other particulars; ſuch as that the eldeſt only of the ſurvivors was obliged to eſpouſe the widow, and not even he, if he were already married, in which caſe, they pretend it was left to his option. But it evidently appears by the circumſtances of the hiſtory under our conſideration, that Boaz, who was neither the brother, nor neareſt of kin to the deceaſed, yet thought himſelf obliged to marry Ruth, upon the neareſt kinſman's refuſing to eſpouſe her; from whence we may naturally conclude, either that the law extended farther than Moſes expreſſed in direct words, and that where no brothers were left to marry the widow, that duty in courſe became incumbent on the neareſt relation; or elſe that in proceſs of time the Jews thought fit to make this and other additions to it.

If it be asked, why Naomi did not adviſe her daughter-in-law to make her application to the neareſt kinſman of her deceaſed husband? It may be anſwered, that Naomi might have ſufficient reaſon to believe, that he would have no inclination to eſpouſe a deſtitute widow; and that as Boaz had already teſtified ſo much regard to Ruth, it would be but decent and reſpectful in her, to declare her preference of him to any other of her husband's relations. An action therefore of ſo much humility, as placing her ſelf at his feet, might well be conſidered by him as an indication not only of her deſire to eſpouſe him, but of her intention to conduct herſelf, after marriage, with all the tractableneſs and complacency he could deſire from a wife.

Ruth purſued the directions of her mother-in-law, and when Boaz had laid himſelf down at the end of a heap of corn, ſhe placed her at his feet, when he was faſt aſleep, and without undreſſing herſelf as we think it reaſonable to believe, ſince her whole intention then was to give him an opportunity of conſidering what the law required of him.

When Boaz awaked and found a woman at his feet, he was not a little ſurprized, and enquired who ſhe was? upon which ſhe anſwered, I am Ruth thine handmaid, ſpread therefore thy ſkirt over thine handmaid, for thou art a near kinſman, ver. 9. The words in the Hebrew are, ſpread thy wing; which imports, the taking a perſon into ones protection and tuition; and here not a common one, but ſuch as was matrimonial, as biſhop Patrick obſerves. Therefore the Chaldee plainly renders it, Let thy name be called upon thine handmaid, by taking me for thy wife. From hence, at this day, when two perſons are married among the Jews, the husband throws the skirt of his talith or long robe over his ſpouſe, and covers her head with it, as Buxtorf obſerves in his Synagoga Judaica, cap. xxxix.

Boaz was entirely ſatisfied in his own mind, when he knew who the perſon was that had placed herſelf ſo near him, and inſtead of thinking there was any indecency in her conduct, he thought fit to celebrate her for her vertue; Bleſſed be thou of the Lord, my daughter; ſaid he, for thou haſt ſhewed more kindneſs in the latter end, than at the beginning, inaſmuch as thou followedſt not young men, whether poor or rich, ver. 10. He commends her true kindneſs both to her mother, and to her deceaſed husband, which appeared now more than before, by her endeavours to preſerve his name and family.

Ver. 11. And now my daughter fear not.] He would not have her think he entertained an ill opinion of her, becauſe ſhe had had recourſe to this proceeding; nor would he have her doubt whether her requeſt was acceptable to him; or ſuſpect that he would deſpiſe her becauſe ſhe was a ſtranger and poor.

—— I will do to thee all that thou requireſt: for all the city of my people doth know, that thou art a virtuous woman.] She had behaved her in ſuch a manner, as to be univerſally praiſed for her extraordinary virtue.

Ver. 12. And now it is true, that I am thy near kinſman: howbeit, there is a kinſman nearer than I.] This was well known to Naomi, but ſhe underſtood his diſpoſition ſo well, that ſhe thought it would be in vain to make any application of this nature to him, as we intimated before.

Ver. 13. Tarry this night, and it ſhall be in the morning, that if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinſman, well, let him do the kinſman's part.] He reſolved to make no longer delay than was abſolutely neceſſary; but promiſes in the morning ſhe ſhould have juſtice done to herſelf, and to her deceaſed husband, either by the next kinſman, or by himſelf. Some of the Jews take the word tob, which ſignifies good, and we rightly tranſlate well, to have been the name of the other kinſman, who was called Tob. And indeed, it is likely this was a name among that people, from whence, by the addition of iah to it (which was very common) came Tobiah. Raſi declares, that Tob was the brother of Elimelech; but there is no reaſon to entertain that opinion, for when it might not have been improper to mention his name in the next chapter, ver. 1. we only read, that Boaz called him Peloni Almoni, ho, ſuch a one, which were words uſed when they called any one indifferently.

——— But if he will not do the part of a kinſman to thee, then will I do the part of a kinſman to thee, as the Lord liveth.] He confirms his promiſe to her with an oath, that if the other perſon refuſed, he himſelf would marry her.

———Lie down until the morning.] Having given her this ſecurity, and thereby quieted her mind, he deſires her to compoſe herſelf to reſt; which was then very neceſſary for her, ſince ſhe had undoubtedly ſuſtained many anxious thoughts, all the former part of the night, with reſpect to the event of her preſent conduct.

Ver. 14. And ſhe lay at his feet until the morning.] In the ſame place where ſhe placed herſelf firſt; her intention being only to implore his juſtice and kindneſs to her deceaſed husband.

——— And ſhe roſe up before one could know another.] That is, before it was light; ſo that if any had ſeen her, they could not have known who ſhe was.

——— And he ſaid, Let it not be known, that a woman came into the floor.] This was no more than a prudent caution to her, to conceal herſelf from the ſight of thoſe, who might miſ-interpret her coming from his lodging at that early hour, to the diſadvantage of them both. Cenſorious perſons are glad of any opportunity of indulging their malignant diſpoſitions, and are never better pleaſed, than when any circumſtances of a perſon's conduct furniſh them with a plauſible pretext for their calumny.

Ver. 15. Alſo he ſaid, Bring the vail that thou haſt upon thee, and hold it.] The Hebrew word mitpacath is variouſly interpreted, it ſignifying any kind of covering. The LXX tranſlate it περίζωμα, by which they ſeem to have meant that which we call an apron. The Vulgate render it pallium; but our tranſlators, more properly, a vail, which it was cuſtomary for modeſt women to throw over their heads.

———And when ſhe held it, he meaſured ſix meaſures of barley, and laid it on her.] He would not let her depart without ſome token of his affection to her; and nothing was more ready at hand in the threſhing-floor than the corn which lay there. It is uncertain how much this meaſure contained, but no doubt in the whole he gave her as much as ſhe could well carry. Some fancy that this load was too heavy for her, but barley is far lighter than wheat: And the Chaldee Paraphraſt declares, that ſtrength was given her from before the Lord to bear it; and then adds, Immediately there was a prophecy, that from her ſhould proceed ſix righteous perſons, each of whom ſhould be bleſſed with ſix benedictions, David, Daniel, his three companions, and the king Meſſiah.

———And ſhe went into the city.] The Chaldee ſaith, Boaz went into the city; and the Hebrew favours this interpretation, for the word which ſignifies went is in the maſculine gender.

Ver. 16. And when ſhe came to her mother-in law, ſhe ſaid, Who art thou, my daughter?] It was ſo early in the morning when Ruth returned home, that Naomi could not well diſcern who it was that deſired the gate to be open'd, but perceiv'd it was a woman, whom ſhe calls her daughter, agreeably to the friendly language of thoſe days. But the Vulgate takes it quite otherwiſe, namely, that ſhe asked her, What haſt thou done, my daughter? that is, how haſt thou ſucceeded? And indeed the anſwer favours this; and the Hebrew words will bear it, if mi be interpreted not who, but what.

———And ſhe told her all that the man had done unto her.] How kindly he had treated her, and what promiſes he had made her.

Ver. 17. And ſhe ſaid, Theſe ſix meaſures of barley gave he me.] Then ſhe ſhewed her the preſent he had made her.

———For he ſaid to me, Go not empty unto thy mother-in-law.] Without ſome token of my affection. Some imagine, barley (which is not ſo valuable with us as wheat) was too mean a preſent to offer her. But they did not conſider, that in thoſe countries it was a finer ſort of corn than it is in theſe parts of the world; for bread was commonly made of it, and that not only by the poor, but the better ſort; of which we find examples, both in the Old Teſtament and the New. See 2 Sam. xvii 28. 2 Kings iv. 42. and in the Goſpel we read of barley-loaves, with which Chriſt fed the multitude, particularly, John vi. 9. And indeed, Pliny ſaith this was the moſt ancient food, Antiquiſſimum in cibis hordeum, Nat. Hiſt. l.18. c. 7.

Ver. 18. Then ſaid ſhe, Sit ſtill, my daughter.] She bids her trouble herſelf no farther, as having already performed her part in the intended affair.

———Until thou know how the matter will fall.] But wait and expect till thou ſeeſt the iſſue; which the Targum expreſſes piouſly, in this manner, till thou knoweſt how this matter will be determined from heaven, and wonderfully diſpoſed.

——— For the man will not be in reſt, until he have finiſhed the thing this day.] She knew him ſo well to be a man of his word, that he would immediately undertake to diſpatch the affair according to his promiſe, ver. 14.

CHAP. IV.

1 Boaz calleth into judgment the next kinſman. 6 He refuſeth the redemption according to the manner in Iſrael. 9 Boaz buyeth the inheritance. 11 He marrieth Ruth. 13 She beareth Obed the grand-father of David. 18 The generation of Pharez.

THEN went Boaz up to the gate, and ſat him down there: and behold, the kinſman of whom Boaz ſpake, came by; unto whom he ſaid, Ho, ſuch a one, turn aſide, ſit down here. And he turned aſide, and ſat down.

2 And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and ſaid, Sit ye down here. And they ſat down.

3 And he ſaid unto the kinſman, Naomi that is come again out of the country of Moab ſelleth a parcel of land, which was our brother Elimelechs.

4 And I thought to advertiſe thee, ſaying, Buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it; but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: for there is none to redeem it beſides thee, and I am after thee. And he ſaid, I will redeem it.

5 Then ſaid Boaz, What day thou buyeſt the field of the hand of Noami, thou muſt buy it alſo of Ruth the Moabiteſs, the wife of the dead, to raiſe up the name of the dead upon his inheritance.

6 ¶ And the kinſman ſaid, I cannot redeem it for my ſelf, leſt I mar mine own inheritance: redeem thou my right to thy ſelf, for I cannot redeem it.

7 Now this was the manner in former time in Iſrael, concerning redeeming, and concern-

concerning changing, for to confirm all things: a man plucked off his ſhoe, and gave it to his neighbour: and this was a teſtimony in Iſrael.

8 Therefore the kinſman ſaid unto Boaz, Buy it for thee: ſo he drew off his ſhoe.

9 ¶ And Boaz ſaid unto the elders, and unto all the people, Ye are witneſſes this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelechs, and all that was Chilions and Mahlons, of the hand of Naomi.

10 Moreover, Ruth the Moabiteſs, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchaſed to be my wife, to raiſe up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of his place: ye are witneſſes this day.

11 And all the people that were in the gate, and the elders ſaid, We are witneſſes: The LORD make the woman that is come into thine houſe, like Rachel, and like Leah, which two did build the houſe of Iſrael: and do thou worthily in Ephratah, and be famous in Beth lehem.

12 And let thy houſe be like the houſe of Pharez (whom Tamar bare unto Judah) of the ſeed which the LORD ſhall give thee of this young woman.

13 ¶ So Boaz took Ruth, and ſhe was his wife: and when he went in unto her, the LORD gave her conception, and ſhe bare a ſon.

14 And the women ſaid unto Naomi, Bleſſed be the LORD which hath not left thee this day without a kinſman, that his name may be famous in Iſrael.

15 And he ſhall be unto thee a reſtorer of thy life, and a nouriſher of thine old age: for thy daughter-in-law which loveth thee, which is better to thee than ſeven ſons, hath born him.

16 And Naomi took the child, and laid it in her boſom, and became nurſe unto it.

17 And the women her neighbours gave it a name, ſaying, There is a ſon born to Naomi, and they called his name Obed: he is the father of Jeſſe, the father of David.

18 ¶ Now theſe are the generations of Pharez: Pharez begat Hezron,

19 And Hezron begat Ram, and Ram begat Amminadab,

20 And Amminadab begat Nahſhon, and Nahſhon begat Salmon,

21 And Salmon begat Boaz, and Boaz begat Obed,

22 And Obed begat Jeſſe, and Jeſſe begat David.

Ver. 1. Then went Boaz up to the gate, &c.] Boaz was careful to acquit himſelf of the promiſe he had made to Ruth; and, in order to accompliſh it, went up to the gate, where the judges ſat, and where it was uſual for a large concourſe of the people to aſſemble. When he had continued there for ſome time, he ſaw the neareſt relation of Ruth's late husband paſſing by, and called out to him in this manner, Ho, ſuch a one, turn aſide, ſit down here. When the Jews could not recollect a man's name, or thought it improper to utter it, they uſed theſe words; Pelони almoni; Ho, ſuch a one; which the prophet Daniel contracts into one word, Palmoni, Dan. viii. 13. and it has the ſame import with the Greek ὁδε ἅνα.

Boaz undoubtedly had no deſire to ſucceed in his negotiation with this man, and the event correſponded with his wiſh, He took ten men of the elders of the city, ver. 2. in order to have a ſufficient number of witneſſes to the buſineſs he was preparing to tranſact. How many elders were in every city, is uncertain. Bertram conjectures, that their number was equal to that of the captains of thouſands, of hundreds, fifties, and tens, in each particular city. Joſephus affirms, there were ſeven, (Antiq. lib. 4. cap. 6.) and this, perhaps, might be the determinate number in his time. But anciently, one would imagine there were more, becauſe ten elders are here ſaid to be aſſembled by Boaz; but if they had been the whole number, the proper expreſſion would have been, the ten elders. As for what the Talmudiſts advance, that there were three judges in pecuniary cauſes, and twenty-three in thoſe that were capital, it muſt belong, if it be true, to later times.

Ver. 3. And he ſaid unto the kinſman, Naomi that is come again out of the country of Moab ſelleth a parcel of land, which was our brother Elimelechs.] He calls him their brother, becauſe he was nearly related to them; and mentions Naomi's return out of the country of Moab, to intimate, that her poverty conſtrained her to ſell the eſtate, which her husband left her. She was privileged to part with that intereſt in order to ſupply her neceſſities, but this could not extinguiſh the right of redemption; for, as Mr. Selden obſerves in his book De Succeſſionibus, cap. 16. both Elimelech the father, and Mahlon the ſon, gave this patrimony to their wives before they died: (For otherwiſe they could not have had the poſſeſſion of it.) Or rather, the former conſigned his intereſt to Naomi, and the latter his to Ruth.

Ver. 4. And I thought to advertiſe thee, ſaying, buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people.] Before thoſe who ſat in the gate of the houſe of judgment, and before theſe elders, as the Targum expounds it; that is, the ten elders before-mentioned, that the agreement might be legally made, and the eſtate firmly transferred to him.

—— If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it; but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know.] That I may be certain of thy intention in this affair, and be able to conduct my ſelf accordingly.

—— For there is none to redeem it beſides thee, and I am after thee.] That is, there was no other kinſman remaining of that family, but them two.

—— And he ſaid, I will redeem it.] For, it is likely, it lay convenient for him.

Ver. 5. Then ſaid Boaz, What day thou buyeſt the field of the hand of Naomi, thou muſt buy it alſo of Ruth the Moabiteſs, the wife of the dead.] For they both had an intereſt in it; but Boaz prudently conceals the name of Ruth, till he had conſented to buy the land, and then tells him whom he muſt take along with it.

—— To raiſe up the name of the dead upon his inheritance] According to the law, mentioned Deut. xxv. 5, &c. as it is commonly interpreted. But it was rather, in Mr. Selden's opinion, the fulfilling of the law, mentioned Lev. xxv. 24, 25. Lib. De Succeſſionibus ad leges Hebr. cap. 15. where he obſerves that this phraſe, to raiſe up the name of the dead, (which is mentioned alſo ver. 10.) is quite different from that mentioned in Deuteronomy, being no more, as R. Solomon notes upon chap. iii. 9. than if he had ſaid, That the name of her dead husband may be had in remembrance, ſo that when ſhe came into that field, men might ſay, This is the wife of Mahlon. There is a long diſcourſe diſcourſe alſo in Abarbinel, upon Deut. xxxv. to prove that this has no relation to that law of a man's raiſing up ſeed to his brother. See Buxtorf de Sponſal. & Divortiis, ſect. 27. But if it do, Grotius thinks that law obliged only ὁμοπάτορες, brethren by the ſame father, to marry the brother's widow; but cuſtom, in proceſs of time, obliged the next of kin to do it.

Ver. 6. And the kinſman ſaid, I cannot redeem it for my ſelf, leſt I mar mine own inheritance.] He had a wife and children already, which made him afraid to marry a poor woman with a ſmall parcel of land, which would not provide for the children he might have by her, without diminiſhing his own inheritance of which he was poſſeſſed. To which the Chaldee Paraphraſt adds, that it might have occaſion'd great contentions in his family: For thus he makes him ſpeak, I cannot redeem it (namely, on that condition) for I have a wife already; and it is not fit for me to bring another into my houſe, leſt diſagreements ſhould ariſe in it, and I prejudice my own inheritance. In like manner the Midraſch, upon this book, make him diſcourſe. But Raſi interprets the words, as if the meaning was, That he ſhould bring a blot upon his poſterity, by marrying a Moabitiſh woman, (which he thought was forbidden by the law) for children are called an heritage, Pſalm cxxvii. 3. But in this he acknowledges the man was miſtaken, as many of their ancient doctors were, for the law did not forbid the marrying a woman of that country. But the plaineſt ſenſe is, as Mr. Selden obſerves, That many inconveniencies might ariſe in his family by this marriage, not only by the diſagreement of his wives, but by the difficulty of providing for ſo many children as ſhe might bring him, and of giving them a good education, and by diſtracting his inheritance, which he prudently conſidered, as good reaſons of his refuſal. See lib. 1. Uxor. Hebr. cap. 9.

——Redeem thou my right to thy ſelf, for I cannot redeem it.] Which is thus paraphraſed by the Targum, Do thou therefore redeem it, becauſe thou haſt no wife, which hinders me from redeeming.

Ver. 7. Now this was the manner in former time in Iſrael, concerning redeeming, and concerning changing.] There was no law, that we can find, about the following rite, but cuſtom only, which had long prevailed; when men redeemed lands which had been alienated, or gave poſſeſſion of them to another perſon.

——For to confirm all things.] To give validity to the bargain.

———A man plucked off his ſhoe, and gave it to his neighbour; and this was a teſtimony in Iſrael.] A ſufficient evidence, that he transferred all his right to that perſon to whom he delivered his ſhoe. It is not eaſy to give an account of the original of this cuſtom; but the reaſon of it is plain enough, it being a natural demonſtration, that he reſigned his intereſt in the land, by giving him his ſhoe, wherewith he uſed to walk in it.

The Targum, inſtead of his ſhoe, hath the right hand glove; it being the cuſtom, perhaps, in the time of the author of that work, to give the glove inſtead of the ſhoe. And the Jews now deliver an handkerchief for the ſame purpoſe. So R. Solomon Jarchi affirms, We acquire, or buy now by an handkerchief, or veil, inſtead of a ſhoe.

Ver. 8. Therefore the kinſman ſaid unto Boaz, buy it for thee.] After the accuſtomed manner.

——So he drew off his ſhoe.] And gave it to Boaz, as a teſtimonial that he relinquiſhed all his right to him. The Jewiſh doctors, indeed, differ very much about this affair; for ſome ſay, He that parted with his right to redeem the land, pulled off his ſhoe, and gave it to him that bought it; but others, that he who bought it, gave his ſhoe to him who ſold it. The truth is, the text may be either way underſtood; but it ſeems moſt reaſonable to think, that he who parted with his right, parted with his ſhoe alſo. See Selden, lib 6. De Jure Nat. & Gent. juxta Diſciplin. Hebr. cap. 5. where he obſerves again, how different this was from the rites uſed, when one renounced his brother's wife. And Abarbinel looks upon this as a demonſtration, that the plucking off the ſhoe here mentioned is not the ſame with that in Deut. xxv. For Ruth did not here appear to looſe his ſhoe, (as the brother's wife is there ordered to do, ver. 9.) much leſs did ſhe come to ſpit in his face; of which, there is not one word in this ceremony.

Ver. 9. And Boaz ſaid unto the elders, and unto all the people, Ye are witneſſes this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's, of the hand of Naomi.] She had the firſt right in the land after the death of her husband, and her two ſons after her; which ſhe entirely reſigned, by this contract, unto Boaz, to whom the other kinſman had likewiſe aſſign'd his right of redemption, by the political ceremony of plucking off the ſhoe.

Ver. 10. Moreover, Ruth the Moabiteſs, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchaſed to be my wife.] He had her by the right of the ſame purchaſe, and did not obtain it by the prerogative of a brother, mentioned, Deut. xxv. for he was not brother to Elimelech, but only a remote kinſman of the ſame family, as Abarbinel there obſerves, and who could not enjoy the land, while ſhe lived, unleſs he would take her with it; to whom it belonged during her life, and was to deſcend to her iſſue when ſhe died.

——To raiſe up the name of the dead upon his inheritance.] That the parcel of land which he bought might ſtill be called by the name of Mahlon, whoſe widow Boaz eſpouſed.

——That the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of his place.] That his name hereby might be remembred, not only in his own family, but in all the city of Beth-lehem; for by the gate of his place is meant, all the people who entred in at the gate.

——Ye are witneſſes this day.] Both that he bought the land, and Ruth together with it, at ſuch a time.

Ver. 11. And all the people that were in the gate, and the elders, ſaid, We are witneſſes.] After this open declaration, there was no need of any inſtrument in writing to confirm the purchaſe; and happy would it have been, if purchaſes had been always made with as little prolixity in legal forms.

——The Lord make the woman that is come into thine houſe, like Rachel, and like Leah.] Such a ſolemn benediction of thoſe who were on the point of entring on the nuptial ſtate, was very ancient, as we learn from Gen. xxiv. 60. and the Jews continue it in a commendable manner to this day.

———And do thou worthily in Ephratah, and be famous in Beth-lehem.] Theſe two are but different names of the ſame place, where Boaz lived, and likewiſe Ruth, who ſeems now to have been preſent, as Joſephus repreſents her, and who, they prayed, might be a great example of all virtue in that city.

Ver. 12. And let thy houſe be like the houſe of Pharez, (whom Tamar bare unto Judah) of the ſeed which the Lord ſhall give thee of this young woman.] Both Boaz, and all the Beth-lehemites, derived their original from Pharez, whoſe family was very illuſtrious in Iſrael; and therefore they could not have wiſhed Boaz a greater bleſſing, than to have as noble an iſſue as Pharez proved to Judah.

Ver. 13. So Boaz took Ruth.] Conducted her to his own habitation with all the ſolemnity that was uſual in thoſe caſes.

——And when he went in unto her, the Lord gave her conception, and ſhe bare a ſon.] A year after their marriage, according to Joſephus.

Ver. 14. And the women ſaid unto Naomi.] After Ruth's delivery.

——Bleſſed be the Lord which hath not left thee this day without a kinſman.] The Hebrew name goel (which we tranſlate kinſman) properly belonged to Boaz, and not to his ſon who was now born: And yet the child ſeems to be here meant, which made the Arabic tranſlator render it, Hath not left thee without an heir.

——That his name may be famous in Iſrael.] They hoped God would render him an eminent perſon among them.

Ver. 15. And he ſhall be unto thee a reſtorer of thy life.] He ſhould prove ſuch a comfort, as inſtead of making her ſenſible of the advances of old age, would rather ſeem to perpetuate her youth.

——And a nouriſher of thine old age.] In thy decline of life, he ſhall nouriſh and ſupport thee with a true filial affection.

———For thy daughter-in-law which loveth thee, which is better unto thee than ſeven ſons, hath born him.] For they hoped he would inherit his mother's virtues, and particularly her affection to Naomi, which was ſo ſurpaſſing, that it rendered her a greater bleſſing to that aged relation, than a great many ſons of her own body would have been; for they would ſcarce have been able, out of ſo ſmall a fortune, to maintain themſelves; whereas this being the ſon of a rich father, would be capable of affording her a plentiful maintenance.

Ver. 16. And Naomi took the child, and laid it in her boſom, and became nurſe unto it.] Brought it up with a moſt tender affection, for his mother gave him ſuck; and then Naomi took him from her, and educated him as her own child.

Ver. 17. And the women her neighbours gave it a name.] It did not belong to the neighbours, but to the father, or mother, to name the child; but they adviſed Naomi to call it by a name ſuitable to their foregoing diſcourſe. See Luke i. 39, &c.

——— Saying, there is a ſon born to Naomi.] Unto whom they had promiſed ſuch great comfort from this child, that it inclined them to deſire it might have the following name.

——— And they called his name, Obed] That is, one who ſhould be very ſerviceable to her, for Obed ſignifies δȣλεύων, a ſervant, as Joſephus interprets it. By which name, ſaith he, Naomi called the child, κατασυμβȣλείαν γυναικῶν, by the advice of the women, ἐπὶ γηροκομία αὐτῆς τραφησάμενον, as one appointed to take care of her in her old age. The Targum thus paraphraſes upon this name, Who ſerved the Lord of the world with a perfect heart; a part of which ſervice conſiſted in giving due honour to parents. Some make it a queſtion why this child was not called Mahlon, according to the law which ſeems to require it? But it may be anſwered, that what Boaz did, was not in obedience to the law in Deut. xxv. for he was not the brother of Mahlon, (in which caſe the child muſt have had Mahlon's name conferred upon him) but only a remote kinſman.

———He is the father of Jeſſe, the father of David.] For whoſe ſake this whole book ſeems to have been written, that it might be certainly known from whom David was deſcended, the Meſſiah being to ſpring from him, which is the reaſon why the following genealogy is annexed for the concluſion of this book.

Ver. 18. Now theſe are the generations of Pharez.] The Sacred Hiſtorian begins no higher, becauſe every one knew that Pharez was the grand-ſon of Jacob, and he the ſon of Iſaac, &c.

———Pharez begat Hezron.] In the land of Canaan, before the family of Jacob went down into Egypt, as we read, Gen. xlvi. 12.

Ver. 19. And Hezron begat Ram.] So he is called, in 1 Chron. ii. 6. but in the New Teſtament Aram, Matt. i. 3. Luke iii. 33.

——— And Ram begat Amminadab.] Theſe two were born in the land of Egypt, where Amminadab alſo begat Nahſhon.

Ver 20. And Amminadab begat Nahſhon.] Who was prince of the children of Judah, when they came out of Egypt, as the author of the Book of Chronicles obſerves. 1 Chron. ii. 10. which is confirmed by Moſes, Numb. i. 7. ii, 3. vii. 12. x. 14. where we find, that in the ſecond year after the Iſraelites came from Egypt, he was the principal perſon in his tribe.

——— And Nahſhon begat Salmon.] Who was born in the wilderneſs, in all probability, and was called alſo Salma, 1 Chron. ii. 11.

Ver. 21. And Salmon begat Boaz.] Of Rahab, whom he eſpouſed, after the taking of Jericho, Matth. i. 5.

——— And Boaz begat Obed.] Here the Targum makes Boaz the ſame with Ibzan, Judges xii. 8. which is altogether improbable, as we have already obſerved.

Ver. 22. And Obed begat Jeſſe.] Who was alſo called Nahaſh, as ſome think, and it is expreſly affirmed by the Targum, becauſe Zeruiah, and Abigail, are ſaid to be David's ſiſters, 1 Chron. ii. 16. And Abigial is declared to be the daughter of Nahaſh, 2 Sam. xvii. 25. But David's mother, perhaps, had a former husband, whoſe name was Nahaſh, by whom ſhe had theſe daughters.

———And Jeſſe begat David.] It may here be ask'd, how can this be a true genealogy, when David was the fourth in deſcent from Salmon, who eſpouſed Rahab after the Iſraelites had enter'd Canaan; from which time to the fourth year of king Solomon there were four hundred and forty years, as appears from 1 Kings, vi. 2? We cannot give a better anſwer to this enquiry, than by obſerving, with the great archbiſhop Uſher, (Chronologia Sacra, pars 1. c. 12.) that deducting out of that number of four hundred and forty years, the ſeventy that David lived, and the four firſt years of Solomon's reign, the intermediate ſpace of time, from the entrance of the Iſraelites into the land of Canaan, to the nativity of David, will be three hundred and ſixty-ſix years, as Aben Ezra obſerves, in his notes on the concluſion of this book. Now theſe years may be commodiouſly diſtributed in the following manner, if we ſuppoſe Rahab to have given birth to Boaz, in the forty-ſecond year after the Iſraelites enter'd Canaan; and if we aſſign an hundred and two years before Boaz begat Obed, and an hundred and eleven to Obed before he begat Jeſſe, and as many to Jeſſe before he begat David; the total of all which years make the exact ſum of three hundred and ſixty-ſix. And there is nothing ſtrange in this computation, for long after this time we read of very old men, capable of becoming the parents of children at the age now mentioned; particularly Jehoiadah the high-prieſt, who lived an hundred and thirty years, 2 Chron. xxv. 15. And, if we may believe the Jewiſh doctors, they tell us in Juthaſm, that Ruth lived till the time of Solomon, and ſat with Bathſheba, when he cauſed a ſeat to be placed for her at his right-hand, 1 Kings ii. 19.

We ſhall conclude with the Targum's paraphraſe on the laſt words of this book, namely, that Jeſſe begat David king of Iſrael; which ſome Latin copies following, Cardinal Cajetan thence concludes, this book was written not only after the birth of David, but after he was anointed by Samuel to be king of Iſrael.

The End of the Book of RUTH.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

FIRST BOOK of SAMUEL,

Otherwiſe called the FIRST BOOK of the K I N G S.

The ARGUMENT.

This book, and the following, bear the name of Samuel, becauſe they contain a relation of his anceſtors, his birth, his education, his life and actions, his government and death; as likewiſe the lives of thoſe kings, whom he anointed over Iſrael by the command of God. The Septuagint, and the old Latin Verſion, join theſe books of Samuel with the two following, and call them, The four books of the kings, becauſe they relate the lives and principal actions of all the kings who reigned over the Jews, from the firſt to the laſt, in whom this monarchical government ceaſed, and was extinguiſhed in Iſrael, by a juſt judgment of Almighty God.

Samuel is ſaid, by ſome commentators, to have compoſed the twenty-four firſt chapters of this book, ſince they contain nothing but what he might have written, and in which he had a very conſiderable ſhare. However, in theſe twenty-four chapters there are ſome ſmall additions, which ſeem to have been inſerted after his death. We read in the Chronicles, that he aſſiſted in regulating the diſtribution of the Levites appointed by David for the ſervice of the temple, 1 Chron. ix. 22. This may be explained by ſaying, that David purſued the order already ſettled by Samuel, during the time he was judge of Iſrael, after the death of the high prieſt Eli. We likewiſe find it recorded in the ſame book, that Samuel enriched the tabernacle by magnificent preſents and coſtly ſpoils, which he had taken from the enemies of Iſrael during the time of his judicature, 1 Chron. xxvi. 28. Laſtly, we are there informed, that he wrote the hiſtory of David, in conjunction with the prophets Nathan and Gad, 1 Chron. xxix. 29. Probably he might write the beginning of this hiſtory, and the two other prophets, the continuation and concluſion of it; for Samuel was dead before David aſcended the throne of Judah. The two firſt books of Kings bear the name of the books of Samuel, but he could not be the author of the ſecond of thoſe books, ſince it contains ſeveral tranſactions that happened long after his death, neither could he write the latter end of the firſt, ſince his death is mentioned in the xxvth chapter of that very book.

At the beginning of this book we have an account of the birth of Samuel, and of the manner in which he was conſecrated by his mother to the ſervice of God, and the hymn of praiſe ſhe ſang on that occaſion. We next find a relation of the inſolent and vicious conduct of the ſons of Eli, who therefore is reproved by a man of God, that foretells the ruin of his family; and which was afterward confirmed to him by Samuel, whom God dignified with the high calling of a prophet, and he was owned as ſuch by all the people. We afterward ſee in this book, how the Iſraelites were defeated feated by the Philiſtines, who likewiſe wreſted from them the ark of the covenant, and placed it in the temple of their idol Dagon; which falls down, and is ſhattered to pieces before it. God likewiſe inflicted ſevere plagues on the Philiſtines; upon which they ſend back the ark with preſents; and it is firſt conveyed to Bethſhemeſh in the land of Judah, and from thence to Kirjath-jearim, where Samuel enters upon a noble reformation of the worſhip of God, and aſſembles the Iſraelites of Mizpeh. The Philiſtines having formed a deſign to ſurprize them there, God ſtrikes them with a ſudden terror, by dreadful peals of thunder, upon which they are eaſily defeated by the Jews.

The ſons of Samuel being appointed by him, in his old age, to judge the people, thought fit to deviate from the great example of their father, and this induced the Iſraelites to require a king. God was diſpleaſed with them for this proceeding, and commands Samuel to repreſent to them in what manner they muſt expect to be treated by the king they deſired. But the people obſtinately perſiſting in their demand, the Lord conſents to gratify them, and Samuel informs Saul, that he was the perſon appointed to reign over Iſrael, and anoints him him king.

Saul, in the beginning of his reign, is victorious over the Ammonites; and Samuel lays down the authority he had ſo long exerciſed over the people, as their judge; having firſt given an honourable teſtimony of his innocence and integrity in that ſtation. Saul and Jonathan his ſon war againſt the Philiſtines, and defeat them: After which, Samuel declares to Saul, that God intended to take the crown from him. David encounters Goliath, and kills him; upon which Saul, being jealous of the honours render'd to the young conqueror, endeavours to deſtroy him; but he evades the danger by withdrawing from the court, and contracts a ſtrict friendſhip with Jonathan. He then retires to Achiſh king of the Philiſtines, where, in order to ſave his own life, he counterfeits madneſs, and then goes to Adullam, where he is joined by his friends; notwithſtanding which, he is compelled to wander from place to place, to elude Saul's inhumane purſuit. That prince cauſes Ahimelech, and all his family, together with fourſcore and five prieſts, and all the inhabitants of Nob, to be maſſacred, only for having innocently entertained David, and furniſhed him with bread. David conceals himſelf in the wilderneſs of Ziph, and from thence retires to that of Maon; whither he is ſtill purſued by the implacable Saul, till this latter receives intelligence, that the Philiſtines had made an incurſion into his territories. He then marched againſt them, and, after he had been victorious over their troops, renews his purſuit of David, but at laſt acknowledges his inhumane proceeding, and intreats David to be compaſſionate to his family, when he ſhould be advanced to the regal dignity. After this we have a relation of the death of Samuel, and what paſſed between David and Abigail, the wife of Nabal. The Sacred Hiſtorian then acquaints us, that David, in order to eſcape from Saul, who began to perſecute him anew, fled to Achiſh king of Gath, who conſigns to him the town of Ziglag for the place of his reſidence; from whence he makes excurſions into the land of the neighbouring people, great numbers of whom he deſtroyed, and obtained very conſiderable ſpoils. The Philiſtines, after this event, advancing with a formidable army againſt Iſrael, Saul, in this diſtreſsful conjuncture, asks counſel of God, who would not vouchſafe him an anſwer: whereupon he addreſſes himſelf to the witch of Endor. And laſtly, this book concludes with the tragical death of that prince and his ſons.

This firſt book of Samuel contains the hiſtory of the events tranſacted for the ſpace of eighty years; forty of which paſſed under the government of Eli the high-prieſt, chap. iv. 18. and the other forty under the government of Samuel and Saul, Acts xiii. 21.

CHAP.

CHAP. I.

1 Elkanah a Levite having two wives, worſhippeth yearly at Shiloh. 4 He cheriſheth Hannah, tho' barren, and provoked by Peninnah. 9 Hannah in grief, prayeth for a child. 12 Eli firſt rebuking her, afterwards bleſſeth her. 19 Hannah having borne Samuel, ſtayeth at home till he is weaned. 24 She preſenteth him, according to her vow, to the LORD.

NOW there was a certain man of Ramathaim-zophim, of mount Ephraim, and his name was Elkanah, the ſon of Jeroham, the ſon of Elihu, the ſon of Tohu, the ſon of Zuph, an Ephrathite:

2 And he had two wives, the name of the one was Hannah, and the name of the other Peninnah: and Peninnah had children, but Hannah had no children.

3 And this man went up out of his city yearly, to worſhip and to ſacrifice unto the LORD of hoſts in Shiloh; and the two ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, the prieſts of the LORD, were there.

4 ¶ And when the time was that Elkanah offered, he gave to Peninnah his wife, and to all her ſons and her daughters, portions.

5 But unto Hannah he gave a worthy portion: for he loved Hannah, but the LORD had ſhut up her womb;

6 And her adverſary alſo provoked her ſore, for to make her fret, becauſe the LORD had ſhut up her womb.

7 And as he did ſo year by year, when ſhe went up to the houſe of the LORD, ſo ſhe provoked her; therefore ſhe wept, and did not eat.

8 Then ſaid Elkanah her husband to her, Hannah, why weepeſt thou? and why eateſt thou not? And why is thy heart grieved? am not I better to thee than ten ſons?

9 ¶ So Hannah roſe up after they had eaten in Shiloh, and after they had drunk: (now Eli the prieſt ſat upon a ſeat by a poſt of the temple of the LORD)

10 And ſhe was in bitterneſs of ſoul, and prayed unto the LORD, and wept ſore.

11 And ſhe vowed a vow, and ſaid, O LORD of hoſts, if thou wilt indeed look on the affliction of thine handmaid, and remember me, and not forget thine handmaid, but wilt give unto thine handmaid a man-child, then I will give him unto the LORD all the days of his life, and there ſhall no razor come upon his head.

12 And it came to paſs as ſhe continued praying before the LORD, that Eli marked her mouth.

13 Now Hannah, ſhe ſpake in her heart, only her lips moved, but her voice was not heard: therefore Eli thought ſhe had been drunken.

14 And Eli ſaid unto her, How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee.

15 And Hannah anſwered and ſaid, No, my lord, I am a woman of a ſorrowful ſpirit: I have drunk neither wine nor ſtrong drink, but have poured out my ſoul before the LORD.

16 Count not thine handmaid for a daughter of Belial: for out of the abundance of my complaint and grief have I ſpoken hitherto.

17 Then Eli anſwered and ſaid, Go in peace: and the God of Iſrael grant thee thy petition that thou haſt asked of him.

18 And ſhe ſaid, Let thine handmaid find grace in thy ſight. So the woman went her way, and did eat, and her countenance was no more ſad.

19 ¶ And they roſe up in the morning early, and worſhipped before the LORD, and returned, and came to their houſe to Ramah: and Elkanah knew Hannah his wife, and the LORD remembred her.

20 Wherefore it came to paſs, when the time was come about, after Hannah had conceived, that ſhe bare a ſon, and called his name Samuel, ſaying, Becauſe I have asked him of the LORD.

21 And the man Elkanah, and all his houſe, went up to offer unto the LORD the yearly ſacrifice, and his vow.

22 But Hannah went not up; for ſhe ſaid unto her husband, I will not go up until the child be weaned, and then I will bring him, that he may appear before the LORD, and there abide for ever.

23 And Elkanah her husband ſaid unto her, Do what ſeemeth thee good, tarry until thou have weaned him, only the LORD eſtabliſh his word: ſo the woman abode and gave her ſon ſuck until ſhe weaned him.

24 ¶ And when ſhe had weaned him, ſhe took him up with her, with three bullocks, and one ephah of flour, and a bottle of wine, and brought him unto the houſe of the LORD in Shiloh: and the child was young.

25 And they ſlew a bullock, and brought the child to Eli.

26 And ſhe ſaid, O my lord, as thy ſoul liveth, my lord, I am the woman that ſtood by thee here, praying unto the LORD.

27 For this child I prayed; and the LORD hath given me my petition which I asked of him:

28 Therefore alſo I have lent him to the LORD as long as he liveth, he ſhall be lent to the LORD. And he worſhipped the LORD there.

Ver. 1. Now there was a certain man of Ramathaim-zophim] Doctor Wells, in his Geography of the Old Teſtament, thinks this place was the Arimathea of the New Teſtament; but indeed it was very different from it, for Arimathea lay weſtward of Jeruſalem, and Ramathaim to the north of the ſame city, in the mountains of Ephraim. The way which Saul took, when he was ſeeking his father's aſſes, will not allow us to place Ramathaim weſtward of Jeruſalem: For he ſet out from Gibeah, and advanced northward to the mountains of Ephraim; from whence he turned to the weſt, and proceeded to Shaliſha, weſtward of Jeruſalem; after which he paſſed through the land of Shalim, or Salem, that is to ſay, the country about Jeruſalem. He then continued to advance toward the eaſt, and went through the tribe of Benjamin; and as he intended to return toward Gibeah, he came northward into the land of Zuph or Zophim, near Ramathaim-zophim, where he had a conference with Samuel. This city therefore was probably the ſame as Ramah, near Beth-el, four leagues from Jeruſalem. It was called Ramathaim, in the dual number, becauſe it was built on two hills, which gave it the appearance of a double city; and ſome think the title of Zophim was added to it, on account of a watch-tower erected in it, and where men were ſtation'd, to obſerve who approached from all parts of the country around it. But St. Jerom and others are of opinion, that it was called Zophim, becauſe here was a ſchool of the prophets, who uſually ſettled in ſuch places as were remote from company, and fit for contemplation. This induced Elijah and Eliſha to frequent mount Carmel. And accordingly the Chaldee Paraphraſt tranſlates theſe words, There was a man of Ramathaim, a diſciple of the prophets, who in the book of Ezekiel are ſtiled watchmen; and from hence ſome trace the derivation of the Greek word σκοπος, which originally was the title of aſtronomers, who contemplated the ſtars from lofty ſituations.

———Of mount Ephraim] This is added, to diſtinguiſh this from other places, which had the name of Ramah, in other tribes, particularly in that of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 25.

———And his name was Elkanah, the ſon of Jeroham, the ſon of Elihu, the ſon of Tohu] It appears by this genealogy, that Samuel was a Levite, of the family of the Kohathites, as we read, 1 Chron. vi. 33, 34, &c. See Mr. Selden, in his book, De Succeſſion. in Pontif. l. 1. c. 18. where he confutes thoſe who fancy Samuel was a prieſt, yea, the high-prieſt, as Petavius himſelf imagined.

———The ſon of Zuph an Ephrathite.] Ephrata is the ſame with Beth-lehem, which was in the tribe of Judah. Therefore Zuph is not called an Ephrathite, becauſe he was deſcended from the Beth-lehemites (for he was a Levite) but becauſe he dwelt in that place, as the Levites were diſperſed through all the tribes. So Mr. Selden there ſpeaks (from the Hebrew doctors, and from the Targum) domicilii ratione, non ſanguinis, he is called an Ephrathite, on the account of his habitation, not of his blood.

Ver. 2. And he had two wives, the name of the one was Hannah, and the name of the other Peninnah, &c.] Hannah ſeems to have been his firſt wife, who proving barren, his earneſt deſire of children moved him to take another; as Abraham had, by Sarah's conſent. Which was not in thoſe times diſallowed by God; who ſaith himſelf, that he had given to David many wives, 2 Sam. xii. 8. which ſhews it was not then a ſin in them to have more than one. See Grotius, in his book, de Jure Belli & Pacis, l. 2. c. 5. ſect. 9, 10.

Ver. 3. And this man went up out of his city.] For tho' Ramah was ſituated on an eminence, yet Shiloh was ſtill more lofty.

———To worſhip and to ſacrifice to the Lord of hoſts in Shiloh.] Where the Tabernacle now was, and where all ſacrifices were to be offered, and no-where elſe. Hither all the people were bound to reſort, at the three great feſtivals, Deut. xvi. 16. and not to appear before the Lord empty. Accordingly Elkanah not only worſhipped God with prayers and thankſgivings, but offered ſuch ſacrifices as were ſuitable to the feſtival; and, it is likely, preſented other gifts according to his ability, as is there required, ver. 17.

———And the two ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, the prieſts of the Lord were there.] Ready to offer ſuch ſacrifices as were brought to the altar. Whoſe ſervice Elkanah did not refuſe becauſe they were notoriouſly profane; but reverenced their office, as ſtill prieſts of the Lord; from whoſe impure hands he vouchſafed to accept the offerings of pious people.

Ver. 4. And when the time was that Elkanah offered.] His peace-offerings, which were wont to accompany others at the great feſtivals. For inſtance, at the Paſſover they offered not only the Paſchal Lamb, but ſeveral other ſacrifices likewiſe. All the ſeven days of unleavened bread having peculiar ſacrifices belonging to them; ſee Numb xxviii. And ſo there was on the ſeven days of the feaſt of tabernacles, Numb. xxix. Now on ſome of theſe days Elkanah offered a ſacrifice that might make a feaſt for his family and friends, according to the law, Deut. xii. 12.

———He gave to Peninnah his wife, and to all her ſons and her daughters.] The males only were bound to appear before God at theſe feſtivals; but devout perſons were wont to bring alſo their wives with them; and their daughters as well as ſons; eſpecially when they dwelt ſo near the houſe of God as Elkanah did, whoſe habitation at Ramah was not above ſeven miles from Shiloh. It doth not appear that there was any peculiar court at the tabernacle (as there was afterward at the temple) for women to worſhip in by themſelves; but they came in with their husbands, and performed their duty cloſe to them.

——— Portions] Of that part of the peace-offerings, which belonged to him that offered them; which was the whole, except the fat, which belonged to the Lord, and the breaſt and right ſhoulder, which belonged to the prieſt, Lev. vii. 34. With the reſt the ſacrificer made a feaſt for himſelf, his family, and friends; giving to every one a portion of the ſacrifice: whereby they had communion with the Lord, by partaking with him of his ſacrifice, which had been offer'd to him at his altar.

Ver. 5. But unto Hannah he gave a worthy portion.] Or a double portion, in token of his extraordinary reſpect and kindneſs to her.

———For he loved Hannah, but the Lord had ſhut up her womb.] Her barrenneſs did not make him love her leſs, but rather more; becauſe he would ſupport and comfort her under that affliction.

Ver. 6. And her adverſary alſo provoked her ſore, for to make her fret, becauſe the Lord had ſhut up her womb.] It added to her affliction, that Peninnah ſet herſelf againſt her, and was wont to twit her with her barrenneſs, ſaying, when her husband ſent her a more liberal portion of holy things than ſhe received, Tho' he be ſo kind to you, yet you bring him no children as I do; which gave her great vexation.

Ver. 7. And as he did ſo year by year, when ſhe went up to the houſe of the Lord, ſo ſhe provoked her.] She conſtantly took this occaſion to upbraid her with her barrenneſs, when her husband expreſſed ſuch extraordinary kindneſs to her.

Hannah was inconſolable at the reproaches ſhe ſuſtain'd from her inſulting rival, and her ſorrow was too great to be alleviated by all the endearing language her husband could utter. She at laſt addreſſed her fervent prayers to that ever-merciful Being, who alone could change her mourning into into joy: and she then made a solemn vow, that if he would bless her with a son, she would be careful to consecrate him to his sacred service as a Nazarite.

Eli, the high priest, was sitting at a small distance from her, when she was pouring out the anguish of her soul to God. Some have imagined, that he was seated on a throne, to dispense judgment to Israel, in the capacity of one of those extraordinary magistrates whom God raised up to his people. But this supposition seems to us, to be without any foundation. Eli was attentive to the behaviour of Hannah, and when he beheld the motion of her lips, without hearing any articulate sound, he rashly imagined she was intoxicated with wine, and severely reproached her as such. The unhappy woman was struck with confusion at such a cruel imputation, and soon made him sensible of the injustice with which he had treated her. The pontif was then touched with remorse for the inconsiderate reflection he had cast upon her; Go in peace, said he, and the God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him. Hannah returned him her grateful thanks, and desired the continuance of his prayers; after which she departed from the tabernacle with so much satisfaction, and with such a firm persuasion that his prayers and her own would be heard, that she assumed a cheerful air, and sat down to her food with a tranquility of mind to which she had long been a stranger. The event convinced her that she had offered up her supplications to a God who delights to be gracious; for she became the joyful mother of a living son, to whom she gave the name of Samuel, saying, because I have asked him of the Lord, ver. 20. Saul-meel, which is contracted into Samuel, signifies, asked of God, as the word is translated in the margin of our Bibles. Sir John Marsham computes that he was born in the time when the Philistines tyrannized over Israel, but in what particular year cannot certainly be determined.

The tender cares of a parent prevented Hannah from going with her husband to the tabernacle at Shiloh, as had formerly been her custom; and she thought it her duty to be vigilant for the welfare of a son whom she had devoted to God in so solemn a manner. She her self was his nurse, and suckled him after the example of Sarah, but for what space of time, is uncertain, and not material to be known. When she at last presented Samuel to the high priest, she acquainted him with the particulars of her vow to God, and her intention to accomplish it with the utmost strictness. Elkanah was likewise present on that occasion, and consented to this dedication of his child to the service in which God should think fit to employ him; and which he humbly implored him to accept.

CHAP. II.

1 Hannahs song in thankfulness. 12 The sin of Elies sons. 18 Samuels ministry. 20 By Elies blessing, Hannah is more fruitful. 22 Eli reproveth his sons. 28 A prophesy against Elies house.

AND Hannah prayed, and said, My heart rejoiceth in the LORD, mine horn is exalted in the LORD: my mouth is enlarged over mine enemies: because I rejoice in thy salvation.

2 There is none holy as the LORD: for there is none beside thee: neither is there any rock like our God.

3 Talk no more so exceeding proudly, let not arrogancy come out of your mouth: for the LORD is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed.

4 The bows of the mighty men are broken, and they that stumbled, are girt with strength.

5 They that were full, have hired out themselves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceased: so that the barren hath born seven; and she that hath many children, is waxed feeble.

6 The LORD killeth, and maketh alive: he bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up.

7 The LORD maketh poor, and maketh rich: he bringeth low, and lifteth up.

8 He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to set them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory: for the pillars of the earth are the LORDS, and he hath set the world upon them.

9 He will keep the feet of his saints, and the wicked shall be silent in darkness: for by strength shall no man prevail.

10 The adversaries of the LORD shall be broken to pieces: out of heaven shall he thunder upon them: the LORD shall judge the ends of the earth, and he shall give strength unto his king, and exalt the horn of his anointed.

11 And Elkanah went to Ramah to his house; and the child did minister unto the LORD before Eli the priest.

12 ¶ Now the sons of Eli were sons of Belial they knew not the LORD.

13 And the priests custom with the people was, that when any man offered sacrifice, the priests servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hand:

14 And he struck it into the pan, or kettle, or caldron, or pot; all that the flesh-hook brought up, the priest took for himself: so they did in Shiloh, unto all the Israelites that came thither.

15 Also before they burnt the fat, the priests servant came, and said to the man that sacrificed, Give flesh to roast for the priest; for he will not have sodden flesh of thee, but raw.

16 And if any man said unto him, Let them not fail to burn the fat presently, and then take as much as thy soul desireth: then he would answer him, Nay, but thou shalt give it me now: and if not, I will take it by force.

17 Wherefore the sin of the young men was very great before the LORD: for men abhorred the offering of the LORD.

18 ¶ But

18 ¶ But Samuel miniſtred before the LORD, being a child, girded with a linen ephod.

19 Moreover, his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him from year to year, when ſhe came up with her husband, to offer the yearly ſacrifice.

20 ¶ And Eli bleſſed Elkanah, and his wife, and ſaid, The LORD give thee ſeed of this woman, for the loan which is lent to the LORD. And they went unto their own home.

21 And the LORD viſited Hannah, ſo that ſhe conceived, and bare three ſons, and two daughters: and the child Samuel grew before the LORD.

22 ¶ Now Eli was very old, and heard all that his ſons did unto all Iſrael, and how they lay with the women that aſſembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.

23 And he ſaid unto them, Why do ye ſuch things? for I hear of your evil dealings, by all this people.

24 Nay, my ſons: for it is no good report that I hear; ye make the LORDS people to tranſgreſs.

25 If one man ſin againſt another, the judge ſhall judge him: but if a man ſin againſt the LORD, who ſhall intreat for him? Notwithſtanding they hearkened not unto the voice of their father, becauſe the LORD would ſlay them.

26 (And the child Samuel grew on, and was in favour both with the LORD, and alſo with men.)

27 ¶ And there came a man of God unto Eli, and ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith the LORD, did I plainly appear unto the houſe of thy father, when they were in Egypt in Pharaohs houſe?

28 And did I chuſe him out of all the tribes of Iſrael, to be my prieſt to offer upon mine altar, to burn incenſe, to wear an ephod before me? and did I give unto the houſe of thy father all the offerings made by fire of the children of Iſrael?

29 Wherefore kick ye at my ſacrifice, and at mine offering which I have commanded in my habitation, and honoureſt thy ſons above me, to make your ſelves fat with the chiefeſt of all the offerings of Iſrael my people?

30 Wherefore the LORD God of Iſrael ſaith, I ſaid indeed, that thy houſe, and the houſe of thy father ſhould walk before me for ever: but now the LORD ſaith, Be it far from me; for them that honour me, I will honour, and they that deſpiſe me, ſhall be lightly eſteemed.

31 Behold, the days come, that I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy fathers houſe, that there ſhall not be an old man in thine houſe.

32 And thou ſhalt ſee an enemy in my habitation, in all the wealth which God ſhall give Iſrael: and there ſhall not be an olp man in thine houſe for ever.

33 And the man of thine, whom I ſhall not cut off from mine altar, ſhall be to conſume thine eyes, and to grieve thine heart: and all the increaſe of thine houſe ſhall die in the flower of their age.

34 And this ſhall be a ſign unto thee, that ſhall come upon thy two ſons, on Hophni and Phinehas: in one day they ſhall die both of them.

35 And I will raiſe me up a faithful prieſt, that ſhall do according to that which is in mine heart, and in my mind: and I will build him a ſure houſe, and he ſhall walk before mine Anointed for ever.

36 And it ſhall come to paſs, that every one that is left in thine houſe, ſhall come and crouch to him for a piece of ſilver, and a morſel of bread, and ſhall ſay, Put me (I pray thee) into one of the prieſts offices, that I may eat a piece of bread.

Ver. 1. And Hannah prayed, and ſaid.] Hymns are ſometimes comprehended in Scripture under the name of prayers, Pſalm lxxi. 20. and the ability of compoſing them was frequently infuſed by heaven into the ſouls of devout men, amidſt their grateful meditations on the extraordinary goodneſs of God to them. And indeed the harmony of numbers was the moſt ancient method of preſerving the memory of things to poſterity; poets being more ancient than hiſtorians or orators, as Lactantius obſerves, (Div. Inſtit. l. vii. c. 23.) Nor were the weſtern people leſs famous for this excellent gift than the eaſtern; the Germans, for inſtance, had their moſt ancient annals in verſe, as Hermannus Conringius has proved, from many authors, in his preface to Corn. Tacitus, de Germanorum moribus.

——My heart rejoiceth in the Lord.] She was actuated by the ſame Spirit which moved St. James to give this direction, chap. v. ver. 18. Is any afflicted? let him pray; is any merry? let him ſing pſalms.

——Mine horn is exalted in the Lord.] She who was bowed down and dejected, now lifts up her head and triumphs: For exalting the horn ſignifies the height of glory.

——My mouth is enlarged over my enemy.] She was now furniſhed with a full anſwer to Peninnah, who upbraided her with her ſterility.

——Becauſe I rejoice in thy ſalvation.] All this joy and triumph aroſe from the goodneſs of God to her, who had delivered her from the reproach of barrenneſs. And this conſideration raiſed her, as appears by the ſequel, to the expectation of far greater things.

Ver. 2. There is none holy as the Lord.] The holineſs of God ſignifies his matchleſs perfections; as Mr. Mede hath ſhewn, in many parts of his works; ſee page 11.

—— For there is none beſide thee.] His Divine Perfections are peculiar to himſelf: For though the ſcripture ſome-ſometimes vouchſafes the name of gods to the Pagan Dæmons, yet it never affords them the appellation of holy.

Ver. 3. Talk no more ſo exceeding proudly.] This was good advice to Peninnah, and ſuch like perſons, not to inſult others who are leſs happy than themſelves.

—— Let not arrogancy come out of your mouth.] Or, as the Targum interprets it, forbear reproaches. For ſo the Hebrew word atat ſignifies.

——For the Lord is a God of knowledge.] None knows what he intends, and he, perhaps, will exalt thoſe who are now abaſed. Or, he knows how to accompliſh ſuch things as men think impoſſible.

—— And by him actions are weighed.] Or, by him works are prepared; even when there is no diſpoſition in nature to them.

Ver. 4. The bows of the mighty men are broken, and they that ſtumbled, are girt with ſtrength.] The warm conception ſhe entertained of God's power, branches out it ſelf into an humble acknowledgment of this glorious attribute, in various inſtances. And firſt, in vanquiſhing the moſt victorious; for bows were a principal part of a warrior's weapons, Pſalm xliv. 6. and their girdles being a conſiderable part of the military habit, the expreſſion in the Hebrew is elegantly tranſlated, ſtrength and warlike proweſs. Whence Virgil calls feeble perſons, who are unqualified for war, diſcinctos, ungirt, as Servius obſerves. Whence the Apoſtle, amongſt the ſpiritual armour, exhorts the Epheſians to be girt about with truth, Eph. vi. For to gird, and to arm, to be girt, and to be armed, are the ſame thing in Greek and Latin authors. See alſo Pſalm xviii. 39. lxv. 6.

Ver. 5. They that were full, have hired out themſelves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceaſed.] That is, they no longer complained of their former hunger. This viciſſitude of human affairs, eſpecially the ſudden and frequent changes from a great height of proſperity, to a very low condition; and from a ſtate of miſery to unexpected welfare, are very wonderful, and ought to be ſeriouſly conſidered, in order to prevent a perſon from indulging either pride or deſpair.

—— So that the barren hath born ſeven.] That is, many children. She reflects upon the great change which God had wrought in her own condition. And Procopius Gazæus obſerves, that ſhe here, Hymno prophetiam admiſcet, mingles prophecy with praiſe, and foretels the fruitfulneſs of the church: For the number ſeven denotes a multitude.

——And ſhe that hath many children, is waxed feeble.] The Jews fancy, that every time Hannah bare a child, two of Peninnah's children died. But this ſeems rather to have a general reſpect to thoſe who have been fertile, and grow barren when God pleaſeth.

Ver. 6. The Lord killeth, and maketh alive; he bringeth down to the grave, and bringeth up.] The ſame thing is repeated in different words; and the ſenſe is, the power of life and death is in the hands of God: Whom he pleaſes he takes out of the world, and whom he pleaſes he continues in it; raiſing men up even from the grave, when they were dropping into it. See Deut xxxii. 39. Pſalm xxx. 3.

Ver. 7. The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich; he bringeth low, and lifteth up.] She acknowledgeth the power and wiſdom of God, in making men of different conditions, ſome poor, and others rich; and likewiſe for cauſing thoſe who were once extremely poor, to enjoy great affluence; and they who were mean and contemptible, to become great and eminent.

Ver. 8. He raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to ſet them among princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory.] Inſtances of this, in the holy ſcripture, are Joſeph and Daniel; the one a priſoner, the other a captive; but preferred to the higheſt dignity, by the kings of Egypt and Babylon. And in theſe later ages we have a memorable inſtance of the truth of theſe words, in Matthias Corvinus, king of Hungary, who was brought out of priſon, and placed on a throne; not by ſedition, or civil war, but by the unanimous conſent of all the ſtates of the realm, in gratitude for the benefits they had received from his father, the great Hunniades.

——For the pillars of the earth are the Lords, and he hath ſet the world upon them.] Theſe words contain the reaſon of all that precedes in the five foregoing verſes: For the very earth being founded, upheld, and ſupported by the Lord, no wonder that all the inhabitants thereof are in his power, to diſpoſe of them as he thinks good.

Ver. 9 He will keep the feet of his ſaints, and the wicked ſhall be ſilent in darkneſs,] Pious affections, in thoſe days, frequently kindled into prophecy: Accordingly Hannah here begins to predict the deliverances of the Iſraelites, (who were God's holy ones, or ſaints, by being peculiarly ſeparated to him and his ſervice) from the hand of the Philiſtines, and other enemies; who ſhe prophecies ſhould ſtumble and fall, as men do in the dark, when the Iſraelites, by God's direction, ſucceeded in their enterprizes.

——For by ſtrength ſhall no man prevail.] As afterward appeared in Goliath.

Ver. 10. The adverſaries of the Lord ſhall be broken to pieces, out of heaven ſhall he thunder upon them.] As he did literally, when Samuel fought with the Philiſtines, chap. vii. 10. and when David alſo vanquiſhed them, Pſal. xviii. 13. Procopius Gazæus applies this to the aſſumption of Chriſt, with the miſſion of the Holy Ghoſt, the happy ſucceſs of the apoſtles preaching, and to Chriſt's ſecond coming.

—— The Lord ſhall judge the ends of the earth.] As he did when he ſubdued the Philiſtines, who lived in the extremity of the country of Judæa, weſtward.

——And he ſhall give ſtrength unto his king.] That is, to David, of whom Hannah prophecies, and who was moſt properly God's king, appointed by him in the room of Saul; who by his diſobedience forfeited his kingdom and was rejected by God.

—— And exalted the horn of his anointed.] God commanded Saul to be anointed by Samuel, chap. x. 1. but it was upon particular conditions, which he not fulfilling, the ſame perſon was commanded to anoint David, chap. xv. 29. xvi. 1. Upon which the ſpirit of the Lord departed from Saul, and reſted upon David, chap. xvi. 13, 14. whom God ſo wonderfully protected, that all the ſubtilty and power of Saul could not deſtroy him: And when he came to the throne, God wonderfully exalted him, by extending his dominion very far, and making him ſo glorious a prince, that he was the moſt eminent type of the great king of all, namely, our Lord Chriſt, to whom theſe words, in the fulleſt ſenſe, belong. "For who doth "not ſee, ſaith St. Auſtin, (in his xviith book, de Civi-"tate Dei, cap. iv.) that the ſpirit of this woman (whoſe "name was Anna, which ſignifies grace) propheſied of the "Chriſtian religion, the city of God, whoſe king and "founder is Chriſt; and of the grace of God, from which "the proud are eſtranged, that they may fall; but the "humble are filled with it, that they may riſe." Which is the chief import of this hymn. And, indeed, this is the firſt time that the name of Meſſiah (or anointed) is found in ſcripture, there being no ſuch word in all the foregoing books of Ruth, Judges, Joſhua, or Moſes: And therefore it is the more to be remarked, this propheteſs being the firſt who mentions the Meſſiah in this ſong: With which that of the bleſſed Virgin hath ſuch a perfect reſemblance, that one cannot but think Hannah had a reſpect to ſomething more than the difference between Peninnah and her ſelf, and to the ſon which God had given her, or the great acts of David: For the expreſſions are too magnificent to be confined to ſo low a ſenſe. And therefore Kimchi, upon theſe words, ingenuouſly acknowledges, the king here mentioned is the Meſſiah, of whom Hannah ſpake, either by prophecy, or tradition. For there was a tradition among the Jews, that a great king ſhould ariſe in Iſrael: And ſhe ſeals up this ſong, with a mention of that king, who ſhould deliver them from all their enemies.

Ver. 12. Now the ſons of Eli were ſons of Belial, &c.] Eli, the then judge of Iſrael, was almoſt an hundred years old, and his two ſons, Hophni and Phinehas, who acted under him, took the advantage of his extreme weakneſs, to commit the greateſt abominations. The Sacred Hiſtorian brands them with the moſt deteſtable characters, ſuch as that they were ſons of Belial, that is, impious and avaricious men, guilty of violence to others, and indulging themſelves in the moſt abandoned and impure deſires. It is added, that they knew not the Lord; and they committed ſuch infamous irregularities in the ſervice of the tabernacle, as cauſed the people to abhor the offering of the Lord, ver. 17. that they debauched the women who aſſembled at the door of the tabernacle, ver. 22, and that their crimes were very great, ver. 17. By all which one may gueſs, into what a degree of wickedneſs, a people ſo naturally prone to it, muſt have degenerated, under ſuch profligate governors.

Ver. 13. And the prieſts cuſtom with the people was, that when any man offered his ſacrifice.] That is, when any man brought his peace-offerings to be offered at the altar.

——That the prieſts ſervant came, while the fleſh was in ſeething, with a fleſh hook of three teeth in his hand.] The perſon who brought the peace-offerings having the largeſt ſhare in theſe ſacrifices, there were certain rooms, when the temple was built, both in the court of the women, and of the men, wherein they had liberty to boil the fleſh, in order to feaſt before God at his own houſe; which was afterward imitated by Chriſtians in their feaſts of charity. The like rooms were in the outward court of the tabernacle, before the temple was erected.

Ver. 14. And he ſtuck it into the pan, or kettle, or cauldron, or pot; all that the fleſh-hook brought up, the prieſt took for himſelf.] This was a new cuſtom, which the ſons of Eli profanely introduced: For not content with the right ſhoulder, and the breaſt, which were the property allowed them by the law, Levit. vii. 32. they would likewiſe take what they pleaſed of the reſt, that belonged to the people; at leaſt ſo much as a fork with three teeth could bring up.

Ver. 15. And before they burnt the fat.] Which entirely belonged to God, Levit. ii. 16. vii. 23, 25.

——The prieſts ſervant came, and ſaid to the man that ſacrificed, Give fleſh to roaſt for the prieſt.] It was a high contempt of the divine inſtitution, for theſe ſons of Eli to demand their part before God had his.

——For he will not have ſodden fleſh of thee, but raw.] The fleſh-hook did not always bring up the beſt; therefore aſſoon as the ſacrifice was cut up, they came and took the choiceſt pieces.

Ver. 16. And if any man ſaid unto him, Let them not fail to burn the fat preſently, and then take as much as thy ſoul deſireth: then he would anſwer him, nay, but thou ſhalt give it me now: and if not, I will take it by force.] This was the very height of imperious profaneneſs, that ſuch ſubmiſſive language ſhould not prevail with them, to teſtify ſo much reſpect to God, as to let him have his portion in the firſt place: None knows to what pitch of impiety a man may arrive, when once a reverence for the Divine Majeſty, is extinguiſhed in his mind.

Ver. 18. But Samuel miniſtred before the Lord, being a child girded with a linen ephod.] We do not read any whereof any peculiar garments appointed for the Levites in their miniſtration, but only for the prieſts; and this was one of them, as appears from Exod. xxviii. 40, 41. And therefore the ephod, which the prieſts are ſaid to wear in chap. xxii. of this book, ver. 18. were very different from the ephod ordered in Exod. xxviii. for Aaron the high prieſt alone. Which had a curious girdle belonging to it, and the breaſt-plate with precious ſtones inſeparable from it; and was wrought with gold and blue, purple and ſcarlet, Exod. xxviii. 6. But the ephod which the prieſts, or any other perſons, are ſaid to wear, is, for diſtinction ſake, always called ephod bad, an ephod made of fine linen, which was not a ſacred but an honorary veſtment, as we may call it, being a ſhort garment hanging from the ſhoulders down to the middle of the back, but without any girdle, or intermixture of curious work; but as it had ſome reſemblance to that worn by the high prieſt, it was uſed by the inferior prieſts, to render them more reſpected as miniſters of God; and by other great perſons on ſome ſolemn occaſion. 2 Sam. vi. 24. Eli therefore ſeeing ſo great an appearance of God in Samuel, ordered him to wear this habit, tho' it did not belong to the Levites, much leſs to him who was not of age, according to the exact rules of the law, to ſerve in the tabernacle.

From this particular veſtment might probably be derived the Latus Clavus among the Romans, which was a habit proper to their ſenators and preſidents. It was firſt introduced among them, from the Hetruſcans, by Tullus Hoſtilius, when he conquered that people, whoſe ancient language correſponded ſo much with the Hebrew, that we may reaſonably conclude they derived ſeveral of their cuſtoms from the Iſraelites.

Ver. 19. Moreover his mother made him a little coat, and brought it to him from year to year, &c.] The ephod we ſuppoſe, being uſed only in the ſervice of God, was provided at the public expence; but for the ordinary habit of Samuel, his mother was careful to provide him a coat, and perhaps other things ſuitable to it, that ſhe might ſtill expreſs her pious diſpoſition, by contributing to his maintainance and accommodation at the houſe of God.

Ver. 20. And Eli bleſſed Elkanah, and his wife, and ſaid, The Lord give thee ſeed of this woman, for the loan which is lent to the Lord.] He beſtowed this benediction upon them by a divine impulſe, and thereby verified what Hannah had uttered in her prophetical ſong, ver. 5.

Ver. 21. And the Lord viſited Hannah, ſo that ſhe conceived and bare three ſons, and two daughters.] None can be ſaid to be loſers by what they lend to the Lord.

——And the child Samuel grew before the Lord.] Not only in ſtature, but in wiſdom alſo, and virtue. Of ſo great moment is it to ſeaſon the minds of children early with a ſenſe of God and religion; which is likely to continue with them, and improve as they grow in years.

Ver. 22. Now Eli was very old, and heard all that his ſons did unto all Iſrael, &c.] It was impoſſible for Eli to be ignorant of the impious miſconduct of his ſons, and yet inſtead of inflicting ſome exemplary puniſhment upon them, or at leaſt of diſcarding them from their office, and conferring it on perſons of more zeal and integrity, he contented himſelf with giving them a gentle reproof; ſo gentle indeed, that he ſeems not to have had reſolution enough to tell them that their actions were vile and abominable; but only that they were not good.

Ver. 25. If a man ſin againſt another, the judge ſhall judge him: but if a man ſin againſt the Lord, who ſhall intreat for him?] If one neighbour offers any injury to another, the affair may be compoſed by a judge, in the manner that appears to him moſt proper; but if any one injure the judge himſelf (which was the preſent caſe) who will have the confidence to ſpeak in his behalf? Was it ever heard that any one interceeded for a man to his prince, after he had intended to aſſaſſinate that prince? Eli argued well, but ſhould not have referred their puniſhment to God, when it was in his own power to have puniſhed his ſons.

——Notwithſtanding they hearkened not unto the voice of their father, becauſe the Lord would ſlay them.] Were we to acquieſce with the ſenſe our tranſlators have aſſigned to this paſſage, we muſt impute the incorrigible conduct of the ſons of Eli to the Lord's predetermination to deſtroy them; inſtead of which we beg leave to obſerve, that the Hebrew conjunction Ki, which is rendered becauſe, frequently ſignifies, and ought, both here and in ſeveral other places, to have been tranſlated wherefore, or though: The true ſenſe therefore will be, they did not hearken to their father; wherefore it pleaſed the Lord to ſlay them; or they hearkened not,——though the Lord threatened to ſlay them for their diſobedience.

The remiſsneſs of Eli in his conduct to his ſons, was ſo diſpleaſing to God, that he ſent a prophet to reproach him with his ingratitude, and to aſſure him that the high prieſthood ſhould be taken from his family; that his two ſons ſhould be cut off in one day; and that the ſurvivors of his houſe ſhould pine away in the utmoſt indigence and miſery. This heavy ſentence was again confirmed by God to young Samuel in a viſion, as will appear by the ſequel.

CHAP. III.

1 How the word of the Lord was firſt revealed to Samuel. 11 God telleth Samuel the deſtruction of Eli's houſe. 15 Samuel, tho' loth, telleth Eli the viſion. 19 Samuel groweth in credit.

AND the child Samuel miniſtred unto the LORD before Eli: and the word of the LORD was precious in thoſe days; there was no open viſion.

2 And

2 And it came to pass at that time, when Eli was laid down in his place, and his eyes began to wax dim, that he could not see;

3 And ere the lamp of God went out in the temple of the LORD, where the ark of God was, and Samuel was laid down to sleep:

4 That the LORD called Samuel, and he answered, Here am I.

5 And he ran unto Eli, and said, Here am I, for thou calledst me. And he said, I called not; lie down again. And he went and lay down.

6 And the LORD called yet again, Samuel. And Samuel arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I, for thou didst call me. And he answered, I called not, my son; lie down again.

7 Now Samuel did not yet know the LORD, neither was the word of the LORD yet revealed unto him.

8 And the LORD called Samuel again, the third time. And he arose and went to Eli, and said, Here am I, for thou didst call me. And Eli perceived that the LORD had called the child.

9 Therefore Eli said unto Samuel, Go, lie down: and it shall be, if he call thee, that thou shalt say, Speak, LORD, for thy servant heareth. So Samuel went, and lay down in his place.

10 And the LORD came and stood and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel answered, Speak, for thy servant heareth.

11 ¶ And the LORD said to Samuel, Behold, I will do a thing in Israel, at which both the ears of every one that heareth it, shall tingle.

12 ¶ In that day I will perform against Eli all things which I have spoken concerning his house: when I begin, I will also make an end.

13 For I have told him, that I will judge his house for ever, for the iniquity which he knoweth: because [his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not.

14 And therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering for ever.

15 ¶ And Samuel lay until the morning, and opened the doors of the house of the LORD: and Samuel feared to shew Eli the vision.

16 Then Eli called Samuel, and said, Samuel my son. And he answered, Here am I.

17 And he said, What is the thing that the LORD hath said unto thee? I pray thee hide it not from me: God do so to thee, and more also, if thou hide any thing from me of all the things that he said unto thee.

18 And Samuel told him every whit, and hid nothing from him. And he said, It is the LORD: let him do what seemeth him good.

19 ¶ And Samuel grew, and the LORD was with him, and did let none of his words fall to the ground.

20 And all Israel from Dan even to Beersheba knew that Samuel was established to be a prophet of the LORD.

21 And the LORD appeared again in Shiloh: for the LORD revealed himself to Samuel in Shiloh, by the word of the LORD.

Ver. 1. And the child Samuel ministred unto the Lord before Eli,] Samuel was now twelve years of age, as Josephus supposes, and he performed such services at the tabernacle, as Eli committed to his ministration.

—— And the word of the Lord was precious in those days.] That is, it was but very seldom that God condescended to reveal his sacred will to any person in those days. Those blessings and favours which are rarely imparted, may well be said to be precious, and had in the highest estimation.

—— There was no open vision.] Vision includes all the ways whereby God revealed himself to men; and which he then did so seldom, that whatever revelations might be privately communicated to some pious persons, there was none at this time publickly acknowledged to be a prophet, to whom the people might resort to know the divine will. Which was the cause that Samuel, when he had been twice called by God to attend unto him, thought it had been Eli who spoke. For the Israelites were, in those days so unacquainted with the prophetic spirit, that we read of no more than two prophets in all the time of the judges.

Ver. 2. And it came to pass at that time, when Eli was laid down in his place.] Namely, in the court of the tabernacle, where there were several apartments for the use of the priests.

Ver. 3. And ere the lamp of God went out in the temple of the Lord, where the ark of God was.] The lamp in the great shaft of the golden candlestic, which bent toward the most holy place, and was called the western lamp; never went out, tho' some of them did, when it was morning. The meaning therefore is, that e're it was day, the Lord called Samuel.

Ver. 4. And the Lord called Samuel.] After Samuel had retired to his repose, he heard himself called by a voice, which he immediately imagin'd was Eli's; and as he perhaps might suppose that the high priest intended to employ him in some ministration, which then occurred to his thoughts, he went to the apartment of Eli to receive his directions. The pontiff was so far from comprehending, that this voice might be the harbinger of a divine revelation to Samuel, that he rather seem'd to think it incredible; so rare were divine revelations then rendered by the corruption of the Israelites, and particularly of the ministers in sacred things.

Samuel, by the order of Eli, returned to this chamber, where he again heard a voice like the former; and still thought, as before, that he was called by the high priest.

He

He was certain no perſon was yet come to the tabernacle, it being night, and the doors ſhut; and therefore concluded the voice could be none but Eli's. Upon which he immediately haſtened to him to receive his orders. The high prieſt anſwered, as before, that he had not called him, and ordered him a ſecond time to betake himſelf to his reſt. The Sacred Hiſtorian adds, that Samuel did not then know the Lord, neither was the word of the Lord yet revealed unto him, ver. 7. The Targum expounds the paſſage thus, He had not yet learned to know diſcipline from before the Lord. That is, he was unacquainted with the manner wherein God imparted his Sacred will to the prophets; becauſe the Divine Majeſty had never ſpoken to him before. So that he was incapable of diſtinguiſhing between the voice of God, and that of a man. Maimonides expounds it, he did not underſtand that the Lord was wont to ſpeak with a ſoft and whiſpering voice; which was therefore called Bath-col.

Samuel was at laſt called a third time, and Eli then grew ſenſible that it was the voice of God: Upon which he ordered Samuel to retire once more to his chamber, and if he ſhould happen to be called again, then to anſwer, Speak Lord, for thy ſervant heareth, ver. 9. Samuel complied with theſe directions, and God then revealed to him all the calamities he had denounced againſt the houſe of Eli, and declared the fatal decree was ſo irrevocable, that no ſacrifices or oblations ſhould avert the execution of it, ver. 14. The Deity ſeems to expreſs leſs indignation at the irregularities committed by Hophni and Phinehas, than at the criminal indulgence with which their father ſuffered them to perſiſt in thoſe crimes. "In that day, "ſays the Lord, I will perform againſt Eli, all things "which I have ſpoken concerning his houſe: When I "begin, I will alſo make an end. For I have told him, "that I will judge his houſe for ever, for the iniquity "which he knoweth; becauſe his ſons made themſelves "vile, and he reſtrained them not," ver. 12, 13. Theſe, indeed, are memorable words, and ought to be engraven on the heart of every head of a family! If it is a duty in parents, not to provoke their children to wrath, when they purſue a regular conduct, Epheſ. vi. 4. it is equally incumbent on them to treat thoſe children with rigour, when they refuſe to comply with ſuch exhortations as are made to them, in order to reclaim them.

Eli was ſollicitous to know what the Lord had revealed to Samuel, ver. 17. but this young ſervant of God could not prevail upon himſelf to diſcloſe the dreadful purport of the divine threatnings, till ſtrictly adjured to it by the high prieſt; Samuel then unfolded the fatal ſecret, which this unfortunate father had been ſo anxious to know. Eli liſtened to the awful predictions againſt himſelf and his family, with a temper of mind which well became him in that conjuncture, and at laſt pronounced thoſe noble words, by which he acknowledged the enormity of his own conduct, and the juſtice of the threatened vengeance. It is the Lord, ſaid he, let him do what ſeemeth him good.

Samuel, after this event, ſoon became known from one end of the land to the other, to be a prophet of the Lord, and a judge eſtabliſhed over the Iſraelites in Eli's ſtead.

Samuel was of the tribe of Levi, of the branch of Kohath; becauſe he exerciſed ſeveral ſacerdotal functions, ſuch as anointing Saul and David; offering up ſacrifices even out of the tabernacle; wearing a linen ephod, and being named by the Pſalmiſt, with Moſes and Aaron, the prieſts of the Lord, Pſalm xcix. 6. Some ancient fathers have thought him to have been of the race of Aaron, and to have executed the function of high prieſt, after the death of Eli, and his two ſons, Auguſt. in Pſalm xcviii. cont. Fauſt. & alib. Chryſoſt. Ambroſ. & al. Joſephus, likewiſe, ſeems to hint ſomething like this, when he ſays, that Saul knew him to be Samuel, when he appeared to the witch of Endor, in a prieſtly habit, Antiq. lib. 6. c. 15. tho' he calls his father a plain Levite, where he mentions his birth, ibid. lib. 5. c. 11. But it appears from the Chronicles, that he was of the branch of Kohath, the ſecond ſon of Levi, 1 Chron. vi. 22. &c. And as for his wearing an ephod, David did the ſame, 2 Sam vi. 14. And Gideon, Manoah, Saul, Elijah, and others, who were neither prieſts nor Levites, have ſacrificed upon particular occaſions; and ſome prophets, and even their diſciples, have anointed kings, vid. int. al. 2 Kings ix. 1. &c. As to the paſſage cited from the Pſalms, Samuel is only mentioned there among them that call upon the Lord; by which may be meant, either the Levites in general, whoſe office it was; or elſe, as is more likely from the next verſe, among them that called to God effectually, ſo as to be heard by him, as Moſes and Aaron did; but who officiated in the high prieſt's function, after Eli's death, is neither eaſy, nor of any importance to conjecture, but more probably one of the Aaronic race than a Levite.

One expreſſion, however, in the threatening meſſage of the prophet to Eli, would incline one to think, that ſome perſon of the elder branch was choſen to the high prieſthood, even during the life of Eli, either by reaſon of his inability, being grown almoſt blind with age, or for his remiſſneis, or both. The words are, And thou ſhalt ſee an enemy in my habitation, in all that wealth God ſhall give Iſrael, chap. ii. ver. 32. where it is to be obſerved, that the word tzar, which we render an enemy, ſignifies likewiſe a rival; and is uſed in that ſenſe in the beginning of this book, chap. i. ver. 6. Now it is plain, that this rival could be no other than ſome head of the elder branch of Eleazar, from whom the prieſthood had been transferred to him; but we will not affirm any thing farther about it.

CHAP. IV.

1 The Iſraelites are overcome by the Philiſtines at Eben-Ezer. 3 They fetch the Ark, unto the terror of the Philiſtines. 10 They are ſmitten again, the Ark taken, Hophni and Phinehas are ſlain. 12 Eli at the news falling backward, breaketh his neck. 19 Phinehas wife, diſcouraged in her travail with Ichabod, dieth.

AND the word of Samuel came to all Iſrael. Now Iſrael went out againſt the Philiſtines to battle, and pitched beſide Eben-ezer: and the Philiſtines pitched in Aphek.

2 And the Philiſtines put themſelves in aray againſt Iſrael: and when they joined battle, Iſrael was ſmitten before the Philiſtines: and they ſlew of the army in the field about four thouſand men.

3 ¶ And when the people were come into the camp, the elders of Iſrael ſaid, Wherefore hath the LORD ſmitten us today before the Philiſtines? Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of Shiloh unto us, that when it cometh among us, it may ſave us out of the hand of our enemies.

4 So the people ſent to Shiloh, that they might bring from thence the ark of the covenant of the LORD of hoſts, which dwelleth between the cherubims: and the two ſons of Eli, Hophni, and Phinehas, were there, with the ark of the covenant of God.

5 And when the ark of the covenant of the LORD came into the camp, all Iſrael ſhouted with a great ſhout, ſo that the earth rang again.

6 And when the Philiſtines heard the noiſe of the ſhout, they ſaid, What meaneth the noiſe of this great ſhout in the camp of the Hebrews? And they underſtood that the ark of the LORD was come into the camp.

7 And

7 And the Philiſtines were afraid, for they ſaid, God is come into the camp. And they ſaid, Wo unto us; for there hath not been ſuch a thing heretofore.

8 Wo unto us: who ſhall deliver us out of the hand of theſe mighty Gods? theſe are the Gods that ſmote the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderneſs.

9 Be ſtrong, and quit yourſelves like men, O ye Philiſtines, that ye be not ſervants unto the Hebrews, as they have been to you: quit yourſelves like men, and fight.

10 ¶ And the Philiſtines fought, and Iſrael was ſmitten, and they fled every man into his tent: and there was a very great ſlaughter, for there fell of Iſrael thirty thouſand footmen.

11 And the ark of God was taken; and the two ſons of Eli, Hophni, and Phinehas, were ſlain.

12 ¶ And there ran a man of Benjamin out of the army, and came to Shiloh the ſame day with his clothes rent, and with earth upon his head.

13 And when he came, lo, Eli ſat upon a ſeat by the way-ſide, watching: for his heart trembled for the ark of God. And when the man came into the city and told it, all the city cried out.

14 And when Eli heard the noiſe of the crying, he ſaid, What meaneth the noiſe of this tumult? And the man came in haſtily, and told Eli.

15 Now Eli was ninety and eight years old; and his eyes were dim, that he could not ſee.

16 And the man ſaid unto Eli, I am he that came out of the army, and I fled to-day out of the army. And he ſaid, What is there done, my ſon?

17 And the meſſenger anſwered and ſaid, Iſrael is fled before the Philiſtines, and there hath been alſo a great ſlaughter among the people, and thy two ſons alſo, Hophni and Phinehas, are dead, and the ark of God is taken.

18 And it came to paſs when he made mention of the ark of God, that he fell from off the ſeat backward by the ſide of the gate, and his neck brake, and he died: for he was an old man, and heavy. And he had judged Iſrael forty years.

19 ¶ And his daughter-in-law Phinehas wife was with child near to be delivered: and when ſhe heard the tidings that the ark of God was taken, and that her father-in-law, and her husband were dead, ſhe bowed herſelf, and travailed; for her pains came upon her.

20 And about the time of her death, the women that ſtood by her, ſaid unto her, Fear not, for thou haſt born a ſon. But ſhe anſwered not, neither did ſhe regard it.

21 And ſhe named the child I-chabod, ſaying, The glory is departed from Iſrael (becauſe the ark of God was taken, and becauſe of her father-in-law and her huſband)

22 And ſhe ſaid, The glory is departed from Iſrael: for the ark of God is taken.

Ver. 1. And the word of Samuel came unto all Iſrael.] The revelation of the Divine Will, which had ſeldom been imparted to the Iſraelites in former days, (chap. iii. 1.) now became very frequent: For as Samuel himſelf was ready to inſtruct all who applied to him for that purpoſe, ſo he founded colleges of the prophets, as we read in the following parts of this book, who in time were ſettled in ſeveral parts of the country, for preſerving and propagating the knowledge of God among the people in a more effectual manner, chap. x. 5. xix. 18, 19, 20, &c. which induced Abarbinel to diſcourſe in the following manner: "In the days of Eli the word of the Lord was ſcarce, and "viſion ſeldom: But when Samuel appeared, he not only "propheſied frequently, but many of the Iſraelites, by "his inſtrumentality, were endued with the ſame ſpirit "according to theſe words, and the Lord appeared in "Shiloh, (ſo he underſtands them) becauſe the Lord was "revealed to Samuel in Shiloh. Which ſignifies, that the "influence of the ſpirit that deſcended upon Samuel in "Shiloh, extended (becauſe of its abundance) to others, "who were diſpoſed to receive it; in conſequence of "which, they alſo propheſied."

—— Now Iſrael went out againſt the Philiſtines to battle.] This event coincides with the middle of that forty years domination, which the Philiſtines exerciſed over the Iſraelites, mentioned Judges xiii. 1. And the Iſraelites were perhaps animated to the vindication of their ancient liberties, by the late death of the Philiſtine lords, and the great ſlaughter which Samſon had made of that people, in the laſt action of his heroic life.

—— And pitched beſide Eben Ezer.] Thus was this place called when the firſt book of Samuel was written; and it was ſo denominated from the famous battle which Samuel fought with the Philiſtines twenty years after the engagement recorded in this chapter. Eben Ezer ſignifies, the ſtone of help.

—— And the Philiſtines pitched in Aphek.] Aphek was a city in the tribe of Judah, and ſituated on the confines of the country belonging to the Philiſtines, who we may ſuppoſe had made themſelves maſters of this city, during their other oppreſſions of the Iſraelites. There were other cities of this name, and we ſhall be careful to deſcribe them in our comment on thoſe paſſages of ſcripture where they occur.

The Iſraelites engaged the Philiſtines near this place, but were defeated by their enemies, who ſlew four thouſand of their men. Tho' Samuel was eſtabliſhed a prophet, and it was ſo publickly known, that all Iſrael came to conſult with him, as the foregoing verſe ſeems to import, yet the elders did not take his advice with relation to this war, as Ralbag juſtly thinks. For his opinion is much more probable and conſiſtent with right reaſon, than theirs who imagine thoſe elders did conſult him on this occaſion; and that he directed them to attack their enemies, meerly that the ſentence denounced againſt the ſons of Eli might be accompliſhed.

The cauſe of this defeat may be diſcovered without any difficulty, ſince the crimes which had been ſo long committed in Iſrael, may be juſtly conſidered as the natural harbingers of ſo fatal an event. The Iſraelites however ſeemed to be as much aſtoniſhed at it, as if it had really been one of thoſe diſpenſations of providence that appear inexplicable to human reaſon; and they accordingly had recourſe to a very wild expedient, to ſecure them the victory in the next engagement. They imagin'd, that if they did but bring into their camp, the ark of God, which had been ſo often preſent in the battles, wherein Joſhua was conqueror, they ſhould certainly prove as victorious as that great commander. In conſequence of this ill founded ſurmiſe, they reſolved to ſend for that ſacred ſymbol of the Divine Preſence, and it was accordingly convey'd to their camp: Hophni and Phinehas likewiſe attended it, ſince the old age and other infirmities of Eli would not permit himto diſcharge that function himſelf.

Had the Iſraelites but reflected on their long rebellion againſt the God of all their mercies, they might naturally have concluded, that this external ſymbol of the divine favour would avail them but little, while they continued in their diſobedience and impenitency. This, however, was far from being their temper of mind at that time; and they received the ark with ſuch loud acclamations, as for ſome time diffuſed a terror through the army of the Philiſtines. They flattered themſelves, that this precious pledge of the Divine Preſence, would infallibly render them invincible. They perhaps cried out, in the language of Moſes, when the ark ſet forward, Riſe up, Lord, and let thine enemies be ſcattered, and let them that hate thee flee before thee. Deut. x. 35. But thoſe enemies were then the miniſters of the Divine Vengeance, and they fully acquitted themſelves of that fatal commiſſion.

The Philiſtines, indeed, were ſtruck with conſternation, when they firſt heard the ſhouts of the Iſraelites, and underſtood that they were occaſioned by the arrival of the ark of God in their camp. Wo unto us! cried they, Who ſhall deliver us out of the hand of thoſe mighty Gods? ver. 7. They fought with men before, and were victorious, but they imagined they were now to encounter with the God of Iſrael, before whom none could ſtand. The Hebrew words Adirim Elohim, which we tranſlate mighty gods, are rendered by Theodoret, the ſtrong God; which agrees with what goes before, God is come into the camp, ver. 7. And with the Targum, Who ſhall deliver us out of the hand of the word of the Lord?

—— Theſe are the gods, continued the Philiſtines, that ſmote the Egyptians with all the plagues in the wilderneſs, ver. 7. But they ſeem not to have had a right conception of the Sacred Hiſtory, and thought the plagues which are there enumerated, had been inflicted on the Egyptians, while the Iſraelites were in the wilderneſs. But Jonathan thus paraphraſes the paſſage, Who ſmote the Egyptians with all manner of plagues, and wrought wonders for his people in the deſert.

While the ſoldiers in the Philiſtine army were ſtruck with theſe terrors, and utter'd the foregoing expreſſions, their great commanders exhorted them to be courageous, and to quit themſelves like men, ver. 9. They repreſented their ſuppoſed danger as a motive for redoubling their efforts in the enſuing battle, and urged them to act with a bravery proportionable to the apprehenſions they had entertain'd of their enemies. Theſe exhortations had their deſired effect; the two armies engaged, and the Philiſtines were again victorious over the Iſraelites: Thirty thouſand of theſe latter were ſlain; Hophni and Phinehas were found among the dead, and even the ark of God was taken by the Philiſtines, ver 11.

Eli was then ſitting in the way which led to the field of Battle, that he might be near enough to receive information of all that paſſed. He undoubtedly was terrified at the danger to which he knew his ſons and the army of Iſrael were expoſed; but he trembled chiefly for the ark of God, ver. 13. While his mind was perplexed with theſe agitations, a perſon, who came from the camp of the Iſraelites, with the uſual expedition of thoſe who are the meſſengers of bad tydings, acquainted the unfortunate old man with the death of his two ſons, the defeat of the Iſraelites, and the captivity of the ark. This meſſenger was of the tribe of Benjamin, and the Jews fancy him to have been Saul, and that he had recovered the tables of the law from the hands of Goliath. [Talmud tit. Sota. fo. 44. Solomon Jarchi on the firſt of Sam. lib. 4. pag. 137.] but we are not obliged to ſubſcribe to this opinion, ſince it cannot be ſupported by any particulars recorded by the Sacred Hiſtorian, who only informs us, of what tribe this man was, from whom Eli received this tragical account.

Eli was very attentive to the meſſenger, while he related the melancholy particulars of the battle, but when he at laſt heard that the ark of God was taken by the enemy, his grief became inſupportable; he ſunk backward from his ſeat, and broke his neck and died. This may be ſaid of the unhappy old man, that tho' he had been too indulgent a father, yet he is highly to be commended, for being leſs afflicted with the death of his ſons, and the ſlaughter of his people, than he was at the loſs of the ark of God. For he kept up his courage, and did not fall, till he heard that mentioned. The more public any calamity proves, the greater is the affliction which men of worthy diſpoſition experience on that occaſion, ſuch a one was Eli, who incurred the Divine Diſpleaſure, principally on the account of his ſons, and if we accept the inſtances of his frail indulgence to them, we muſt certainly allow him to have been a man adorned with many virtues. The Jews obſerve in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 13. that God, on the very day of Eli's death, forſook the tabernacle in Shiloh, having delivered his ſtrength into captivity. Pſalm lxxviii. 60, 61.

The news of the taking of the ark, with the other calamities of that day, proved as fatal to the daughter-in-law of Eli, as they had been to him. She was the wife of Phinehas, and very near the time of her travail; theſe diſmal tydings therefore ſoon brought the pangs of labour upon her, and ſhe was delivered of a ſon, whoſe birth coſt her her own life. She had but juſt time to confer upon him a name ſuitable to the ſiniſter circumſtances of his nativity; and ſhe called him I-chabod, in order to intimate that the glory was departed from Iſrael. Bochart tranſlates this name, inglorious, that is, ſaith he, without the true God. Hieroz. p. 1. l. 2. c. 34.

Phinehas left another ſon, named Ahitub, who is ſuppoſed by ſome to have ſucceeded his grand-father Eli in the high prieſts office, becauſe we find his ſon Ahiah poſſeſſed of that dignity in the time of Saul. From him it paſſed to Ahimelech, his brother, who was killed by that jealous prince; and from Ahimelech it deſcended to his ſon Abiathar, who was the laſt of Eli's race that enjoy'd it. As to the government of the people, it was given by God to Samuel, a man of uncommon zeal and courage, and qualified to recover the Iſraelites from their abominable defection and idolatry.

CHAP. V.

1 The Philiſtines having brought the ark into Aſhdod, ſet it in the houſe of Dagon. 3 Dagon is ſmitten down and cut in pieces, and they of Aſhdod ſmitten with Emerods. 8 So God dealeth them of Gath, when it was brought thither. 10 And ſo with them of Ekron when it was brought thither.

AND the Philiſtines took the ark of God, and brought it from Eben Ezer unto Aſhdod.

2 When the Philiſtines took the ark of God, they brought it into the houſe of Dagon, and ſet it by Dagon.

3 ¶ And when they of Aſhdod aroſe early on the morrow, behold, Dagon was fallen upon his face to the earth before the ark of the LORD: and they took Dagon, and ſet him in his place again.

4 And when they aroſe early on the morrow morning, behold, Dagon was fallen upon his face to the ground, before the ark of the LORD: and the head of Dagon, and both the palms of his hands were cut off off upon the threſhold, only the ſtump of Dagon was left to him.

5 Therefore neither of the prieſts of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagons houſe, tread on the threſhold of Dagon in Aſhdod, unto this day.

6 But the hand of the LORD was heavy upon them of Aſhdod, and he deſtroyed them, and ſmote them with emerods, even Aſhdod and the coaſts thereof.

7 And when the men of Aſhdod ſaw that it was ſo, they ſaid, The ark of the God of Iſrael ſhall not abide with us: for his hand is ſore upon us, and upon Dagon our god.

8 They ſent therefore, and gathered all the lords of the Philiſtines unto them, and ſaid, What ſhall we do with the ark of the God of Iſrael? And they anſwered, Let the ark of the God of Iſrael be carried about unto Gath. And they carried the ark of the God of Iſrael about thither.

9 And it was ſo, that after they had carried it about, the hand of the LORD was againſt the city with a very great deſtruction: and he ſmote the men of the city both ſmall and great, and they had emerods in their ſecret parts.

10 Therefore they ſent the ark of God to Ekron: and it came to paſs as the ark of God came to Ekron, that the Ekronites cried out, ſaying, They have brought about the ark of the God of Iſrael to us, to ſlay us and our people.

11 So they ſent and gathered together all the lords of the Philiſtines, and ſaid, Send away the ark of the God of Iſrael, and let it go again to his own place, that it ſlay us not, and our people: for there was a deadly deſtruction throughout all the city; the hand of God was very heavy there.

12 And the men that died not, were ſmitten with the emerods: and the cry of the city went up to heaven.

Ver. 1. And the Philiſtines took the ark of God.] Abarbinel aſſigns four or five reaſons why God ſuffered the ark of his preſence to fall into the hands of thoſe uncircumciſed people. The Iſraelites were ſuch great ſinners, that they were unworthy of the Divine Preſence among them. The idolatry of Micah remained in the land to this day; God therefore fulfilled his threatning, Levit. xxvi. 19. 31. The tranſgreſſions alſo of the prieſts provoked them to deliver up the ark, which was in their hands when they were killed. And the Iſraelites greatly offended, in carrying the ark into the field of battle without asking counſel of God, who reſolved, therefore, to demonſtrate his power even among the enemies of Iſrael.

——— And brought it from Eben Ezer.] Where the Iſraelites were encamped before the battle, chap. iv. 1. and whither they, perhaps, fled, to ſave the ark, when their army was overthrown.

——— Unto Aſhdod.] Aſhdod, or Azoth was aſſigned by Joſhua to the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 47. but was poſſeſſed for a conſiderable time by the Philiſtines. It was a maritime city, and had a port on the Mediterranean-ſea. It was ſituated between Askelon and Akron, or between Jamnia and Askelon, as it is ſaid in Judith iii. 2. or, according to Joſephus, between Gaza and Jamnia (Antiq. xiii. 23.) All this may be eaſily reconciled, by allowing that it lay between theſe cities, but not immediately, nor in the ſame ſenſe. It was in future times the principal city of the country called Azotus; and perhaps was ſo now; which might be the reaſon the ark was carried thither, preferable to any other city, being ſituated alſo in the middle of the five principalities, and having a famous temple in it, mentioned in the next verſe, whither all the inhabitants of the country reſorted. Herodotus declares, that Pſammetichus, king of Egypt, lay twenty nine years before Azoth, or, according to the Hebrew reading, Aſhdod; which was a longer ſiege than was ever ſuſtained by any other city. The text of the Maccabees inform us, that Judas Maccabæus was ſlain on the mount of Azotus. 1 Maccab. ix. 18.

When the Philiſtines had conveyed the ark to Aſhdod, they placed it in the temple of their idol Dagon, as an acceptable offering to him, and likewiſe as his captive. But when they entered the temple the next morning, Dagon was fallen upon his face to the earth, before the ark of the Lord, ver. 3. They took him up therefore, and ſet him in his place again, attributing this firſt humiliation to ſome unheeded accident. They perhaps, might impute it to ſome defect in the pediſtal, or might imagine the ſtatue itſelf not to have been exactly poiſed; or laſtly, they might attribute it to ſome unuſual ſhock. But when they came in again, on the ſecond day, they not only ſaw their god in the proſtrate poſture they beheld him the preceding day, but diſmembred alſo of his head, and hands, and feet, which lay on the threſhold; nor was any part of him left entire, except the trunk of his body. Hence came the ſuperſtitious cuſtom among his prieſts, never to tread on the threſhold as they went into the temple of that idol; either in remembrance of this mutilation as a ſingular calamity, or becauſe it had been hallowed, by having ſerved for a reſting place to the head and hands of their perſecuted God. This ſuperſtition prevailed for many ages, as may be collected from Zephaniah, chap. i. ver. 9. where thoſe are threatned who leap on the threſhold. The Jews have a ſtrange conceit, that the Philiſtines, henceforward forſaking Dagon himſelf, worſhipped the threſhold of his temple. Vid. Buxtorf Hiſt. Arcæ. c. 19. p. 172.

The Philiſtines were ſoon ſenſible of another, and much more fatal inſtance of the Divine Diſpleaſure; for the Sacred Hiſtorian informs us, that the hand of the Lord was heavy upon them of Aſhdod and he deſtroyed them, with a peſtilence, in all probability, of which many died, ver. 12. while thoſe who ſurvived were grievouſly tormented with emerods. Interpreters differ not a little in their notions of this plague, ſome taking it for a dyſentery, which was ſo violent, that it putrified their inteſtines; while others ſuppoſe it was that diſtemper which phyſicians calls procidentia ani. But moſt expoſitors, both ancient and modern, take it as we do, for the diſeaſe called the enterods; for it broke out in the hinder parts, as appears from the words of the Pſalmiſt, lxxviii. 66. as they are commonly underſtood.

At the end of this verſe the Vulgate and the Septuagint add, that a great number of mice ſtarted up out of the earth, and made great devaſtations in the fields. But, as Lyra well obſerves, this gloſs, in all likelihood, being written in the margin, out of chap. vi. 4, 5. it crept at laſt into the text, tho' it be neither in the Hebrew, Chaldee, Syriac, nor Arabic.

Aſhdod, and its whole territory, labouring under ſo dreadful a calamity, the inhabitants reſolved to keep the ark no longer among them: But, in order to proceed with due circumſpection, they called an aſſembly of all the lords of the Philiſtines, to deliberate on the proper means of delivering them from this raging evil, and in what manner they ſhould diſpoſe of the fatal ark, which they conſidered as the cauſe of all their calamities. It was then reſolved, ſolved, that the ark ſhould be removed to Gath, (which was the next city to Aſhdod, and it lay northward of it) for they apprehended that Aſhdod was a place unacceptable to it. The ark was accordingly removed, but the ſame plague, in conjunction with another ſort of emerods, followed it to Gath, and ſmote all the inhabitants without diſtinction. At Aſhdod, it is ſaid, they were ſmitten with emerods, without any addition; but now the Sacred Hiſtorian declares that they were ſmitten with emerods in their ſecret parts, ver. 9. whence it is evident, that this plague was varied in ſome meaſure; and it being the moſt univerſally interpreted in both places, that they were afflicted by emerods, we may ſuppoſe that the inhabitants of Aſhdod had the common ſort, which appear outwardly, but that thoſe of Gath had the blind ſort, which are inward.

The inhabitants of Gath were ſtruck with ſuch a conſternation, at this mark of the Divine wrath, that they ſent the ark to Ekron, but the people of that place cried out, They have brought about the ark of the God of Iſrael to us, to ſlay us, and our people, ver. 10. Theſe ſeem to be the words of the magiſtrates of that city, who had been convinced, from the experience of the other great cities, that no place was ſecure from the avenging ſtroke of the God of Iſrael. Their apprehenſions were far from being groundleſs; and great was their lamentation for the loſs of thoſe who died; and for the ſevere pain they ſuffered from the emerods; the diſeaſe gathering ſtrength, and growing worſe as it ſpread; for we find the affliction of the Philiſtines expreſſed in deeper terms, upon every removal of the ark.

CHAP. VI.

1 After ſeven months the Philiſtines take counſel, how to ſend back the ark. 10 They bring it on a new cart with an offering unto Beth-ſhemeſh. 19 The people are ſmitten for looking into the ark. 21 They ſend to them of Kirjath-jearim.

AND the ark of the LORD was in the country of the Philiſtines ſeven months.

2 And the Philiſtines called for the prieſts and the diviners, ſaying, What ſhall we do to the ark of the LORD? tell us wherewith we ſhall ſend it to his place.

3 And they ſaid, If ye ſend away the ark of the God of Iſrael, ſend it not empty; but in any wiſe return him a treſpaſs-offering: then ye ſhall be healed, and it ſhall be known to you, why his hand is not removed from you.

4 Then ſaid they, What ſhall be the treſpaſs-offering which we ſhall return to him? They anſwered, Five golden emerods, and five golden mice, according to the number of the lords of the Philiſtines: for one plague was on you all, and on your lords.

5 Wherefore ye ſhall make images of your emerods, and images of your mice that mar the land, and ye ſhall give glory unto the God of Iſrael: peradventure he will lighten his hand from off you, and from off your gods, and from off your land.

6 Wherefore then do ye harden your hearts as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardned their hearts? when he had wrought wonderfully among them, did they not let the people go, and they departed?

7 Now therefore make a new cart, and take two milch-kine, on which there hath come no yoke, and tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them:

8 And take the ark of the LORD, and lay it upon the cart, and put the jewels of gold which ye return him for a treſpaſs-offering, in a coffer by the ſide thereof, and ſend it away, that it may go.

9 And ſee, if it goeth up by the way of his own coaſt to Beth-ſhemeſh, then he hath done us this great evil: but if not, then we ſhall know that it is not his hand that ſmote us; it was a chance that happened to us.

10 ¶ And the men did ſo: and took two milch-kine, and tied them to the cart, and ſhut up their calves at home:

11 And they laid the ark of the LORD upon the cart, and the coffer with the mice of gold, and the images of their emerods.

12 And the kine took the ſtraight way to the way of Beth-ſhemeſh, and went along the high-way, lowing as they went, and turned not aſide to the right hand or to the left; and the lords of the Philiſtines went after them unto the border of Beth-ſhemeſh.

13 And they of Beth-ſhemeſh were reaping their wheat-harveſt in the valley: and they lifted up their eyes, and ſaw the ark, and rejoiced to ſee it.

14 And the cart came into the field of Joſhua a Beth-ſhemite, and ſtood there, where there was a great ſtone: and they clave the wood of the cart, and offered the kine a burnt-offering unto the LORD.

15 And the Levites took down the ark of the LORD, and the coffer that was with it, wherein the jewels of gold were, and put them on the great ſtone: and the men of Beth-ſhemeſh offered burnt-offerings, and ſacrificed ſacrifices the ſame day unto the LORD.

16 And when the five lords of the Philiſtines had ſeen it, they returned to Ekron the ſame day.

17 And theſe are the golden emerods which the Philiſtines returned for a treſpaſs-offering unto the LORD; for Aſhdod one, for Gaza one, for Askelon one, for Gath one, for Ekron one.

18 And

18 And the golden mice, according to the number of all the cities of the Philiſtines, belonging to the five lords, both of fenced cities, and of country villages, even unto the great ſtone of Abel, whereon they ſet down the ark of the LORD: which ſtone remaineth unto this day in the field of Joſhua the Beth-ſhemite.

19 ¶ And he ſmote the men of Beth-ſhemeſh, becauſe they had looked into the ark of the LORD, even he ſmote of the people fifty thouſand and threeſcore and ten men: and the people lamented, becauſe the LORD had ſmitten many of the people with a great ſlaughter.

20 And the men of Beth-ſhemeſh ſaid, Who is able to ſtand before this holy LORD God? and to whom ſhall he go up from us?

21 ¶ And they ſent meſſengers to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, ſaying, The Philiſtines have brought again the ark of the LORD; come ye down, and fetch it up to you.

Ver. 1. And the ark of the Lord was in the country of the Philiſtines ſeven months.] Joſephus relates, that the ark was carried through all the five cities of the Philiſtines; but this opinion is not authorized by any paſſage of ſcripture; and we find that the Ekronites, convinced of the deſtruction and plague, which were the fatal concomitants of the ark, did not ſo much as think of procuring it to be ſent either to Askelon or Gaza, but only that it might be conveyed to its proper place. Their requeſt, however, was not complied with; for though the ark was removed from their city, yet, inſtead of being ſent back to the Iſraelites, it was only carried into the country, or the fields; for that is the import of the Hebrew word ſadeth. The removal of the ark into the fields ſeems to have given birth to thoſe prodigious ſwarms of mice which marred the land, ver. 5. and that Gaza and Askelon were now puniſhed by the ſame plagues which the other cities had ſuſtained; that the whole body of this people groaning under the ſame ſeverities, and diſtreſs, there might be no diſagreement among them, with reſpect to the diſmiſſion of the ark. And hence, perhaps, we may diſcover, that tho' the Philiſtines were diſtributed into five ſatrapies or lordſhips, they yet were ſo linked together, that one of them could not act in any affair of publick concern, without the concurrence of all the reſt; and which is no where ſo evident as in this caſe of the Ekronites, who were ſo entirely convinced that the ark ought to be ſent to its place, that we cannot conceive what could have prevented them from acting accordingly, had it not been that they were apprehenſive of deviating from their common conſtitution, and of being called to an account by the reſt, for preſuming to act independently of them, in a matter of ſuch importance.

The lords of the country then ſent for the prieſts, and likewiſe for the diviners, ver. 2. who were a kind of prophets, that pretended to be acquainted with the Will of God, and to predict future events. They are called koſemim, in the Hebrew; and Bochart thinks the Roman word, caſſullus, is derived from thence, being as much as koſine-el, the miniſter of God. Theſe prieſts and diviners being deſired to declare what meaſures were moſt expedient to be taken in this calamitous time of peſtilence, and in what manner it would be fitteſt to ſend the ark from among them; their anſwer was, that they ought not to ſend it away empty, but, by all means, with a treſpaſs-offering, as an atonement. They were then asked what this treſpaſs-offering muſt be? upon which they replied, Five golden emerods, and five golden mice, according to the number of the lords of the Philiſtines; who were five, and were to be at the charge of offering one for each of them. It was cuſtomary for the ancient heathens to conſecrate to the gods of whom they implored deliverance from danger, ſuch monuments of their preſervation, as repreſented the evils from which they had been freed. To Iſis and Neptune they dedicated a table, which contained the expreſs image of the ſhipwreck they had eſcaped; and ſlaves and captives, when they had regained their liberty, offered their chains. The Philiſtines, therefore, hoping to be relieved in a ſhort time from the emerods and mice with which they were ſo ſeverely infeſted, ſent the images of them to that god from whom they expected their deliverance. This cuſtom ſtill prevails among the Indians, as Tavernier relates in his travels to their country; for he declares, p. 92. That when any pilgrim reſorts to a pagod, for the cure of any diſtemper, he brings the figure of the member affected, made either of gold, ſilver, or copper, according to his quality. This he offers to his god, and then ſings, as all others do, after they have made their oblations. Mr. Selden alſo hath obſerved, that mice were uſed among the ancient heathens for luſtration and cleanſing, de Diis Syris, Syntag. 1. cap. 6.

Ver. 6. Wherefore then do ye harden your hearts as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts, when he had wrought wonderfully among them? Theſe words ſeem to import, that ſome of the Philiſtines were unwilling to ſend the ark away with ſuch preſents; which made the prieſts and diviners deſire them to be more conſiderate in their proceeding, leſt they ſhould incur the fate of Pharaoh and his people; with whoſe hiſtory theſe men were acquainted; and as they were diſcreet perſons, they enforced, in a proper manner, the examples of former times; and believed as much as many of the Iſraelites did, or rather more.

Ver. 7. Now therefore make a new cart, and take two milch kine, on which there hath come no yoke.] The new cart was ordered in honour to the God of Iſrael, and the kine, unconſcious of the yoke, were to prove whether he would interfere in the return of his ark; for ſuch unbroken cattle could never proceed in the right way, without an evident miracle.

——And tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them.] It would be ſtill more wonderful, if theſe creatures did not return to their calves when they heard them bleat after them; and which they naturally would have done, if a greater power had not drawn them a contrary way.

Ver. 8. And take the ark of the Lord, and lay it upon the cart, and put the jewels of gold which ye return him for a treſpaſs-offering, in a coffer by the ſide thereof, &c.] They had either heard, or their preſent ſufferings had rendered them apprehenſive, that it was dangerous to look into the ark; and therefore they did not open it, to depoſite their preſent within it, but placed it in a coffer by the ſide of the ark. It is probable that the word argaz, which occurs in no paſſage of the ſacred ſcripture but this, might ſignify, in the language of the Philiſtines, either a coffer, or a purſe, or a wallet, as Joſephus tranſlates it.

Ver. 9. And ſee if it goeth up by the way of his own coaſt.] Without any guide to conduct it, and being ſet, as Joſephus obſerves, in a place where three ways met.

—— To Beth-ſhemeſh.] This was a city belonging to the prieſts, and in the tribe of Judah. Euſebius declares, it was ten miles from Eleutheropolis, eaſtward, in the way to Nicopolis, or Emaüs. Beth-ſhemeſh ſignifies, the houſe of the ſun; and as the tribes of Dan and Judah were adjacent to each other, the ſame city is ſometimes repreſented as belonging to one, ſometimes to the other.

Ver. 12. And the kine took the ſtraight way to the way of Beth-ſhemeſh, and went along the high-way, lowing as they went, and turned not aſide to the right hand or to the left.] Tho' they had no driver, nor viſible director; and had ſuch ſtrong attractives to draw them back, and there were ſo many other ways in which they might have gone; yet they went directly toward Beth-ſhemeſh, without the leaſt deviation; lowing all the way after their calves, which had been taken from them, and to whom their natural affection would have inclined them to return, if they had not been by a higher hand led forward to the land of Judah.

ſolved, that the ark ſhould be removed to Gath, (which was the next city to Aſhdod, and it lay northward of it) for they apprehended that Aſhdod was a place unacceptable to it. The ark was accordingly removed, but the ſame plague, in conjunction with another ſort of emerods, followed it to Gath, and ſmote all the inhabitants without diſtinction. CHAP. VI.

1 After ſeven months the Philiſtines take counſel, how to ſend back the ark. 10 They bring it on a new cart with an offering unto Beth-ſhemeſh. 19 The people are ſmitten for looking into the ark. 21 They ſend to them of Kirjath-jearim.

21 ¶ And they ſent meſſengers to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, ſaying, The Philiſtines have brought again the ark of the LORD; come ye down, and fetch it up to you.

Ver. 1. And the ark of the Lord was in the country of the Philiſtines ſeven months.] Joſephus relates, that the ark was carried through all the five cities of the Philiſtines; but this opinion is not authorized by any paſſage of ſcripture; and we find that the Ekronites, convinced of the deſtruction and plague, which were the fatal concomitants of the ark, did not ſo much as think of procuring it to be ſent either to Askelon or Gaza, but only that it might be conveyed to its proper place. The Philiſtines, therefore, hoping to be relieved in a ſhort time from the emerods and mice with which they were ſo ſeverely infeſted, ſent the images of them to that god from whom they expected their deliverance. This cuſtom ſtill prevails among the Indians, as Tavernier relates in his travels to their country; for he declares, p. 92. That when any pilgrim reſorts to a pagod, for the cure of any diſtemper, he brings the figure of the member affected, made either of gold, ſilver, or copper, according to his quality. This he offers to his god, and then ſings, as all others do, after they have made their oblations. Mr. Selden alſo hath obſerved, that mice were uſed among the ancient heathens for luſtration and cleanſing, de Diis Syris, Syntag. 1. cap. 6.

Ver. 6. Wherefore then do ye harden your hearts as the Egyptians and Pharaoh hardened their hearts, when he had wrought wonderfully among them? Theſe words ſeem to import, that ſome of the Philiſtines were unwilling to ſend the ark away with ſuch preſents; which made the prieſts and diviners deſire them to be more conſiderate in their proceeding, leſt they ſhould incur the fate of Pharaoh and his people; with whoſe hiſtory theſe men were acquainted; and as they were diſcreet perſons, they enforced, in a proper manner, the examples of former times; and believed as much as many of the Iſraelites did, or rather more.

Ver. 7. Now therefore make a new cart, and take two milch kine, on which there hath come no yoke.] The new cart was ordered in honour to the God of Iſrael, and the kine, unconſcious of the yoke, were to prove whether he would interfere in the return of his ark; for ſuch unbroken cattle could never proceed in the right way, without an evident miracle.

——And tie the kine to the cart, and bring their calves home from them.] It would be ſtill more wonderful, if theſe creatures did not return to their calves when they heard them bleat after them; and which they naturally would have done, if a greater power had not drawn them a contrary way.

Ver. 8. And take the ark of the Lord, and lay it upon the cart, and put the jewels of gold which ye return him for a treſpaſs-offering, in a coffer by the ſide thereof, &c.] They had either heard, or their preſent ſufferings had rendered them apprehenſive, that it was dangerous to look into the ark; and therefore they did not open it, to depoſite their preſent within it, but placed it in a coffer by the ſide of the ark. It is probable that the word argaz, which occurs in no paſſage of the ſacred ſcripture but this, might ſignify, in the language of the Philiſtines, either a coffer, or a purſe, or a wallet, as Joſephus tranſlates it.

Ver. 9. And ſee if it goeth up by the way of his own coaſt.] Without any guide to conduct it, and being ſet, as Joſephus obſerves, in a place where three ways met.

—— To Beth-ſhemeſh.] This was a city belonging to the prieſts, and in the tribe of Judah. Euſebius declares, it was ten miles from Eleutheropolis, eaſtward, in the way to Nicopolis, or Emaüs. Beth-ſhemeth ſignifies, the houſe of the ſun; and as the tribes of Dan and Judah were adjacent to each other, the ſame city is ſometimes repreſented as belonging to one, ſometimes to the other.

Ver. 12. And the kine took the ſtraight way to the way of Beth-ſhemeſh, and went along the high-way, lowing as they went, and turned not aſide to the right hand or to the left.] Tho' they had no driver, nor viſible director; and had ſuch ſtrong attractives to draw them back, and there were ſo many other ways in which they might have gone; yet they went directly toward Beth-ſhemeſh, without the leaſt deviation; lowing all the way after their calves, which had been taken from them, and to whom their natural affection would have inclined them to return, if they had not been by a higher hand led forward to the land of Judah.

——— And the lords of the Philiſtines went after them unto the border of Beth-ſhemeſh.] To obſerve, as the prieſts adviſed, whether the cattle would proceed thither without any conductor.

Ver. 13. And they of Beth-ſhemeſh were reaping their wheat-harveſt in the valley.] Which being about Pentecoſt, it ſhews that the ark was taken captive about the latter end of the foregoing year. Compare this with ver. 1.

——— And they lifted up their eyes, and ſaw the ark, and rejoyced to ſee it.] They were tranſported to ſee it returning to them in ſo wonderful a manner, without any viſible conductor.

Ver. 14. And the cart came into the field of Joſhua a Bethſhemite, and ſtood there.] This was another aſtoniſhing circumſtance, that the kine went no further, being come into a territory which appertained to a city of the prieſts, who were to take care of the ark of God.

———Where there was a great ſtone.] Which ſeems to have been the boundary of the two countries.

——And they clave the wood of the cart, and offered the kine a burnt-offering unto the Lord.] The great ſtone, we ſuppoſe, ſerving inſtead of an altar, whereon they offered a whole burnt-offering of praiſe and thanks to God for his goodneſs: For they thought in reaſon, that this cart, and theſe kine, ſhould never be converted to any common uſe, and therefore devoted them to this ſacrifice. In which the prieſts did not ſin, tho' cows were not, by the law, allowed to be offered to God; and no oblation was to be made, but in the place which God had choſen. For this was to be underſtood of ordinary offerings, and not of ſuch as might be rendered neceſſary by ſome extraordinary occaſion. And beſide, the ark being here, God was alſo preſent in a peculiar manner, and ſo their ſacrifices, they thought in reaſon, might be here acceptable to him. And they the rather choſe to offer theſe cows to God, becauſe they belonged to him, and therefore were to be his ſacrifice, they having drawn his ark, and being particularly directed by him.

Ver. 15. And the Levites took down the ark of the Lord, and the coffer that was with it, wherein the jewels of gold were.] It was not the buſineſs of the Levites to take down the ark, but of the prieſts; and after they had diſpoſed it to be fit for the Levites to take it upon their ſhoulders, the Kohathites were to carry it. See Numb. iv. 15.

———And put them on the great ſtone.] Where, it is probable, they had before offered up the kine.

———And the men of Beth-ſhemeſh offered burnt-offerings, and ſacrificed ſacrifices the ſame day unto the Lord.] The ſacrifices, which they are ſaid to ſacrifice, were peace-offerings; which they added to their whole burnt-ſacrifices, that they might feaſt upon them; as an expreſſion of great joy to ſee the ark returned to them in a miraculous manner.

Ver. 16. And when the five lords of the Philiſtines.] Who ſtood upon the borders of their country, ver. 12.

——— Had ſeen it.] Beheld all the fore-mentioned wonders.

——— They returned to Ekron the ſame day.] And reported, no doubt, what they had ſeen: which convinced the Philiſtines, that their plagues came from the God of Iſrael.

Ver. 17. And theſe are the golden emerods which the Philiſtines returned for a treſpaſs-offering unto the Lord; for Aſhdod one, for Gaza one, for Askalon one, for Gath one, for Ekron one] Each city of this country, we ſuppoſe, was at the charge of preſenting one emerod. Which cities are not reckoned in the order wherein they lay; but Aſhdod, being the city to which the ark was firſt brought, is mentioned firſt.

Ver. 18. And the golden mice, according to the number of all the cities of the Philiſtines, belonging to the five lords, both of fenced cities, and of country villages, even unto the great ſtone of Abel, whereon they ſet down the ark of the Lord; which ſtone remaineth unto this day, in the field of Joſhua the Bethſhemite.] As the golden emerods were made at the public charge of thoſe cities, ſo were the mice alſo; unto the making of which the villages likewiſe contributed. For their fields being principally infeſted by the mice, as the cities were by the emerods; and they being all ſharers, ſome way or other, in the public calamities, it was thought reaſonable they ſhould all join in this treſpaſs-offering: which was an offering of the whole nation, as far as ever their coaſt extended, and that was to the great ſtone, mentioned ver. 14. which is there called eben gedolah, the great ſtone; but here, ebelgedolah, the great weeping, from the lamentations which were here made, upon the following occaſion, mentioned in the next verſe.

Ver. 19. And he ſmote the men of Beth-ſhemeſh, becauſe they had looked into the ark of the Lord.] Which God had forbidden, not only to the common people, but to the ſons of Levi alſo, Numb. iv. 20. But their curioſity made them forget their duty; being deſirous either to ſee whether the Philiſtines had taken out the tables of the covenant, or that they might have a view of ſuch an ancient and ſacred monument. Out of this ſtory, as Bochart ingeniouſly conjectures, the Greeks forged the fable of Bacchus; who was very angry with the Athenians, becauſe they did not receive his myſteries with pomp, when they were brought out of Bœotia into Attica, and ſmote them with a ſevere diſeaſe.

———Even he ſmote of the people fifty thouſand and threeſcore and ten men.] This tranſlation is made by an unaccountable tranſpoſition of the words; which in the Hebrew lie exactly thus, he ſmote of the people threeſcore and ten men, fifty thouſand men. Which the Gemara, with Jarchi, and Kimchi, and the Targum expound, he ſmote all the Sanhedrim, which were ſeventy men, and fifty thouſand of the common people, (See Selden, lib. 2. de Synedr. cap. 19. n. 3.) But as it is a queſtion, whether there was any ſuch Sanhedrim in theſe days, and it is certain there was not at Beth-ſhemeſh, ſo it is not likely it was ſuch a populous place, nor is there any particle to connect the laſt ſum with the foregoing. Therefore Bochart's interpretation is far more reaſonable, which is this, he ſmote threeſcore and ten men, fifty out of a thouſand men, that is, God was ſo indulgent, as not to ſlay all who were guilty, but only ſeventy of them; obſerving this proportion, that out of a thouſand offenders he ſmote only fifty perſons, that is, a twentieth part. So that of fourteen hundred that deſerved puniſhment, he deſtroyed only ſeventy men, which is the twentieth part of that number. And this interpretation is very eaſy, not only ſupplying the particle mem before eleph, but alſo making the ſenſe to be out of a thouſand. And he inſtances in many places of ſcripture, where this particle is manifeſtly wanting, to make out the true meaning. See his Hierozoicon, P. 1. lib. 2. cap. 36. p. 370. where he ſhews, that Joſephus thus underſtood theſe words, (Antiq. lib. 6. cap 2. where he ſaith, God ſmote ἑβδομήκοντα τῶν ἐν τῇ Βηθσάμης κώμης, ſeventy of thoſe of the village of Beth-ſhemeſh. And thus Abarbinel alſo underſtands the firſt words, that he ſmote at Beth-ſhemeſh only ſeventy men; the other number, he thinks, refers to thoſe who were ſlain in the country of the Philiſtines; for the particle beth, he is of opinion, ſignifies as much as with, in this manner, together with the ſeventy of Beth-ſhemeſh he ſmote in all fifty thouſand, becauſe of the ark. But Bochart's interpretation is moſt natural, and is highly applauded by Wagenſel, who, in his Annotations upon the Gemara of Sota, (cap. 7. ſect. 15.) ſaith, ipſa veritas militat, truth itſelf defends this opinion of Bochart. And indeed it cannot be conceived, there ſhould be ſo many, as our tranſlation ſuppoſes were, ſlain at Beth-ſhemeſh, and the coaſts thereof, being but a village; or if there had, it is very improbable, that God would deſtroy ſo many at once; for there would have been none left to make lamentation. Therefore as the Romans decimated the ſoldiers who had offended, that is, put every tenth man to death, ſo God here puniſhed half ſo many for this offence of looking into the ark.

——— And the people lamented, becauſe the Lord had ſmitten many of the people with a great ſlaughter.] It was a great ſlaughter, conſidering the ſmallneſs of this place; as Abarbinel gloſſes upon theſe words, who taketh it, as Joſephus doth, for a village. And it is not ſtrange, that ſome ſhould be ſmitten with death; for it was always accounted, in all nations, a great prophaneneſs for any one who was not initiated, to pry into their myſteries: To prevent which hereafter, God made ſo many examples of his diſpleaſure in this place.

Ver. 20. And the men of Beth-ſhemeſh ſaid, Who is able to ſtand before this holy Lord God? and to whom ſhall he go up from us?] They ſeem, by this, to be ſenſible of their their raſhneſs, and acknowledge the holineſs of God to be ſuch, that they were not worthy of his Divine Preſence among them; but were deſirous, that ſome who could do him honour better than they, might take the ark into their care. But Abarbinel thinks they were only ſtruck with a great fear, as the Philiſtines were when God plagued them. Which made them ſend the ark from one place to another; as they of Beth-ſhemeſh now ſent to thoſe of Kirjath-jearim, to come and fetch the ark to their city, fearing it would ſtill prove more deſtructive to them, if it continued at Beth-ſhemeſh.

Ver. 21. And they ſent meſſengers to the inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, ſaying, The Philiſtines have brought again the ark of the Lord; come ye down, and fetch it up to you.] This was a city which ſtood upon a hill, and therefore they deſired them to come down from thence. And being a ſtrong place, they thought the ark would there be ſecure, in caſe of any new incurſions of their enemies.

CHAP. VII.

1 They of Kirjath-jearim bring the ark into the houſe of Abinadab, and ſanctify Eleazar his ſon to keep it. 2 After twenty years, 3 The Iſraelites, by Samuel's means, ſolemnly repent at Mizpeh. 9 While Samuel prayeth and ſacrificeth, the Lord diſcomfiteth the Philiſtines by thunder, at Eben-Ezer. 13 The Philiſtines are ſubdued. 15 Samuel peaceably and religiouſly judgeth Iſrael.

AND the men of Kirjath-jearim came and fetcht up the ark of the LORD, and brought it to the houſe of Abinadab in the hill, and ſanctified Eleazar his ſon, to keep the ark of the LORD.

2 And it came to paſs while the ark abode in Kirjath-jearim, that the time was long; for it was twenty years: and all the houſe of Iſrael lamented after the LORD.

3 ¶ And Samuel ſpake unto all the houſe of Iſrael, ſaying, If ye do return unto the LORD with all your hearts, then put away the ſtrange gods, and Aſhtaroth, from among you, and prepare your hearts unto the LORD, and ſerve him only: and he will deliver you out of the hand of the Philiſtines.

4 Then the children of Iſrael did put away Baalim and Aſhtaroth, and ſerved the LORD only.

5 And Samuel ſaid, Gather all Iſrael to Mizpeh, and I will pray for you unto the LORD.

6 And they gathered together to Mizpeh, and drew water, and poured it out before the LORD, and faſted on that day, and ſaid there, We have ſinned againſt the LORD. And Samuel judged the children of Iſrael in Mizpeh.

7 And when the Philiſtines heard that the children of Iſrael were gathered together to Mizpeh, the lords of the Philiſtines went up againſt Iſrael: and when the children of Iſrael heard it, they were afraid of the Philiſtines.

8 And the children of Iſrael ſaid to Samuel, Ceaſe not to cry unto the LORD our God for us, that he will ſave us out of the hand of the Philiſtines.

9 ¶ And Samuel took a ſucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt-offering wholly unto the LORD; and Samuel cried unto the LORD for Iſrael, and the LORD heard him.

10 And as Samuel was offering up the burnt-offering, the Philiſtines drew near to battle againſt Iſrael: but the LORD thundred with a great thunder on that day upon the Philiſtines, and diſcomfited them, and they were ſmitten before Iſrael.

11 And the men of Iſrael went out of Mizpeh, and purſued the Philiſtines, and ſmote them, until they came under Beth-car.

12 Then Samuel took a ſtone, and ſet it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it Eben Ezer, ſaying, Hitherto hath the LORD helped us.

13 ¶ So the Philiſtines were ſubdued, and they came no more into the coaſt of Iſrael: and the hand of the LORD was againſt the Philiſtines all the days of Samuel.

14 And the cities which the Philiſtines had taken from Iſrael were reſtored to Iſrael, from Ekron even unto Gath, and the coaſts thereof did Iſrael deliver out of the hands of the Philiſtines: and there was peace between Iſrael and the Amorites.

15 And Samuel judged Iſrael all the days of his life.

16 And he went from year to year in circuit to Beth-el, and Gilgal, and Mizpeh, and judged Iſrael in all thoſe places.

17 And his return was to Ramah; for there was his houſe: and there he judged Iſrael, and there he built an altar unto the LORD.

Ver. 1. And the men of Kirja'h-jearim came, and fetched up the ark of the Lord, &c.] The inhabitants of Kirjath-jearim, which was a city of the tribe of Judah, upon the confines of Benjamin, cheerfully complied with the requeſt of the people of Beth-ſhemeſh, and brought the ark from thence to their own city, where they placed it in the houſe of Abinadab which was ſituated on the higheſt part of their city; and the ark continued here till the time of David, that is, about ſeventy years. Eleazar the ſon of Abinadab was conſecrated to be the keeper of this ſacred ſymbol.

If it be enquired why the ark was not carried to Shiloh, its ancient ſeat? the anſwer is, that the Philiſtines had deſtroyed that place; and the tabernacle, upon the death of Eli, was removed from thence to Nob, where it continued to the death of Samuel: After which it was carried to Gibeon, where it remained for the ſpace of fifty years, according to the account of Seder Olam Rabba. The ark during all this time was in Kirjath-jearim, till David brought it, firſt to the houſe of Obed-Edom, and afterward to his own city: After which the tabernacle ſtill continued at Gibeon till Solomon's temple was built, 1 Chron. xvi. 39. 1 Chron. i. 3. where we read, that Solomon ſacrificed at Gibeon, even after the death of his father, the tabernacle being there.

Ver. 2. And it came to paſs while the ark abode at Kirjath-jearim, that the time was long; for it was twenty years.] This is not to be underſtood of the whole time that the ark remained in this city, for it continued there till the time of David, 2 Chron. vi. 3. as we obſerved before. It therefore refers to the following words.

——And all the houſe of Iſrael lamented after the Lord.] Or rather, as Dr. Lightfoot tranſlates the words in the Hebrew, Then all the houſe of Iſrael, &c. Their idolatry had taken ſo deep a root in their minds, that neither the loſs of the ark, nor the ſlaughter of ſo many Iſraelites, could affect them with any penitent impreſſion, till after the expiration of twenty years; when they at laſt were awakened to ſome ſenſe of their impiety, and began to lament their apoſtacy from God.

Samuel, who acted by this time, both as prophet and judge, improved the opportunity offered him by the peoples aſſembling in great multitudes before the ark, to deplore their unrecovered liberty, and earneſtly exhorted them to put away Aſhtaroth and their ſtrange deities from among them; and to devote themſelves to the ſervice of the Lord alone; upon which condition only, he could promiſe them a ſpeedy deliverance from the Philiſtine yoke. The people readily complied with this admonition, and aſſembled at Mizpeh, according to the appointment of Samuel; and there faſted and prayed with all the indications of a lively repentance. The Sacred Hiſtorian likewiſe informs us, that they drew water, and poured it out before the Lord, &c. ver. 6. On which words we think it neceſſary to obſerve, that this being a day of humiliation, faſting, and prayer, as appears by the latter part of the paſſage before us, interpreters commonly expound the former part of it, as belonging to the ſame matter; and ſome think, with the Targum, that by pouring out water, the tears of contrition are to be underſtood. Others ſuppoſe, they bathed their bodies in the water, to intimate the purification of their ſouls from the pollutions of ſin. Others, among whom is Bochart, imagine, that this water was poured on the earth, in order to ſignify the expiation of their tranſgreſſions, which they humbly begged might be remembred no more, as water ſhed on the earth ſoon ceaſes to become viſible. But we no where find any ſuch rite as this among the Jews, either in ancient or later times. The learned biſhop Patrick approves the interpretation given of theſe words, by Conſtantine L'Empereur, in his annotations on Codex Middoth, cap. 2. which is, that they poured out water in token of joy, after they had faſted and confeſſed their ſins, as was cuſtomary for them when they celebrated the feaſt of tabernacles; for he tranſlates the words, Poſtquam jejunarunt, after they had faſted on that day. And to this he refers the words in Iſa. xii. 3. where the prophet foretels the joy that ſhould be expreſſed in the days of the Meſſiah, by ſaying, Ye ſhall draw waters of Joy, out of the wells of ſalvation: Alluding to a known rite among the Iſraelites in the feaſt of tabernacles; and there is the greater reaſon for this interpretation, adds the biſhop, becauſe Samuel had juſt before promiſed them that God would deliver them from their ſubjection to the Philiſtines, if they ſincerely repented of all their paſt iniquities; and conſequently that this comfortable aſſurance inſpired them with a pleaſing joy, in hopes of its ſpeedy accompliſhment, becauſe they now had devoted themſelves to his ſervice alone.

As ingenious as this explication may ſeem, the learned father Hardouin repreſents the tranſaction we are conſidering, in a different light. "The people, ſays he, "were aſſembled by the prophet, in order to make a "ſolemn renunciation of the idolatry to which they had "been ſo long addicted, and to aſſiſt at the prayers Samuel "intended to offer up, to appeaſe the wrath of God, "who was then offended at the conduct of his people. "The Iſraelites accompanied the prayers of the prophet "with a univerſal faſt that day, and their reſolution to "obſerve it with the utmoſt ſtrictneſs, induced them to "pour out before the Lord, all the water of the wells of "Mizpeh, that they might abſtain from drinking, as well "as from eating, and that the Lord might be witneſs to "the rigour with which they intended to obſerve that faſt." Francis Budæus, who cites theſe words of Hardouin, will not allow that Jeſuit the honour of being the author of this explication, but declares, that it had been propoſed before by Sebaſtian Schmid. And it is certain that this laſt mentioned author, expreſſes himſelf in ſuch a manner, as removes a difficulty that may be objected to what is advanced by father Hardouin, who ſays, that the Iſraelites poured out all the water that could be found in Mizpeh; but to what purpoſe could this conſumption of it be made, in a country where it was ſo ſcarce? Sebaſtian Schmid, on the other hand, only ſays, that the Iſraelites poured out the water they then had in their pitchers, that no perſon among them might drink, during that day of faſting. This explication ſeems to us very conſiſtent with reaſon, and we ſhall make no ſcruple to adhere to it.

This unuſual meeting of the Iſraelites gave umbrage to the Philiſtines, who immediately took up arms, and advanced againſt them; but Samuel having offered up a ſucking lamb for a burnt offering, obtained by the efficacy of his prayers ſuch a tempeſt of thunder and lightning, as entirely diſcomfited their enemies, whom the Iſraelites purſued with great ſlaughter, to Beth-car, a place in the confines of the tribe of Judah. Joſephus adds, that the earth quaked, and in many places opened, and ſwallowed up the Philiſtines, whoſe hands and faces were likewiſe blaſted by the ſtreams of lightning. Samuel, in order to commemorate this ſignal victory, cauſed a great ſtone to be erected between Mizpeh and Sen, and called it Eben-Ezer, which ſignifies, the ſtone of help; and from that time to his own death; the Philiſtines were ſo far from attempting any new hoſtilities againſt Iſrael, that they even ſuffered them to recover the cities and fortified places which they had formerly wreſted from them, from Ekron even unto Gath, and the territories around them. The Iſraelites were likewiſe at peace with the Amorites, ſo that the land enjoyed a perfect tranquility all the time of Samuel's adminiſtration; while he, in order to render it eaſier to the people, ſet out, once a year from Ramah, where he uſually reſided, and which was alſo the place of his nativity, to take a circuit round Bethel, Gilgal, and Mizpeh, to adminiſter judgment, and then returned to his own city, where he had erected an altar to God, and whither the people might reſort to him at all other times.

It appears from hence, that Samuel quitted Shiloh ſoon after the death of Eli, and the taking of the ark, and that he never returned thither, at leaſt to reſide there as formerly. It is indeed probable, that after the removal of the ark from thence, all kind of religious ceremonials were diſcontinued there; for which reaſon it is ſaid, that he built an altar at Ramah, the place of his reſidence, that the people might reſort to him, either for the diſpenſation of juſtice, or to offer ſacrifices to God. This latter, however, was far from being conformable to the Moſaic law; but it ſeemed to be a caſe of neceſſity at that time; becauſe the ark being then in one place, and the tabernacle in another, neither of them could be properly reſorted to for ſacrificing, or any other part of publick worſhip.

CHAP. VIII.

1 By occaſion of the ill government of Samuels ſons, the Iſraelites ask a king. 6 Samuel praying in grief is comforted by God. 10 He telleth the manner of a king. 19 God willeth Samuel to yield unto the importunity of the people.

AND it came to paſs when Samuel was old, that he made his ſons judges over Iſrael.

2 Now the name of his firſt-born was Joel, and the name of his ſecond, Abiah: they were judges in Beer-ſheba.

3 And

J. Basire Sculp.

The Israelites petition for a King of Samuel

3 And his ſons walked not in his ways, but turned aſide after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment.

4 Then all the elders of Iſrael gathered themſelves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah,

5 And ſaid unto him, Behold, thou art old, and thy ſons walk not in thy ways: now make us a king to judge us like all the nations.

6 ¶ But the thing diſpleaſed Samuel, when they ſaid, Give us a king to judge us: and Samuel prayed unto the LORD.

7 And the LORD ſaid unto Samuel, Hearken unto the voice of the people in all that they ſay unto thee: for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I ſhould not reign over them.

8 According to all the works which they have done ſince the day that I brought them up out of Egypt even unto this day, wherewith they have forſaken me, and ſerved other gods: ſo do they alſo unto thee.

9 Now therefore hearken unto their voice: howbeit, yet proteſt ſolemnly unto them, and ſhew them the manner of the king that ſhall reign over them.

10 ¶ And Samuel told all the words of the LORD unto the people, that asked of him a king,

11 And he ſaid, This will be the manner of the king that ſhall reign over you: He will take your ſons, and appoint them for himſelf, for his chariots, and to be his horſemen, and ſome ſhall run before his chariots.

12 And he will appoint him captains over thouſands, and captains over fifties, and will ſet them to ear his ground, and to reap his harveſt, and to make his inſtruments of war, and inſtruments of his chariots.

13 And he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers.

14 And he will take your fields, and your vineyards, and your olive-yards, even the beſt of them, and give them to his ſervants.

15 And he will take the tenth of your ſeed, and of your vineyards, and give to his officers, and to his ſervants.

16 And he will take your men-ſervants, and your maid-ſervants, and your goodlieſt young men, and your aſſes, and put them to his work.

17 He will take the tenth of your ſheep: and ye ſhall be his ſervants.

18 And ye ſhall cry out in that day, becauſe of your king which ye ſhall have choſen you; and the LORD will not hear you in that day.

19 ¶ Nevertheleſs, the people refuſed to obey the voice of Samuel; and they ſaid, Nay, but we will have a king over us:

20 That we alſo may be like all the nations, and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles.

21 And Samuel heard all the words of the people, and he rehearſed them in the ears of the LORD.

22 And the LORD ſaid to Samuel, Hearken unto their voice, and make them a king. And Samuel ſaid unto the men of Iſrael, Go ye every man unto his city.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs when Samuel was old.] The Jews, in Seder Olam Rabba, and other books, repreſent Samuel as having lived no longer than fifty two years; but he certainly could not then be ſaid to have been old. Abarbinel, therefore, diſſents from the doctors in that particular, and ſhews their arguments, in favour of it, to be very weak and inconcluſive; and thinks that Samuel rather lived till he was ſeventy, if not eighty, years of age. But leſs than ſeventy he affirms, none of the prophets, or good men, lived.

———That he made his ſons judges over Iſrael.] This Samuel had probably done, either to try how they would behave themſelves in that important poſt, or perhaps for the convenience of thoſe who lived at too great a diſtance from Ramah, Beerſheba being at one extremity of Judæa, as Dan was on the other. Joſephus adds, that Samuel appointed the eldeſt of his ſons to keep his reſidence at Bethel, a city to the weſt of Hai, upon the confines of the tribes of Ephraim and Benjamin; and the other at Beer-ſheba, and ordered them to take a yearly circuit through proper places, ſo that each ſhould have one half of Iſrael to his ſhare, Antiq. l. 6. c. 3.

Samuel himſelf had judged Iſrael for the ſpace of twenty years, with great integrity and applauſe; but he had the mortification to hear that his amiable example was not followed by his two ſons, who proved venal and mercenary judges, and ſuffered themſelves to be corrupted by bribery and avarice.

The great age and infirmities of Samuel, and the ill diſpoſition of his ſons, furniſhed the Iſraelites with a pretext for demanding a king, that they might be like other nations; though, in reality, this demand proceeded from their inſenſibility of the honour they enjoyed above the reſt of mankind, in being under the peculiar government of God. A poor prophet in a mantle, tho' converſant in the viſions of the Almighty, looked mean in their eyes; and nothing would ſatisfy them but a monarch, with his guards and officers of ſtate. A propoſal of this nature could not but be highly diſpleaſing to Samuel, who plainly foreſaw the dangerous conſequences of ſuch horrid ingratitude; and that by rejecting the government of God, they would render themſelves unworthy of his future protection. But finding them reſolute in their demand, the afflicted prophet addreſſed himſelf to God, for proper directions in this unpleaſing conjuncture; and he received the following anſwer, Hearken unto the voice of the people, in all that they ſay unto thee, ver. 7. Theſe are the words of an angry ſovereign, and are as much as if he had ſaid, Let them have their will, ſince ſuch is their perverſeneſs. God, however, was ſo gracious, as to order Samuel to ſet before them the diſagreeable effects of that regal power they ſo much deſired. The prophet acquitted himſelf of his commiſſion, and repreſented to them the many grievances they would ſuſtain from the arbitrary power of the king for whom they were then ſo impatient. One would have thought that the lively deſcription he gave them of the imperious government of the eaſtern monarchs, would have deterred them from perſiſting in their demand; but this was ſo far from being the caſe, that they continued to require a king in the moſt peremptory manner, though Samuel had told them that this demand was a rejection of the government of God, who had always been attentive to their cries, when they were oppreſſed by their enemies; but that he now would leave them deſtitute of all aſſiſtance, when they ſhould hereafter groan under the tyranny of their kings. Dr. Jackſon ſays, that this obſtinacy of theirs was a prognoſtication of that incurable diſeaſe, which had its fatal criſis in their rejecting Chriſt, who was both prieſt and prophet, and likewiſe their lawful king.

The reaſons they aſſign for demanding a king, namely, that they might be like all the nations, &c. ver. 20. ſhews they were ſtrangely infatuated, in not being ſenſible that their unlikeneſs to other nations was their ſingular felicity: ſince they had the Almighty Lord of the univerſe for their governour, who never failed, in time of need, to raiſe up men of extraordinary worth to be his inſtruments in their deliverance. It was, therefore, their vain-glorious humour, which made them think they ſhould be inferior to other nations, unleſs, as biſhop Patrick obſerves, they ſaw a prince ſet over them, ſhining in gold and jewels, living in a ſumptuous palace, attended with guards richly cloath'd, and appearing in great pomp and ſtate, as they did in other countries; which they fancied would be for the glory of their land.

Samuel finding that no diſſuaſives whatever could divert them from their deſign, applied a ſecond time to the Deity, and unfolded to him the reſolution in which the people ſtill perſiſted; upon which God again commanded him to hearken unto their voice, and make them a king, ver. 22. Samuel then returned to the people, and having promiſed to comply with their demand, diſmiſſed them to their reſpective cities, for the preſent, and Saul was ſoon after appointed by God to be the firſt king of Iſrael.

CHAP. IX.

1 Saul deſpairing to find his father's aſſes, 6 By the counſel of his ſervant, 11 And direction of young maidens, 15 According to God's revelation, 18 Cometh to Samuel. 19 Samuel entertaineth Saul at the feaſt. 25 Samuel, after ſecret communication, bringeth Saul on his way.

NOW there was a man of Benjamin, whoſe name was Kiſh, the ſon of Abiel, the ſon of Zeror, the ſon of Bechorah, the ſon of Aphiah, a Benjamite, a mighty man of power.

2 And he had a ſon, whoſe name was Saul, a choice young man, and a goodly: and there was not among the children of Iſrael a goodlier perſon than he: from his ſhoulders and upward, he was higher than any of the people.

3 And the aſſes of Kiſh, Sauls father, were loſt; and Kiſh ſaid to Saul his ſon, Take now one of the ſervants with thee, and ariſe, go ſeek the aſſes.

4 And he paſſed through mount Ephraim, and paſſed through the land of Shaliſha, but they found them not: then they paſſed through the land of Shalim, and there they were not: and he paſſed through the land of the Benjamites, but they found them not.

5 And when they were come to the land of Zuph, Saul ſaid to his ſervant that was with him, Come, and let us return; leſt my father leave caring for the aſſes, and take thought for us.

6 And he ſaid unto him, Behold now, there is in this city a man of God, and he is an honourable man; all that he ſaith, cometh ſurely to paſs: now let us go thither; peradventure he can ſhew us our way that we ſhould go.

7 Then ſaid Saul to his ſervant, But behold, if we go, what ſhall we bring the man? for the bread is ſpent in our veſſels, and there is not a preſent to bring to the man of God: what have we?

8 And the ſervant anſwered Saul again, and ſaid, Behold, I have here at hand the fourth part of a ſhekel of ſilver: that will I give to the man of God, to tell us our way.

9 (Beforetime in Iſrael, when a man went to enquire of God, thus he ſpake, Come, and let us go to the ſeer: for he that is now called a prophet, was beforetime called a ſeer.)

10 Then ſaid Saul to his ſervant, Well ſaid, come, let us go: ſo they went unto the city where the man of God was.

11 ¶ And as they went up the hill to the city, they found young maidens going out to draw water, and ſaid unto them, Is the ſeer here?

12 And they anſwered them, and ſaid, He is; behold, he is before you: make haſte now, for he came to-day to the city; for there is a ſacrifice of the people to-day in the high place.

13 Aſſoon as ye be come into the city, ye ſhall ſtraightway find him, before he go up to the high place to eat: for the people will not eat until he come, becauſe he doth bleſs the ſacrifice, and afterwards they eat that be bidden. Now therefore get you up, for about this time ye ſhall find him.

14 And they went up into the city: and when they were come into the city, behold, Samuel came out againſt them, for to go up to the high place.

15 ¶ Now the LORD had told Samuel in his ear a day before Saul came, ſaying,

16 To-morrow about this time I will ſend thee a man out of the land of Benjamin, and thou ſhalt anoint him to be captain over my people Iſrael, that he may ſave my people out of the hand of the Philiſtines: for I have looked upon my people, people, becauſe their cry is come unto me.

17 And when Samuel ſaw Saul, the LORD ſaid unto him, Behold the man whom I ſpake to thee of: this ſame ſhall reign over my people.

18 Then Saul drew near to Samuel in the gate, and ſaid, Tell me, I pray thee, where the ſeers houſe is.

19 And Samuel anſwered Saul, and ſaid, I am the ſeer: go up before me unto the high place, for ye ſhall eat with me to-day; and to-morrow I will let thee go, and will tell thee all that is in thine heart.

20 And as for thine aſſes that were loſt three days ago, ſet not thy mind on them, for they are found: and on whom is all the deſire of Iſrael? is it not on thee, and on all thy fathers houſe?

21 And Saul anſwered and ſaid, Am not I a Benjamite, of the ſmalleſt of the tribes of Iſrael? and my family the leaſt of all the families of the tribe of Benjamin? wherefore then ſpeakeſt thou ſo to me?

22 And Samuel took Saul and his ſervant, and brought them into the parlour, and made them ſit in the chiefeſt place among them that were bidden, which were about thirty perſons.

23 And Samuel ſaid unto the cook, Bring the portion which I gave thee, of which I ſaid unto thee, Set it by thee.

24 And the cook took up the ſhoulder, and that which was upon it, and ſet it before Saul: and Samuel ſaid, Behold, that which is left, ſet it before thee, and eat; for unto this time hath it been kept for thee, ſince I ſaid, I have invited the people: So Saul did eat with Samuel that day.

25 ¶ And when they were come down from the high place into the city, Samuel communed with Saul upon the top of the houſe.

26 And they aroſe early: and it came to paſs about the ſpring of the day, that Samuel called Saul to the top of the houſe, ſaying, Up, that I may ſend thee away. And Saul aroſe, and they went out both of them, he and Samuel, abroad.

27 And as they were going down to the end of the city, Samuel ſaid to Saul, Bid the ſervant paſs on before us (and he paſſed on) but ſtand thou ſtill a while, that I may ſhew thee the word of God.

Ver 1. Now there was a man of Benjamin, whoſe name was Kiſh, the ſon of Abiel, &c.] This genealogy ſeems liable to an objection, which is, that Ner is repreſented as the father of Kiſh, 1 Chron. viii. 33. ix. 39. In anſwer to which we may ſuppoſe, with Kimchi, that the father of Kiſh had two names, (Abiel and Ner) as was uſual among the Hebrews; and that he likewiſe conferred the latter of thoſe two names on one of his ſons, for it is evident that Kiſh had a brother whoſe name was Ner, 1 Sam. xiv. 51.

Ver. 2. And he had a ſon whoſe name was Saul, a choice young man, and a goodly, &c.] The advantage of a graceful exterior was conſidered, by the oriental people, as a very recommending accompliſhment, in the choice of their kings; and the monuments of antiquity furniſh us with many inſtances to this effect. Herodotus, after he had enumerated the troops which compoſed the army of Xerxes, adds, that amongſt all that incredible number of men, there was not one, who, in comelineſs of perſon, or gracefulneſs of ſtature, appeared more worthy of the regal dignity, than that monarch, (l. vi. c. 77. p. 446.) The ſame author likewiſe declares, that the Æthiopians thought a perſon of the moſt majeſtic ſtature ought to be elected king, (lib. 3. cap. 20. pag. 169) The Lacedæmonians were ſo ſtrict in their precautions to ſecure a goodly race of kings, that they ſet a fine upon their ſovereign Archidamus, for eſpouſing a wife of a low ſtature, who was likely to bring them, ὁ βασιλέας, ἀλλὰ βασιλίσκους, not kings, properly ſo called, but kings in miniature. It is likewiſe reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that the common people, in particular, would be more inclined to reverence a prince, who, to uſe the expreſſion of Euripides, had εἰδὼς ἄξιον τυραννίδος, a form worthy a monarch, than they would a perſon of a mean appearance. But no words are more memorable than thoſe of Pliny, in the concluſion of the fourth chapter of his Panegyric on Trajan, where he declares, that the ſtrength and tallneſs of his body, the majeſty of his aſpect, the gracefulneſs of his ſpeech, &c. nonne longe lateque principem oſtentant? do they not every where proclaim a prince? That the Iſraelites had ſome ſuch ideas as theſe, may be inferr'd from what Samuel ſaid, when he preſented Saul to them, chap. x. 24. ſee ye him whom the Lord hath choſen, that there is none like him among all the people? This deſcription of Saul agrees with what the Sacred Hiſtorian had obſerved of him, in the verſe before us, namely, that there was not among the children of Iſrael a goodlier perſon; from his ſhoulders and upward, he was higher than any of the people. Virgil, in after-times, drew the ſame picture of Turnus, (Æneid. xi. ver. 682.

Ver. 3. And the aſſes of Kiſh, Sauls father, were loſt.] This circumſtance contributed to the interview between Samuel and Saul; and the approach of this latter was imparted to the prophet by a Divine Revelation. The aſſes of Kiſh wandered out of their paſture, and Saul was ordered by his father to ſet out with one of his domeſtics, in order to ſeek them. Employments of this nature were not thought degrading, in ancient times, nor beneath perſons of the higheſt rank. We may add too, that aſſes were a conſiderable part of their ſubſtance in Judæa, and perſons of the greateſt quality rode upon them till the time of Solomon, when Horſes began to be multiplied among them.

Saul endeavoured to acquit himſelf of his commiſſion, but the ſucceſs was very different from his expectations. He paſſed through the territory belonging to the tribe of Benjamin, and the mountainous country of Ephraim, till he at laſt came to the land of Zuph, ver. 5. which belonged to the tribe of Ephraim, and where ſome of the anceſtors of Samuel had lived, chap. i. 1. Ramah, likewiſe, where Samuel now dwelt, ſeems to have been ſituated in this tract, as may be collected from ver. 6.

Saul finding himſelf not likely to ſucceed in his ſearch, told his ſervant that it would be proper for them to think of returning home, leſt his father ſhould be more anxious at their long abſence, than he was for the recovery of his cattle. The ſervant then adviſed Saul to go and conſult Samuel, who reſided at a ſmall diſtance from thence, and perhaps perhaps might direct them what courſe would be moſt proper for them to take. Saul replied, but behold if we go, what ſhall we bring the man? for the bread is ſpent in our veſſels, and there is not a preſent to bring to the man of God, ver. 7. It was an eſtabliſhed cuſtom, among the orientals, never to appear without a preſent, before ſuch perſons as were held in veneration by the people; and tho' God deteſted thoſe ſordid ſouls who rendered the moſt ſacred functions venal; he yet expected to be honoured in the perſon of his miniſters; and prophets in particular were entitled to very diſtinguiſhed marks of reſpect, as being men of God; before whom it was not lawful to appear empty.

The ſervant of Saul anſwered, that he had a piece of money worth the fourth part of a ſhekel of ſilver, and that he would give it to the man of God, as an acknowledgment for his directing them in their right way. The ſum, indeed, was very inconſiderable, but God regards the diſpoſition of the heart much more than the value of the offering; For if there be firſt a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not, 2 Cor. viii. 12.

Ver. 9. (Before time in Iſrael, when a man went to enquire of God, thus he ſpake, Come and let us go to the ſeer: for he that is now called a prophet, was before time called a ſeer.)] Tho' the word nabi, a prophet, had been anciently known, as appears by the Moſaic writings, and was uſed in the days of Samuel, as is evident from many paſſages in this book; yet the more common word which now prevailed, when Saul was anointed king, was roeh, a ſeer; for, in all languages, words are in and out of vogue at different periods of time; and when Samuel wrote this book, nabi was become the more uſual word. This is a fair account of theſe words; but ſome have pretended to prove from them, that Samuel was not the author of this book, nor Moſes of the Pentateuch; where Abraham is called nabi, Gen. xx. 7. which ſhews that this was no new word in the days of Samuel, as they would have this place underſtood. But it might be ſufficient to anſwer to this objection, that nabi did not ſignify in ancient times, one who predicted future events; but one who was familiar with God, and acquainted with his will, that he might be enabled to inſtruct others. But, in the time of Samuel, it was appropriated to the revelation of futurity, which could proceed from none but God.

The title of ſeer was given not only to the prophets of the true God, but likewiſe to thoſe of the pagan deities, who pretended to have ſupernatural viſions. Hence the Sybil ſays in Virgil, Æneid 6. ver. 86.

> ——————bella, horrida bella,

Joſephus cites a paſſage from Manetho, which declares that the Egyptians called thoſe who had ſupernatural viſions, the ſeers of God, Joſeph. lib. 1. cont. Apion. pag. 460.

When Saul arrived at Ramah, where Samuel reſided, he ſaw ſome young maidens going to draw water at the fountain, which, as uſual, was at the bottom of the hill; and they informed him, that the Seer came that day to the city, where there was to be a ſacrifice of the people that day in the high place, ver. 12. All ſacrifices were regularly to be offered before the ark, in the place which the Lord ſhould chuſe. But while this choice remained ſuſpended, becauſe Shiloh was laid deſolate, and no other place appointed; the Iſraelites ſacrificed in parts of the country where neither the ark, nor the tabernacle were. The tabernacle being void of the ark, which was its principal furniture; and the ark being without an houſe for the habitation of God; what place could be more commodious in ſuch a conjuncture, than thoſe cities that were inhabited by the prieſts and Levites? and they choſe the higheſt parts of thoſe cities for this purpoſe. Bertram imagines, that from this example, high places came to be uſed in after ages, for this is the firſt time we read of any high place among the people of God. The thing itſelf, is indeed mentioned, tho' not the name, See Judges vi. 20. xiii. 19. and ſo early as the time of Abraham, we read, that he was directed to offer his ſon on mount Moriah, Gen. xxii.

The Jewiſh doctors take this high place to have been ſome houſe where the people feaſted after the ſacrifice was over; and the Targum accordingly tranſlates theſe words, the houſe of feaſting.

Ver. 14. And they went up into the city: and when they were come into the city, behold Samuel came out againſt them, for to go up to the high place.] He met them directly in his way to the place where the feſtival was to be celebrated, for ſo God had providentially diſpoſed things, as is evident from ver. 15, and 16.

Ver. 17. And when Samuel ſaw Saul, the Lord ſaid unto him, Behold the man whom I ſpake to thee of: this ſame ſhall reign over my people.] The word we tranſlate reign, ſignifies ſomething of coercion and reſtraint, as is obſerved in the margin of the Engliſh Bible; and denotes, that he ſhould rule the Iſraelites with an abſolute uncontroulable power, and after the ſtern and rigid manner of the eaſtern monarchs; and which was intended as a puniſhment of this people, for throwing off the kind and gentle government of God.

Samuel then addreſſed himſelf to Saul, and informed him, that he was the Seer; after which he invited him to partake of the feſtival, at which he was preparing to aſſiſt; deſired him not to be anxious for the aſſes that were loſt three days ago, ſince they were now found; and then concluded with theſe remarkable expreſſions. And on whom is all the deſire of Iſrael? is it not on thee, and on all thy father's houſe? ver. 20. The meaning of which is, all Iſrael deſire a king, and there is none better qualified for that title than thy ſelf, whoſe family God has determined to advance. Saul expreſſed a modeſt ſenſe of his own inſufficiency, and could hardly believe the prophet meant as he ſaid, but Samuel ſoon convinced him that he was in earneſt, by ſeating him in the moſt honourable place among the gueſts, and by rendering to him part of that homage which was due to the dignity he had predicted to him.

When the repaſt was over, Samuel withdrew with Saul to the top of the houſe, where he diſcourſed with him, on the ſubject of his advancement to the regal dignity, and his adminiſtration of the government. The next morning they aroſe early, and went abroad, for Samuel intended to conduct Saul in a reſpectful manner, part of his way, and without any of his uſual attendants, that what he was preparing to tranſact might remain a ſecret for the preſent. For this reaſon, he deſired Saul to order his ſervant to paſs on before them, becauſe he now intended to ſatisfy him in a private manner, that God had choſen him to be the king of his people; before whom he was afterward to be publickly elected by lot.

CHAP. X.

1 Samuel anointed Saul. 2 He confirmeth him by prediction of three ſigns. 9 Sauls heart is changed, and he propheſieth. 14 He concealeth the matter of the kingdom from his uncle. 17 Saul is choſen at Mizpeh by lot. 26 The different affections of his ſubjects.

THEN Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and kiſſed him, and ſaid, Is it not becauſe the LORD hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance?

2 When thou art departed from me today, then thou ſhalt find two men by Rachels ſepulchre in the border of Benjamin, at Zelzah: and they will ſay unto thee, The aſſes which thou wenteſt to ſeek are found: and lo, thy father hath left the care of the aſſes, and ſorroweth for you, ſaying, What ſhall I do for my ſon?

3 Then

3 Then ſhalt thou go on forward from thence, and thou ſhalt come to the plain of Tabor, and there ſhall meet the three men going up to God to Beth-el, one carrying three kids, and another carrying three loaves of bread, and another carrying a bottle of wine.

4 And they will ſalute thee, and give thee two loaves of bread, which thou ſhalt receive of their hands.

5 After that, thou ſhalt come to the hill of God, where is the gariſon of the Philiſtines: and it ſhall come to paſs when thou art come thither to the city, that thou ſhalt meet a company of prophets coming down from the high place, with a pſaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp before them, and they ſhall propheſy.

6 And the ſpirit of the LORD will come upon thee, and thou ſhalt propheſy with them, and ſhalt be turned into another man.

7 And let it be when theſe ſigns are come unto thee, that thou do as occaſion ſhall ſerve thee, for God is with thee.

8 And thou ſhalt go down before me to Gilgal, and behold, I will come down unto thee, to offer burnt-offerings, and to ſacrifice ſacrifices of peace-offerings: ſeven days ſhalt thou tarry till I come to thee, and ſhew thee what thou ſhalt do.

9 ¶ And it was ſo, that when he had turned his back to go from Samuel, God gave him another heart: and all thoſe ſigns came to paſs that day.

10 And when they came thither to the hill, behold, a company of prophets met him, and the ſpirit of God came upon him, and he propheſied among them.

11 And it came to paſs when all that knew him beforetime, ſaw, that behold, he propheſied among the prophets, then the people ſaid one to another, What is this that is come unto the ſon of Kiſh? Is Saul alſo among the prophets?

12 And one of the ſame place anſwered and ſaid, But who is their father? Therefore it became a proverb, Is Saul alſo among the prophets?

13 And when he had made an end of propheſying, he came to the high place.

14 ¶ And Sauls uncle ſaid unto him, and to his ſervant, Whither went ye? And he ſaid, To ſeek the aſſes: and when we ſaw that they were no where, we came to Samuel.

15 And Sauls uncle ſaid, Tell me, I pray thee, what Samuel ſaid unto you.

16 And Saul ſaid unto his uncle, He told us plainly that the aſſes were found. But of the matter of the kingdom, whereof Samuel ſpake, he told him not.

17 ¶ And Samuel called the people together unto the LORD to Mizpeh;

18 And ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, I brought up Iſrael out of Egypt, and delivered you out of the hand of the Egyptians, and out of the hand of all kingdoms, and of them that oppreſſed you.

19 And ye have this day rejected your God, who himſelf ſaved you out of all your adverſities and your tribulations: and ye have ſaid unto him, Nay, but ſet a king over us. Now therefore preſent yourſelves before the LORD by your tribes, and by your thouſands.

20 And when Samuel had cauſed all the tribes of Iſrael to come near, the tribe of Benjamin was taken.

21 When he had cauſed the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the ſon of Kiſh was taken: and when they ſought him, he could not be found.

22 Therefore they enquired of the LORD further, if the man ſhould yet come thither: and the LORD anſwered, Behold, he hath hid himſelf among the ſtuff.

23 And they ran and fetched him thence: and when he ſtood among the people, he was higher than any of the people, from his ſhoulders and upward.

24 And Samuel ſaid to all the people, See ye him whom the LORD hath choſen, that there is none like him among all the people? And all the people ſhouted, and ſaid, God ſave the king.

25 Then Samuel told the people the manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the LORD: and Samuel ſent all the people away, every man to his houſe.

26 ¶ And Saul alſo went home to Gibeah, and there went with him a band of men, whoſe hearts God had touched.

27 But the children of Belial ſaid, How ſhall this man ſave us? And they deſpiſed him, and brought him no preſents: but he held his peace.

Ver. 1. Then Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it upon his head, and kiſſed him.] It was the prerogative of a prophet to anoint a king, and Abarbinel proves it from this example of Samuel's anointing Saul, and afterward

David; and Nathan's anointing Solomon. There was no order of God, that we read of, for anointing kings: but it had been an ancient cuſtom, two hundred years before this time, as appears from the parable of Jotham, and was now uſed by Samuel, that their king might be like the kings of other nations, as the Iſraelites deſired. When Samuel had anointed Saul, he kiſſed him, in token of reverence and ſubjection to him; agreeably to the cuſtom of ancient times. This the Jews call Neſhikah Shel Gedolah, the kiſs of greatneſs or majeſty; in our language, the kiſs of homage.

——And ſaid, is it not becauſe the Lord hath anointed thee to be captain over his inheritance?] Thou art conſtituted the ruler of Iſrael by an undoubted authority from God. This might appear to be ſomething incredible to Saul, and therefore Samuel gives him three or four ſigns in the following verſes, to ſtrengthen and confirm his faith. It muſt not however, be imagined that Saul was now inaugurated, for that was done afterward, according to this prophetical prediction, which was kept ſo private, that it ſhewed Samuel intended no more at this time, than to aſſure Saul he ſhould be advanced to the regal dignity, and publickly inſtalled the ſovereign of Iſrael.

Ver. 2. When thou art departed from me to day, then thou ſhalt find two men by Rachel's ſepulchre in the border of Benjamin, at Zelzah, &c.] The ſepulchre of Rachel was to the ſouth of Jeruſalem, and Saul's direct way to his father's houſe was northward of that city. Perhaps Samuel intended to render this prediction more extraordinary, by intimating that Saul would in his return quit the road which he naturally ought to have taken: There are ſome interpreters, indeed, who inſert an addition to the original text, and tranſlate it thus, you ſhall find two men, who are now by the ſepulchre of Rachel.

Ver. 3. Then ſhalt thou go on forward from thence, and thou ſhalt come to the plain of Tabor: and there ſhall meet thee three men going up to God to Beth-el,] This had been a place conſecrated to religion, ever ſince the days of Jacob. And the tabernacle being now without the ark, and the ark in no determined place, the Iſraelites ſacrificed in high places, and particularly here at Beth-el, where Jeroboam afterward ſettled one of his idol calves.

——One carrying three kids, &c.] With an intention to offer ſacrifices of peace-offerings.

Ver. 4. And they will ſalute thee, and give the three loaves of bread, &c.] This may be conſidered as a third ſign, or an appendix to the ſecond. And it is the more remarkable, becauſe this preſent they were to make him was a repreſentation of that honour which was render'd to him by the people, when he was declared their king. And if theſe loaves were two of the three, which they were going to offer in ſacrifice, the preſent was the more noble. But tho' this may be juſtified, by ſuppoſing them to be given to one who was faint with travelling, and which they might recruit at Beth-el, yet we may as well think, with Kimchi, that they were two loaves which the men brought with them for their own uſe in their journey. Samuel directed Saul not to refuſe them; but learn thereby, when he had abundance, to be kind to thoſe who ſhould be in want.

Ver. 5. After that, thou ſhalt come to the hill of God.] So called, becauſe it was cuſtomary for the people to ſacrifice there; or becauſe a ſchool of the prophets, who were called men of God, was erected in that place.

——Where is the gariſon of the Philiſtines.] This circumſtance renders it probable, that the hill beforementioned was Geba, or Gibeah; for there the Philiſtines had a gariſon, chap. xiii. 3. and this is no contradiction to what is ſaid, chap. vii. 13. For tho' the Philiſtines were ſubdued, and made no invaſions upon the Iſraelites during the life of Samuel, yet they might retain ſome ſtrong holds.

——And it ſhall come to paſs, when thou art come thither to the city, that thou ſhalt meet a company of prophets coming down from the high place.] Here, it ſeems, was a college of prophets, ſettled for the inſtruction of youth in the knowledge of the law, and the principles of piety; and thoſe who were ſo inſtructed were called the ſons of the prophets. Tho' the Philiſtines had a gariſon in this place, yet they acted better than many Chriſtians have ſince done; for they ſpared thoſe places, when they had conquer'd them, where learned men reſided, and which were dedicated to the ſtudy of religion.

——With a pſaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp before them.] They ſhould have a variety of muſical inſtruments; among which the nevel which we tranſlate pſaltery, was the chief; having its name, as the Jewiſh doctors fancy (in the Midraſh, upon Pſalm lxxxi.) from hence, that it excelled all other inſtruments of muſic, as much as a wiſe man is ſuperior to a fool. Bartoloccius, in his Kirjath-ſepher, p. 2. fol. 185, &c. gives an account of this, and the reſt of the inſtruments here-mentioned; but we think it needleſs to tranſcribe the particulars, and ſhall only obſerve, that muſic was uſed in propheſying; becauſe the minds of the prophets were thereby compoſed into ſuch a temper, as qualified them to receive ſoft and good impreſſions.

——And they ſhall propheſy.] That is, they ſhall ſing the praiſes of the Moſt High, as the word propheſy ſometimes ſignifies, Exod. xv. 21. 1 Chron. xxv. 3. In what manner this rapturous act of devotion was performed, is not ſo eaſy for us now to define, or ſpecify. But, one of the company ſeems to have been the præcentor, whoſe office was to uſher-in the verſe, and the reſt may be ſuppoſed to have anſwered, τὰ ἀκροτελεύτια, the extremes, or laſt words of the verſe.

Ver. 6. And the ſpirit of the Lord will come upon thee, and thou ſhalt propheſy with them.] This was the higheſt aſſurance of all the reſt, that Samuel anointed Saul by the Divine Authority; ſince God vouchſafed to inſpire the latter, in ſo ſudden a manner, with ſuch heavenly thoughts and affections, that he became like one of thoſe prophets, namely, an able pſalmiſt, and was able, in an inſtant, to compoſe hymns in the praiſe of God; or to accompany them in their ſacred melody, which he had never learnt. For he had not been educated in the ſchool of the prophets.

——And ſhalt be turned into another man.] Should be endued with extraordinary prudence and magnanimity, and every other accompliſhment that could qualify him, in the moſt effectual manner, for the government and conduct of God's people.

Ver. 7. And let it be when thoſe are come unto thee, that thou do as occaſion ſhall ſerve thee, for God is with thee.] This is as if Samuel had ſaid, I cannot at preſent furniſh thee with particular rules, concerning every thing that is to be tranſacted by thee. But I direct thee to undertake the government of the people, without the leaſt heſitation or diſtruſt; for thou ſhalt be guided by the ſpirit of God, in the performance of all that the preſent occaſion may require. Be confident, therefore, of ſucceſs in all thy lawful undertakings, for God himſelf will be with thee, when thou marcheſt againſt thine enemies.

Ver. 8. And thou ſhalt go down before me to Gilgal.] This place had been famous for many great things tranſacted there, when the Iſraelites firſt came into the promiſed land; and the ſituation of it was ſuch, that all the tribes beyond Jordan might conveniently aſſemble there, on this important occaſion.

——And behold, I will come down unto thee, to offer burnt-offerings, and to ſacrifice ſacrifices of peace-offerings: ſeven days ſhalt thou tarry, till I come to thee, and ſhew thee what thou ſhalt do.] This looks like another ſign, which Saul received from Samuel, of God's preſence with him in future times, if he would prove obedient to the Divine Commands. For it cannot be underſtood of his going immediately to Gilgal, and waiting there ſeven days; becauſe the people were firſt to be aſſembled at Mizpeh, where Saul was made king, ver. 17. and, after the defeat of the Ammonites, he was confirmed in the regal dignity at Gilgal, chap. xi. 14, 15. And when a war with the Philiſtines broke out the next year, all the people met at Gilgal, where Saul was likewiſe preſent, waiting for Samuel to come, as he had appointed, to offer ſacrifice; which Saul, being impatient at the long abſence of the prophet, offered himſelf, chap. xii. 4, 8, 9. and thereby forfeited the favour of God, whoſe prophet had aſſured him, that he would not fail to meet him there. Theſe words, therefore, muſt not be pointed as they now are, but as the Hebrew text will allow, retaining the ſame expreſſions, and only changing the pauſe, or point, in this manner: Thou ſhalt go down before me to Gilgal, and behold I will come unto thee to offer burnt-offerings, and to ſa- crifice ſacrifices of peace-offerings, ſeven days. Here then is to be a pauſe, and then another ſentence begins thus, Thou ſhalt tarry till I come unto thee, &c. Which is as much as if Samuel had ſaid, Be ſure, in all events, that thou tarry there till I come, and ſhew thee what thou ſhalt do: Which the prophet, perhaps, knew not himſelf, at preſent; but intended to ask counſel of God; and being fully inſtructed in this important affair, he then comes to conſecrate Saul, (as Mr. Jackſon conjectures) and eſtabliſh him in his kingdom; by a ſolemn ſacrifice for ſeven days, ſuch as Solomon offered at the conſecration of the temple.

Ver. 9. And it was ſo, that when he turned his back to go from Samuel, God gave him another heart: and all thoſe ſigns came to paſs that day.] So great was the goodneſs of God, that he immediately accompliſhed the laſt and chief of theſe ſigns: For Saul had no ſooner parted from Samuel, than he felt another ſpirit of wiſdom and fortitude infuſed into his ſoul, to qualify him for the government of God's people.

Ver. 10. And when he came thither to the hill, behold a company of prophets met him, &c.] The Sacred Hiſtorian has not mentioned the particular accompliſhments of the other ſigns, becauſe they were not of ſuch general importance to others; and were chiefly intended for Saul's own private ſatisfaction: Whereas this circumſtance of his meeting the prophets, and his own converſion into one of that order, was of great and univerſal moment, ſince it would induce the people to reverence him as their king, when they became ſenſible how God had honoured him with ſuch an extraordinary gift from heaven.

Ver. 11. And it came to paſs when all that knew him before time, ſaw, that behold he propheſied among the prophets, the people ſaid one to another, What is this that is come unto the ſon of Kiſh? Is Saul alſo among the prophets?] This extraordinary change which the ſpirit of God wrought in Saul, aſtoniſhed all thoſe who beheld it, and knew the manner in which he had been educated. Saul, therefore, propheſied ſo much beyond expectation, that the miracle became a proverb; and when any perſon was ſeen to exerciſe any great functions, to which he had not been habituated, it became cuſtomary for the people to cry out, Is Saul alſo among the prophets?

Ver. 12. And one of the ſame place anſwered and ſaid, But who is their father? This wonder was ſoon ſolved by ſome prudent perſon, who was then preſent, and deſired the people to conſider, who it was that beſtowed inſpiration on prophets? Not men, nor even good education, but God alone, who was the father of all the children, or diſciples, of the prophets, and taught them by his own ſpirit.

Ver. 13. And when he had made an end of propheſying, he came to the high place.] Herein he differed from the prophets who met him; that he propheſied only for a ſhort time, this not being his proper office. And when he had finiſhed, he went up to the high place, where, we ſuppoſe, a place of worſhip was erected; and he aſcended thither to render thanks to God for the gifts he had conferred upon him, and to intreat the Divine Majeſty to proſper him in the government he had deſigned for him.

Ver. 17. And Samuel called the people together unto the Lord to Mizpeh.] The prophet now reſolved to make a publick declaration to the people, of God's choice of Saul to be their king. Mizpeh was a very famous place, where they uſed to aſſemble on great occaſions; and God himſelf was pleaſed to be preſent where-ever there was a general aſſembly of the people, for the publick good. We, however, cannot well imagine, that every individual of the whole body of Iſrael came to this convention; but by the people, we are to underſtand, all the elders and heads of their tribes, who governed, and repreſented the reſt.

Ver. 18. And ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, I brought up Iſrael out of Egypt, &c.] He commemorates the benefits they had received from the Almighty, ever ſince they were in Egypt, from whence he conducted them in ſafety, and would not ſuffer any of the kingdoms which lay in their way to Canaan, to obſtruct their paſſage. Samuel then repreſents to them their ingratitude, in being ſo ſollicitous for a king and ſo unwilling to be any longer under the government of that God who had crowned them with ſo much proſperity, and bleſſed their arms, with ſo many ſignal victories.

One might well imagine, that the hearts of this people would have been ſoftened, by ſuch moving expoſtulations; inſtead of which, they were infatuated to ſuch a degree, that they were as obſtinate as ever, in their demand of a king; Samuel, therefore, complied with their importunities, and cauſed the tribes to approach the place, where the lots were to be drawn, in the preſence of the heads of their tribes and families, who were the repreſentatives of all the reſt. The lots were accordingly caſt, and the Sacred Hiſtorian informs us, that the tribe of Benjamin was taken, ver. 20. The ſame phraſe is uſed in the viith chapter of Joſhua, where an account is given of the diſcovery of the perſon who had offended in the accurſed thing; and it is generally agreed, that the offender was there detected by lots; and ſo Raſi, and Ralbag, underſtand it here: But Kimchi imagines, that God declared to them by Urim and Thummim, out of what tribe and family their king ſhould be choſen; which is altogether improbable, becauſe the ark was not then at Mizpeh; and it is certain that the high prieſt was to ſtand before it, when he conſulted the Divine Majeſty by Urim and Thummim.

Ver. 21. When he had cauſed the tribe of Benjamin to come near by their families, the family of Matri was taken, and Saul the ſon of Kiſh was taken.] The holy writer ſhortens this account of their caſting lots; for it ſeems ſufficiently evident that they were caſt four times. In the firſt, Benjamin was taken; and in the ſecond, the family of Matri in that tribe, was likewiſe taken; but there being ſeveral houſholds in that family, the lot was caſt a third time, that they might know in what particular houſe their king was: Whereupon that of Kiſh was taken, as in the laſt place was Saul, by a new lot. This method was taken, not only for the prevention of all conteſts, but likewiſe to give Saul the greater authority over them, as a perſon ſelected by heaven. Plato himſelf acknowledges a government appointed by lots to be Θεοφιλὴ ἀρχὴ, a government beloved of God. Lib. 4. de Legibus.

Some perhaps may be apt to enquire, why the firſt king of Iſrael ſhould be choſen out of the ſmalleſt tribe, ſprung from the youngeſt ſon of Jacob, and out of the moſt inconſiderable family in this tribe? Eſpecially ſince Judah had all along the preheminence among his brethren, and the great king was, according to the Divine Promiſe, to ſpring from that tribe. But this enquiry may receive a ſatisfactory anſwer, when we conſider, that as the king they were now preparing to elect, was extorted by their undutiful importunities, and given them in anger; God was pleaſed by this choice, to expreſs his diſapprobation of their proceeding; and he likewiſe intended by it, to take them off from depending on their new king (whoſe power was ſmall) ſo much as on himſelf.

—— And when they ſought him, he could not be found.] He, either had withdrawn himſelf out of modeſty, that he might not ſeem ambitious of ſo great a dignity; or perhaps, he was terrified when he heard Samuel ſtill repreſenting the Divine Majeſty as offended with them, for continuing to require a king, ſince they thereby rejected the government of God.

Ver. 22. Therefore they enquired of the Lord further, if the man ſhould yet come thither.] Abarbinel concludes from hence, that God directed them not only by lot, but likewiſe by Urim and Thummim, which if true, as he has not proved, then, tho' the ark was not there, yet it muſt be ſuppoſed, that they enquired of the Lord in the uſual manner, and that he was pleaſed to give anſwers any where, in caſes of great importance. As Abiathar enquired of the Lord, with the ephod, for David at Keliah, and at Ziglag, xxiii. 9. xxx. 7.

—— And the Lord anſwered, Behold he hath hid himſelf among the ſtuff.] Or, among the carriages. Here the Jews obſerve, that whoſoever flies dominion, him dominion follows. For, ſay they, when they told Saul, he was choſen king, he declared himſelf unqualified for that important dignity, and directed them to enquire again by Urim and Thummim, which they repreſent as the meaning of the word further: And that while they were preparing to make this enquiry, he hid himſelf till the oracle diſcovered him.

Ver.

Ver. 23. And they ran and fetched him thence: and when he ſtood among the people, he was higher than any of the people, from his ſhoulders and upward.] His form was ſo imperial and ſtately, that it ſtruck all who beheld him with admiration and reverence. Joſephus accordingly declares, that ὑπερέχει τε ἁπάντων, καὶ τὸ ὕψος ἦν βασιλικώτατος, he excelled all the reſt of the people, and was moſt majeſtic in his height. Samuel then preſented him to the people, and ſaid, ſee ye him whom the Lord hath choſen, that there is none like him among all the people? This indeed was a juſt encomium on Saul, but the Iſraelites would have found but little reaſon to rejoice at it, if they had only conſidered, that they had thrown off their ſubjection to the God of heaven, in favour of a mortal graced with a pleaſing exterior.

Ver. 24. And all the people ſhouted, and ſaid, God ſave the king.] The expreſſion in the Hebrew is, let the king live, that is, may he be proſperous.

Ver. 25. Then Samuel told the people the manner of the kingdom, and wrote it in a book, and laid it up before the Lord.] The manner of a king he had repreſented to them before, chap. viii. 11. and he now acquaints them with the manner of a kingdom, namely, the particular laws and rules, by which the regal government ought to be conducted. All thoſe particulars he wrote in a book, and laid it up, before the Lord, that it might be a witneſs againſt them, that all the evils which might thereafter befall them, were drawn upon them by their own obſtinate deſires. Joſephus declares, that Samuel, having written the evils that ſhould befall them, read them in the ears of the king, and then depoſited the book in the tabernacle of God, to be a teſtimony to future ages of what he had predicted, (Antiq. lib 6. cap. 5.) Perhaps he left a duplicate of this writing with the elders of the people.

Samuel then diſmiſſed the aſſembly, and Saul gave them an indication of his humility, by returning to his own houſe, which was not a ſtately palace, fit for the reception of a ſovereign prince.

There were ſome perſons, in this aſſembly, who were ſo audacious as to teſtify their contempt of the king who had thus been choſen; not that they preferred the Divine Government before that of a man, but they had the inſolence, after they had demanded a king with ſo much obſtinacy, to oppoſe the perſon whom God had choſen to reign over them. Saul had the prudence to conceal his reſentment for this inſult; and inſtead of beginning his reign with any acts of ſeverity, he thought it more adviſeable to wait for ſome favourable opportunity of making them ſenſible, to their confuſion, that God had imparted to him the proper talents, as well as the dignity of a monarch.

CHAP. XI.

1 Nahaſh offereth them of Jabeſh-gilead a reproachful condition 4 They ſend meſſengers, and are delivered by Saul. 12 Saul thereby is confirmed, and his kingdom renewed.

THEN Nahaſh the Ammonite came up, and encamped againſt Jabeſh-gilead: and all the men of Jabeſh ſaidunto Nahaſh, Make a covenant with us, and we will ſerve thee.

2 And Nahaſh the Ammonite anſwered them, On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thruſt out all your right eyes, and lay it for a reproach upon all Iſrael.

3 And the elders of Jabeſh ſaid unto him, Give us ſeven days reſpite, that we may ſend meſſengers unto all the coaſts of Iſrael: and then if there be no man to ſave us, we will come out to thee.

4 ¶ Then came the meſſengers to Gibeah of Saul, and told the tidings in the ears of the people: and all the people lift up their voices, and wept.

5 And behold, Saul came after the herd out of the field, and Saul ſaid, What aileth the people that they weep? And they told him the tidings of the men of Jabeſh.

6 And the ſpirit of God came upon Saul when he heard thoſe tidings, and his anger was kindled greatly.

7 And he took a yoke of oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and ſent them throughout all the coaſts of Iſrael, by the hands of meſſengers, ſaying, Whoſoever cometh not forth after Saul and after Samuel, ſo ſhall it be done unto his oxen: and the fear of the LORD fell on the people, and they came out with one conſent.

8 And when he numbred them in Bezek, the children of Iſrael were three hundred thouſand, and the men of Judah thirty thouſand.

9 And they ſaid unto the meſſengers that came, Thus ſhall ye ſay unto the men of Jabeſh-gilead, To-morrow by that time the ſun be hot, ye ſhall have help. And the meſſengers came and ſhewed it to the men of Jabeſh, and they were glad.

10 Therefore the men of Jabeſh ſaid, To-morrow we will come out unto you, and ye ſhall do with us all that ſeemeth good unto you.

11 And it was ſo on the morrow, that Saul put the people in three companies, and they came into the midſt of the hoſt in the morning watch, and ſlew the Ammonites, until the heat of the day: and it came to paſs, that they which remained were ſcattered, ſo that two of them were not left together.

12 ¶ And the people ſaid unto Samuel, Who is he that ſaid, Shall Saul reign over us? bring the men, that we may put them to death.

13 And Saul ſaid, There ſhall not a man be put to death this day: for to day the LORD hath wrought ſalvation in Iſrael.

14 Then ſaid Samuel to the people, Come, and let us go to Gilgal, and renew the kingdom there.

15 And all the people went to Gilgal, and there they made Saul king before the LORD in Gilgal: and there they ſacrificed ſacrifices of peace-offerings before the LORD: and there Saul and all the men of Iſrael rejoiced greatly.

Ver.

Ver. 1. Then Nahash the Ammonite came up against Jabesh-gilead.] It was not long before Saul had a favourable opportunity of giving his subjects a noble earnest of his bravery, and to convince them how well he could use his new authority. Jabesh-gilead was invested by Nahash the Ammonite, who either reigned over the children of Ammon, or else was the captain of their host. This siege, according to Josephus, was formed about a month after Saul was advanced to the sovereign power; but the Ammonites had levied war against Israel before that time ch. xii. 12. which was the occasion of their desiring a king of their own.

The city which the Ammonites thus besieged was call'd Jabesh-gilead, because it lay in Gilead, at the foot of the mountains which go by this name, and in the half-tribe of Manasseh beyond Jordan. Eusebius places it six miles from Pella, toward Gerasa, and consequently it must have been situated eastward of the sea of Tiberias. This city had been formerly sacked by the Israelites, because it refused to join its arms with theirs, in the war undertaken against Benjamin, in order to avenge the great outrage, which the Levite's wife suffered in that place, Judges xxi.

The inhabitants of this city being reduced to distress by the army of Nahash, consented to surrender upon conditions; but he insolently replied, that they were to expect no other terms, than to have their right eyes thrust out, and that he might lay it for a reproach upon all Israel, ver 2. This was sufficient to let all Israel know what they were to expect, if he should be so successful as to prevail over them. The condition was cruel, and shocking to human nature, and yet the besieged seemed to submit to it, for they answered him, Give us seven days respite, that we may send messengers to all the coasts of Israel, and then if there be no man to save us, we will come out to thee. It may be thought strange, that either they should submit so soon to such ignominious conditions, or that Nahash should grant them so much respite, when he saw them so abject, and inclined to yield to him. But the reason of both is visible; for they thought Saul was in no condition to assist them, since he had not yet taken upon him the government, but lived in a private manner. And Nahash, in all probability, was unwilling to drive them to desparation, by denying them that short respite, for expecting relief; which he imagined they could not possibly obtain, tho' Saul should endeavour to levy an army; for this he believed would be impracticable in so few days, as the case of the besieged required.

The messengers which were dispatched from Jabesh gilead, came to Gibeah, where Saul dwelt, and related to the inhabitants the deplorable condition to which their brethren of Jabesh were reduced; upon which the people were so affected, as to shed tears. Saul returned about the same time out of the field, following his herd, and said, What aileth the people that they weep? ver. 5. By this it appears, that as he had seen himself despised by some of the Israelites, as is mentioned in the preceding chapter, he lived a rural and retired life, exercising no authority over the people, but leaving all to the management of Samuel. But when he heard of the contemptuous and inhuman manner in which the inhabitants of Jabesh were treated by the Ammonites, the Sacred Historian declares, that the spirit of the Lord came upon him, ver. 6. He was now prompted, by a Divine Impulse, to make it evident that God had chosen him to be their king; and the Deity, upon this occasion, gave him an extraordinary measure of courage, zeal, and military skill.

Ver. 7. And he took a yoke of Oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and sent them throughout all the coasts of Israel, by the hands of messengers, saying, Whosoever cometh not forth after Saul, and after Samuel, so shall it be done unto his oxen.] Saul now began to give a proof of his resolution, by this severe threatning; whereby it appears, that the kings of Israel assumed such an absolute power as Samuel had described, chap. viii. One part of which consisted in making war, and raising soldiers by their sole authority, and punishing those who did not join the army at their summons. For we never read, that they consulted the oracle before they engaged in a war, nor that they are reproved by the prophets for that omission. Saul was likewise sensible, that there was not a moment to be lost in succouring the inhabitants of Jabesh, and therefore had recourse to this peremptory expedient, to excite the people to hasten immediately to the assistance of their brethren. 'Twas then that the fear of the Lord fell on all the people, who were likewise struck with horror at the barbarous proposal made by Nahash; and they all appeared at the place assigned as if they had been but one man.

Ver. 8. And when he numbred them in Bezek, the children of Israel were three hundred thousand, and the men of Judah thirty thousand.] It is thought by some, that the Philistines invaded Israel in the west, as the Ammonites did in the east, which is the reason so few of the tribe of Judah came in at this summons; being elsewhere engaged against another formidable enemy. But Bertram, and others, take it as an honour done to this tribe, which had the preheminence, that they were numbered by themselves. Sir John Marsham, on the other hand, looks upon it as the beginning of a schism among the tribes, Secul. ix.

It seems very surprising, if not incredible, that Saul should be able to assemble such a numerous army in so short a time. Josephus, indeed, enlarges their number, in a very extraordinary manner, but upon what foundation, is not easy to be conceived. He reckons seven hundred thousand Israelites, and seventy thousand of the tribe of Judah; but there is certainly a mistake in his computation, for which reason we shall adhere to the account given by the Sacred Historian: Nor can we even believe that the number of men mentioned by him could be drawn together in so few days without a signal interposition of the Divine Providence. For all the tribes could not have had intelligence in one and the same day, considering their distance from each other; and it was very difficult to make them all appear at the same time, at the place of general rendezvous, in a readiness to march and attack the enemy. We are sensible, indeed, that the Israelites were a well-disciplined people, and marched in haste to the succour of their brethren who were shut up in Jabesh; but whatever expedition those who were most remote might use, it is hard to be conceived, how they could naturally arrive time enough for the service in which they were to be employed. They, however, made their appearance at the appointed time and place, and Saul, inspired by God, placed him at the head of that army, and marched directly against the enemy.

The Jewish king had sent word to the inhabitants of Jabesh, by their own messengers, that they should be relieved the next day, by that time the sun was in its full force, ver. 9. The besieged received this intelligence with great joy, as may well be imagined; and sent word to the Ammonites, in terms to this effect, To-morrow morning we will come out unto you, and you shall then treat us as you please. Nor did they falsify their word, for the next day they were to make a vigorous sally, and go out to them; but with sword in hand, while their brethren were to attack the Ammonitish camp. This was indeed a stratagem; for their ambiguous expressions caused the enemy to be less upon their guard, as supposing that the inhabitants of the town had lost all hopes of being succoured.

The next day, Saul divided his army into three bodies, and fell upon the camp of the Ammonites, in the morning-watch, ver. 11. He surprized, in all probability, this great army, and assaulted their camp in three different quarters of the circumvallation, in order to find them employment in all parts. This surprize entirely confounded them, for the Sacred Text does not declare that they made the least resistance. It may likewise be taken for granted, that the inhabitants of the town immediately sallied out upon the enemy, as well to be punctual to their promise, as to assist their brethren in cutting them to pieces.

The Hebrews were well acquainted with the art of war, and we frequently see in scripture, that it was their method to fight in separate bodies, drawn up very deep.

We cannot imagine why father Calmet should affirm, as he does, that it might be the fourth day of the truce which was granted to the inhabitants of Jabesh, when they were delivered. This appears to have been impossible, by what we have already observed; and we rather believe, that at the soonest, it was not till the seventh day, or even at the first dawn of the eighth.

The same author says farther, in his comment on the 11th verse of this chapter, that he does not observe, that either the Hebrews, or their neighbours, fortified their camp, but only placed centries at the avenues. But he certainly did not conſider well what he ſaid, for in his hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, ſpeaking of the war between Benhadad and Ahab, he declares, that it was the cuſtom to incloſe beſieged towns with ditches and redoubts, in order to reduce the beſieged by famine. Beſide, it is certain, that Moſes threw up intrenchments about his camp, and not only lines of circumvallation, but thoſe too of contravallation were in uſe among the Jews, and their neighbours. The reader may conſult the comment on Polybius, where he will find a treatiſe on the method of attacking and defending places among the ancients, in which there are ſeveral inſtances of lines drawn round beſieged towns.

The Iſraelites, elevated at this ſignal victory, were for inflicting death on all thoſe who had refuſed to acknowledge Saul for their king, ver. 12. but he generouſly oppoſed that motion, alledging, that it would be altogether unfit to ſtain the beginning of his reign with the ſlaughter of their brethren, after God had wrought ſo ſignal a ſalvation in Iſrael. This moderate anſwer endear'd him the more to his people; and Samuel, who had accompanied him to the battle, invited the Iſraelites to Gilgal, there to confirm the kingdom to Saul by their univerſal conſent, ſince he had ſhewed himſelf ſo worthy of it. This was accordingly done, and the ceremonial was accompanied with joy and acclamations, together with peace-offerings, which were there offered up to the Lord.

CHAP. XII.

1 Samuel teſtifieth his integrity. 6 He reproveth the people of ingratitude. 16 He terrifieth them with thunder in harveſt time. 20 He comforteth them in God's mercy.

AND Samuel ſaid unto all Iſrael, Behold, I have hearkned unto your voice in all that ye ſaid unto me, and have made a king over you.

2 And now behold, the king walketh before you: and I am old, and gray-headed, and behold, my ſons are with you: and I have walked before you from my childhood unto this day.

3 Behold, here I am, witneſs againſt me before the LORD, and before his anointed: whoſe ox have I taken? or whoſe aſs have I taken? or whom have I defrauded? whom have I oppreſſed? or of whoſe hand have I received any bribe to blind mine eyes therewith? and I will reſtore it you.

4 And they ſaid, Thou haſt not defrauded us, nor oppreſſed us, neither haſt thou taken ought of any mans hand.

5 And he ſaid unto them, The LORD is witneſs againſt you, and his anointed is witneſs this day, that ye have not found ought in my hand. And they anſwered, He is witneſs.

6 ¶ And Samuel ſaid unto the people, It is the LORD that advanced Moſes and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt.

7 Now therefore ſtand ſtill, that I may reaſon with you before the LORD, of all the righteous acts of the LORD, which he did to you and to your fathers.

8 When Jacob was come into Egypt, and your fathers cried unto the LORD, then the LORD ſent Moſes and Aaron, which brought forth your fathers out of Egypt, and made them dwell in this place.

9 And when they forgat the LORD their God, he ſold them into the hand of Siſera captain of the hoſt of Hazor, and into the hand of the Philiſtines, and into the hand of the king of Moab, and they fought againſt them.

10 And they cried unto the LORD, and ſaid, We have ſinned, becauſe we have forſaken the LORD, and have ſerved Baalim and Aſhtaroth: but now deliver us out of the hand of our enemies, and we will ſerve thee.

11 And the LORD ſent Jerubbaal, and Bedan, and Jephthah, and Samuel, and delivered you out of the hand of your enemies on every ſide, and ye dwelled ſafe.

12 And when ye ſaw that Nahaſh the king of the children of Ammon came againſt you, ye ſaid unto me, Nay, but a king ſhall reign over us; when the LORD your God was your king.

13 Now therefore, behold the king whom ye have choſen, and whom ye have deſired: and behold, the LORD hath ſet a king over you.

14 If ye will fear the LORD, and ſerve him, and obey his voice, and not rebel againſt the commandment of the LORD, then ſhall both ye, and alſo the king that reigneth over you, continue following the LORD your God.

15 But ye will not obey the voice of the LORD, but rebel againſt the commandment of the LORD, then ſhall the hand of the LORD be againſt you, as it was againſt your fathers.

16 ¶ Now therefore ſtand and ſee this great thing which the LORD will do before your eyes.

17 Is it not wheat-harveſt to day? I will call unto the LORD, and he ſhall ſend thunder and rain that ye may perceive and ſee that your wickedneſs is great, which ye have done in the ſight of the LORD, in asking you a king.

18 So Samuel called unto the LORD, and the LORD ſent thunder and rain that day: and all the people greatly feared the LORD and Samuel.

19 And all the people ſaid unto Samuel, Pray for thy ſervants unto the LORD thy God,

God, that we die not: for we have added unto all our ſins, this evil, to ask us a king.

20 ¶ And Samuel ſaid unto the people, Fear not (ye have done all this wickedneſs: yet turn not aſide from following the LORD, but ſerve the LORD with all your heart;

21 And turn ye not aſide: for then ſhould ye go after vain things which cannot profit nor deliver, for they are vain)

22 For the LORD will not forſake his people, for his great names ſake: becauſe it hath pleaſed the LORD to make you his people.

23 Moreover, as for me, God forbid that I ſhould ſin againſt the LORD in ceaſing to pray for you: but I will teach you the good and the right way.

24 Only fear the LORD, and ſerve him in truth with all your heart: for conſider how great things he hath done for you.

25 But if ye ſhall ſtill do wickedly, ye ſhall be conſumed, both ye and your king.

Ver. 1. And Samuel ſaid unto all Iſrael, &c.] Before Samuel diſmiſſed the numerous aſſembly at Gilgal, he took that opportunity to juſtify his conduct, during the whole time of his adminiſtration as judge. This was indeed a proper time, becauſe his authority being now devolved on Saul, who was then preſent, could be no longer a check to any of them from exhibiting their complaint, if any ſuch they had againſt him.

He therefore challenged them, as he was now in the wane of life, and could not expect to continue long in the world, to accuſe him openly before their new king, if he had committed any act of fraud, injuſtice, or oppreſſion, againſt any of them, that he might now make them a reſtitution before he died; but he had the ſatisfaction of being anſwered by the general voice, that he had never wronged nor oppreſſed them, in any inſtance whatever.

Samuel was not content with this ample teſtimony to his own integrity, but made the people take God to witneſs, that they had ſpoken from their hearts; and they readily complied. The prophet ſeems to have had a double view in this pathetic expoſtulation, beſide that of clearing his own character from all diſhonourable imputations: The firſt was, to ſet before young Saul a pattern to copy after; and the other, to make the people ſenſible of their ingratitude to the God of all their mercies, in deſiring to be governed in a different manner from that which he himſelf had appointed; and that unleſs they proved more obedient and tractable for the future, their new plan of government would be of little benefit to them, ſince neither that, nor any other, could preſerve them from their enemies, without the concurrence of the Divine Bleſſing: And that if they ſhould happen to forfeit this, by their obſtinate wickedneſs, they would draw down infallible ruin on the king they had elected, as well as on themſelves. To convince them of this truth, he thought it proper to recapitulate to them all the ſevere thraldoms which they had incurred, by their idolatry and diſobedience, ſince their firſt ſettlement in that land; and the many ſignal deliverances which God had wrought for them upon their repentance, and without the help of a king. And in order to add a ſtill greater weight to his words, and to aſſure them, that they were not dictated by any reſentment at their importunity for a king, even in his own life-time, but becauſe God was highly diſpleaſed at their proceeding, he reminded them, that it was then the ſeaſon of harveſt, when the air is commonly ſerene, and free from clouds and ſtormy ſhowers; but he told them, at the ſame time, that he would, by his prayers, obtain ſuch an extraordinary tempeſt of thunder and rain, as ſhould convince them, God had been exceedingly provoked by their undutiful demand. What he ſaid, he performed; and the people were terrified into a confeſſion of their guilt, and of this particular aggravation of it, namely, their requiring a king. They then intreated Samuel to offer up his prayers to God, to calm the tempeſt, and avert the danger they dreaded. The aged prophet readily complied with their requeſt; and then aſſured them, that he would continue his good offices to them, as long as he lived; and that if they and their king did but remain ſtedfaſt in their obedience to God, inſtead of confiding in their vain and deceitful idols, they ſhould ſucceed in all their undertakings; but, if they relapſed into their former impieties, both they and their prince muſt expect to feel the ſevereſt effects of the Divine Diſpleaſure.

All theſe tranſactions happened in the firſt year of Saul's reign.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Saul's ſelected band. 3 He calleth the Hebrews to Gilgal againſt the Philiſtines, whoſe garriſon Jonathan had ſmitten. 5 The Philiſtines great hoſt. 6 The diſtreſs of the Iſraelites. 8 Saul, weary of ſtaying for Samuel, ſacrificeth. 11 Samuel reproveth him. 17 The three ſpoiling bands of the Philiſtines. 19 The policy of the Philiſtines to ſuffer no ſmith in Iſrael.

SAUL reigned one year, and when he had reigned two years over Iſrael,

2 Saul choſe him three thouſand men of Iſrael; whereof two thouſand were with Saul in Michmaſh and in mount Beth-el, and a thouſand were with Jonathan in Gibeah of Benjamin: and the reſt of the people he ſent every man to his tent.

3 And Jonathan ſmote the garriſon of the Philiſtines that was in Geba, and the Philiſtines heard of it: and Saul blew the trumpet throughout all the land, ſaying, Let the Hebrews hear.

4 And all Iſrael heard ſay, that Saul had ſmitten a garriſon of the Philiſtines, and that Iſrael alſo was had in abomination with the Philiſtines: and the people were called together after Saul to Gilgal.

5 ¶ And the Philiſtines gathered themſelves together, to fight with Iſrael, thirty thouſand chariots, and ſix thouſand horſemen, and people as the ſand which is on the ſea-ſhore in multitude: and they came up, and pitched in Michmaſh, eaſt-ward from Beth-aven.

6 When the men of Iſrael ſaw that they were in a ſtrait (for the people were diſtreſſed) then the people did hide themſelves in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in high places, and in pits.

7 And ſome of the Hebrews went over Jordan to the land of Gad and Gilead: as for Saul, he was yet in Gilgal, and all the people followed him trembling.

8 ¶ And

8 ¶ And he tarried ſeven days, according to the ſet time that Samuel had appointed: but Samuel came not to Gilgal, and the people were ſcattered from him.

9 And Saul ſaid, Bring hither a burnt-offering to me, and peace-offerings. And he offered the burnt-offering.

10 And it came to paſs, that aſſoon as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, behold, Samuel came, and Saul went out to meet him, that he might ſalute him,

11 ¶ And Samuel ſaid, What haſt thou done? And Saul ſaid, Becauſe I ſaw that the people were ſcattered from me, and that thou cameſt not within the days appointed, and that the Philiſtines gathered themſelves together to Michmaſh:

12 Therefore ſaid I, The Philiſtines will come down now upon me to Gilgal, and I have not made ſupplication unto the LORD: I forced my ſelf therefore, and offered a burnt-offering.

13 And Samuel ſaid to Saul, Thou haſt done fooliſhly: thou haſt not kept the commandment of the LORD thy God, which he commanded thee: for now would the LORD have eſtabliſhed thy kingdom upon Iſrael for ever.

14 But now thy kingdom ſhall not continue: the LORD hath ſought him a man after his own heart, and the LORD hath commanded him to be captain over his people, becauſe thou haſt not kept that which the LORD commanded thee.

15 And Samuel aroſe, and gat him up from Gilgal, unto Gibeah of Benjamin: and Saul numbred the people that were preſent with him, about ſix hundred men.

16 And Saul and Jonathan his ſon, and the people that were preſent with them, abode in Gibeah of Benjamin: but the Philiſtines encamped in Michmaſh.

17 ¶ And the ſpoilers came out of the camp of the Philiſtines, in three companies: one company turned unto the way that leadeth to Ophrah, unto the land of Shual.

18 And another company turned the way to Beth-horon: and another company turned to the way of the border, that looketh to the valley of Zeboim toward the wilderneſs.

19 ¶ Now there was no ſmith found throughout all the land of Iſrael (for the Philiſtines ſaid, Leſt the Hebrews make them ſwords or ſpears)

20 But all the Iſraelites went down to the Philiſtines, to ſharpen every man his ſhare, and his coulter, and his ax, and his mattock.

21 Yet they had a file for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks, and for the axes, and to ſharpen the goads.

22 So it came to paſs in the day of battle, that there was neither ſword nor ſpear found in the hand of any of the people that were with Saul and Jonathan: but with Saul and with Jonathan his ſon was there found.

23 And the garriſon of the Philiſtines went out to the paſſage of Michmaſh.

Ver. 1. Saul reigned one year.] The Hebrew text runs thus, Saul the ſon of one year in his reign or kingdom. His being called the ſon of one year has an elegant propriety, becauſe he may be ſaid to have been born anew, when he was advanced to the regal dignity, and changed into another man. Thus, the day of an emperor's inauguration, among the Romans, was called his birth-day, viz. natalis regni, the day when he began his reign.

Ver. 2. Saul choſe him three thouſand men of Iſrael, &c.] Saul diſmiſſed his numerous army in the ſecond year of his reign, thinking perhaps, that his late victory had ſufficiently ſecured his territories from any new attempt; and he reſerved to himſelf only three thouſand men, two thouſand of whom he ſtationed in the garriſons of Michmaſh and Bethel, and the other thouſand he left at Gibeah, in the tribe of Benjamin, under the command of his ſon Jonathan. This young prince, being deſirous to perform ſome action worthy the ſon and ſucceſſor of Saul, drew out his troops, and deſtroy'd a Philiſtine garriſon at Geba, a diſtinct place from Gibeah, tho' both in the tribe of Benjamin, as is evident from Joſh. xviii. 24, 28. The news of this exploit having alarmed the Philiſtines, obliged Saul to blow the trumpet, and acquaint Iſrael, that the enemies were advancing againſt them with a formidable hoſt; as they really were; for the Sacred Hiſtorian declares, that they had thirty thouſand chariots, and ſix thouſand horſemen, beſide an innumerable multitude of foot; and they encamped againſt Michmaſh, eaſtward of Beth-aven.

The great Sir Iſaac Newton, from this vaſt number of chariots and horſemen, is tempted to think, the Philiſtines were now very powerfully ſuccoured, and their numbers exceedingly encreaſed, by the acceſſion of the ſhepherds, who were expelled, at that time, out of Egypt. We ſhall not preſume to contend with that illuſtrious author, on ſo dark a point, ſince he may as well be right as not. But we cannot help obſerving, that he takes thoſe thirty thouſand chariots to have been of the warlike ſort, and intended to be employed in battle; tho' he is ſurprized at their exceſſive number, when compared with thoſe which followed Pharaoh, who periſhed in the Red-ſea. We are rather inclined, to think with all due deference to that incomparable author, that theſe chariots, or moſt of them, were only carriages, which were uſed, partly for the conveyance of the baggage of ſo great an army, and partly deſigned for moving off the plunder of the whole country, which the Philiſtines ſeem to have graſped at with the moſt inſolent preſumption. But if we reduce theſe carriages to three thouſand, which is their number in the Syriac and Arabic copies, they will yet be far too many, if we conſider them as warlike chariots; ſince in the vaſt army of Mithridates there were but an hundred of ſuch chariots; in that of Darius, two hundred; and no more than three hundred in the army of Antiochus Epiphanes; of which we read, 2 Maccab. xiii. 2.

The approach of ſo vaſt an army ſtruck the Iſraelites with ſuch a general conſternation, that they no longer remembered the glorious victory they had lately obtained over the Ammonites, and the uncommon bravery their king had shewn upon that occasion. A great part, therefore, of that dastardly people shrunk into caves and dens of the earth, and into every other retreat where they could meanly lurk undiscovered. Another part of them fled over Jordan for safety, leaving their country open to the frequent and destructive incursions of their enemies; and their king, to make the best of the pusilanimous remains of the people, who were unwilling to forsake him at the first alarm. One misfortune, however, attended them, and it may, in some measure, excuse their defection; for the Philistines had taken the politic precaution to strip them of all kinds of weapons, and even of the instruments with which they used to sharpen their rural tools, lest they should use those instead of arms. They had neither smith nor forge among them; and so destitute were they at this time, that there was neither sword nor spear, beside those which belonged to Saul and his son, when they came to muster that little army. The rest of them were armed, as one may reasonably suppose, with such weapons as they themselves could prepare, without the assistance of a smith: Such as slings, flails, clubs, wooden prongs, staves harden'd in the fire, and other rural implements. The slings in the management of which they were very expert, might be used by them at the first onset, and with good effect; as the others might in a closer engagement.

Saul, notwithstanding the disparity between the Philistines troops and his own, continued at Gilgal, in expectation of the arrival of Samuel, according to his appointment; but after he had waited for the space of seven days, and found that the prophet neither came nor sent, and that his own inconsiderable army dwindled away to a small handful, he yet resolved to make a brave resistance, in case he should be attacked by the enemy; but being apprehensive, at the same time that he should be surprised by them, before he had implored the protection of God, in the usual solemnity of sacrifices; he ventured to offer up some peace-offerings, accompanied with a burnt-offering. But scarce had he made an end of sacrifice, when Samuel came and reproved him severely for what he had done. Saul excused himself, by alledging the pressing necessity to which he was reduced; but whether the prophet took it as a presage of his future disobedience, and want of faith, and designed only to intimidate and forewarn him, or whether his rejection by God, had been already revealed to Samuel, he told him that he had committed a very foolish action, and that his disobedience to the Divine Command, would cause his kingdom to be transferred from him to a more worthy and faithful person.

It may be difficult, perhaps, to determine what Saul's real crime was which drew upon him such a severe sentence from the prophet. The Jews, indeed, accuse him 1st, Of not having waited the full time for him. 2dly, Of having presumed to infringe upon the priestly office, by offering up sacrifices with his unhallowed hand, Vid. Munst. in loc. Josephus seems to say much the same thing, tho' not in express terms; but he adds, that Saul had sent for Samuel to advise with him, who sent him word back, that he should continue where he was, and prepare the sacrifices against his arrival, which would be at the end of seven days, when he himself would offer them to God. Saul, continues the Jewish Historian, waited out the appointed time, but most unhappily failed in another article of his commission; for when he found the prophet delayed his coming, and saw his men perpetually deserting him, he offered up the sacrifice, without waiting any longer for Samuel, Joseph. Antiq. l. 6. c. 7. As to the first of these, namely, his not waiting the whole time, it is thought by some to have been too inconsiderable a crime, to deserve a total rejection, considering the distress to which Saul was reduced, by the constant desertion of his army; and as to the last particular, namely, his offering the sacrifice himself, it seems to be scarce probable, because he had the high-priest Ahiah with him, to perform that office, or to have prevented him from doing it, if such had been his intention. Some authors, therefore, believe there is a transposition of chapters in this book, and that the crime for which God rejected Saul, was his not destroying the king of Amalek, and all the plunder, according to God's command; the history of which we have in the next chapter, wherein Samuel reproves the Jewish prince in the most severe terms, for his disobedience, and tells him plainly, that the Lord had rejected him from being king, Vid. Tremel. in loc. Others think it more likely that the prophet, in the chapter now before us, only threatens Saul with what he must expect, unless he became more conformable to the commands of God. For it is evident, that Saul was so far from being absolutely rejected, at this time, that he was blessed with a great and almost miraculous victory, immediately after Samuel had left him, and was likewise very successful against several other nations; and above all, received a new command from the prophet to attack and destroy the Amalekites, with a promise of victory. As for what is said, that the Lord hath sought him a man after his own heart, and the Lord hath commanded him to be captain over his people, because thou hast not kept that which the Lord commanded thee, ver. 14. It may be answered, that according to the genius of the Hebrew tongue, these words may as well be taken in the future tense; the Lord will seek, &c. for it is certain that God had not yet commanded David to lead his people; but intended to invest him with that authority, if Saul did not repent, and obtain a pardon of him for his offence. It may therefore be concluded, that the Deity had not then passed an irreversible sentence upon Saul, (as many great men have thought) but his threatenings might have been revoked, if that unhappy prince had not persisted in his folly, and committed a much greater offence against the Divine Majesty, in the war against Amalek. For 'tis then that Samuel tells him the Lord would not repent: which not being added here, makes it probable that Saul was capable of a pardon, notwithstanding this denunciation, if he had implored it with the spirit of repentance, and not relapsed into any disobedient conduct for the time to come.

Samuel departed from Saul, and went to Gibeah of Benjamin, to which place that prince and his son followed him with the small army of Israelites, consisting only of six hundred unarmed men. This was a melancholy alteration since the preceding year when Saul marched against the Ammonites at the head of three hundred and thirty thousand men; but as he was now in his own tribe, he perhaps might hope to increase his forces.

The Philistines were still encamped in Michmash, which was not very remote from Gibeah, and they detached three different parties of their troops to ravage the country. The Sacred Historian informs us, that one company turned into the way that leadeth to Ophrah, unto the land of Shual; and another company turned the way to Beth-horon; and another company turned to the way of the border, that looketh to the valley of Zeboim, toward the wilderness, ver. 17, 18. There was a city called Ophrah, in the tribe of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 23. but many take the Ophrah mentioned here to be that in the tribe of Manasseh, where Gideon was born, Judges vi. 11. The land of Shual was so called, because it abounded in foxes, as Bochart observes. There were two Beth-horons, the upper, and the nether; both which were in the tribe of Ephraim, 1 Chron. vii. 24. The valley of Zeboim is by the Chaldee Paraphrast called the valley of vipers; for tzeboa signifies a sort of speckled serpent, with which this valley abounded, and it lay toward the wilderness of Jericho, in the tribe of Benjamin.

CHAP. XIV.

1 Jonathan, unwitting to his father, the priest, or the people, goeth and miraculously smiteth the Philistines garrison. 15 A divine terrour maketh them beat themselves. 17 Saul not staying the priest's answer, setteth on them. 21 The captivated Hebrews, and the hidden Israelites, join against them. 24 Saul's unadvised adjuration hindereth the victory. 32 He restraineth the people from eating blood. 35 He buildeth an altar. 36 Jonathan taken by lot, is saved by the people. 47 Saul's strength and family.

NOW it came to pass upon a day, that Jonathan the son of Saul said unto the young man that bare his armour,

Come, and let us go over to the Philiſtines garriſon, that is on the other ſide: but he told not his father.

2 And Saul tarried in the uttermoſt part of Gibeah, under a pomegranate-tree, which is in Migron: and the people that were with him were about ſix hundred men;

3 And Ahiah the ſon of Ahitub, I-chabods brother, the ſon of Phinehas, the ſon of Eli, the LORDS prieſt in Shiloh, wearing an ephod: and the people knew not that Jonathan was gone.

4 ¶ And between the paſſages, by which Jonathan ſought to go over unto the Philiſtines garriſon, there was a ſharp rock on the one ſide, and a ſharp rock on the other ſide: and the name of the one was Bozez, and the name of the other Seneh.

5 The forefront of the one was ſituate north-ward over againſt Michmaſh, and the other ſouth-ward over againſt Gibeah.

6 And Jonathan ſaid to the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over unto the garriſon of theſe uncircumciſed; it may be that the LORD will work for us: for there is no reſtraint to the LORD, to ſave by many or by few.

7 And his armour-bearer ſaid unto him, Do all that is in thine heart: turn thee, behold I am with thee according to thy heart.

8 Then ſaid Jonathan, Behold, we will paſs over unto theſe men, and we will diſcover our ſelves unto them.

9 If they ſay thus unto us, Tarry until we come to you; then we will ſtand ſtill in our place, and will not go up unto them.

10 But if they ſay thus, Come up unto us; then we will go up: for the LORD hath delivered them into our hand; and this ſhall be a ſign unto us.

11 And both of them diſcovered themſelves unto the garriſon of the Philiſtines: and the Philiſtines ſaid, Behold, the Hebrews come forth out of the holes where they had hid themſelves.

12 And the men of the garriſon anſwered Jonathan and his armour-bearer, and ſaid, Come up to us, and we will ſhew you a thing. And Jonathan ſaid unto his armour-bearer, Come up after me; for the LORD hath delivered them into the hand of Iſrael.

13 And Jonathan climbed up upon his hands, and upon his feet, and his armour-bearer after him: and they fell before Jonathan; and his armour-bearer ſlew after him.

14 And that firſt ſlaughter which Jonathan and his armour-bearer made, was about twenty men, within as it were an half acre of land, which a yoke of oxen might plow.

15 And there was trembling in the hoſt, in the field, and among all the people: the garriſon and the ſpoilers, they alſo trembled, and the earth quaked: ſo it was a very great trembling.

16 And the watchmen of Saul and Gibeah of Benjamin looked; and behold, the multitude melted away, and they went on beating down one another.

17 Then ſaid Saul unto the people that were with him, Number now, and ſee who is gone from us. And when they had numbred, behold, Jonathan and his armour-bearer were not there.

18 And Saul ſaid unto Ahiah, Bring hither the ark of God: (for the ark of God was at that time with the children of Iſrael.)

19 ¶ And it came to paſs while Saul talked unto the prieſt, that the noiſe that was in the hoſt of the Philiſtines went on, and increaſed: and Saul ſaid unto the prieſt, Withdraw thine hand.

20 And Saul, and all the people that were with him, aſſembled themſelves, and they came to the battle,: and behold, every mans ſword was againſt his fellow, and there was a very great diſcomfiture.

21 Moreover, the Hebrews that were with the Philiſtines before that time, which went up with them into the camp from the country round about, even they alſo turned to be with the Iſraelites, that were with Saul and Jonathan.

22 Likewiſe all the men of Iſrael which had hid themſelves in mount Ephraim, when they heard that the Philiſtines fled, even they alſo followed hard after them in the battle.

23 So the LORD ſaved Iſrael that day: and the battle paſſed over unto Beth-aven.

24 ¶ And the men of Iſrael were diſtreſſed that day: for Saul had adjured the people, ſaying, Curſed be the man that eateth any food until evening, that I may be avenged on mine enemies: ſo none of the people taſted any food.

25 And

25 And all they of the land came to a wood, and there was honey upon the ground.

26 And when the people were come into the wood, behold, the honey dropped, but no man put his hand to his mouth: for the people feared the oath.

27 But Jonathan heard not when his father charged the people with the oath: wherefore he put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in an honey-comb, and put his hand to his mouth; and his eyes were enlightned.

28 Then anſwered one of the people, and ſaid, Thy father ſtraitly charged the people with an oath, ſaying, Curſed be the man that eateth any food this day. And the people were faint.

29 Then ſaid Jonathan, My father hath troubled the land: ſee, I pray you, how mine eyes have been enlightned, becauſe I taſted a little of this honey:

30 How much more, if haply the people had eaten freely to day of the ſpoil of their enemies which they found? for had there not been now a much greater ſlaughter among the Philiſtines?

31 And they ſmote the Philiſtines that day from Michmaſh to Aijalon: and the people were very faint.

32 And the people flew upon the ſpoil, and took ſheep, and oxen, and calves, and ſlew them on the ground: and the people did eat them with the blood.

33 ¶ Then they told Saul, ſaying, Behold, the people ſin againſt the LORD, in that they eat with the blood. And he ſaid, Ye have tranſgreſſed: roll a great ſtone unto me this day.

34 And Saul ſaid, Diſperſe your ſelves among the people, and ſay unto them, Bring me hither every man his ox, and every man his ſheep, and ſlay them here, and eat; and ſin not againſt the LORD in eating with the blood. And all the people brought every man his ox with him that night, and ſlew them there.

35 And Saul built an altar unto the LORD: the ſame was the firſt altar that he built unto the LORD.

36 ¶ And Saul ſaid, Let us go down after the Philiſtines by night, and ſpoil them until the morning light, and let us not leave a man of them. And they ſaid, Do whatſoever ſeemeth good unto thee. Then ſaid the prieſt, Let us draw near hither unto God.

37 And Saul asked counſel of God, Shall I go down after the Philiſtines? wilt thou deliver them into the hand of Iſrael? But he anſwered him not that day.

38 And Saul ſaid, Draw ye near hither all the chief of the people: and know and ſee wherein this ſin hath been this day.

39 For as the LORD liveth, which ſaveth Iſrael, though it be in Jonathan my ſon, he ſhall ſurely die. But there was not a man among all the people that anſwered him.

40 Then ſaid he unto all Iſrael, Be ye on one ſide, and I and Jonathan my ſon will be on the other ſide. And the people ſaid unto Saul, Do what ſeemeth good unto thee.

41 Therefore Saul ſaid unto the LORD God of Iſrael, Give a perfect lot. And Saul and Jonathan were taken: but the people eſcaped.

42 And Saul ſaid, Caſt lots between me and Jonathan my ſon. And Jonathan was taken.

43 Then Saul ſaid to Jonathan, Tell me what thou haſt done. And Jonathan told him, and ſaid, I did but taſte a little honey with the end of the rod that was in mine hand, and lo I muſt die.

44 And Saul anſwered, God do ſo, and more alſo: for thou ſhalt ſurely die, Jonathan.

45 And the people ſaid unto Saul, Shall Jonathan die, who hath wrought this great ſalvation in Iſrael? God forbid: as the LORD liveth, there ſhall not one hair of his head fall to the ground; for he hath wrought with God this day. So the people reſcued Jonathan that he died not.

46 Then Saul went up from following the Philiſtines: and the Philiſtines went to their own place.

47 ¶ So Saul took the kingdom over Iſrael, and fought againſt all his enemies on every ſide, againſt Moab, and againſt the children of Ammon, and againſt Edom, and againſt the kings of Zobah, and againſt the Philiſtines: and whitherſoever he turned himſelf, he vexed them.

48 And he gathered an hoſt, and ſmote the Amalekites, and delivered Iſrael out of the hands of them that ſpoiled them.

49 Now the Sons of Saul were Jonathan and Iſhui, and Melchi-ſhua: and the names of his two daughters were theſe; the name of the firſt born Merab, and the name of the younger Michal:

50 And

50 And the name of Sauls wife was Ahinoam the daughter of Ahimaaz: and the name of the captain of his hoſt was Abner the ſon of Ner, Sauls uncle.

51 And Kiſh was the father of Saul; and Ner the father of Abner was the ſon of Abiel.

52 And there was ſore war againſt the Philiſtines all the days of Saul: and when Saul ſaw any ſtrong man, or any valiant man, he took him unto him.

Ver. 1. Now it came to paſs upon a day, that Jonathan the ſon of Saul ſaid unto the young man that bare his armour, Come, and let us go over to the Philiſtines garriſon, that is on the other ſide, &c.] Such was the ſituation of Saul's affairs, when his ſon Jonathan, moved, undoubtedly, by ſome Divine Impulſe, and attended by none but his armour-bearer, made a ſurpriſing attack on the Philiſtines; and his ſucceſs was equal to the noble ardour with which he was animated. He concealed his deſign from his father, leſt that prince ſhould think it impracticable, and prevent him from undertaking ſuch an expedition. The paſſage through which this young prince intended to penetrate into the Philiſtine camp, was a very narrow defile, on each ſide of which roſe a ſteep and pointed rock; one of them was called Bozez, and the other Seneh; the one was ſituated to the north, and the other to the ſouth; the former fronted Michmaſh, and the latter, Gibeah; and each of them are called tooth-rocks in the Hebrew.

Jonathan, in order to animate his armour-bearer, declared to him, that victory was the gift of God, who is under no reſtraint to limit it to numbers, but is able to work deliverance by a few. The ſon of Saul was even perſuaded, that the event of their preſent expedition might be preſaged to their ſatisfaction from the following circumſtances, Behold, ſaid he, we will paſs over unto theſe men, and we will diſcover ourſelves unto them. If they ſay thus unto us, Tarry until we come to you; then we will ſtand ſtill in our place, and will not go up unto them. But if they ſay thus, Come up unto us, then we will go up; for the Lord hath delivered them into our hand; and this ſhall be a ſign unto us, ver. 8, 9, 10. We may juſtly ſuppoſe, that Jonathan begged to be favoured with a ſign from heaven, and had his thoughts directed to this by the inſtinct of the Divine Spirit, as ſeems evident by the ſucceſsful event. Great and good men were frequently wrought upon by ſuch heroic motions, and ſupernatural impulſes, in ancient times, Gen. xxiv. 13. Judges vi. 37. But they are not to be conſidered by us, as precedents for our imitation.

When the advance-guard of the Philiſtines diſcovered Jonathan and his armour-bearer, they immediately began to exerciſe their talent for deriſion, Behold, ſaid they, the Hebrews come forth out of the holes, where they had hid themſelves, ver. 11. And then, addreſſing themſelves to the young prince and his ſervant, Come up to us, cried they, and we will ſhew you a thing, ver. 12. This they intended as an inſult; for they did not imagine, that the two Iſraelites they beheld would preſume to aſcend the ſteep, on which the Philiſtine garriſon was ſtation'd. Jonathan, on the contrary, thought this language preſaged to him the ſucceſs he deſired; upon which he and his ſervant began to climb the precipice, not in the view of the Philiſtines, but by ſome difficult way; and perhaps they took a circuit round the hill, in ſuch a manner as would enable them, when they had gained the ſummit, to ſurpriſe their enemies in the rear.

Jonathan and his ſervant ſoon ſlaughter'd twenty men, within the compaſs of half an acre of land; and the Philiſtines, who little expected ſo deſtructive an attack, were ſeized with the utmoſt conſternation; they imagined the whole army of the Iſraelites were pouring in upon them, and their camp became a ſcene of ſlaughter and univerſal confuſion. The Sacred Hiſtorian adds, that the earth quaked; which if true, in the literal ſenſe, would naturally add to the horrors that unmann'd them. We may add too, that the trembling with which the Philiſtines were ſeized, and which is called a very great trembling, ver. 15. is ſaid in the Hebrew to be a trembling of God, that is, it was a conſternation infuſed into their ſouls from heaven; and this the Pagans called a panic fear, which chilled the ſtouteſt heroes. The irreſiſtible power of ſuch impreſſions as theſe is finely repreſented by Pindar, Nem. ix. ver. 63.

Φεύγονται καὶ Παῖδες Θεῶν.

When men are ſtruck with divine terrors, even the ſons of the gods, (that is, the moſt heroic men) betake themſelves to flight.

In the height of this diſorder, the troops which compoſed the Philiſtine army made a dreadful ſlaughter of each other, not being able to diſtinguiſh friends from foes. This very much favours the conjecture of Sir Iſaac Newton, who ſuppoſes they had, about this time, an acceſſion of the ſhepherds from Egypt; and it ſeems very probable, that the ſoldiers of this great hoſt had not a mutual confidence in each other, ſo as to be certain, that a treacherous defection might not be accompliſhed among them, by the artifice of the enemy. The out-guard routed by Jonathan and his armour-bearer ſavoured ſtrongly of treachery; for the mere fame of an attack to be made by any two perſons, on ſo vaſt an army, could never of itſelf have occaſioned ſo wild an uproar; but there muſt have been ſome other circumſtance, which enraged them againſt each other, and fired them with the utmoſt fury and indignation. Nor does what we here have intimated derogate in the leaſt from the interpoſition of the Almighty, in this miraculous deliverance of his people, ſince in caſes of this nature he has often acted by the inſtrumentality of ſecond cauſes.

The army of Iſrael, obſerving, from the ſituation where they were poſted, the univerſal confuſion that reigned among their enemies, purſued them with Saul at their head; and their number was greatly increaſed, as well by a multitude of Hebrew captives, who took that opportunity to eſcape from their oppreſſors, as by a greater number of thoſe, who obſerving, from their lurking-holes, the ſucceſs of their brethren, came and joined themſelves to their king.

The Iſraelites obtained a great victory over their enemies, but it might have been render'd much more compleat, had not Saul unadviſedly adjured his army not to diſcontinue their purſuit, in order to take ſome convenient refreſhment. The raſh curſe he uttered on this occaſion, ver. 24. was like to have occaſioned ſeveral fatal conſequences, for it prevented his weary troops from making ſo great a ſlaughter of the enemy as would otherwiſe have been practicable, and put too ſpeedy an end to their purſuit: To this we may add, that when evening came on, they were tortured to ſuch a degree with hunger, that they fell greedily upon the ſpoil, and devoured ſome of the cattle with the blood, according to our tranſlation, ver. 32. But the learned Dr. Spencer thinks it ought rather to be render'd, "and the people did eat them (namely "the cattle) upon or by the blood;" agreeably to an idolatrous cuſtom in the eaſt, and which was inſtituted in order to invite the familiarity of dæmons. Saul, therefore, to prevent the people from polluting themſelves in this impious manner, commands a great ſtone to be rolled to him, that they might kill their beaſts at no place but that, and then feed upon them in the uſual manner. Theſe are the ſentiments of the famous divine we juſt now mention'd; but it ſeems altogether improbable, that the Iſraelites ſhould practiſe thoſe idolatrous ſuperſtitions, at the very time when God had wrought ſo ſignal a deliverance in their favour; and their impatience for food would not allow them leiſure enough to think of ſuch ceremonies.

Ver. 25. And all they of the land came to a wood, and there was honey upon the ground.] Which dropped from the hollow trees, or the clefts of rocks, where bees made their combs in that country; and ſometimes on the ground; as Bochart hath ſhewn, in his Hierozoicon, P. 2. lib. 4. cap. 12. where he obſerves this was not peculiar to Judæa, but uſual in other countries.

Ver. 26. And when the people were come into the wood, behold the honey dropped, but no man put his hand to his mouth: for the people feared the oath.] Wild honey was so copious in those countries, and flowed so plentifully, that it gave occasion to that hyperbolical speech in the book of Job, chap. xx. 17. where we read of brooks or torrents of honey and butter.

Ver. 27. But Jonathan heard not when his father charged the people with the oath.] He and his armour-bearer being engaged in fight long before Saul and his small army came to join him.

——Wherefore he put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in an honey-comb, and put his hand to his mouth; and his eyes were enlightened.] That is, his spirits and strength, which were quite spent by his long abstinence from meat, so that he could scarcely see, were restored to him, and he was re-invigorated, so as to proceed in pursuit of the enemy. For as Gerh. Vossius observes, (Lib. 4. de Orig. & Progr. Idol. cap. lxxix.) It is usual for the eyes to grow dim with long hunger: And as all proper food refreshes and enlivens, so honey has this effect sooner than all other; for the spirits of it are very subtile, and soon diffuse their strength through the body. It is also observed by learned men, that honey is an excellent medicine for distemper'd and weak eyes: But that is nothing to this purpose, such cures being not performed by eating it, but by anointing the eyes with it.

Ver. 28. Then answered one of the people.] Who accompanied Saul in the pursuit.

——And said, Thy father straitly charged the people with an oath, saying, Cursed be the man that eateth any food this day. And the people were faint.] Which however did not compel them to discontinue their pursuit of the enemy.

Ver. 30. How much more, if haply the people had eaten freely to day of the spoil of their enemies which they found? for had there not been now a much greater slaughter among the Philistines?] They would have been able to pursue them more swiftly, and to have done greater execution upon them, than they could when they were faint. Thus men, by their own rashness, prevent the accomplishment of what they themselves desire.

Ver. 31. And they smote the Philistines that day from Michmash to Aijalon.] A city in the tribe of Dan, (Josh. xiv. 42.) which bordered upon the country of the Philistines.

——And the people were very faint.] Otherwise they might have pursued farther.

Ver. 35. And Saul built an altar unto the Lord.] To offer sacrifices or peace-offerings, and give thanks to God for this great victory. Tho' others think it was not for sacrifice, but only a monument of God's mercy, in this great deliverance.

——The same was the first altar that he built unto the Lord.] In the Hebrew the words are, (as is observed in the margin of our Bibles) that altar he began to build unto the Lord; that is, he laid the first stone himself. We read of his offering before in Gilgal; but that perhaps was not upon an altar erected by himself, but built by others before.

Ver. 36. And Saul said, Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light, and let us not leave a man of them.] Having thus refreshed themselves in the evening, Saul proposed to them to renew the pursuit, hoping to cut off their whole army, when they were asleep in the night.

——And they said, Do whatever seemeth good unto thee.] Their good success made them as forward, as before they were dis-inclinable to follow him.

——Then said the priest, Let us draw near hither unto God.] It is likely he stood before the altar, (if it were for sacrifice) and reminded them, that it would be dangerous to undertake any thing without asking counsel of God. In the Targum it is, Let us enquire by the word of the Lord.

Ver. 37. And Saul asked Counsel of God.] By Urim and Thummim.

——Shall I go down after the Philistines? wilt thou deliver them into the hand of Israel?] Hitherto Saul had some remains of Goodness: For he hearkened to the priest, when he admonish'd him of his duty. The Targum here again hath it, Saul asked by the word of the Lord.

——But he answered him not that day.] Tho' perhaps the priest had often implored an answer.

Ver. 38. And Saul said, Draw ye near hither all the chief of the people: and know and see wherein this sin hath been this day.] He concluded some sin had provoked God, not to regard his supplication; and he desired it might be discovered and punished.

Ver. 39. For as the Lord liveth, which saveth Israel, though it be in Jonathan my son, he shall surely die. But there was not a man among all the people that answered him.] Though many knew that Jonathan had transgressed his father's commands, (ver. 28.) yet none would inform against him.

Ver. 40. Then said he unto all Israel, be ye on one side, and I and Jonathan my son will be on the other side. And the people said unto Saul, Do what seemeth good unto thee.] He had gained great authority among the people, (as appears by this, and by ver 36.) since his wonderful success.

Ver. 41. Therefore Saul said unto the Lord God of Israel, Give a perfect lot. And Saul and Jonathan were taken: but the people escaped.] The word lot is not in the original, but only give perfect, that is, declare who is innocent. So the word give sometimes signifies to pronounce, Deut. xiii. 1, 2.

Ver. 42. And Saul said, Cast lots between me and Jonathan my son. And Jonathan was taken.] This looks like virtue in him, that for good example sake, he would not exempt himself, tho' a king, from the same trial to which he exposed all the people.

Ver. 43. Then said Saul to Jonathan, Tell me what thou hast done. And Jonathan told him, and said, I did but taste a little honey with the end of the rod that was in mine hand, and lo, I must die.] This shews a very great mind, that he neither denied what he had done, nor excused it by his ignorance, nor refused to die: Though he look'd upon it as very hard. So Josephus represents it, εὐγενῶς καὶ μεγαλοφρόνως, &c. with a generous and great mind, he told his father the truth; and desired not to be spared, Antiq. lib. 6. cap. 17.

Ver. 44. And Saul answered, God do so, and more also: for thou shalt surely die, Jonathan.] This demonstrates Saul to have been of a rash and a rigorous temper: With whom, learned men are wont to compare Titus Manlius, who caused his son's head to be cut off, for fighting the enemy contrary to order, when he had a fair advantage, as A. Gellius tells us, lib. 9. cap. 13. But in this regard Saul was to be commended, as Josephus also observes, that he had a greater regard to his oath, than to his kindred and natural affection.

Ver. 44. And the people said unto Saul, shall Jonathan die, who hath wrought this great salvation in Israel? God forbid: as the Lord liveth, there shall not one hair of his head fall to the ground; for he hath wrought with God this day. So the people rescued Jonathan that he died not.] They did not rescue him by force and violence, but by their petition to Saul, and the reason they gave for it. Josephus saith, that by their prayers and vows to God, they delivered him: Who, perhaps, signified by the priest that he approved the people's desire. They were too forward, indeed, to swear directly against Saul's oath: But of the two, his being the most rash, God was pleased to annul it, and absolve him from it. Thus Josephus understands it, They rescued him from the anger of his father, καὶ εὐχὰς ὑπὲρ τοῦ νεανίσκου ποιοῦνται τῷ Θεῷ, ὡς τὸν αὐτὸν ἀπολύσαι τῆς ἁμαρτήματος, and made their prayer to God for the young man, that he would loose him from his sin.

Ver. 46. Then Saul went up from following the Philistines; and the Philistines went up to their own place.] He pursued them no farther, but suffer'd them to return quietly to their own habitations.

Ver. 47. So Saul took the kingdom over Israel.] Ruled with greater authority over his people, after this victory: For the Philistines had enslaved them; but, by this deliverance, they were freed from their yoke, and Saul recovered his kingdom.

——And fought against all his enemies on every side.] He did not invade them, (as may be gathered from the next verse) but repelled them, and kept them within their own limits.

———Againſt Moab, and againſt the children of Ammon, and againſt Edom, and againſt the kings of Zobah, and againſt the Philiſtines.] Theſe were the principal enemies wherewith they were encompaſſed. And by the kings of Zobah are meant, thoſe who ruled in that part of Syria which is called Aram Zobah, which lay toward Euphrates; having that river for its eaſtern bounds, and Damaſcus, and the land of Canaan, for its weſtern: For it appears to be near the Iſraelites, by the frequent wars which David and Solomon had with the kings of this country, 2 Sam. viii. 3. x. 6. 2 Chron. vii. 3. and the aid which the Syrians of Damaſcus ſent them, 2 Sam. viii. 5. and their flying thither when they were routed, 1 Kings xi. 24. And the cities which Solomon built in the wilderneſs, 1 Kings ix. 17, 18. are ſaid to be in Hamath-zobah, 2 Chron. viii. 34. which demonſtrates it was upon the confines of Judæa.

———And whitherſoever he turned himſelf, he vexed them.] He was victorious over them. And in his days the Reubenites alſo made war with the Hagerens, and poſſeſſed their land, till the time of their captivity, 1 Chr. v. 10, 18, 19, 20.

Ver. 48. And he gathered an hoſt, and ſmote the Amalekites.] Which war is at large deſcribed in the next chapter.

——And delivered Iſrael out of the hands of them that ſpoiled them] The ſix fore-mentioned nations.

Ver. 49. Now the ſons of Saul were Jonathan, and Iſhui, and Melchiſhua, &c.] Theſe only were fit to accompany him in his wars, and therefore are only mentioned here, and chap. xxxi. 2. tho' he had another ſon, (Iſhboſheth) who is mentioned in 1 Chron. viii. 33. under the name of Eſhbaal.

Ver. 50. And the name of Saul's wife was Ahinoam, the daughter of Ahimaaz: and the name of the captain of his hoſt was Abner the ſon of Ner, Saul's uncle.] For Ner was brother to Saul's father, as the next verſe tells us. It ſeems worthy of obſervation, that we never read of above one wife that Saul had, tho' David had many. It is poſſible he did not think it prudent, in a new-erected kingdom, to follow the example of the eaſtern kings in every particular.

Ver. 51. And Kiſh was the father of Saul; and Ner the father of Abner was the ſon of Abiel.] As Kiſh alſo was, chap. ix. 1.

Ver. 52. And there was ſore war againſt the Philiſtines all the days of Saul.] Who could not perfectly ſubdue them, as appears from their renewing the war, chap. xvii. &c.

———And when Saul ſaw any ſtrong man, or any valiant man.] Who behaved himſelf with vigour and courage in the wars.

———He took him unto him.] To be one of his guard, or to be preferred in the army.

CHAP. XV.

1 Samuel ſendeth Saul to deſtroy Amalek. 6 Saul favoureth the Kenites. 8 He ſpareth Agag and the beſt of the ſpoil. 10 Samuel denounceth unto Saul, commending and excuſing himſelf, God's rejection of him for his diſobedience. 24 Saul's humiliation. 32 Samuel killeth Agag. 34 Samuel and Saul part.

SAMUEL alſo ſaid unto Saul, The LORD ſent me to anoint thee to be king over his people, over Iſrael: now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the LORD.

2 Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, I remember that which Amalek did to Iſrael, how he laid wait for him in the way when he came up from Egypt.

3 Now go, and ſmite Amalek, and utterly deſtroy all that they have, and ſpare them not; but ſlay both man and woman, infant and ſuckling, ox and ſheep, camel and aſs.

4 And Saul gathered the people together, and numbred them in Talaim, two hundred thouſand footmen, and ten thouſand men of Judah.

5 And Saul came to a city of Amalek, and laid wait in the valley.

6 ¶ And Saul ſaid unto the Kenites, Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, leſt I deſtroy you with them: for ye ſhewed kindneſs to all the children of Iſrael when they came up out of Egypt. So the Kenites departed from among the Amalekites.

7 And Saul ſmote the Amalekites from Havilah, until thou comeſt to Shur, that is over againſt Egypt.

8 And he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, and utterly deſtroyed all the people with the edge of the ſword.

9 But Saul and the people ſpared Agag, and the beſt of the ſheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly deſtroy them: but every thing that was vile and refuſe, that they deſtroyed utterly.

10 ¶ Then came the word of the LORD unto Samuel, ſaying,

11 It repenteth me that I have ſet up Saul to be king: for he is turned back from following me, and hath not performed my commandments. And it grieved Samuel; and he cried unto the LORD all night.

12 And when Samuel roſe early to meet Saul in the morning, it was told Samuel, ſaying, Saul came to Carmel, and behold, he ſet him up a place, and is gone about, and paſſed on, and gone down to Gilgal.

13 And Samuel came to Saul; and Saul ſaid unto him, Bleſſed be thou of the LORD: I have performed the commandment of the LORD.

14 And Samuel ſaid, What meaneth then this bleating of the ſheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?

15 And Saul ſaid, They have brought them from the Amalekites: for the people ſpared the beſt of the ſheep, and of the oxen, to ſacrifice unto the LORD thy God, and the reſt we have utterly deſtroyed.

16 Then Samuel ſaid unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what the LORD hath ſaid ſaid to me this night. And he ſaid unto him, Say on.

17 And Samuel ſaid, When thou waſt little in thine own ſight, waſt thou not made the head of the tribes of Iſrael, and the LORD anointed thee king over Iſrael?

18 And the LORD ſent thee on a journey, and ſaid, Go, and utterly deſtroy the ſinners the Amalekites, and fight againſt them until they be conſumed.

19 Wherefore then didſt thou not obey the voice of the LORD, but didſt fly upon the ſpoil, and didſt evil in the ſight of the LORD?

20 And Saul ſaid unto Samuel, Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the LORD, and have gone the way which the LORD ſent me, and have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly deſtroyed the Amalekites.

21 But the people took of the ſpoil, ſheep and oxen, the chief of the things which ſhould have been utterly deſtroyed, to ſacrifice unto the LORD thy God in Gilgal.

22 And Samuel ſaid, Hath the LORD as great delight in burnt-offerings and ſacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the LORD? Behold, to obey is better than ſacrifice; and to hearken, than the fat of rams.

23 For rebellion is as the ſin of witchcraft, and ſtubbornneſs is as iniquity and idolatry: becauſe thou haſt rejected the word of the LORD, he hath alſo rejected thee from being king.

24 ¶ And Saul ſaid unto Samuel, I have ſinned: for I have tranſgreſſed the commandment of the LORD, and thy words: becauſe I feared the people, and obeyed their voice.

25 Now therefore, I pray thee, pardon my ſin, and turn again with me, that I may worſhip the LORD.

26 And Samuel ſaid unto Saul, I will not return with thee: for thou haſt rejected the word of the LORD, and the LORD hath rejected thee from being king over Iſrael.

27 And as Samuel turned about to go away, he laid hold upon the skirt of his mantle, and it rent.

28 And Samuel ſaid unto him, The LORD hath rent the kingdom of Iſrael from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbour of thine, that is better than thou.

29 And alſo the ſtrength of Iſrael will not lye, nor repent: for he is not a man that he ſhould repent.

30 Then he ſaid, I have ſinned; yet honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Iſrael, and turn again with me, that I may worſhip the LORD thy God.

31 So Samuel turned again after Saul, and Saul worſhipped the LORD.

32 ¶ Then ſaid Samuel, Bring you hither to me Agag the king of the Amalekites: and Agag came unto him delicately. And Agag ſaid, Surely the bitterneſs of death is paſt.

33 And Samuel ſaid, As thy ſword hath made women childleſs, ſo ſhall thy mother be childleſs among women. And Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the LORD in Gilgal.

34 ¶ Then Samuel went to Ramah, and Saul went up to his houſe to Gibeah of Saul.

35 And Samuel came no more to ſee Saul unto the day of his death: nevertheleſs Samuel mourned for Saul: and the LORD repented that he had made Saul king over Iſrael.

Ver. 1. Samuel alſo ſaid unto Saul, The Lord ſent me to anoint thee to be king over his people, over Iſrael: now therefore hearken thou unto the voice of the words of the Lord.] As Saul was ſo highly obliged to God, above all other men in the Jewiſh nation, it greatly concerned him to be very ſtrict in the obſervation of the Divine Commands; eſpecially after the late inſtance of his diſobedience, which he ought to have been careful to compenſate by his future conduct.

Ver. 2. Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, I remember that which Amalek did to Iſrael, &c.] God had not forgotten the unworthy treatment which the Iſraelites, after their departure from Egypt, had received from the Amalekites, and he now reſolved to exterminate thoſe barbarians from the face of the earth. The Iſraelites had been ordered long ago, not to contract any alliance or affinity with this people, and were likewiſe commanded by Moſes, to execute the Divine Vengeance upon them, after they had obtained poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan.

Ver. 3. Now go, and ſmite Amalek, and utterly deſtroy all that they have, and ſpare them not; but ſlay both man and woman, infant and ſuckling, &c.] As four hundred years were now elapſed, ſince the departure of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, ſome perhaps may ask, how could the Amalekites, who lived in the time of Saul, deſerve ſo ſevere a puniſhment for crimes which their anceſtors had committed ſo many ages ago; and by what principle of juſtice could this puniſhment be extended to infants at the breaſt, who were altogether unconſcious of the iniquities of their fore-fathers? The objection conſiſts of two parts, the firſt of which regards adult perſons, and the other relates to thoſe who were ſtill in an age of innocence.

With reſpect, therefore, to the firſt branch of this ſuppoſed difficulty, we anſwer, that thoſe particular perſons who compoſe the body of a people, are juſtly puniſhable for the crimes of their anceſtors, when they themſelves teſtify their approbation of thoſe crimes, and make it evident, by their actions, that they would have purſued the ſame conduct, if they had enjoyed the ſame opportunity. 'Tis upon this principle, that the bleſſed Saviour of the world told the Jews in his time, that they ſhould be reſponſable for all the righteous blood ſhed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel, unto the blood of Zacharias, &c. Matth. xxiii. 35.

The Amalekites, who lived in the time of Saul, were guilty of the ſame acts of injuſtice, which their progenitors had committed four hundred years before; and their implacable averſion to the Iſraelites was never relaxed from the time of Moſes to that of their own deſtruction, as is evident from the Sacred Hiſtory. God had long deferred the execution of his vengeance againſt them, but their unpardonable abuſe of his patience, juſtly rendered their puniſhment the more rigorous, when it came to be inflicted upon them.

With reſpect to infants being comprehended in the puniſhment of their anceſtors crimes, there are ſome caſes wherein it may be ſaid to be unjuſt; and it is with reference to thoſe that God himſelf declares, that the father ſhall not be put to death for the children, neither ſhall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man ſhall be put to death for his own ſin, Deut. xxiv. 16. On the other hand, the vengeance to which children are at any time devoted, for the crimes committed by their fathers, may be ſaid to be conformable to the principles of juſtice, when the penalties inflicted on thoſe children are an aggravation to the calamities of their parents, who find their own miſeries embittered by what their off-ſpring ſuffer on their account. We grant there are many inconveniencies in ſuch kinds of puniſhment, when they are inflicted by men, without any authority from God, who alone can diſpenſe them with impartiality. And when he intends to exterminate a whole nation, for a long ſeries of complicated crimes, who can preſume to ſay unto him, What doſt thou?

Ver. 4. And Saul gathered the people together, and numbered them in Telaim, &c.] The Hebrew word telaim, ſignifying lambs, (with which the place might probably abound.) The Targum tranſlates it, He numbred them by paſchal lambs: As if the paſſover had been celebrated at this time. Raſi likewiſe fancies, that it being unlawful to number the people, Saul therefore commanded every man to take a lamb out of the flock, and then numbered theſe. But David Kimchi, and others, take this word as we do, for the name of a place, called Telem, in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 25.

——Two hundred thouſand footmen, and ten thouſand men of Judah.] The generality of expoſitors underſtand the words of the original, in the manner our tranſlators have here rendered them; but it may ſeem ſurpriſing, that the preheminent tribe of Judah ſhould furniſh no more than ten thouſand men for this war, when the others, who were ſo inferior to it, raiſed two hundred thouſand. The author of the Syriac verſion ſeemed to be ſenſible of this objection, and tranſlates the Hebrew text in a manner which he thought was more agreeable to the original, which is this: There were two hundred thouſand men, including thoſe of the tribe of Judah.

Ver. 5 And Saul came to a city of Amalek.] To the metropolis of the kingdom, and perhaps the name of it was Amalek; for the words in the original may be render'd thus, he came to the city Amalek. This refutes the opinion of thoſe, who imagined the Amalekites had no fixed habitation, but dwelt in moveable tents, like certain Arabians.

——And laid wait in the valley] Or fought them in the valley, as our tranſlators have render'd it in the margin; for the Amalekites came out to give battle to Saul.

Ver. 6 And Saul ſaid to the Kenites, Go, depart, get you down from among the Amalekites, &c.] This conduct of Saul to the Kenites was very commendable; ſince they were deſcended from Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes; and Hobab, the ſon of Jethro, had taken upon him the office of a guide to the Iſraelites through the intricacies of the wilderneſs. Some of the poſterity of theſe friends to Iſrael lived among the Jews, others were ſettled among the Amalekites. Saul recollected the favours the Iſraelites had received from the anceſtors of that people, and would not deſtroy the country of Amalek, till he had firſt perſuaded them to quit it, that they might not be involved in the deſtruction of the other inhabitants.

Ver. 7. And Saul ſmote the Amalekites from Havilah, until thou comeſt to Shur, &c.] Saul was victorious wherever he advanced with his troops; the Amalekites were entirely defeated, and the Iſraelites purſued their conqueſts from Havilah to Shur, that is, from one end of Arabia, to the oppoſite extremity; Shur being ſituated on the frontiers of Egypt, to the ſouth-weſt, as Havilah was on thoſe of Babylonia, to the north-eaſt; and they are conſtantly mentioned as the moſt oppoſite extremities of Arabia.

Ver. 8. And he took Agag the king of the Amalekites alive, &c.] Saul had acted as a juſt miniſter of the Divine favour to the Kenites, but he was very deficient in the execution of the orders he had received with reference to the Amalekites. He ſpared the life of Agag their king; and Joſephus ſays, that the beauty and majeſtic ſtature of that prince inſpired Saul with this unſeaſonable compaſſion. Nor did his diſobedience to the command of God end here; for he not only ſpared Agag, but likewiſe preſerved the beſt of the ſheep and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly deſtroy them: but every thing that was vile and refuſe, that they deſtroyed utterly, ver. 9. Here Saul acted very unlike himſelf, in diſregarding the Divine anathema, which had been pronounced againſt the nation of the Amalekites, ever ſince the Iſraelites came out of Egypt, and in not complying with the prophet's charge.

Ver. 10. Then came the word of the Lord unto Samuel.] The criminal conduct of the Jewiſh prince was ſoon reveal'd to Samuel by God himſelf, who declared to him, at the ſame time, that he intended to deprive Saul of the crown, ſince he was ſo unworthy to wear it. This is the meaning of thoſe words, It repenteth me, that I have ſet up Saul to be king, ver. 11. For repentance in God imports only the will of a change, and not of every change, but of the Divine ſentence pronounced, which the Scripture calls repentance. So Procopius Gazæus, pœnitentia Dei eſt diſpenſationis ipſius mutatio, God's repentance is the change of his own diſpenſation.

Samuel was overwhelmed with grief to hear of the tranſgreſſion committed by Saul, and ſpent the whole night in imploring the Divine pardon for that unhappy prince; but when he at laſt became ſenſible, that the ſentence which God had pronounced againſt Saul was irreverſible, he went to ſeek him on mount Carmel in the tribe of Judah, which Jarchi, by a groſs miſtake, has confounded with the Carmel that Elijah frequented, which was in the tribe of Aſher, and on the coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea.

Saul, elated by his victory, had aſcended this mountain, and erected a trophy there, in order to commemorate the ſucceſs of his arms; this at leaſt is the ſenſe which St. Jerom aſſigns to theſe words, Saul came to Carmel, and behold he ſet him up a place, ver. 12. And as the Hebrew word, which we tranſlate place, is jad, which ſignifies a hand, biſhop Patrick thinks it was ſome building erected in the form of a hand, to ſignify, that Iſrael overcame the Amalekites with a ſtrong hand.

Saul had quitted this place before Samuel's arrival, and was gone to Gilgal; but the prophet followed him thither, and then it was that this unhappy prince endeavoured to diſguiſe his crime by a palpable falſhood, Bleſſed be thou of the Lord, ſaid he, I have performed the commandment of the Lord, ver. 13. Upon which Samuel replied, What meaneth then this bleating of the ſheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?

Saul was then deſirous to extenuate his offence, ſince he no longer was capable of concealing it; and he had the meanneſs to excuſe his own fault by throwing one part of it upon the peoples zeal to ſacrifice the beſt of the cattle to the Lord, and part upon his own fear of reſtraining them from it. He likewiſe ſaid, that he had brought Agag the king of the Amalekites, ver. 20. by which he ſeems to inſinuate, that he thought it improper to take away the life of a king without very expreſs orders; and he then made new proteſtations, that all the cattle he had preſerved, were intended to be ſacrificed to the Lord, ver. 21. Samuel then told him, that God had no delight in the externals of religion, unleſs they were accompanied with an entire obedience to his will, which is the moſt eſſential part of Divine Worſhip. He then adds, that rebellion is as the ſin of witchcraft, and ſtubbornneſs is as iniquity and idolatry, ver. 23. for tho' Saul was not chargeable with theſe crimes, in a ſtrict ſenſe, yet his obſtinate diſobediſobedience made him liable to the ſame puniſhments which idolaters deſerved.

Samuel having thus repreſented to Saul the enormity of his crime, proceeded to denounce the puniſhment God intended to inflict upon him for committing it; and declared, that as he had rejected the word of the Lord, he had alſo rejected him from being king, ver. 23. This prediction was afterward accompliſhed in the perſon of Saul, who loſt his life and crown, in conſequence of his diſobedient conduct.

This ſentence, in which the crime of Saul was painted in the deepeſt colours, made a ſtrong impreſſion on that prince. He acknowledged himſelf to be as guilty as he had been repreſented; but that confeſſion ſeemed to be extorted from him by his fear of the Divine Vengeance, rather than by any impreſſions of a ſincere repentance; and Samuel, who perhaps might penetrate into the true diſpoſition of his ſoul, was preparing to quit him abruptly, after he had refuſed to aſſiſt at the ſacrifice which this unfortunate prince was deſirous to offer up to God. But Saul, in order to detain the prophet, caught hold of the skirt of his mantle, and rent it, ver. 27. Upon which, Samuel repreſented this circumſtance to him, as an emblem and confirmation of his future misfortunes, The Lord, ſaid he, hath rent the kingdom of Iſrael from thee this day, and hath given it to a neighbour of thine, that is better than thou. From whence it is plain, that Samuel took the caſual rent of his own mantle to be an apt repreſentation of the deſtiny of Saul.

This prince then made a ſecond acknowledgment of his guilt, and begged the prophet, for the ſake of decency, and to prevent a defection of the people, to ſhew ſome regard to him, and favour him with his preſence, while he offered up his adoration to God. Samuel complied with this requeſt, and then ordered Agag, the king of the Amalekites, to be brought to him. This he ſpake to the people, in the preſence of Saul, that he might ſee what he ought to have done himſelf.

Agag came to the prophet delicately, as the Sacred Hiſtorian has expreſſed it, ver. 32. or walking in a ſtately manner, as ſome take the meaning to be: But the word ſeems to relate to ſoftneſs, rather than pride; and the natural ſenſe ſeems to be, that Agag came forward on this occaſion with all the elegancy of motion he could aſſume, and in the gaiety of his heart, for he ſaid, ſurely the bitterneſs of death is paſſed. He was not apprehenſive of any injury from the people, after his life had been ſpared by Saul and his ſoldiers. His ſatisfaction, however, was very tranſient, for Samuel immediately addreſſed himſelf to him, in this fatal language; As thy ſword hath made women childleſs, ſo ſhall thy mother be childleſs among women, ver. 33. From whence we may conclude, that Agag had been an inhuman tyrant, and was now cut off, not merely for the ſins of his anceſtors, which were committed four hundred years ago, but for his own unrelenting barbarity.

The text adds, that Samuel hewed Agag in pieces before the Lord in Gilgal, ver. 33. But the Hebrew idiom imports no more than his commanding it to be done; and indeed Samuel was then too old to perform ſuch an execution himſelf. An ancient author informs us, that Agag having been reprieved, at his earneſt deſire, till the next morning, his wife, who viſited him that night, conceived by him that very Amalekite who afterward killed Saul, as a juſt puniſhment for his ſparing that princes life: But it is evident, that Saul was not ſo much as wounded, till he fell upon his own ſword, and killed himſelf, as we ſhall ſee in the proper place; and that the young Amalekite, who brought the news of his death to David, only pretended that he had killed him, in hopes to ingratiate himſelf with the new king, though the event proved very different from his expectations.

Samuel then returned to Ramah, the place of his reſidence; and from that time never came more to Saul, but forſook him as a man abandoned by God to deſtruction. He, however, had ſtill ſo much affection for that unfortunate prince, as to lament the ſad condition to which he had reduced himſelf by his criminal miſconduct. The Sacred Hiſtorian cloſes this chapter with the following words, And the Lord repented that he had made Saul king over Iſrael; the meaning of which is, that God had now utterly rejected him, and all Samuel's tears could not procure a reverſal of the ſentence pronounced againſt him.

CHAP. XVI.

1 Samuel ſent by God, under pretence of a ſacrifice, cometh to Bethlehem. 6 His human judgment is reproved. 11 He anointeth David. 15 Saul ſendeth for David to quiet his evil ſpirit.

AND the LORD ſaid unto Samuel, How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, ſeeing I have rejected him from reigning over Iſrael? fill thine horn with oil, and go, I will ſend thee to Jeſſe the Beth-lehemite: for I have provided me a king among his ſons.

2 And Samuel ſaid, How can I go? if Saul hear it, he will kill me. And the LORD ſaid, Take an heifer with thee, and ſay, I am come to ſacrifice to the LORD.

3 And call Jeſſe to the ſacrifice, and I will ſhew thee what thou ſhalt do: and thou ſhalt anoint unto me him whom I name unto thee.

4 And Samuel did that which the LORD ſpake, and came to Beth-lehem: and the elders of the town trembled at his coming, and ſaid, Comeſt thou peaceably?

5 And he ſaid, Peaceably: I am come to ſacrifice unto the LORD: ſanctify your ſelves, and come with me to the ſacrifice. And he ſanctified Jeſſe and his ſons, and called them to the ſacrifice.

6 ¶ And it came to paſs when they were come, that he looked on Eliab, and ſaid, Surely the LORDS anointed is before him.

7 But the LORD ſaid unto Samuel, Look not on his countenance, or on the height of his ſtature: becauſe I have refuſed him: for the LORD ſeeth not as man ſeeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the LORD looketh on the heart.

8 Then Jeſſe called Abinadab, and made him paſs before Samuel: and he ſaid, Neither hath the LORD choſen this.

9 Then Jeſſe made Shammah to paſs by: and he ſaid, Neither hath the LORD choſen this.

10 Again, Jeſſe made ſeven of his ſons to paſs before Samuel: and Samuel ſaid unto Jeſſe, the LORD hath not choſen theſe.

11 And Samuel ſaid unto Jeſſe, Are here all thy children? And he ſaid, There remaineth yet the youngeſt, and behold, he keepeth the ſheep. And Samuel ſaid unto Jeſſe, Send and fetch him: for we will not ſit down till he come hither.

12 And he ſent, and brought him in: Now he was ruddy, and withal of a beautiful countenance, and goodly to look to. And the LORD ſaid, Ariſe, anoint him: for this is he.

13 Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him in the midſt of his brethren: and the ſpirit of the LORD came upon David, from that day forward: ſo Samuel roſe up, and went to Ramah.

14 ¶ But the ſpirit of the LORD departed from Saul, and an evil ſpirit from the LORD troubled him.

15 And Sauls ſervants ſaid unto him, Behold now, an evil ſpirit from God troubleth thee.

16 Let our lord now command thy ſervant which are before thee, to ſeek out a man who is a cunning player on an harp: and it ſhall come to paſs when the evil ſpirit from God is upon thee, that he ſhall play with his hand, and thou ſhalt be well.

17 And Saul ſaid unto his ſervants, Provide me now a man that can play well, and bring him to me.

18 Then anſwered one of the ſervants, and ſaid, Behold, I have ſeen a ſon of Jeſſe the Beth-lehemite, that is cunning in playing, and a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in matters, and a comely perſon, and the LORD is with him.

19 ¶ Wherefore Saul ſent meſſengers into Jeſſe, and ſaid, Send me David thy ſon, which is with the ſheep.

20 And Jeſſe took an aſs laden with bread, and a bottle of wine, and a kid, and ſent them by David his ſon unto Saul.

21 And David came to Saul, and ſtood before him; and he loved him greatly, and he became his armour-bearer.

22 And Saul ſent to Jeſſe, ſaying, Let David, I pray thee, ſtand before me: for he hath found favour in my ſight.

23 And it came to paſs when the evil ſpirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand: ſo Saul was refreſhed, and was well, and the evil ſpirit departed from him.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſaid unto Samuel, How long wilt thou mourn for Saul, ſeeing I have rejected him from reigning over Iſrael? &c.] Tho' the Deity had pronounced a poſitive ſentence againſt Saul, yet Samuel was not without hopes, that his own fervent and frequently repeated prayers might prevail upon God to revoke this fatal decree. Perhaps the ardent ſupplications of the good man might have proved efficacious, had a ſpirit of ſincere repentance in Saul co-operated with them; but all the prayers of the moſt holy man upon earth will never render the Divine Majeſty propitious to an obſtinate and impenitent ſinner. The affliction of Samuel might perhaps be ſtill more embittered by his apprehenſions, that the whole nation of Iſrael would in ſome meaſure be involved in the condemnation of their king. The Philiſtines were their mortal enemies; and the Iſraelites could not expect to be victorious, while their armies were headed by a prince who was under the diſpleaſure of that Almighty Being on whom alone the ſucceſs of battles depends.

The Divine Majeſty, in order to convince Samuel that the ſentence he had pronounced againſt Saul was irrevocable, and at the ſame time to relieve the aged prophet from the ſiniſter ideas he ſo long had entertained, condeſcended to name to him the family, from whence he intended to ſelect a new king to reign over Iſrael. Samuel was then commanded to go to Jeſſe the Beth-lemite, in order to anoint that particular ſon of his, whom God had choſen to reign over Iſrael.

This commiſſion appeared very dangerous to Samuel, who was ſenſible, that all the ſorrow which Saul had teſtified, after the commiſſion of his crime, proceeded from his fear of loſing the crown; and he was perſuaded that the reſentment of this prince would be fatal to the perſon who ſhould attempt to transfer the regal power to any other. The apprehenſions of Samuel were not ill founded, but God immediately furniſhed him with an expedient for eluding the danger he apprehended. The prophet was directed to conceal the principal motive of his journey to Beth-lehem, where Jeſſe lived, and was to take an heifer with him, and ſay, he came to ſacrifice unto the Lord, ver. 2. It was cuſtomary for Samuel to offer up ſacrifices, ſometimes in one place, and ſometimes in another, in order to keep up the worſhip of God among the people. This, therefore, may be ſaid to be one of the cauſes of his coming to Beth-lehem, tho' not the chief one, which he was not obliged to declare.

Samuel conducted himſelf agreeably to the directions he had received from God; but his unexpected arrival at Beth-lehem greatly terrified the elders of that city, who perhaps were apprehenſive, that he came to denounce ſome fatal calamity againſt them; or they might imagine, he fled to them for ſecurity againſt the anger of Saul, which, in all probability, would bring them into danger. Samuel, however, ſoon relieved them from their fears, by aſſuring them, that he came in a peaceable manner, and to offer ſacrifice unto the Lord, ver. 5. This was certainly one intention of his coming; and tho' there was another, namely, the unction of David, yet the prophet was not bound to diſcloſe it: For where two ends are propoſed, in any particular action, a perſon may, without any violation of truth, declare the one, and conceal the other.

Samuel then exhorted the elders to purify themſelves, that they might enjoy communion with the Deity, by feaſting on the victim that was now to be offered. No purity whatever is ſo acceptable to God as that which flows from the heart; and where this was wanting, the mere waſhing of garments could not impart the leaſt purification to the Jews. This mental purity, however, may require the concomitancy of ſome external rites; and therefore God ſaid to Moſes, Go unto the people, and ſanctify them to-day, and to-morrow, and let them waſh their clothes, Exod. xix. 10.

Jeſſe and his ſons were invited by Samuel to aſſiſt at this ſolemnity; and they all came, except the youngeſt ſon. It appears by the 10th and 11th verſes of this chapter, that Jeſſe had eight ſons; but the author of the firſt book of Chronicles mentions but ſeven, and expreſly calls David the ſeventh, 1 Chron. ii. 15. In order to reconcile this ſeeming inconſiſtency, ſome commentators have thought, that one of the eight ſons, who are mentioned in the chapter we are now expounding, was only an adopted ſon, and therefore is not ranked among the real offspring of Jeſſe, by the writer of the firſt book of Chronicles. They likewiſe gather, from 2 Sam. xxi. 2. that the name of this adopted ſon was Jonathan; but this is a palpable miſtake, for that Jonathan was David's nephew, by his brother Shammah. The faireſt ſolution, therefore, of the difficulty before us, is, that one of Jeſſe's ſons was dead before David came to the kingdom.

The

The Jews ſay, that Jeſſe durſt not introduce David into the preſence of Samuel, becauſe he was not a legitimate ſon; and they found this conjecture on David's own words, Behold I was ſhapen in iniquity, and in ſin did my mother conceive me, Pſalm li. 5. But the adultery, of which they pretend David was the fruit, is certainly very ſingular in its kind, and very proper to excite our contempt of ſuch rabbinical fancies; aſſerunt enim, quod etſi Iſai fœmina ſua uteretur cum Davidem gigneret, putavit ſe cum ancilla ſua rem habere.

Eliab, the eldeſt ſon of Jeſſe, was preſented, before the reſt of his brethren, to the prophet, who beheld him with admiration, and concluded, that ſo amiable and majeſtic a youth muſt certainly be the perſon whom God had ſelected to ſway the ſcepter of Iſrael; but Samuel was ſoon made ſenſible, by a Divine ſuggeſtion, that God diſregarded the outward appearance of men, and took notice only of the heart. Thoſe who are graced with an engaging aſpect are not always maſters of a noble ſpirit, as appear'd by Saul.

When Eliab was withdrawn, Jeſſe cauſed ſix of his other ſons to paſs before Samuel; but the prophet received freſh intimations from heaven, that he had not yet ſeen the perſon intended for the throne of Iſrael. He then enquired of Jeſſe, if thoſe were all his ſons, and was anſwer'd, that the youngeſt of all was then keeping the ſheep. The moſt celebrated commanders were anciently taken from the plough, or from feeding ſheep, as Pliny obſerves, (Nat. Hiſt. lib. 18. cap. 5. Fortiſſimi viri, & milites ſtrenuiſſimi, ex agricolis gignantur. And Vegetius accordingly declares, aptiorem armis ruſticam plebem, that country people were moſt fit for arms.

Samuel, who had privately acquainted Jeſſe with the main intention of his coming to Beth-lehem, directed him to ſend immediately for David, adding, for we will not ſit down till he come hither, ver. 11. from which words it appears, that the ſix ſons of Jeſſe were introduced to the prophet, between the time of the ſacrifice, and the dreſſing of the victim for the enſuing feaſt.

Ver. 12. And he ſent, and brought him in: now he was ruddy, &c.] Some have concluded from hence, that David's hair was red, which in ancient times was accounted beautiful, as Bochart obſerves from this place. This opinion likewiſe correſponds with a paſſage in Feſtus, who having taken notice that rutilius ſignifies red, adds, cujus coloris ſtudioſæ etiam antiquæ mulieres erant, women greatly affected this colour in ancient times. But it ought to be remember'd, that the Hebrew word admoni not only ſignifies red, but alſo bright and ſhining. We think, therefore, the word may be ſo interpreted concerning David, namely, that he had a clear complexion, or was very fair and lovely.

———And withal of a beautiful countenance.] Or, had beautiful eyes, as the words are in the Hebrew, oculis ſpeculis & liberalibus, as Pellicanus here gloſſes.

———And goodly to look to.] Of a pleaſing aſpect, full of ſweetneſs and affability: All this is ſaid, to ſignify, that David was a very amiable perſon, and had an air of greatneſs in his countenance.

———And the Lord ſaid, Ariſe, anoint him: for this is he.] The Jews obſerve from theſe words, that it was neceſſary to anoint the firſt perſon of a family who was advanced to the kingdom, but not his children that ſucceeded him, unleſs upon any diſpute by a contrary faction.

Ver. 13. Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him.] The prophet did not actually inveſt David with the regal power, by this ceremonial; and it was only a deſignation of him to ſucceed to the throne after the death of Saul. David accordingly underſtood it with this limitation, and conſidered Saul as the Lord's anointed as long as he lived.

———In the midſt of his brethren.] The more proper tranſlation would have been, from the midſt of his brethren; that is, he ſingled him out from the reſt, and anointed him in private. For it is evident, that Samuel was afraid to have a tranſaction of this nature known, and therefore he cannot be ſuppoſed to have anointed him publicly, in the midſt of his brethren. And by Eliab's treatment of David, after this, it plainly enough appears, that he did not know him to be the king elect of God's people.

The Jews (in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 13.) ſay, David was twenty-nine years of age when he was anointed; which is certainly falſe, if it be underſtood of this firſt unction by Samuel, (whereby God elected him, as in the two following Judah and Iſrael received him for their king) for after Saul's death he reigned forty years, and lived till he was ſeventy. So that he was thirty years of age when he began to reign, part of which time he ſpent in the ſervice of Saul; and after that, he was cruelly perſecuted by him. How long that perſecution continued is uncertain, but it was long enough to make the opinion of Abarbinel probable, namely, that David could not be above twenty years of age, if ſo much, when he was anointed by Samuel.

———And the ſpirit of the Lord came upon David, from that day forward.] God not only infuſed into him ſuch a ſpirit of prudence as enabled him to act wiſely upon all occaſions, but likewiſe a ſpirit of magnanimity, by which he was animated to grapple with a lion and a bear; and likewiſe a ſpirit of prophecy, for which he afterward became very eminent. In a word, he was actuated by ſuch a ſpirit as was altogether fit for a great prince.

——— So Samuel roſe up, and went to Ramah.] After he had fully acquitted himſelf, at Beth-lehem, of the commiſſion he had received from God, with reſpect to the unction of David.

Ver. 14. But the ſpirit of the Lord departed from Saul.] This unhappy prince was now abandoned by that Divine ſpirit which came upon him when he was firſt made king, and continued with him till this time. But tho' he was deprived of his uſual prudence in the adminiſtration of the government, he did not loſe that bravery of mind, by which he had diſtinguiſhed himſelf on ſo many glorious occaſions.

—And an evil ſpirit from the Lord troubled him.] Some interpreters have imagined that the mind of Saul was agitated by malignant impreſſions from ſome dæmon: While others have maintained, and, as we think, we very juſtly, that he was afflicted with a gloomy penſive melancholy, which infuſed imaginary horrors into his mind, and ſometimes rendered him timerous and diſtruſtful, ſo that his body was diſtorted with racking ſtarts, when no danger was near, as the Hebrew expreſſion ſeems to import. At other times he became furious and diſtracted; but was always full of anxiety and painful ſolicitude; and raged, and trembled at different intervals.

Thoſe who contend that Saul was tormented by ſome evil ſpirit, would do well to conſider, that few words in the Sacred Scripture are uſed with more latitude, than the word ſpirit, which frequently ſignifies not only the diſpoſitions of the ſoul, but even thoſe of the body, Job. xvii. 1. Hoſea iv. 12. If it ſhould be retorted upon us, that ſince the Scripture repreſents Saul as being under the influence of an evil ſpirit from the Lord, we have no right to ſuppoſe that his diſorder was only a bodily diſtemper; we think the proper reply will be, that when any paſſage in the Sacred Writings is capable of two conſtructions, one of which implies a miracle, and the other, a natural event, we ought to prefer the latter, unleſs ſome expreſs circumſtance free from ambiguity obliges us to admit the former. But nothing of this nature appears in the preſent account of Saul. The ſevere threatnings and reproaches which had been uttered againſt him by Samuel, were ſufficient to diſorder his mind with diſmal ideas, and theſe might be aggravated by the jealouſy he conceived of Samuel.

The Sacred Hiſtorian, having repreſented the diſorder with which Saul was afflicted, relates to us, in the next place, the remedy that was employed to calm its violence. The ſervants of that prince deſired he would command them to ſeek out a man who is a cunning player on a harp: And it ſhall come to paſs, ſaid they, when the evil ſpirit from God is upon thee, that he ſhall play with his hand and thou ſhalt be well, ver. 16. Saul complied with this counſel, and experienced the promiſed relief.

Muſic has frequently produced ſurprizing effects on the diſtempered bodies of men, and it is certain, that nothing is ſo adapted to ſooth a melancholy diſpoſition, or to compoſe the agitations of an anxious mind. Prophane hiſtory affords us many wonderful inſtances of this nature, and we could eaſily prove, that dangerous diſtempers have been frequently cured by the ſalutary power of harmony.

An

An example or two, to this effect, may perhaps be agreeable to our readers.

It is generally allowed, even by phyſicians, that the bite of the tarantula is ſeldom or never cured unleſs by muſic. The animal derives its name from Tarentum, an ancient city of Italy; and it very much reſembles a houſe-ſpider; but the bite of it, eſpecially in hot countries, produces very fatal and aſtoniſhing effects. The poiſon is not immediately perceptible, becauſe its quantity is too inconſiderable, but then it ferments, and occaſions very frightful diſorders five or ſix months afterward. The perſon who has been bitten, does nothing but laugh and dance, is all agitation, and aſſumes a gaiety full of extravagance, or elſe is ſeized with a black and diſmal melancholy. At the return of that period of the Summer ſeaſon when the bite was given, the madneſs is renewed, and the diſtempered party conſtantly talks over the ſame inconſiſtencies, fancies himſelf a king, a ſhepherd, or whatever you pleaſe, and has no regular train of reaſoning. Theſe unhappy ſymptons are ſometimes repeated many years ſucceſſively, and at laſt end in death. Thoſe who have been in Italy, about Naples, tell us this odd malady is cured by a remedy which ſeems ſtill odder; for nothing but muſic, and eſpecially an agreeable and ſprightly inſtrument, as a violin, for inſtance, can adminiſter relief, for which reaſon they are never without ſuch in this country. The muſician endeavours to find out a tone that may ſeem to bear ſome proportion to the temperament and diſpoſition of the patient. He repeats his attempt, and if he happens to touch a note which makes an impreſſion on the diſtempered perſon, the cure is infallible. The patient immediately begins to dance, and always riſes and falls according to the modulation of ſound. In this manner he continues till he has heated himſelf into a ſweat, which drains off the venom that torments him, and at laſt gives him effectual relief, (Memoirs de l'Academ. des Scienc. 1708. Miſſon's Voyage into Italy. See likewiſe the new Dictionary of Furetiere tom. iv. under the article Tarantula)

Another inſtance, which relates to the ſubject we are now upon, is, that of a celebrated muſician, who was attacked by a violent fever, which in a few days rendered him delirious, and the intervals of eaſe were very ſhort and few. The ſick perſon would frequently burſt into tears; his mind was oppreſſed with imaginary terrors, and his fever was attended with a conſtant indiſpoſition to ſleep. On the third day of his delirium, one of theſe natural inſtincts by which animals are ſaid to be influenced, in their ſearch of ſuch herbs as are proper for them, made him deſirous of hearing a concert of muſic in his chamber. This his phyſician at laſt conſented to, tho' with great reluctance, and ſome of the airs of the famous Bernier were performed vocally and inſtrumentally in the preſence of the patient; the moment he heard the firſt notes, a pleaſing ſerenity appeared in his countenance, his eyes loſt their wildneſs, and all his convulſions ceaſed. His tranſports drew tears from his eyes, and he declared that muſic had never affected him, till then, with ſo exquiſite a pleaſure. He had not the leaſt ſympton or ſenſibility of his fever during the concert, but when this was ended he relapſed into his former condition.

His friends were careful to repeat the ſame remedy, whoſe firſt effects had proved ſo beneficial and ſurpriſing: His fever, and the delirium which accompanied it, were always ſuſpended during the concert; and when nine days were expired, he was perfectly cured by muſic, Hiſtoire de l'Acad. Roiale des Sciences ſur l'ann. 1707. pag. 7. We could add many other authentic inſtances of the amazing power of harmony; but we think what we have already cited are ſufficient for our purpoſe.

Ver. 18. Then anſwered one of the ſervants, and ſaid, Behold I have ſeen a ſon of Jeſſe the Beth-lehemite, that is cunning in playing, and a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in matters, and a comely perſon, and the Lord is with him.] This, in all probability, was ſpoken by ſome friend of David, who was deſirous of introducing him to court, and therefore enumerates all his good qualities, and accompliſhments; particularly his ſkill in muſic, and his ſucceſs in all affairs, which though he managed with great prudence, yet he could not have been ſo conſtantly proſperous if God had not bleſſed him. This character of David was ſo agreeable to Saul, that he immediately cauſed him to be ſent for, and ſoon conceived ſo great an affection for him, that he made him his armour-bearer, ver. 21. which was a very honourable preferment.

Ver. 23. And it came to paſs, when the evil ſpirit from God was upon Saul, that David took an harp, and played with his hand.] Joſephus ſeems to have thought, that he alſo ſung hymns and pſalms to the harp, for his words are, λέγωνίε τὰς ὕμνας ϗ ψάλλων ἐν τῇ κιννύρᾳ, &c. Antiq. lib. 6. cap. 9. But the illuſtrious Spanheim has made it evident, that the word ψαλμὸς frequently ſignifies the ſound of the harp.

——— So Saul was refreſhed, and was well, &c.] If the mind of Saul had been tormented by a Dæmon, as ſeveral have imagined, it ſeems unnatural to think that ſuch a malignant ſpirit would ſuffer himſelf to be overpowered by the melody of an inſtrument. We therefore conclude, that the black melancholy which hung upon Saul was diſſipated by the ſprightly modulations of the harp, and all his diſorderly paſſions were ſoftened and allayed by the inſinuating ſweetneſs of the ſounds. Bochart enumerates many famous artiſts among the ancients, who are celebrated not by poets only, but by credible hiſtorians, for their wonderful skill in moving the paſſions of men by muſic. And the great Eraſmus hath taken particular notice of the prevalence of harmony, in curing diſeaſes, and changing the diſagreeable temperament of human minds, in his preface to Arnobius, upon the Pſalms, and which may be found among his epiſtles, lib. 28. p. 1655.

——— And the evil ſpirit departed from him.] The gloom which hung upon his mind was now cleared up, and his melancholy muſings gave place to a train of pleaſing impreſſions. He found himſelf reſtored to a lucid interval, the animal ſpirits reſumed their natural flow, and he ceaſed for a time to be diſtempered with dreary viſions. Such is the enchanting power of muſic!

CHAP. XVII.

1 The armies of the Iſraelites, and Philiſtines being ready to battle, 4 Goliah cometh proudly forth, to challenge a combat. 12 David ſent by his father to viſit his brethren, taketh the challenge. 28 Eliab chideth him. 30 He is brought to Saul. 32 He ſheweth the reaſon of his confidence. 38 Without armour, armed by faith, he ſlayeth the giant. 55 Saul taketh notice of David.

NOW the Philiſtines gathered together their armies to battle, and were gathered together at Shochoh, which belongeth to Judah, and pitched between Shochoh and Azekah, in Ephes-dammim.

2 And Saul and the men of Iſrael were gathered together, and pitched by the valley of Elah, and ſet the battle in array againſt the Philiſtines.

3 And the Philiſtines ſtood on a mountain on the one ſide, and Iſrael ſtood on a mountain on the other ſide: and there was a valley between them.

4 ¶ And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philiſtines, named Goliath, of Gath, whoſe height was ſix cubits and a ſpan.

5 And he had an helmet of braſs upon his head, and he was armed with a coat of mail: and the weight of the coat was five thouſand ſhekels of braſs.

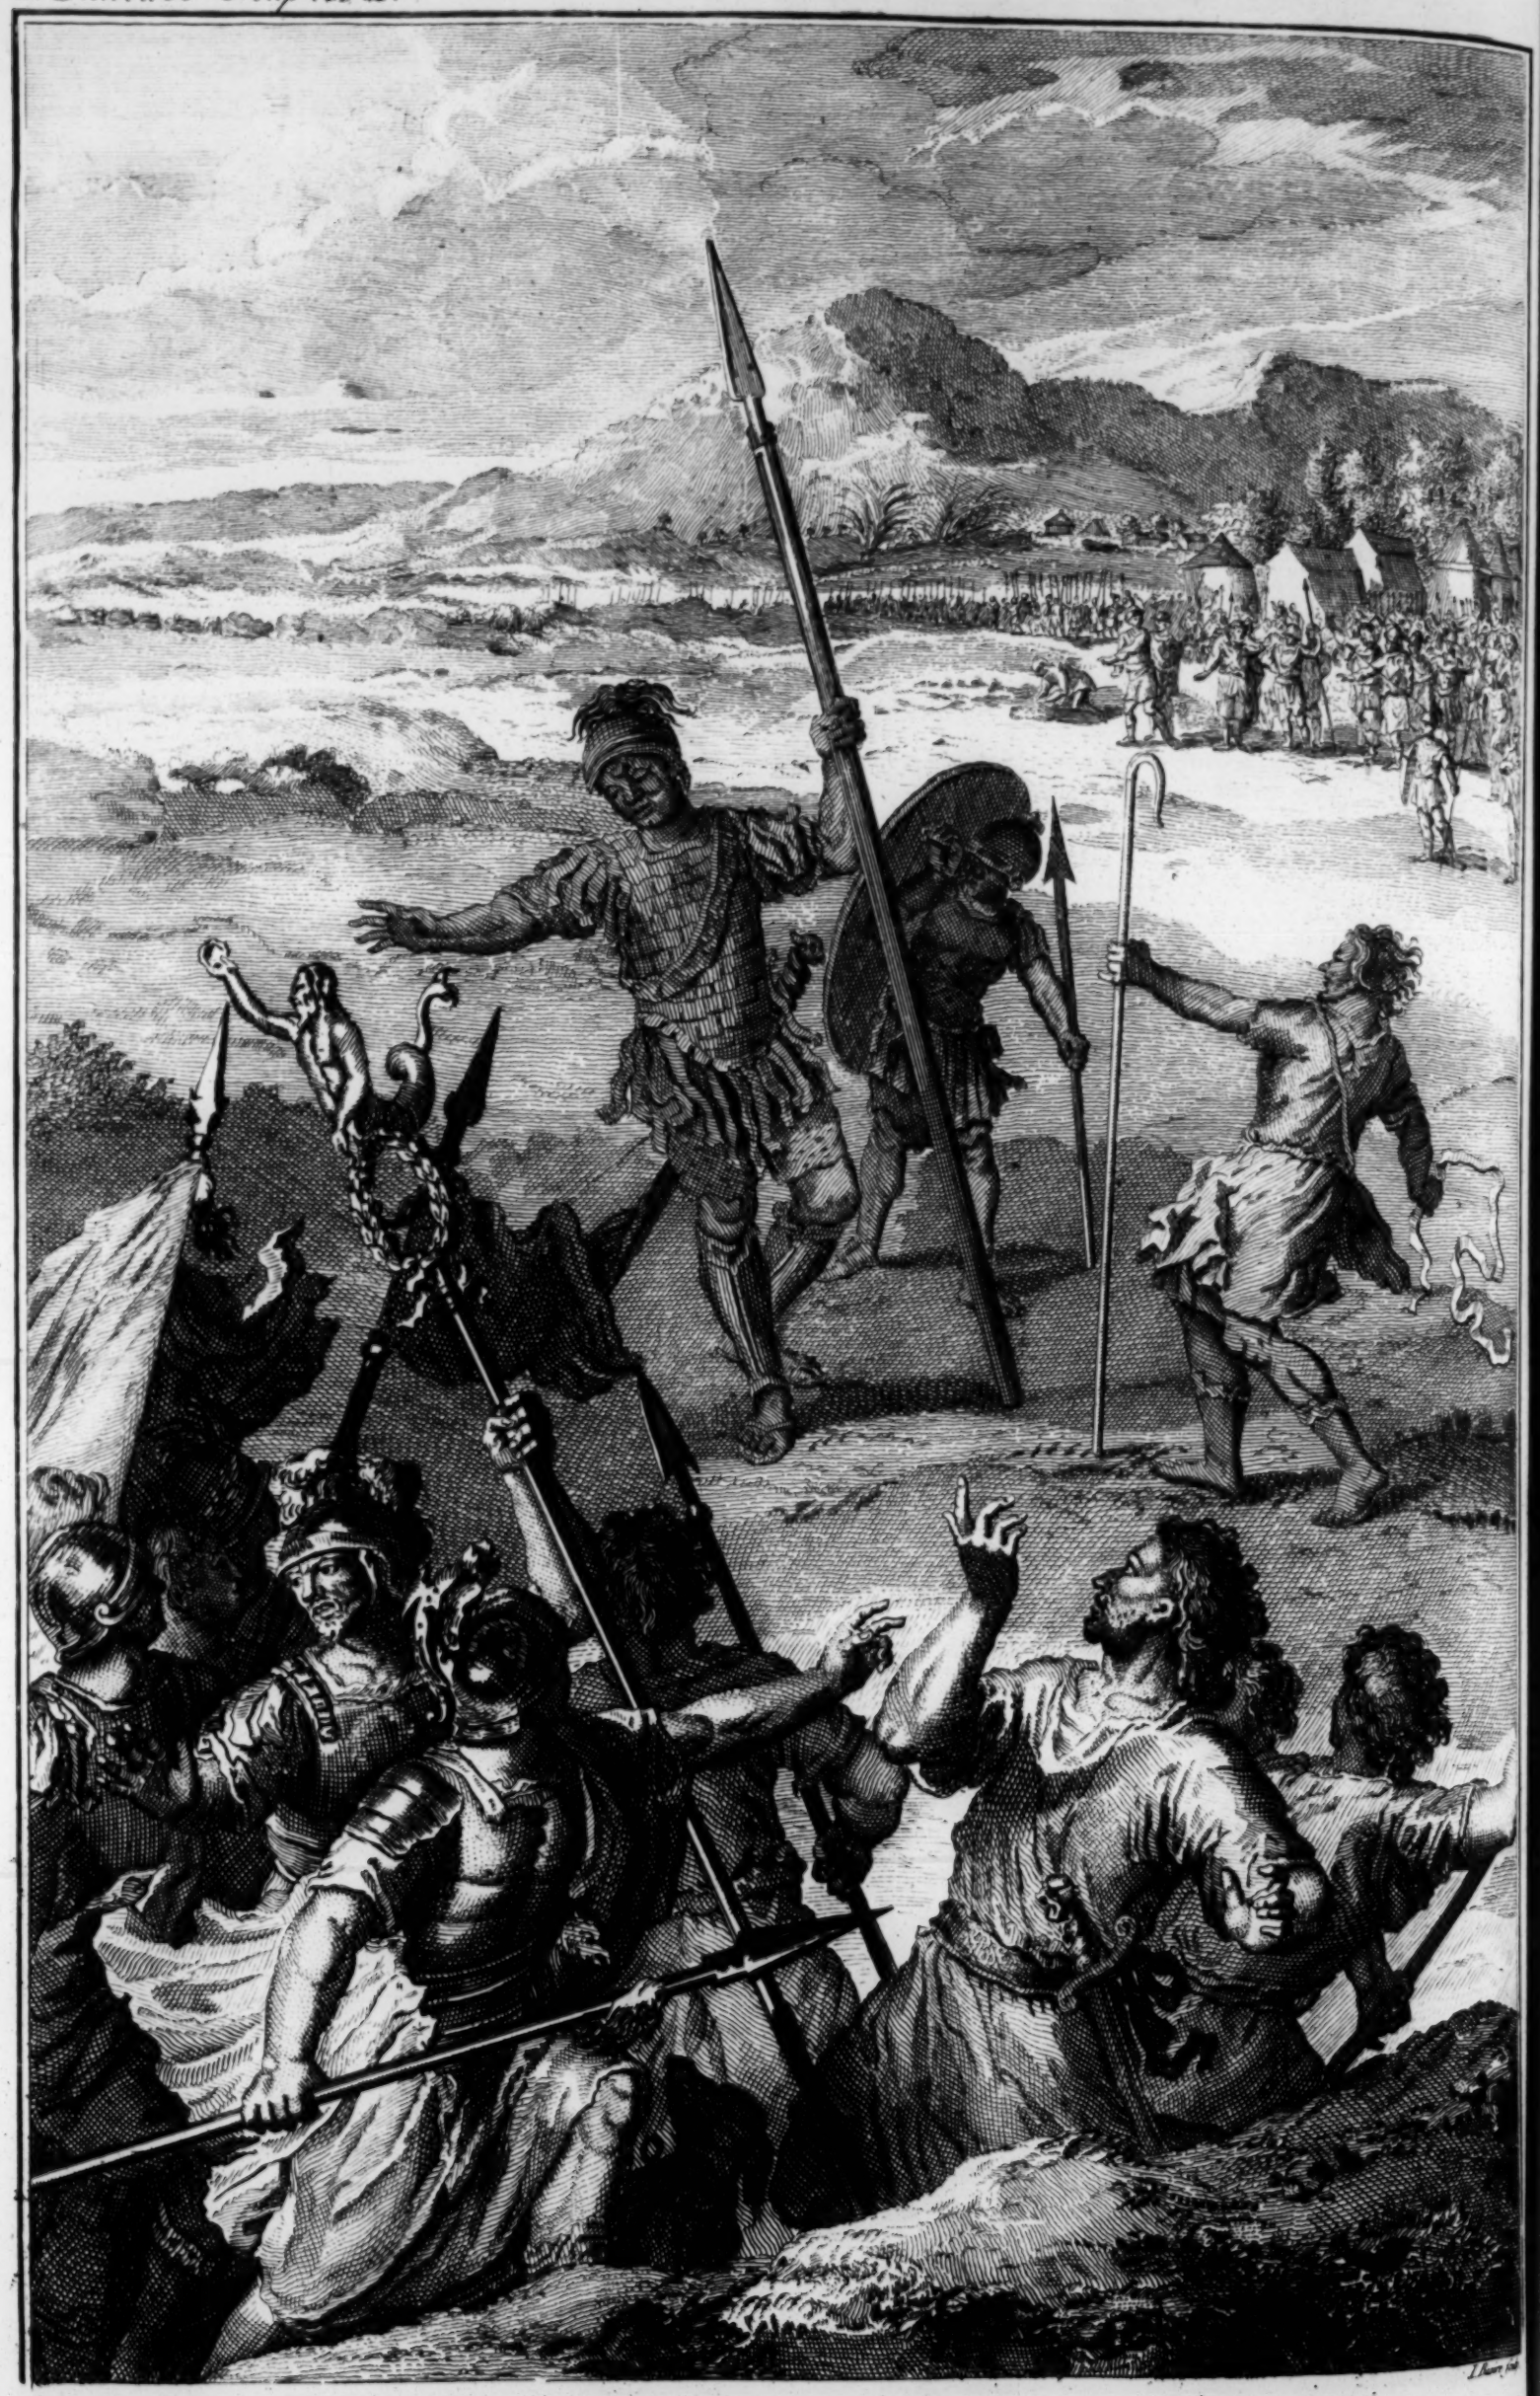
6 And he had greaves of braſs upon his legs, and a target of braſs between his ſhoulders.

7 And



David killeth Goliah.

7 And the ſtaff of his ſpear was like a weavers beam, and his ſpears head weighed ſix hundred ſhekels of iron: and one bearing a ſhield, went before him.

8 And he ſtood and cried unto the armies of Iſrael, and ſaid unto them, Why are ye come out to ſet your battle in array? am not I a Philiſtine, and you ſervants to Saul? chuſe you a man for you, and let him come down to me.

9 If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your ſervants: but if I prevail againſt him, and kill him, then ſhall ye be our ſervants, and ſerve us.

10 And the Philiſtine ſaid, I defy the armies of Iſrael this day; give me a man that we may fight together.

11 When Saul and all Iſrael heard thoſe words of the Philiſtine, they were diſmayed, and greatly afraid.

12 ¶ Now David was the ſon of that Ephrathite of Beth-lehem-judah, whoſe name was Jeſſe, and he had eight ſons: and the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul.

13 And the three eldeſt ſons of Jeſſe went, and followed Saul to the battle: and the names of his three ſons that went to the battle, were Eliab the firſt-born, and next unto him, Abinadab, and the third, Shammah.

14 And David was the youngeſt: and the three eldeſt followed Saul.

15 But David went, and returned from Saul, to feed his fathers ſheep at Beth-lehem.

16 And the Philiſtine drew near, morning and evening, and preſented himſelf forty days.

17 And Jeſſe ſaid unto David his ſon, Take now for thy brethren an ephah of this parched corn, and theſe ten loaves, and run to the camp to thy brethren.

18 And carry theſe ten cheeſes unto the captain of their thouſand, and look how thy brethren fare, and take their pledge.

19 Now Saul, and they, and all the men of Iſrael were in the valley of Elah, fighting with the Philiſtines.

20 ¶ And David roſe up early in the morning, and left the ſheep with a keeper, and took, and went, as Jeſſe had commanded him; and he came to the trench, as the hoſt was going forth to the fight, and ſhouted for the battle.

21 For Iſrael and the Philiſtines had put the battle in array, army againſt army.

22 And David left his carriage in the hand of the keeper of the carriage, and ran into the army, and came and ſaluted his brethren.

23 And as he talked with them, behold, there came up the champion, (the Philiſtine of Gath, Goliath by name) out of the armies of the Philiſtines, and ſpake according to the ſame words: and David heard them.

24 And all the men of Iſrael, when they ſaw the man, fled from him, and were ſore afraid.

25 And the men of Iſrael ſaid, Have ye ſeen this man that is come up? ſurely to defy Iſrael is he come up: and it ſhall be that the man who killeth him, the king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter, and make his fathers houſe free in Iſrael.

26 And David ſpake to the men that ſtood by him, ſaying, What ſhall be done to the man that killeth this Philiſtine, and taketh away the reproach from Iſrael? for who is this uncircumciſed Philiſtine, that he ſhould defy the armies of the living God?

27 And the people anſwered him after this manner, ſaying, So ſhall it be done to the man that killeth him.

28 ¶ And Eliab his eldeſt brother heard when he ſpake unto the men; and Eliabs anger was kindled againſt David, and he ſaid, Why cameſt thou down hither? and with whom haſt thou left thoſe few ſheep in the wilderneſs? I know thy pride, and the naughtineſs of thine heart; for thou art come down, that thou mighteſt ſee the battle.

29 And David ſaid, What have I now done? Is there not a cauſe?

30 ¶ And he turned from him towards another, and ſpake after the ſame manner: and the people anſwered him again after the former manner.

31 And when the words were heard which David ſpake, they rehearſed them before Saul: and he ſent for him.

32 ¶ And David ſaid to Saul, Let no mans heart fail becauſe of him; thy ſervant will go and fight with this Philiſtine.

33 And Saul ſaid to David, Thou art not able to go againſt this Philiſtine, to fight with him: for thou art but a youth, and he a man of war from his youth.

34 And David ſaid unto Saul, Thy ſervant kept his fathers ſheep, and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock:

35 And I went out after him, and ſmote him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he aroſe againſt me, I caught him by his beard, and ſmote him, and ſlew him.

36 Thy ſervant ſlew both the lion and the bear: and this uncircumciſed Philiſtine ſhall be as one of them, ſeeing he hath defied the armies of the living God.

37 David ſaid moreover, The LORD that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of this Philiſtine. And Saul ſaid unto David, Go, and thee LORD be with thee.

38 ¶ And Saul armed David with his armour, and he put an helmet of braſs upon his head, alſo he armed him with a coat of mail.

39 And David girded his ſword upon his armour, and he aſſayed to go, for he had not proved it: and David ſaid unto Saul, I cannot go with theſe: for I have not proved them. And David put them off him.

40 And he took his ſtaff in his hand, and choſe him five ſmooth ſtones out of the brook, and put them in a ſhepherds bag which he had, even in a ſcrip, and his ſling was in his hand, and he drew near to the Philiſtine.

41 And the Philiſtine came on, and drew near unto David, and the man that bare the Shield went before him.

42 And when the Philiſtine looked about and ſaw David, he diſdained him: for he was but a youth, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance.

43 And the Philiſtine ſaid unto David, Am I a dog, that thou comeſt to me with ſtaves? and the Philiſtine curſed David by his gods.

44 And the Philiſtine ſaid to David, Come to me, and I will give thy fleſh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beaſts of the field.

45 Then ſaid David to the Philiſtine, Thou comeſt to me with a ſword, and with a ſpear, and with a ſhield; but I come to thee in the name of the LORD of hoſts, the God of the armies of Iſrael, whom thou haſt defied.

46 This day will the LORD deliver thee into mine hand, and I will ſmite thee, and take thine head from thee, and I will give the carcaſes of the hoſt of the Philiſtines this day unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beaſts of the earth; that all the earth may know that there is a God in Iſrael.

47 And all this aſſembly ſhall know that the LORD ſaveth not with ſword and ſpear: for the battle is the LORDS, and he will give you into our hands.

48 And it came to paſs when the Philiſtine aroſe, and came and drew nigh to meet David, that David haſted, and ran toward the army to meet the Philiſtine.

49 And David put his hand in his bag, and took thence a ſtone, and ſlang it, and ſmote the Philiſtine in his forehead, that the ſtone ſunk into his forehead; and he fell upon his face to the earth.

50 So David prevailed over the Philiſtine with a ſling and with a ſtone, and ſmote the Philiſtine, and ſlew him; but there was no ſword in the hand of David.

51 Therefore David ran and ſtood upon the Philiſtine, and took his ſword, and drew it out of the ſheath thereof, and ſlew him, and cut off his head therewith. And when the Philiſtines ſaw their champion was dead, they fled.

52 And the men of Iſrael and of Judah aroſe, and ſhouted, and purſued the Philiſtines, until thou come to the valley, and to the gates of Ekron: and the wounded of the Philiſtines fell down by the way to Shaaraim, even unto Gath, and unto Ekron.

53 And the children of Iſrael returned from chaſing after the Philiſtines, and they ſpoiled their tents.

54 And David took the head of the Philiſtine, and brought it to Jeruſalem; but he put his armour in his tent.

55 ¶ And when Saul ſaw David go forth againſt the Philiſtine, he ſaid unto Abner the captain of the hoſt, Abner, whoſe ſon is this youth? And Abner ſaid, As thy ſoul liveth, O king, I cannot tell.

56 And the king ſaid, Enquire thou whoſe ſon the ſtripling is.

57 And as David returned from the ſlaughter of the Philiſtine, Abner took him and brought him before Saul, with the head of the Philiſtine in his hand.

58 And

58 And Saul ſaid to him, Whoſe ſon art thou, thou young man? And David anſwered, I am the ſon of thy ſervant Jeſſe the Beth-lehemite.

Ver. 1. Now the Philiſtines gathered together their armies.] We are not told in what particular year of Saul's reign the Philiſtines made theſe preparations for war. Joſephus thinks it was not long after the tranſactions related in the preceding chapter, for his words are, χρόνοις ὀ ὕστερον ὀ πολλοῖς, no great length of time after, &c. For the Philiſtines having received a very ſignal defeat, chapter xiv. reſolved to be revenged, and thought they had a fair opportunity, when they heard that Saul was diſordered in his mind.

——And were gathered together at Shochoh, which belongeth to Judah, and pitched between Shochoh and Azekah, in Ephes-dammim.] Shochoh, and Azekah, were two cities at a little diſtance from Jeruſalem, and they belonged to the tribe of Judah. The latter of theſe cities was rendered memorable, by the glorious victory which Joſhua obtained over the five kings, Joſh. x. 11. But it is probable that the Philiſtines had retaken it from the Iſraelites. Euſebius and Jerom inform us, that there was a town in their time, which was called Ezeca, and that it lay between Eleutheropolis and Jeruſalem; and it probably was the ſame with the Azekah here mentioned, ſince this was ſituated in thoſe parts.

Ephes-dammim was a place in the tribe of Judah, between Shochoh and Azekah. Some think the true name of this place was Dommim, or Dammim, which ſignifies blood. The text of the Vulgate, inſtead of Ephes-dammim, reads, in finibus dammim. Ephes-dammim, by taking away the letter aleph, is called Pas-dammim, 1 Chron. xi. 13.

Ver. 2. And Saul and the men of Iſrael were gathered together, and pitched by the valley of Elah, &c.] The Jewiſh monarch was not intimidated at the hoſtile approach of the Philiſtines, but raiſed a body of forces, and confronted them with his uſual bravery. The armies were poſted on two oppoſite mountains, that were ſeparated from each other by the valley of Elah, in the tribe of Judah.

Ver. 4. And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philiſtines, named Goliath, of Gath, whoſe height was ſix cubits and a ſpan.] This mighty champion was deſcended from Rephah, or Arapha, the father of the ancient giants of Paleſtine, and from him they were called Rephaim or Raphaim. Others imagine, that the word Rephaim properly ſignified giants, in the language of the Canaanites; in whoſe country there were ſeveral families of them in ancient times. Some of the Rephaim lived beyond Jordan, at Aſhteroth Karnaim, in the time of Abraham, when Chedorlaomer invaded the Canaanites. Some of them were likewiſe in this country in the time of Moſes, and Og king of Baſhan was one of the poſterity of the Rephaim. Alſo in the time of Joſhua, ſome of their deſcendants were in the land of Canaan; laſtly, the giants Goliath, Sippai, Lahmi, and others, 1 Chron. xx. 4, 5, 6. were ſome of the remains of the Rephaim.

According to the Engliſh ſtandard, the height of Goliath was twelve feet eight inches, and ſomewhat more than three tenths; and it cannot be denied, that formerly there were men whoſe ſtature was much ſuperior to that of common perſons. St. Auſtin aſſures us, that in the port of Utica, he ſaw a giant's tooth ſo large, that it equalled a hundred of our largeſt teeth, (De Civit. Dei, lib. 15. c. 19.) Torniel declares, that in the church of Verceil, belonging to his order, there is a tooth almoſt as large as that we laſt mentioned, (Torniel. Annal. V. T. ad an. 987. p. 80.) And Pliny informs us, that a mountain in the iſle of Crete having been opened by an earthquake, a man was found in it, ſtanding upright, who was forty-ſix cubits high, (Plin. Nat. Hiſt. lib. 7. c. 16.) There was one Gabbarus at Rome, in the reign of the emperor Claudius, who was nine feet and nine inches high, (Plin. ibid.) And Delrio affirms, that in the year 1572, he ſaw at Rohan a native of Piedmont, whoſe height exceeded nine feet.

In January 1701, at a village called Coloubella, ſix leagues from Theſſalonica in Macedonia, the body of a giant was diſcovered, which had been buried near the ſea, in an old wall of great length and thickneſs. The ſea, in a courſe of many ages, having gradually undermined it, a great ſhower of rain quite overturned it at laſt, and expoſed the body of the giant we are ſpeaking of. He was ninety-ſix royal feet in length; his ſkull contained fifteen buſhels of corn, Paris meaſure; one of his teeth weighed fifteen pound, and was above ſeven inches long; another tooth, without the root of it, weighed two pound and a half French; a third, two pound eleven ounces and ſix drams; and a fourth, two pound thirteen ounces. The ſmalleſt bone of his little toe was ſeven inches and two royal lines in length. Of the bones in the arm, one was two feet four inches and two lines in circumference. The principal pieces of the body were carried to the Baſhaw, and the Grand Signior; and as to the others that remain'd, the Sieur Quainet, the French Conſul at Theſſalonica, enter'd an account of them, atteſted by Father Jerom de Rhetel, a Capuchin, and miſſionary to the Levant, who ſaw them. The ſame Father ſent a relation of this matter to Father Jerom de Monſicaux, a Capuchin at Paris, in the ſuburb St. Honore, and his letter was ſubſcribed by the Conſul above-mention'd; and Peter Roſti, Conſtantine Peronne, Loicheta, Flot a chirurgeon, and John Attuchi, ſigned as witneſſes, having all ſeen the ſaid bones.

M. Simon, author of the Dictionary of the Bible, printed at Lyons, in two folio volumes, in the year 1703. declares, that while he was curate of the pariſh of St. Vzé, in Dauphiny, he ſaw (and ſince that time receiv'd an atteſtation, ſigned by two governours, and an eccleſiaſtic, who was chaplain of the caſtle of Molard, in the dioceſe of Vienne, in Dauphiny, who all affirm that they too had ſeen) teeth belonging to a human body, found in a meadow, in the year 1667. each of which weigh'd ten pound; and there was one, with part of the lower jaw, wherein it was ſtill fixed, that together weigh'd ſeventeen pound. In the ſame meadow, ſeveral bones were found, for the moſt part rotten, and in pieces, but one, among the reſt, was almoſt entire, and was ſeven feet three inches in length, and two feet in circumference.

We could produce ſeveral other well atteſted inſtances, of there having been men of a ſtupendious ſtature, but we think theſe are ſufficient to vindicate the Sacred Records from the imputation of ſingularity in the account they afford us of Goliath, and other Giants.

Ver. 5. And he had an helmet of braſs upon his head, and he was armed with a coat of mail: and the weight of the coat was five thouſand ſhekels of braſs.] Five thouſand ſhekels of braſs are equal to ſomething more than one hundred and eighty nine of our pounds troy, and by the ſame rule, the head of Goliath's ſpear mentioned in the ſeventh verſe, where it is ſaid, to have weighed ſix hundred ſhekels of iron, exceeded two and twenty of the ſame pounds. The weight of theſe and the other parts of his armour and arms, whoſe ponderoſity is not ſpecified, cannot be thought too enormous and heavy for ſo gigantic a perſon, whoſe ſtrength was undoubtedly proportionable to his ſtature.

Ver. 8. And he ſtood and cried unto the armies of Iſrael, &c.] This mighty champion was very ſenſible of his warlike abilities and ſtrength, and imagined he alone could ſupport the cauſe of his country. Accordingly, whether by his own ſuggeſtions, or at the ſollicitations of his countrymen, he took upon him to determine by a ſingle combat, with any man in the hoſt of Iſrael, which of the two nations ſhould rule, and which obey. He therefore, went down into the valley which parted the two camps, and addreſſed himſelf to the Iſraelites in this manner. "Why are you come out to ſet your "battle in array? am not I a Philiſtine, and you ſervants "to Saul? Chuſe your a man for you, and let him come "down to me. If he be able to fight with me and to "kill me, then will we be your ſervants; but if I pre- "vail againſt him, and kill him, then ſhall ye be our "ſervants, and ſerve us. I defy the armies of Iſrael this "day; give me a man, that we may fight together." ver. 8, 9, 10.

From this inſolent bravado commentators are inclined to think, that what Goliath did, in offering to decide the fate of each nation by a ſingle combate, was his own act, and without the participation or conſent of the Philiſtines; or elſe that if they did agree to ſubmit to the fate of ſuch a battle, they were faithleſs enough to diſregard the obligation, when it was afterward exacted from them. To us it appears, that they greatly depended on Goliath for ſucceſs in this war; that they prided themſelves chiefly in him, and by flattering themſelves he was invincible, and by his enormous ſtrength and armour, an over-match for any in the hoſt of Iſrael, they did not oppoſe what he took upon him, as their champion; but that they formally agreed to acquieſce with what he promiſed is unlikely; ſuch deciſions by ſingle combat being perhaps uncuſtomary in thoſe early times. The whole therefore ſeems to have been the effect of pride and vanity in the champion, and a mixture of ſtupidity and cowardice in the reſt.

This arrogant challenge was not accepted by the Iſraelites, and Goliath was left to boaſt and vapour at his own leaſure. His figure, however, and menacing deportment, were very ſerviceable to the Philiſtines, by intimidating the Iſraelites, who were greatly diſmayed, both at him and his words. But as confident as Goliath was in his own ſtrength, and as inclinable as he appeared to fight, the reſt of his countrymen were far from being impatient for a general engagement; ſince they remembred how terribly it had fared with them, more than once, in their contentions with Iſrael. Wherefore, tho' the firſt days experience convinced them that no Iſraelite would undertake a ſingle combat with Goliath, yet as they continued averſe to a battle, they every morning and evening ſent out their boſterous champion to repeat his idle challenge, for forty days together, ver. 16.

Ver. 12. Now David was the ſon of that Ephrathite of Beth-lehem-judah, whoſe name was Jeſſe.] As David was choſen by God to combat with Goliath, the Divine Writer gives an account who he was, and what relations he had.

———And he had eight ſons.] In the firſt book of the Chronicles, chap. ii. 13, 14, 15. there are but ſeven mentioned, one being dead, or elſe being only an adopted ſon, as has been before obſerved.

———And the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul.] And therefore was excuſed from all military ſervice.

Ver. 13. And the three eldeſt ſons of Jeſſe, went and followed Saul to the battle.] Theſe, we ſuppoſe, were men of the greateſt experience and ſtrength, and therefore moſt qualified to ſerve their country in the field.

Ver. 14. And David was the youngeſt, and the three eldeſt followed Saul.] David being then but a youth, was not put to the hardſhips of war, and only the three eldeſt of his brethren undertook to ſerve their prince and country, in this time of common danger.

Ver. 15. But David went, and returned from Saul, to feed his father's ſheep at Beth-lehem.] Joſephus ſuppoſes, that Saul ſent David home to his father, at the beginning of this war, contenting himſelf with three of Jeſſe's ſons, who came to hazard their lives in his ſervice.

Ver. 16. And the Philiſtine drew near, morning and evening, and preſented himſelf forty days.] It is evident from hence, that the Philiſtines were incapable of forcing the Jewiſh camp, otherwiſe they would not have loſt ſo much time in this repeated bravado. Unleſs we ſuppoſe, with Abarbinel, that during all this interval, more forces were marching to this place, as their general rendezvouz, both from the country of the Philiſtines, and from the land of Iſrael. For ſuch great armies could not be ſuddenly drawn together. Or perhaps ſome wiſe men on both ſides were all this time endeavouring to negociate an amicable accomodation. It is a mere fancy of R. Jonathan, in the Gemara of the Miſna, Title Sota, that Goliath drew near, morning and evening, in order to diſturb the Iſraelites, in the prayers which they offered up to God at thoſe times.

Ver. 17. And Jeſſe ſaid unto David his ſon, take now for thy brethren an ephah of this parched corn, &c.] For he did not know but proviſion might be ſcarce with them; or, as ſome will have it, he was informed they were under ſome hardſhip, and deſired to know how they did. But as he had other ſons at home with him, it was by a Divine direction that he diſpatched David from the ſheep upon this errand.

Ver. 18. And carry theſe ten cheeſes unto the captain of their thouſand.] Whoſe favour might be very ſerviceable to them.

———And look how thy brethren fare, and take their pledge.] Interpreters are greatly divided, with reſpect to the true ſenſe of the Hebrew words, eth harubbatham thikkahh, which we tranſlate, and take their pledge. Some think that ſoldiers went to war in thoſe days at their own charge, and were not paid by the king. Proviſion therefore beginning to fail, Jeſſe's ſons had ſent to him for a ſupply, and by a certain token; which their father orders David to take with him, that he might be ſatisfied it was really theirs, and not an impoſition upon him. Others tranſlate the word harubbatham, not pledge, but buſineſs, and take the meaning of Jeſſe to be, Bring me word in what manner they behave themſelves in the camp, and with whom they aſſociate themſelves. A third claſs of expoſitors, think Jeſſe ordered David to bring ſome token from them that might certify him of their health. Abarbinel tranſlates the Hebrew word harubbatham; a letter of divorce, and pretends, with ſome other Jewiſh doctors, that, by an eſtabliſhed cuſtom in Iſrael, every man who intended to ſerve his country in war, was obliged to divorce his wife: And he ſuppoſes, that the three ſons of Jeſſe had neglected this ceremonial, and therefore their father ſent David to them to demand their performance of it. But we think, with Vatablus and Munſter, that the true meaning of Jeſſe may be paraphraſed thus, Take money with thee, and if thy brethren have been reduced to the neceſſity of pledging any thing for their ſupport, be ſure to redeem it, and reſtore it to them.

Ver. 19. Now Saul, and they, and all the men of Iſrael were in the valley of Elah, fighting with the Philiſtines.] They were now drawn up in battle array, in a diſpoſition to engage; not in the valley, but near it, on the declivity of the mountain, where they confronted the Philiſtines, and ſhewed themſelves prepared for action, whenever their enemies ſhould think fit to deſcend from the oppoſite mountain.

Ver. 20. And David roſe up early in the morning, and left the ſheep with a keeper, and took, and went, as Jeſſe had commanded him; and he came to the trench.] The Hebrew word, which is here rendered trench, properly ſignifies, an incloſure or circumference formed by the waggons and other carriages of an army; and we may ſuppoſe that the Hebrews fortified their camp with theſe in ancient times, ſince the ſame was cuſtomary with other nations.

Ver. 22. And David left his carriage in the hand of the keeper of the carriage, &c.] He left the proviſion which his father had ſent his brethren, with his ſervant, it being no proper time to preſent it to them when they were preparing to engage the enemy: He therefore haſted to his brethren, in the army, and after he had ſaluted them, he undoubtedly acquainted them with the cauſe of his arrival, and their fathers affectionate care for their welfare.

Ver. 23. And as he talked with them, behold there came up the champion (the Philiſtine of Gath, Goliath by name) out of the armies of the Philiſtines, and ſpake according to the ſame words: and David heard them.] Though the armies ſtood ready to engage, yet the vanity of Goliath made him once more deſire that the national difference might be determined by a ſingle combat. David now had an opportunity of ſeeing this Pagan boaſter, and hearing his inſolent bravado; in conſequence of which, he formed the glorious reſolution of encountering the giant, who had ſo long defied the armies of the living God with impunity.

Ver. 24. And all the men of Iſrael, when they ſaw the man, fled from him, and were ſore afraid.] It ſeems ſomething extraordinary, that they who had the courage to confront the whole army of the Philiſtines, among whom they knew Goliath was, ſhould yet be ſo intimidated at his appearance, as immediately to have recourſe to flight. But the true meaning is, they could not bear to hear the blaſphemous language he uttered againſt God, and the inſult he threw out upon them.

Ver. 25. And the men of Iſrael ſaid, Have ye ſeen this man that is come up? Surely to defy Iſrael is he come up.] They lamented their ſad condition, that all the people of Iſrael ſhould be contemned and villified by one man, who deſpiſed both them and their God.

——— And it ſhall be that the man who killeth him, the king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter, and make his fathers houſe free in Iſrael.] To make a family free in Iſrael, was to advance them to the the rank of nobility; and the Targum translates it, make them free princes in Israel. Particularly, free from paying any tribute or taxes, which was a royal privilege. Here some observe, that Saul had lost his former piety; for he neither sent to Samuel, nor consulted the high priest; nor do we find, that he offered any sacrifice, but only proclaimed a great reward to him who should enter the lists with Goliath, and kill him. This, however, shewed he had not lost all prudence: For thus Caleb won Kirjath-sepher, by offering his daughter in marriage to the man who should take it. And David himself afterward encouraged his soldiers to assault the strong fort of Zion, by promising to confer the command in chief of all his forces on the person who should first enter it. Thus Matthias Hostius observes, that the Athenians offered an hundred talents to him who should bring Xerxes to them alive or dead; and many more instances might be given of this method of exciting men to valiant exploits.

Ver. 26. And David spake to the men that stood by him, saying, What shall be done to the man that killeth this Philistine, and taketh away the reproach from Israel?] He desired those about him, to repeat the particulars of the king's promise; and the manner in which he expressed his curiosity, gave them sufficient reason to believe, that he himself would undertake to encounter Goliath. For tho' Saul's promising his daughter as a reward to the man who should slay him, had not in all that time been prevalent enough to induce any one Israelite to engage him, yet this young shepherd was not discouraged from claiming the combat with so formidable an antagonist.

———For who is this uncircumcised Philistine, that he should defy the armies of the living God?] David would not have them think, that he was moved by the hope of the reward, so much as by zeal for the honour of God, and the glory of his country, which suffered by the impious reproaches of that Pagan.

Ver. 27. And the people answered him after this manner, &c.] They all confirmed the particulars of what had been said before.

Ver. 28. And Eliab his eldest brother heard when he spake unto the men; and Eliab's anger was kindled against David; and he said, Why camest thou down hither, &c.] The curiosity of David, which was so natural in itself, and sprung from a principle that was truly heroic, raised the indignation of his elder brother, who reproached him for having quitted the few sheep that were consigned to his care; and for coming to be a spectator of the battle, to the success of which he was incapable of contributing. David, however, was not discouraged from his purpose, by these unkind reflections; but justified his former discourse, as he well might, since no man, no not Eliab himself, had the courage to wipe off the infamy which Goliath had cast upon them all.

Ver. 31. And when the words were heard which David spake, they rehearsed them before Saul; and he sent for him.] The expressions of David had been related to so many different persons, that they at last came to the ears of the king; who became desirous of seeing the person who had expressed himself with so much intrepidity, and accordingly gave orders for David to be introduced into his presence.

Ver. 32. And David said unto Saul, Let no man's heart fail because of him, &c.] The youthful son of Jesse was confident, that the proud boastings of Goliath would not be long unpunished, and therefore takes the liberty to inspire the king with the same contempt of that giant, as he himself had entertain'd. Saul could not but admire the intrepidity of this young man, but as he thought him no match for the champion of the Philistines, he endeavoured to dissuade him from his intended enterprize. David then replied, that he had formerly signalized himself on other occasions, that were altogether as dangerous, as the combat he was desirous now to undertake. "Thy "servant, said he to the king, kept his father's sheep, "and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb "out of the flock: And I went out after him, and smote "him, and delivered it out of his mouth: and when he "rose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote "him, and slew him. Thy servant slew both the lion and "the bear: and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as "one of them, seeing he hath defy'd the armies of the "living God," ver. 34, 35, 36.

The exploits which David thus related, may be consider'd as the effects of a gracious Providence, that was watchful for his preservation; but it does not from hence follow, that a miracle must be introduced, in order to render them credible. Thevenot informs us, in his Travels into the Levant, that the Arabs are not afraid even of lions; and that if a man of that nation be but armed with a strong staff, he has resolution enough to attack one of those animals, and seldom fails of success.

The words with which David closes his conference with Saul are worthy of the strictest attention, The Lord that delivered me out of the paw of the lion, and out of the paw of the bear, he will deliver me out of the hand of the Philistine. To silence all objections, he declares that he was possessed with a full persuasion, that God would as certainly render this Philistine as impotent before him, as the lion and the bear had formerly proved, since he was then conscious of the divine energy of that spirit, which had formerly assisted him. Saul upon this consented to David's request, and piously implored God to prosper him. This, however, did not prevent that prince from having recourse to all the precaution that prudence could suggest, for the security of his young hero, against the arms and strength of the Philistine. The Sacred Text declares, that he armed David with his armour, ver. 38. But it seems surprising that Saul, who was so much taller than any of his subjects, should imagine it possible to accommodate his own armour to the shape of David; and some of the Jews have been so embarrassed with this seeming difficulty, as to think it could be solved no other way, than by supposing that David had increased considerably in his stature, since he received the sacred unction from Samuel. But there is no occasion to have recourse to any such supposition, nor indeed is there any real difficulty in the passage before us, for Saul did not arm David with the helmet and cuiras, which he himself had usually worn, but ordered a proper helmet and coat of mail to be brought out of his armoury.

As David had never been arrayed in this manner before, he found his warlike habiliments very embarrassing, and no way suited to the manner of combat he had in view. He therefore threw them off, and took his shepherd's staff, together with five smooth stones out of the brook, ver. 40. But our translators should rather have render'd it cleft stones, for the Hebrew word signifies partitions, and therefore denotes the stones to have been jagged, for such were most fit for David's purpose. The stones he put into his shepherd's bag, and then took a sling in his hand. This was a weapon, in the management of which some people were surprisingly expert in ancient times. See Judges xx. 16. Livy and other authors mention slingers, who could hit a mark at a very great distance. Particularly the Phœnicians, who, as Bochart observes, were famous slingers; and from them this art was transmitted to the Baleares.

David then made the first advance to the Philistine, ver. 40. who expected some tall and robust person for his antagonist; but when he beheld David, he disdained him, as the Sacred Text declares, for he was but a youth, and ruddy, and of a fair countenance. He contemned him upon three accounts, first, as being a youth, unaccustom'd to war; secondly, as being very beautiful, and seeming more fit to dance with women, than to encounter with men; and thirdly, as being unarmed.

Ver. 43. And the Philistine said unto David, Am I a dog, that thou comest to me with staves? and the Philistine cursed David by his gods.] This manner of execration was also customary among the Romans, who in a vein of indignation used to say, Dii deæque te perdent! The gods and goddesses confound thee! And it is likely, that Goliath now wished that Dagon and Ashteroth, with all the other rabble of his false gods, would confound David.

Ver. 44. And the Philistine said to David, Come to me, and I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field.] For David, in his hands, would have been no more than a tender lamb in the grasp of a murdering butcher.

Ver. 45 Then David said to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield:

but I come unto thee in the name of the LORD of HOSTS.] By a commiſſion from him who commands all creatures in heaven and earth; and with a full aſſurance, that he will deliver thee, enormous as thou art for ſtrength and ſtature, into my hands.

———The God of the armies of Iſrael, whom thou haſt defied.] The Almighty Leader and Protector of thoſe armies, whom thou haſt had the impious preſumption to inſult ſo frequently.

Ver. 46. This day will the Lord deliver thee into mine hand, and I will ſmite thee, and take thine head from thee.] This Goliath thought impoſſible, ſince David was not furniſhed with a ſword, or any other weapon proper for ſuch an execution.

———And I will give the carcaſes of the hoſt of the Philiſtines this day unto the fowls of the air, and to the wild beaſts of the earth.] David did not raſhly and vainly boaſt of the victory before-hand, like Goliath. But the faith which was infuſed into his ſoul, animated him to praiſe the Divine Omnipotence, and to prophefy that a certain victory would be the event.

———That all the earth may know there is a God in Iſrael.] A God infinitely ſuperior to all the boaſted deities of the Pagans; and who in a moment could humble the proudeſt mortals who dared to oppoſe him, or his choſen people.

Ver. 47. And all this aſſembly ſhall know, that the Lord ſaveth not with ſword and ſpear.] They ſhould ſoon be ſenſible, that the Omnipotent Lord of the univerſe needed not the inſtrumentality of human force, for the execution of his deſigns. David did not want courage, but he piouſly aſcribes all to God, in whoſe power and might he went forth, and not in his own.

——— For the battle is the Lord's, and he will give it into our hands.] The battle againſt the ſeven nations of Canaan might properly be ſaid to be the Lord's, becauſe he had commanded them to be extirpated. But in all other battles he diſpoſed of the victory as he pleaſed. Strigelius here notes, out of Sophocles, the prophane ſpirit of Ajax, who was therefore puniſhed with madneſs; becauſe his father Telamon piouſly admoniſhed him, as he went to war, to fight bravely, but to expect victory from God alone; to which he impiouſly replied, that cowards might overcome by the help of God, but he doubted not to be victorious without their aid.

The prediction which David had uttered was ſoon juſtified by the event; for as the Philiſtine proudly came forward, with an intention to cruſh him, the ſon of Jeſſe lanched a ſtone from his ſling with ſo unerring an aim, that it whirled like a bolt of thunder upon his forehead, batter'd his skull, and ſunk deep into his brain. Down dropped the audacious giant, and extended his enormous length in the duſt; preſenting the Iſraelites with the deſpicable remains of the imperious boaſter, who ſo often had defied the armies of the living God.

Thoſe who are diſpoſed to be incredulous, without any other reaſon than the affectation of ſhewing their ſuperficial abilities, may expreſs their ſurpriſe, if they pleaſe, that a ſtone, ſlung by the arm of a youth, ſhould be able to penetrate the brazen helmet of Goliath, and pierce through his forehead. We need not have recourſe to any miracle for the ſolution of this objection, ſince no one can prove, that Goliath had his helmet on, when he marched againſt David; or if he had, yet ſuch was his contempt of the young antagoniſt who confronted him, that he perhaps might ſcorn to pull down the vizour of his helmet; in conſequence of which, the ſtone ſlung by David, aſcending in its motion, till it arrived at the face of the Philiſtine, might enter in at the lower part of his forehead, from whence it continued to ſlant upward, till it was implicated in the ſubſtance of his brain. But if we even ſuppoſe, that the Philiſtine not only wore his helmet, but that the vizour was down, there will yet be no abſurdity, in believing the ſtone might be forced through it by the natural ſtrength of David. Diodorus Siculus mentions certain ſlingers, who lanched ſtones with ſo much vigour, that nothing could reſiſt their violence; and he adds, that thoſe ſlings were as deſtructive as the catapults, (Diod. Sicul. lib. 5. p. 298.) It has likewiſe been ſaid, that when theſe ſlingers uſed balls of lead, inſtead of ſtones, they were ſometimes melted in the air by the rapidity of their motion.

——— ——— Plumbea vero
Glans etiam longo curſu, volvendo liqueſcit.

David, in order to compleat his victory, and perhaps imagining, that his enemy was only ſtunn'd by the blow, ſeized the ſword of his proſtrate foe, and then ſever'd his head from his body. All this was accompliſhed in the view of the Philiſtine army, who were ſtruck with a general conſternation, when they ſaw their champion laid in the duſt, and immediately fled in the moſt ignominious manner; but the Iſraelites purſued them even to the gates of Gath and Ekron, their principal cities.

Ver. 54. And David took the head of the Philiſtine, and brought it to Jeruſalem.] After he had ſhewn it to Saul, ver. 57. and expoſed it to all the people. Jeruſalem was now become a noted city, which might be the reaſon why David brought the head of Goliath thither.

———But he put his armour in his tent.] Which tent, we ſuppoſe, was ſet up for David, when he prepared to encounter the Philiſtine. And when it was taken down after the battle, the armour was depoſited in the tabernacle, with the ſword of Goliath, to remain there as a trophy.

Ver. 55. And when Saul ſaw David go forth againſt the Philiſtine, he ſaid unto Abner the captain of the hoſt, Abner, whoſe ſon is this youth?] This circumſtance has given interpreters ſome difficulty to reconcile. Some have thought, that David had been ſo long abſent from Saul, that he was quite alter'd; his beard being grown, and his ſhape and features become more manly; which prevented him from being eaſily known again. Others imagine, that Saul not having ſeen him but when he was in his melancholly diſorders of mind, and in a manner deprived of his ſenſes, could not be ſuppoſed to retain any idea of him. But this conjecture is altogether improbable, becauſe Saul is ſaid to have loved him exceedingly, when he was recovered from his paroxyſms. Some others, and among them Junius, aſſert there is here alſo a tranſpoſition of chapters, and that David had killed Goliath, ſome time before he was ſent for to entertain Saul with his harp; becauſe he is recommended to him as a man of valour, as well as a muſician. But we can by no means come into that notion upon ſuch ſlight grounds. David might have acquired the character of a valiant youth on other accounts, particularly for reſcuing ſome of his flock out of the jaws of wild beaſts. And as to his being forgotten at court, it may eaſily be accounted for, if to the growth of his ſhape, beard, &c. mentioned under the firſt head, we add, that when he played before Saul, he appeared in a dreſs ſuitable to that occaſion, but was now in his plain ſhepherd's habit, and juſt come from a journey; ſo that the king and his court, who had ſeen ſuch a variety of faces ſince his departure, might not eaſily recollect who he was. But after all, Saul did not ask who David was, but who was his father; which he might eaſily forget, when he had been diſturbed with melancholy, and the ill ſtate of the public affairs.

———And Abner ſaid, As thy ſoul liveth, O king, I cannot tell.] Abner being a military man, and conſequently much abroad, had not ſeen David when he was at court, or at leaſt had taken no notice of him.

Ver. 56. And the king ſaid, Enquire thou whoſe ſon the ſtripling is.] It was natural for Saul to be deſirous of knowing who was the father of ſuch a young man, that ſo much excelled all other men.

Ver. 57. And as David returned from the ſlaughter of the Philiſtine, Abner took him, and brought him before Saul, with the head of the Philiſtine in his hand.] Abner thought it was moſt proper, that the king ſhould learn from David's own mouth, who he was; eſpecially after ſuch a glorious exploit.

Ver. 58. And Saul ſaid to him, Whoſe ſon art thou, thou young man? And David anſwered, I am the ſon of thy ſervant Jeſſe the Beth-lehemite.] There was undoubtedly more converſation between them, as appears by the firſt verſe of the next chapter; but this was all that was neceſſary to be recorded, in anſwer to Saul's queſtion.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 Jonathan loveth David. 5 Saul envieth his praiſe, 10 Seeketh to kill him in his fury, 12 Feareth him for his good ſucceſs, 17 Offereth him his daughter for a ſnare. 22 David perſuaded to be the king's ſon-in-law, giveth two hundred foreskins of the Philiſtines for Michals dowry. 28 Sauls hatred, and Davids glory increaſeth.

AND it came to paſs when he had made an end of ſpeaking unto Saul, that the ſoul of Jonathan was knit with the ſoul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own ſoul.

2 And Saul took him that day, and would let him go no more home to his fathers houſe.

3 Then Jonathan and David made a covenant, becauſe he loved him as his own ſoul.

4 And Jonathan ſtript himſelf of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his ſword, and to his bow, and to his girdle.

5 ¶ And David went out whitherſoever Saul ſent him, and behaved himſelf wiſely: and Saul ſet him over the men of war, and he was accepted in the ſight of all the people, and alſo in the ſight of Sauls ſervants.

6 And it came to paſs as they came, when David was returned from the ſlaughter of the Philiſtine, that the women came out of all cities of Iſrael, ſinging and dancing, to meet king Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with inſtruments of muſick.

7 And the women anſwered one another as they played, and ſaid, Saul hath ſlain his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands.

8 And Saul was very wroth, and the ſaying diſpleaſed him; and he ſaid, They have aſcribed unto David ten thouſands, and to me they have aſcribed but thouſands: and what can he have more but the kingdom?

9 And Saul eyed David from that day and forward.

10 ¶ And it came to paſs on the morrow, that the evil ſpirit from God came upon Saul, and he propheſied in the midſt of the houſe: and David played with his hand, as at other times: and there was a javelin in Sauls hand.

11 And Saul caſt the javelin; for he ſaid, I will ſmite David even to the wall with it: and David avoided out of his preſence twice.

12 ¶ And Saul was afraid of David, becauſe the LORD was with him, and was departed from Saul.

13 Therefore Saul removed him from him, and made him his captain over a thouſand; and he went out and came in before the people.

14 And David behaved himſelf wiſely in all his ways; and the LORD was with him.

15 Wherefore when Saul ſaw that he behaved himſelf very wiſely, he was afraid of him.

16 But all Iſrael and Judah loved David, becauſe he went out and came in before them.

17 ¶ And Saul ſaid to David, Behold, my elder daughter Merab, her will I give thee to wife: only be thou valiant for me, and fight the LORDs battles: for Saul ſaid, Let not mine hand be upon him, but let the hand of the Philiſtines be upon him.

18 And David ſaid unto Saul, Who am I? and what is my life, or my fathers family in Iſrael, that I ſhould be ſon-in-law to the king?

19 But it came to paſs, at the time when Merab Sauls daughter ſhould have been given to David, that ſhe was given unto Adriel the Meholathite to wife.

20 And Michal Sauls daughter loved David: and they told Saul, and the thing pleaſed him.

21 And Saul ſaid, I will give him her, that ſhe may be a ſnare to him, and that the hand of the Philiſtines may be againſt him. Wherefore Saul ſaid to David, Thou ſhalt this day be my ſon-in-law, in the one of the twain.

22 ¶ And Saul commanded his ſervants, ſaying, Commune with David ſecretly, and ſay, Behold, the king hath delight in thee, and all his ſervants love thee: now therefore be the kings ſon-in-law.

23 And Sauls ſervants ſpake thoſe words in the ears of David: and David ſaid, Seemeth it to you a light thing to be a kings ſon-in-law, ſeeing that I am a poor man, and lightly eſteemed?

24 And the ſervants of Saul told him, ſaying, On this manner ſpake David.

25 And Saul ſaid, Thus ſhall ye ſay to David, The king deſireth not any dowry; but an hundred foreskins of the Philiſtines, to be avenged of the kings enemies. But Saul thought to make David fall by the hand of the Philiſtines.

26 And when his ſervants told David theſe words, it pleaſed David well to be the kings ſon-in-law: and the days were not expired.

27 Wherefore David aroſe and went, he and his men, and ſlew of the Philiſtines two hundred men; and David brought their fore-skins, and they gave them in full tale to the king, that he might be the kings ſon-in-law: and Saul gave him Michal his daughter to wife.

28 ¶ And Saul ſaw and knew that the LORD was with David, and that Michal Sauls daughter loved him.

29 And Saul was yet the more afraid of David; and Saul became Davids enemy continually.

30 Then the princes of the Philiſtines went forth: and it came paſs after they went forth, that David behaved himſelf more wiſely than all the ſervants of Saul, ſo that his name was much ſet by.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs when he had made an end of ſpeaking unto Saul, that the ſoul of Jonathan was knit with the ſoul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own ſoul.] Such was the prudence and modeſty of David's diſcourſe and behaviour, after ſuch an heroic action, that he entirely gained the affection of Jonathan.

Ver. 2. And Saul took him that day, and would let him go no more home to his father's houſe.] Saul alſo reſolved to ſhow greater reſpect and kindneſs to him than before. For it appears by this, that he had not lived always at court, after he came firſt thither, but often went to his father, when Saul was well, and had no occaſion for his ſervice.

Ver. 3. Then Jonathan and David made a covenant.] Solemnly enter'd into a mutual friendſhip.

——Becauſe he loved him as his own ſoul.] Such excellent men there were among the Heathens, between whom there was ζεῦγος φιλίας, as Plutarch calls it, a yoke of friendſhip, wherein they were ſo joined together in love and amity, as to have one common intereſt. The ſame author mentions (in his book περὶ Πολυφιλίας) Theſeus and Perithous, Achilles and Patroclus, Oreſtes and Pylades, but none of them were comparable to Jonathan and David, who enter'd into the moſt ſacred bonds of mutual aſſiſtance and defence, even to their very death; and of kindneſs to their poſterity after either of them was dead, which was a ſingular Providence of God, who by this means preſerved David in that ſharp perſecution, which ſhortly after aroſe againſt him at court.

Ver. 4. And Jonathan ſtript himſelf of the robe that was upon him, and gave it unto David.] That he might appear like a courtier.

——And his garments, even to his ſword, and to his bow, and to his girdle.] That he might look like another Jonathan, and all might take notice of their intimate union.

Ver. 5. And David went out whitherſoever Saul ſent him.] Upon military expeditions; none of which he refuſed, tho' ever ſo hazardous.

——And he behaved himſelf wiſely.] He render'd his prudence, in the conduct of affairs, as conſpicuous as his bravery in war.

——And Saul ſet him over the men of war.] Not over all, for Abner was general of the Jewiſh forces; but he made him captain of his guard, or gave him ſome other great command in his army.

——And he was accepted in the ſight of all the people, and alſo in the ſight of Saul's ſervants.] Except a few, who envied his preferment.

Ver. 6. And it came to paſs, as they came.] Marched along in a great cavalcade, from the place of battle.

——When David returned from the ſlaughter of the Philiſtine.] We ſuppoſe, Saul and the whole court thought fit to honour David, by accompanying him to Jeruſalem, when he carried the head of Goliath thither.

——The women came out of all the cities of Iſrael.] All the neighbouring cities.

——Singing and dancing, to meet king Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with inſtruments of muſick.] As the cuſtom was, in times of great rejoicing.

Ver. 7. And the women anſwered one to another as they played.] They ſang, as well as played on muſical inſtruments; and they ſang alternately, as they did, Exod. xv. 21. And the burden of the ſong ſeems to have been that which follows; ——And ſaid, Saul hath ſlain his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands.] For his ſlaying Goliath was the cauſe of the flight of the army of the Philiſtines, and of the great ſlaughter which enſued.

Ver. 8. And Saul was very wroth, and the ſaying diſpleaſed him; and he ſaid, They have aſcribed unto David ten thouſands, and to me they have aſcribed but thouſands; and what can he have more, but the kingdom?] He began to be jealous they would advance him to the throne in a little time, ſince they ſo highly magnified him above their ſovereign.

Ver. 9. And Saul eyed David from that day and forward.] Narrowly obſerved him, whether he had any deſign to make himſelf king. Or, as it is commonly interpreted, he looked with a malignant eye upon him, as one he envied and hated, and of whoſe popularity he was very apprehenſive.

Ver. 10. And it came to paſs on the morrow, that the evil ſpirit from God came upon Saul.] Which had formerly haunted him, xvi. 14. and now by his diſcontent, anger and melancholy, was brought again upon him.

——And he propheſied in the midſt of the houſe.] Before the whole court: this propheſying is generally underſtood, only of his imitating the motions, actions, and geſtures of the prophets, which ſometimes were very different from thoſe of other men (ſee 2 Kings ix. 11.) But we ſee no reaſon why this word ſhould not retain the ſignification here, which it hath in other places; that he ſung divine ſongs, which perhaps he the rather did, that David might not ſuſpect any danger from him. Abarbinel thinks, that his mind being diſturbed with a fluctuation of various thoughts about his own condition, and with reſpect to David, he foretold that this latter ſhould be heir of his kingdom.

——And David played with his hand as at other times.] To compoſe and quiet the diſordered ſpirits of Saul.

——And there was a javelin in Saul's hand.] Which he had provided on purpoſe, as is evident from the following words, to diſpatch David.

Ver. 11. And Saul caſt the javelin; for he ſaid I will ſmite David even to the wall with it.] This ſhews that he had worked himſelf up into ſuch a fit of intemperate rage, that he deſigned to kill David before all his courtiers, even when the generous young man was waiting upon him and doing him ſervice.

——And David avoided out of his preſence twice.] Had his eye upon him, and eluded the blow, both now, and at another time, mentioned chap. xix. 10.

Ver. 12. And Saul was afraid of David, becauſe the Lord was with him, and was departed from Saul.] Who was as unſucceſsful in all his deſigns, as David was proſperous.

Ver. 13. Therefore Saul removed him from him, and made him his captain over a thouſand.] Inſtead of captain of his guard (which required his attendance at court) he gave him a command abroad; where he hoped he might loſe his life in ſome expedition, or elſe that he himſelf might have an opportunity of deſtroying him in a private manner.

——And he went out and came in before the people.] As the leader of that thouſand men.

Ver. 14. And David behaved himſelf wiſely in all his ways.] Whatever he undertook, his conduct was always prudent and irreproachable.

——And

——— And the Lord was with him.] The Divine Providence co-operated with his endeavours, and rendered them prosperous.

Ver. 15. Wherefore when Saul saw that he behaved himself very wisely, he was afraid of him.] His fears increased, as he saw David still act with so much discretion, that no exception could be taken to his behaviour.

Ver. 16. But all Israel and Judah loved David.] The Israelites in general loved David, but especially those of the tribe of Judah.

——— Because he went out and came in before them.] This phrase signifies, in other places, to execute all the functions of a public station with full authority. So Moses speaks of himself, Deut. xxxi. 2. and of Joshua his successor, Numb. xxvii. 21. and we suppose it has the same signification here; namely, that David had an absolute power over those whom he commanded, and managed it so well, that he gained a general esteem and affection,

Ver. 17. And Saul said to David, Behold my elder daughter Merab, her will I give thee to wife.] He at last recollected the promise he had publickly made in favour of the person who should kill Goliath. The performance of which David did not demand, but in modesty left it to Saul's own conscience, who, as it appears by the sequel, had no intention to be punctual to his word.

——— Only be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles.] He would not have him expect to live at court, in consequence of this marriage, but to continue a military life, and fight for his country, whereby he hoped to be rid of him.

——— For Saul said, Let not mine hand be upon him.] Now he seems to have some sense of honour, and to discard those base thoughts of murdering him with his own hands.

——— But let the hand of the Philistines be upon him.] By whose hand God's just judgment so ordered events, that Saul himself fell.

Ver. 18. And David said unto Saul, who am I? and what is my life.] The hazarding his life, he tells him, could not deserve so high an advancement.

——— And what is my family in Israel, that I should be son-in-law to the king?] This was not a refusal of the honour, but an acknowledgment how unworthy he was to have it conferred upon him.

Ver. 19. And it came to pass at the time when Merab Saul's daughter should have been given to David.] When all things were ready for the celebration of the marriage.

——— That she was given to Adriel the Meholathite to wife.] This was the greatest indignity that could be offered to David, who, however, had the prudence to conceal the impression it made upon him. How Jonathan resented this usage, we are not told, but it is likely, his filial duty and affection made him intreat David to take it patiently, and to look upon Saul, as one who was sometimes disordered in his understanding, and consequently incapable of forming a right judgment of his own actions.

Ver. 20. And Michal Saul's daughter loved David; and they told Saul, and the thing pleased him.] Not out of any love to David, or desire to perform his promise. But because he hoped, by her means, to accomplish his design of destroying David.

Ver. 21. And Saul said, I will give him her, that she may be a snare to him; and that the hand of the Philistines may be against him.] He hoped his daughter, in obedience to him, might be persuaded to betray David into some snare that he would lay for him; or that being exposed to great dangers (which he was to undergo as a condition of having his wife) he might perish in some of them.

——— Wherefore Saul said unto David, Thou shalt be this day my son-in-law.] That is, shortly, and within a certain time, which perhaps was then prefixed by Saul.

——— In the one of the twain.] By marrying one of his daughters: Saul had two; and tho' David was disappointed in one of them, yet the promise of the king was fulfilled, if he married the other.

Ver. 22. And Saul commanded his servants, saying, commune with David secretly.] It seems David was not willing to embrace Saul's offer, having been so grosly abused. Therefore Saul ordered his courtiers, in private discourse, to take an opportunity of persuading him to it.

——— And say, Behold, the king hath delight in thee, and all his servants love thee; now therefore be the king's son-in-law.] The affection of the king and of the whole court was a mighty argument to induce him to it.

Ver. 23. And Saul's servants spake those words in the ears of David; and David said, Seemeth it to you a light thing to be a king's son-in-law, seeing that I am a poor man and lightly esteemed?] Having no estate, and of small credit, and therefore unable to endow her according to her quality.

Ver. 24. And the servants of Saul told him, saying, On this manner spake David.] In the Hebrew, according unto these words; that is, they reported his words faithfully; that he was as sensible of his own meanness, as of the honour that was offered him.

Ver. 25. And Saul said, thus shall ye say to David, The king desireth not any dowry; but an hundred foreskins of the Philistines, to be avenged of the king's enemies.] This custom hath prevailed in later times in some countries, to give their daughters in marriage to the most valiant men; or those who should bring them so many heads of their enemies. Alex. ab Alexandro reports of a people in Carmania, that if any were desirous to marry, it was necessary he should bring the king the head of an enemy, Lib. 1. cap. 24. Vincent le Blanc reports the like of others, p. 1. chap. 30. But why did Saul desire the fore-skins of the Philistines, and not their heads? To this Procopius Gazæus answers, that Saul did not know, but David might cut off the heads of his own subjects, and bring them instead of the Philistines. and therefore he asked so many foreskins, which the Israelites had not, that he might be sure he had destroyed so many enemies. As for portions, the Hebrew custom was not like that of the Romans, who required the wife to bring a portion to her husband, ut onera matrimonii tanto aquius sustineat, that he might be able to bear the charges of matrimony more equally. But among the Hebrews, the husband endowed the wife, and received nothing at all with her. And so the custom was among the people of Canaan before the Israelites became masters of it. For Sichem desired Dinah's relations to require what dowry they pleased, and it should be settled upon her, Gen. xxxix. 17.

——— But Saul thought to make David fall by the hand of the Philistines.] Who he knew would be extreamly enraged against David, for treating them with so much indignity.

Ver. 26. And when his servants told David these words, it pleased David well to be the king's son-in-law.] In the Hebrew the words are, the thing was right in David's eyes; that is, he thought fit to accept the offer upon these conditions.

——— And the days were not expired.] Which were appointed to be fulfilled (as it is in the Hebrew) before the marriage took effect; so that he had time to perform what was agreed to be accepted instead of a dowry.

Ver. 27. Wherefore David arose and went, he and his men, and slew of the Philistines two hundred men; and David brought their fore-skins, and they gave them in full tale to the king, that he might be the king's son-in-law.] He gave Saul double the number he demanded; partly to shew his sense of the honour that prince had conferred upon him, and partly to express his love to his daughter, and to declare his intention to venture his life freely in the service of his sovereign.

——— And Saul gave him Michal his daughter to wife.] There being no way to avoid it, after the marriage had been so solemnly treated and ratified.

Ver. 28. And Saul saw and knew that the Lord was with David.] He was convinced of it by the success the Divine Majesty constantly gave him.

——— And that Michal Saul's daughter loved him.] Which was a great disappointment to him.

Ver. 29. And Saul was yet the more afraid of David.] Having thus advanced him, and seeing no hope of accomplishing his designs against him.

——— And Saul became David's enemy continually.] He was every day more resolute to destroy him. So ſtrange an infatuation did his anger and hatred, and ſuch like diſorderly paſſions, bring upon him, that he became implacable againſt the man who he ſaw and knew had God for his friend.

Ver. 30. Then the princes of the Philiſtines went forth.] To fight with the Iſraelites, who had highly incenſed them by David's late action, as well as by former loſſes. And they thought, perhaps, that David would make uſe of the benefit the law allowed, Deut. xxiv. of not going to war in a year after he was married.

——And it came to paſs after they went forth, that David behaved himſelf more wiſely than all the ſervants of Saul.] By diſcovering, we ſuppoſe, the deſigns of the Philiſtines, and preventing them; for we do not read, that they came to a battle.

CHAP. XIX.

1 Jonathan diſcloſeth his fathers purpoſe to kill David. 4 He perſuadeth his father to reconciliation. 8 By reaſon of Davids good ſucceſs in a new war, Sauls malicious rage breaketh out againſt him. 12 Michal deceiveth her father with an image in Davids bed. 18 David cometh to Samuel in Naioth. 20 Sauls meſſengers ſent to take David, 22 And Saul himſelf, propheſy.

AND Saul ſpake to Jonathan his ſon, and to all his ſervants, that they ſhould kill David.

2 But Jonathan Sauls ſon delighted much in David: and Jonathan told David, ſaying, Saul my father ſeeketh to kill thee: now therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thy ſelf until the morning, and abide in a ſecret place, and hide thy ſelf:

3 And I will go out and ſtand beſide my father in the field where thou art, and I will commune with my father of thee; and what I ſee, that I will tell thee.

4 ¶ And Jonathan ſpake good of David unto Saul his father, and ſaid unto him, Let not the king ſin againſt his ſervant, againſt David: becauſe he hath not ſinned againſt thee, and becauſe his works have been to thee-ward very good.

5 For he did put his life in his hand, and ſlew the Philiſtine, and the LORD wrought a great ſalvation for all Iſrael: thou ſaweſt it, and didſt rejoyce: wherefore then wilt thou ſin againſt innocent blood, to ſlay David without a cauſe?

6 And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan: and Saul ſware, As the LORD liveth, he ſhall not be ſlain.

7 And Jonathan called David, and Jonathan ſhewed him all thoſe things: and Jonathan brought David to Saul, and he was in his preſence as in times paſt.

8 And there was war again: and David went out, and fought with the Philiſtines, and ſlew them with a great ſlaughter; and they fled from him.

9 And the evil ſpirit from the LORD was upon Saul, as he ſat in his houſe with his javelin in his hand: and David played with his hand.

10 And Saul ſought to ſmite David even to the wall with the javelin; but he ſlipt away out of Sauls preſence, and he ſmote the javelin into the wall: and David fled, and eſcaped that night.

11 Saul alſo ſent meſſengers unto Davids houſe, to watch him, and to ſlay him in the morning: and Michal Davids wife told him, ſaying, If thou ſave not thy life to night, to morrow thou ſhalt be ſlain.

12 ¶ So Michal let David down through a window: and he went and fled, and eſcaped.

13 And Michal took an image, and laid it in the bed, and put a pillow of goats hair for his bolſter, and covered it with a cloth.

14 And when Saul ſent meſſengers to take David, ſhe ſaid, He is ſick.

15 And Saul ſent the meſſengers again to ſee David, ſaying, Bring him up to me in the bed, that I may ſlay him.

16 And when the meſſengers were come in, behold, there was an image in the bed, with a pillow of goats hair for his bolſter.

17 And Saul ſaid unto Michal, Why haſt thou deceived me ſo, and ſent away mine enemy, that he is eſcaped? And Michal anſwered Saul, He ſaid unto me, Let me go; why ſhould I kill thee?

18 ¶ So David fled, and eſcaped, and came to Samuel to Ramah, and told him all that Saul had done to him: and he and Samuel went and dwelt in Naioth.

19 And it was told Saul, ſaying, Behold, David is at Naioth in Ramah.

20 And Saul ſent meſſengers to take David: and when they ſaw the company of the prophets propheſying, and Samuel ſtanding as appointed over them, the ſpirit of God was upon the meſſengers of Saul, and they alſo propheſied.

21 And when it was told Saul, he ſent other meſſengers, and they propheſied likewiſe: and Saul ſent meſſengers again the third time, and they propheſied alſo.

22 Then went he alſo to Ramah, and came to a great well that is in Sechu: and he asked and ſaid, Where are Samuel and David? And one ſaid, Behold, they be at Naioth in Ramah.

23 And

23 And he went thither to Naioth in Ramah: and the ſpirit of God was upon him alſo, and he went on and propheſied, until he came to Naioth in Ramah:

24 And he ſtript off his clothes alſo, and propheſied before Samuel in like manner, and lay down naked all that day, and all that night. Wherefore they ſay, Is Saul alſo among the prophets?

Ver. 1. And Saul ſpake to Jonathan his ſon, and to all his ſervants, that they ſhould kill David.] When he could not deſtroy him by craft, he declares open enmity to him, and commands his ſon and his whole court to make him away, believing that ſome of them would obey him. It is ſurpriſing that he ſhould order Jonathan to murder David, if he knew the friendſhip he had for him; and he could not well be ignorant of it, ſince he had ſo publickly declared it, as we read, chap. xviii. 3, 4. But he imagined his filial reſpect and affection for a father would overcome his love to a friend. And there was a great Providence of God, in his diſcloſing his mind ſo freely to Jonathan, by which means David came to be certainly informed of his danger.

Ver. 2. But Jonathan Saul's ſon delighted much in David.] He continued to take much delight in his company; and therefore would not deprive himſelf of the pleaſure of his friendſhip, by ſuffering him to be aſſaſſinated.

——And Jonathan told David, ſaying, Saul my father ſeeketh to kill thee: now therefore, I pray thee, take heed to thyſelf until the morning, and abide in a ſecret place, and hide thyſelf.] He hoped, we ſuppoſe, to find his father better diſpoſed in the morning; and in the mean time would have David ſecure himſelf in ſome ſequeſtred retreat, where it would be impoſſible for any to find him.

Ver. 3. And I will go out.] Namely, the next morning.

——And ſtand behind my father, in the field where thou art.] In which, it is likely, Saul uſed to walk in the morning, to enjoy the benefit of the freſh air. Thereabouts he adviſed David to conceal himſelf, in ſome ſecret place, that he might ſpeedily acquaint him with the iſſue of his diſcourſe with his father.

——And I will commune with my father of thee; and what I ſee that I will tell thee.] Let him know how he left his father inclined.

Ver. 4. And Jonathan ſpake good of David unto Saul his father.] A noble act of friendſhip, to adventure to commend him to one who was his declared enemy.

——And ſaid unto him, Let not the king ſin againſt his ſervant, againſt David: becauſe he hath not ſinned againſt thee, and becauſe his works have been to thee-ward very good.] He repreſented to him, what a ſin and diſhonour it would be to kill ſo faithful a ſervant as David had been, who never offended him, but ſtudied by all good offices to pleaſe him.

Ver. 5. For he did put his life in his hand, and ſlew the Philiſtine.] Eſpecially he puts him in mind of that hazardous enterprize, when he ſlew Goliath.

——And the Lord wrought a great ſalvation for all Iſrael.] By which means the whole realm was delivered out of their enemies hand.

——Thou ſaweſt it, and didſt rejoice.] He deſires him to remember, that he himſelf was a witneſs of it, and could not then but applaud David, and rejoice in what God had accompliſhed by the inſtrumentality of that young man.

——Wherefore then wilt thou ſin againſt innocent blood, to ſlay David without a cauſe?] Having mollified Saul by ſo many arguments, he beſeeches him to revoke the order he had given, ver. 1. and expreſly tells him, if he did not, he would bring innocent blood upon his own head.

Ver. 6. And Saul hearkened unto the voice of Jonathan; and Saul ſware, as the Lord liveth he ſhall not be ſlain.] Some think he ſware deceitfully; that Jonathan, believing he had no ill intention toward David, might not perſuade him to fly, but bring him to court again, where Saul might have an opportunity to deſtroy him. But we rather think he ſpake what he really meant at that time; tho' this alteration proceeding not from any affection he bare to David, but from a ſenſe (which Jonathan's diſcourſe had wrought in him) how baſe it would be to ſlay a man of ſo much worth, and who had render'd him ſuch ſignal ſervice, he ſoon forgot it, and returned to his old bent.

Ver. 8. And there was war again: and David went out, and fought with the Philiſtines, and ſlew them with a great ſlaughter, and they fled from him.] All theſe battles were only between parties, for David commanded no more than a thouſand men, chap. xviii. 13. And if the whole army of the Philiſtines had been gathered together, Abner would have commanded the army of Iſrael againſt them, for he was captain of the hoſt.

Ver. 9. And the evil ſpirit from the Lord was upon Saul, as he ſat in his houſe with his javelin in his hand.] The more ſervices David performed for his country, the more did Saul's hatred and malice increaſe againſt him. For this new victory, in all likelihood, made him melancholly and outrageous, to ſee him ſo proſperous.

——And David played with his hand.] He did not omit his duty to Saul, tho' he knew the danger to which he expoſed himſelf on ſuch occaſions.

Ver. 10. And Saul ſought to ſmite David even to the wall with the javelin; but he ſlipt away out of Saul's preſence, and he ſmote the javelin into the wall.] His wrath made him forget his oath; ſo dangerous it is to be under the influence of ſuch malignant paſſions.

——And David fled, and eſcaped that night.] He got out of the palace, before Saul's order (which it is likely he gave) to apprehend him, could be executed.

Ver. 11. Saul alſo ſent meſſengers unto David's houſe, to watch him, and to ſlay him in the morning.] When he ſhould come out of his houſe. By this it is apparent, that when Saul miſſed his blow, he was the more enraged, and implacably purſued the deſtruction of David.

——And Michal David's wife told him, ſaying, If thou ſave not thy life to-night, to-morrow thou ſhalt be ſlain.] She had intelligence, either from her brother Jonathan, or ſome other friend at court; or perhaps ſhe ſaw ſuſpicious perſons hovering about the houſe.

Ver. 12. So Michal let David down through a window.] Which did not look toward any of the doors that were narrowly watched.

——And he went and fled, and eſcaped.] Having moſt of the night, it is probable, to travel in.

Ver. 13. And Michal took an image, and laid it in the bed.] In the Hebrew it is, and Michal took a teraphim; and we refer the reader to our annotations on the 19th verſe of the xxxiſt chapter of Geneſis, where we have given a copious account of teraphims in general. Joſephus, who perhaps might think it a reflect on David, that ſuch a ſuperſtitious image ſhould be found in his houſe, has attributed a more extraordinary ſtratagem to Michal; but it is ſuch a fiction, that a grave hiſtorian ought to have been aſhamed to relate. He tells us, that ſhe hid the liver of a kid newly killed, under the bed-cloaths, that the panting of it might be taken for the palpitation of her husband, in a fever. But without examining whether, or how long, a kid's liver would move in that manner, it is ſcarce credible, that the meſſengers would give her ſufficient time for the accompliſhment of this pretended act of policy; or if ſhe had notice of their coming, that ſhe could time it ſo well, that the liver ſhould be ſtill panting when they came into David's chamber.

We are not to imagine, that the teraphim which Michal placed in her husband's bed was one of thoſe that were made for ſuperſtitious purpoſes, and which David would never have ſuffered in his houſe; we therefore ſuppoſe it was nothing more than the ſimple image of a man's head. Abarbinel is of opinion, that it was cuſtomary for women, in thoſe days, to have artificial figures which reſembled their husbands; that when they were abſent from them, they might behold them in their image; and it is probable, that Michal's tender affection for David had induced her to procure ſome image of this nature.

——And put a pillow of goat's hair for his bolſter.] It is not eaſy to fix the true ſignification of the Hebrew word cebir, which we tranſlate pillow; for interpreters differ differ greatly in their ſentiments concerning it. Bochart maintains, with much probability, that it ſignifies great, and repreſents the meaning to be, that Michal placed a large quantity of goat's hair on the bolſter. For tho' the word goats is only mentioned in the Hebrew text, yet the word hair muſt be ſupplied, as many other places of Scripture teſtify. In thoſe countries goats had long hair, which was ſhorn like the wool of ſheep, and ſerved for many uſes. We may add too, that it was not unlike human hair, and it was alſo tinged with various colours: And as it was cuſtomary for women, even of great quality, to ſpin it, it was therefore ready at hand, and Michal might chuſe a fine ſort, of the ſame colour with David's hair.

—— And covered it with a cloth.] As if David had been ſick.

Ver. 14. And when Saul ſent meſſengers to take David] He not coming out of his houſe, where the meſſengers of Saul watched for him, that prince ſent them a ſecond time to ſieze him in his own apartment.

——— She ſaid, He is ſick.] Her affection for her husband made her have recourſe to an untruth, on this occaſion, in conſequence of which he gained more time for retiring to ſome place of ſecurity. If any circumſtance can render a falſhood excuſable, we think the preſervation of an innocent and perſecuted husband may well be conſidered as one.

Ver 15. And Saul ſent the meſſengers again to fetch David, ſaying, Bring him up to me in the bed, that I may ſlay him.] Such was the inſatiable rage of this prince, that he could not ſtay to ſee whether David would die of his ſuppoſed ſickneſs, but was reſolved to diſpatch him, when he was incapable of making any reſiſtance. He therefore ſent back the men, with orders to bring him alive in his bed, that he might have the barbarous pleaſure of ſtabbing him with his own hand; and it was then that Michal's ſtratagem, being diſcovered, ſo exaſperated her gloomy father, that ſhe was forced to make him believe, that ſhe had conſented to it, merely to ſave her own life, ver. 16, 17.

David having happily eſcaped in this manner, went to Ramah, to acquaint Samuel with the melancholly particulars, and both of them went and reſided at Naioth, which was in Ramah, as appears by ver. 19. Ramah was the place of Samuel's nativity, and Naioth is thought by ſome to have been the ſuburbs of it. But we rather think, with Pellicanus, that Naioth ſignifies the habitation or college, where the prophets dwelt, in Ramah.

The place of David's abode was ſoon diſcovered to Saul, who immediately ſent meſſengers to apprehend him; for his implacable hatred had extinguiſhed all his former reſpect for Samuel, under whoſe protection David now was; but his meſſengers were no ſooner come within ſight of Samuel and the prophets, than they themſelves began to propheſy; or, in other words, they celebrated the praiſes of God in ſuch rapturous hymns as the prophets compoſed, and ſang in honour to the Divine Majeſty.

When Saul was informed of this ſurpriſing event, he was ſo far from being awakened into remorſe for his inhumane treatment of David, that he ſent other meſſengers on the ſame errand, a ſecond and even a third time, but was as often diſappointed in his expectations, ſince theſe perſons were ſeized with the ſame fervours, as had been experienced by the firſt meſſengers, ver. 21. He then reſolved to go himſelf, but when he came to Naioth, he began to propheſy likewiſe, and lay down uncovered, for the ſpace of a day and a night, ver. 24. The words in the original ſeem, at the firſt view, to import, that he lay naked; but we cannot think it reaſonable to underſtand them in a literal ſenſe, becauſe God had ſtrictly prohibited all indecencies of that nature, in oppoſition to the heathen prieſts, who were not aſhamed to appear naked at ſome of their feaſts. It is more than probable, therefore, that the ſcriptural expreſſion means no more than the caſting off that looſe upper garment, which the Iſraelites threw over them, when they went abroad. The ſame manner of ſpeaking was alſo common to the Greeks and Latins, as might be made evident from a number of authors, were the ſubject of that importance, as to render the citation of them neceſſary.

CHAP. XX.

1 David conſulteth with Jonathan for his ſafety. 11 Jonathan and David renew their covenant by oath. 18 Jonathans token to David. 24 Saul miſſing David, ſeeketh to kill Jonathan. 35 Jonathan lovingly taketh his leave of David.

AND David fled from Naioth in Ramah, and came and ſaid before Jonathan, What have I done? what is mine iniquity? and what is my ſin before thy father, that he ſeeketh my life?

2 And he ſaid unto him, God forbid; thou ſhalt not die: behold, my father will do nothing, either great or ſmall, but that he will ſhew it me: and why ſhould my father hide this thing from me? it is not ſo.

3 And David ſware moreover, and ſaid, Thy father certainly knoweth that I have found grace in thine eyes; and he ſaith, Let not Jonathan know this, leſt he be grieved: but truly as the LORD liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, there is but a ſtep between me and death.

4 Then ſaid Jonathan unto David, Whatſoever thy ſoul deſireth, I will even do it for thee.

5 And David ſaid unto Jonathan, Behold, to morrow is the new-moon, and I ſhould not fail to ſit with the king at meat: but let me go, that I may hide my ſelf in the field unto the third day at even.

6 If thy father at all miſs me, then ſay, David earneſtly asked leave of me, that he might run to Beth-lehem his city: for there is a yearly ſacrifice there for all the family.

7 If he ſay thus, It is well; thy ſervant ſhall have peace: but if he be very wroth, then be ſure that evil is determined by him.

8 Therefore thou ſhalt deal kindly with thy ſervant; for thou haſt brought thy ſervant into a covenant of the LORD with thee: notwithſtanding, if there be in me iniquity, ſlay me thy ſelf; for why ſhouldſt thou bring me to thy father?

9 And Jonathan ſaid, Far be it from thee: for if I knew certainly: that evil were determined by my father to come upon thee, then would not I tell it thee?

10 Then ſaid David to Jonathan, Who ſhall tell me? or what if thy father anſwer thee roughly?

11 ¶ And Jonathan ſaid unto David, Come, and let us go out into the field.

And

And they went out both of them into the field.

12 And Jonathan ſaid unto David, O LORD God of Iſrael, when I have ſounded my father, about to morrow any time, or the third day, and behold, if there be good toward David, and I then ſend not unto thee, and ſhew it thee?

13 The LORD do ſo and much more to Jonathan: but if it pleaſe my father to do thee evil, then I will ſhew it thee, and ſend thee away, that thou mayſt go in peace: and the LORD be with thee, as he hath been with my father.

14 And thou ſhalt not only, while yet I live, ſhew me the kindneſs of the LORD, that I die not.

15 But alſo thou ſhalt not cut off thy kindneſs from my houſe for ever: no not when the LORD hath cut off the enemies of David, every one from the face of the earth.

16 So Jonathan made a covenant with the houſe of David, ſaying, Let the LORD even require it at the hand of Davids enemies.

17 And Jonathan cauſed David to ſwear again, becauſe he loved him: for he loved him as he loved his own ſoul.

18 Then Jonathan ſaid to David, To morrow is the new moon: and thou ſhalt be miſſed, becauſe thy ſeat will be empty.

19 And when thou haſt ſtayed three days, then thou ſhalt go down quickly, and come to the place where thou didſt hide thy ſelf, when the buſineſs was in hand, and ſhalt remain by the ſtone Ezel.

20 And I will ſhoot three arrows on the ſide thereof, as though I ſhot at a mark.

21 And behold, I will ſend a lad, ſaying, Go, find out the arrows. If I expreſly ſay unto the lad, Behold, the arrows are on this ſide of thee, take them; then come thou: for there is peace to thee, and no hurt; as the LORD liveth.

22 But if I ſay thus unto the young man, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee: go thy way, for the LORD hath ſent thee away.

23 And as touching the matter which thou and I have ſpoken of, behold, the LORD be between thee and me for ever.

24 ¶ So David hid himſelf in the field: and when the new-moon was come, the king ſat him down to eat meat.

25 And the king ſat upon his ſeat, as at other times, even upon a ſeat by the wall: and Jonathan aroſe, and Abner ſet by Sauls ſide, and Davids place was empty.

26 Nevertheleſs, Saul ſpake not any thing that day: for he thought, Some thing hath befallen him, he is not clean; ſurely he is not clean.

27 And it came to paſs on the morrow, which was the ſecond day of the month, that Davids place was empty: and Saul ſaid unto Jonathan his ſon, Wherefore cometh not the ſon of Jeſſe to meat, neither yeſterday nor to day?

28 And Jonathan anſwered Saul, David earneſtly asked leave of me, to go to Beth-lehem:

29 And he ſaid, Let me go, I pray thee, for our family hath a ſacrifice in the city, and my brother, he hath commanded me to be there; and now if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and ſee my brethren: Therefore he cometh not unto the kings table.

30 Then Sauls anger was kindled againſt Jonathan, and he ſaid unto him, Thou ſon of the perverſe rebellious woman, do not I know that thou haſt choſen the ſon of Jeſſe to thine own confuſion, and unto the confuſion of thy mothers nakedneſs?

31 For as long as the ſon of Jeſſe liveth upon the ground, thou ſhalt not be eſtabliſhed, nor thy kingdom: wherefore now ſend and fetch him unto me, for he ſhall ſurely die.

32 And Jonathan anſwered Saul his father, and ſaid unto him, Wherefore ſhall he be ſlain? what hath he done?

33 And Saul caſt a javelin at him to ſmite him: whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to ſlay David.

34 So Jonathan aroſe from the table in fierce anger, and did eat no meat the ſecond day of the month: for he was grieved for David, becauſe his father had done him ſhame.

35 ¶ And it came to paſs in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field, at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him.

36 And he ſaid unto his lad, Run, find out now the arrows which I ſhoot. And as the lad ran, he ſhot an arrow beyond him.

37 And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had ſhot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and ſaid, Is not the arrow beyond thee?

38 And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make ſpeed, haſte, ſtay not. And Jonathans lad gathered up the arrows, and came to his maſter.

39 But the lad knew not any thing: only Jonathan and David knew the matter.

40 And Jonathan gave his artillery unto his lad, and ſaid unto him, Go, carry them to the city.

41 ¶ And aſſoon as the lad was gone, David aroſe out of a place toward the ſouth, and fell on his face to the ground, and bowed himſelf three times: and they kiſſed one another, and wept one with another, until David exceeded.

42 And Jonathan ſaid to David, Go in peace, foraſmuch as we have ſworn both of us in the name of the LORD, ſaying, The LORD be between me and thee, and between my ſeed and thy ſeed for ever. And he aroſe and departed: and Jonathan went into the city.

Ver. 1. And David fled from Naioth, in Ramah, and came and ſaid before Jonathan.] By Saul's being thrown into a trance (mentioned the verſe foregoing) God's Providence gave David time to eſcape; and he went from thence to Gibeah, where Jonathan was.

—— What have I done? what is mine iniquity? and what is my ſin before thy father, that he ſeeketh my life?] Such violent and unwearied perſecution muſt ariſe from ſome extraordinary cauſe or other, which he deſires to know; for he could not accuſe himſelf of any fault, which ſhould imbitter Saul againſt him.

Ver. 2. And he ſaid unto him, God forbid; thou ſhalt not die.] He would have him think there was no ſuch danger as he ſuſpected.

——— Behold, my father will do nothing either great or ſmall, but that he will ſhew it me: and why ſhould my father hide this thing from me? it is not ſo.] Theſe words ſignify that Jonathan knew nothing of his father's deſign; and that Saul had ſent the meſſengers without his privity, to ſeize David. Yet it is ſtrange he ſhould not know of his ſending to his houſe to apprehend him. Therefore ſome think Jonathan, out of dutiful affection to his father, diſſembled the matter; and would not have David think him ſo very wicked as he was.

Ver. 3. And David ſware moreover, and ſaid, Thy father certainly knoweth that I have found grace in thine eyes; and he ſaith, Let not Jonathan know this, leſt he be grieved.] He was willing to believe that Saul might conceal his intentions from Jonathan, for the reaſon here mentioned.

——— But truly as the Lord liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, there is but a ſtep between me and death.] But by a moſt ſolemn oath, he endeavours to perſuade him, that he was in extreme danger of loſing his life.

Ver. 4. Then ſaid Jonathan unto David, whatſoever thy ſoul deſireth, I will even do it for thee.] Both to find out Saul's intentions, and to ſave David's life.

Ver. 5. And David ſaid unto Jonathan, Behold to morrow is the new moon, and I ſhould not fail to ſit with the king at meat.] There were ſolemn ſacrifices every new moon, and then a feaſt upon them. And David being one of the king's family, by marrying his daughter, uſed to eat with him at theſe feſtival times; and he thought it poſſible that Saul, who lately purſued him in a fit of rage, when the evil ſpirit was upon him, might now be mitigated by the ſpirit of God which came upon him at Naioth; and ſo might enquire after him, and receive him into favour again, as he had formerly done. But he durſt not truſt to this opinion, till he had tried his mind and affection to him, after the manner here propoſed.

—— But let me go, that I may hide myſelf in the field.] He deſires to retire to his father's houſe, and the field thereabouts, with which he was well acquainted.

—— Unto the third day of even.] That is, till the next day but one after the new moon, as appears from ver. 27, 35.

Ver. 6. If thy father at all miſs me, then ſay, David earneſtly asked leave of me, that he might run to Beth-lehem his city; for there is a yearly ſacrifice there for all the family.] It is likely this was a cuſtom among pious families to meet together once a year, and praiſe God for his mercies toward them all.

Ver. 7. If he ſay thus, it is well; thy ſervant ſhall have peace: but if he be very wroth, then be ſure that evil is determined by him.] If he approved of Jonathan's licence, then David might hope he was pacified; but if he ſtill continued in his rage, the ſon of Jeſſe might reaſonably conclude that his deſtruction was decreed, and that his only expedient for eluding the implacable rage of Saul, would be to make himſelf a voluntary exile from his native country.

Ver. 8. Therefore thou ſhalt deal kindly with thy ſervant.] In giving him a faithful account how he found his father diſpoſed toward him.

—— For thou haſt brought thy ſervant into a covenant of the Lord with thee.] It was Jonathan's motion, that they ſhould make a ſolemn covenant of mutual friendſhip before God, who is the avenger of all falſeneſs.

——— Notwithſtanding, if there be in me iniquity, ſlay me thy ſelf; for why ſhouldſt thou bring me to thy father?] Let me die by thy hand, I intreat thee, if thou canſt charge me with any iniquitous and diſhonourable conduct, but do not deliver me up to thy father, who is too much prejudiced againſt me to make an impartial ſcrutiny into my behaviour.

Ver. 9. And Jonathan ſaid, Far be it from thee: for if I knew certainly, that evil were determined by my father to come upon thee, then would not I tell it thee?] He diſclaims all thoughts, either of killing David himſelf, or permitting him to fall into the hands of Saul if he could poſſibly prevent it. For who could imagine a man ſo ſolemnly engaged, and who had already ſhewn himſelf ſuch a faithful friend, would not diſcover any deſign he knew was formed againſt David?

Ver. 10. Then David ſaid to Jonathan, who ſhall tell me?] He deſired to know who ſhould bring him intelligence of the true ſtate of affairs.

—— Or what if thy father anſwer thee roughly?] And not ſuffer thee to come to me thy ſelf.

Ver. 11. And Jonathan ſaid unto David, Come, and let us go out into the field. And they went out both of them into the field.] To concert proper meaſures for the management of this affair.

Ver. 12. And Jonathan ſaid unto David, O Lord God of Iſrael, when I have ſounded my father, about to-morrow any time, or the third day, and behold, if there be good toward David, and I then ſend not unto thee, and ſhew it thee.] The firſt words ſeem to be an exclamation; and the reſt, as if he had ſaid; ſhall I, who love thee ſo much, be thought capable of breaking my word with thee? All theſe verſes are full of paſſion, and the words are broken, and vehement, like the language of a perſon whoſe mind is agitated by a generous anxiety for the welfare of one he loves.

Ver. 13. The Lord do ſo and much more to Jonathan: but if it pleaſe my father to do thee evil, then I will ſhew it thee, and ſend thee away; that thou mayſt go in peace: and the Lord be with thee, as he hath been with my father.] In this caſe he adviſeth him to get away, and preſerve himſelf as well as he could; praying God to render him as ſucceſsful as Saul himſelf had been on other occaſions.

Ver. 14. And thou ſhalt not only, while yet I live, ſhew me the kindneſs of the Lord.] The kindneſs promiſed me before the Lord, or the greateſt kindneſs. The words in the Hebrew run plainly thus, and wilt thou not, if I be then alive,, viz. when God had advanced David to the throne, wilt thou not ſhew me the loving kindneſs of the Lord? He made no doubt, but rather ſtrongly affirmed his belief of it.

—— That

——— That I die not.] After the manner of those kings, whose practice it was to cut off the children of their predecessors.

Ver. 15. But also thou shalt not cut off thy kindness from my house for ever.] The covenant they had made was not merely personal, but extended to their posterity.

——— No not when the Lord hath cut off the enemies of David, every one from the face of the earth.] When he had the greatest power, and none to oppose his will.

Ver. 16. So Jonathan made a covenant with the house of David, saying, Let the Lord even require it at the hand of David's enemies.] They had made a league of personal friendship, a little after the slaughter of Goliath: And now they make a friendship between their families, and Jonathan wished that God would requite it, if any of his family proved David's enemies. This he renewed afterward, and added farther articles to the league, that Jonathan should be next to himself, xxiii. 18.

Ver. 17. And Jonathan caused David to swear again, because he loved him.] Or, he made him swear again by the love he bare to him.

——— For he loved him as he loved his own soul.] The greatness of his affection for David made him think he could never do enough to secure his friendship to all generations.

Ver. 18. Then Jonathan said to David, To-morrow is the new moon; and thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be empty.] That is, the place where it was usual for him to sit with Saul at table.

Ver. 19. And when thou hast stayed three days, then thou shalt go down quickly.] It is commonly interpreted of staying so long with his kindred at Beth-lehem, or some other place of retirement. But in the Hebrew the words are, thou shalt three times (or three days) go down to a very low place: And the meaning seems to be, that if Jonathan did not come the first day, he should take it for granted he knew nothing, and come again the second; and if he brought him no news, then he should come the third.

——— And come to the place where thou didst hide thy self, when the business was in hand,] When they were discoursing of this very matter, how to discover Saul's affection toward David: Or, when he transacted David's business with his father, and interceded so effectually for him, that Saul promised not to kill him.

——— And shalt remain by the stone Ezel.] It is thought to be a stone that shewed men their way, where several roads met; because the word imports going or travelling.

Ver. 20. And I will shoot three arrows on the side thereof, as tho' I shot at a mark.] For when he came, there might be passengers going to and fro; which would deprive them of the privacy they desired. Therefore this seems to have been given as a sign that the coast was clear.

Ver. 21. And behold, I will send a lad, saying, Go find out the arrows. If I expressly say unto the lad, Behold, the arrows are on this side of thee, take them; then come thou: for there is peace to thee, and no hurt, as the Lord liveth.] So that he might securely appear, and venture into the presence of Saul.

Ver. 22. But if I say thus unto the young man, Behold, the arrows are beyond thee: go thy way, for the Lord hath sent thee away.] He would not have him venture to discover himself; but look upon this as a sign that God would not have him appear at court.

Ver. 23. And as touching the matter which thou and I have spoken of, behold, the Lord be between me and thee for ever.] As a witness, and as an avenger, if we keep not the covenant we have made of perpetual friendship.

Ver. 24. So David hid himself in the field: and when the new moon was come, the king sat him down to eat meat.] David did not immediately hide himself in the field, but when the time came that he had appointed; for he first went to Beth-lehem, ver. 6, 28.

Ver. 25. And the king sat upon his seat, as at other times, even upon a seat by the wall.] The Israelites sat at meat (as did the Greeks and Romans in after times) in an half round, which they called Sigma, from the ancient figure of that letter, which was thus, C. Now the middle place, in this form of sitting, was most honourable among the Israelites, as Mr. Thorndike gathers from this very passage. Upon which R. Solomon saith, "Saul sat "in the head of the couch next the wall." For supposing them to sit in a round, or half circle, as the manner always was, we must needs conceive, that the back or middle of this half circle must be toward the wall, for all conveniencies. See his Religious Assemblies, p. 62. It may be also here observed, that the custom of lying along, leaning on their elbows, was not yet introduced, in these ancient times, but they sat at meat as we do.

——— And Jonathan arose.] When his father came into the room: And after Saul had taken his place, the young prince perhaps sat on his right hand.

——— And Abner sat by Saul's side,] On his left hand, we suppose, being his cousin, and general of his army.

And David's place was empty.] Which, it is probable, was next to Abner's.

Ver. 26. Nevertheless, Saul spake not any thing that day.] Made no enquiry after David.

Ver. 27. And it came to pass on the morrow, which was the second day of the month, that David's place was empty: and Saul said unto Jonathan his son, wherefore cometh not the son of Jesse.] His calling him the son of Jesse argued both scorn and displeasure against him.

——— To meat, neither yesterday nor to day?] By this it appears, that the Jews anciently observed two days, in the beginning of every month with festival joy. The reason was, because the new moon being proclaimed according to its appearance, and it appearing unequally, sometimes in the afternoon, sometimes in the evening, and sometimes at midnight; therefore they observed two days, as Scaliger and others have intimated. And they who were not clean the first day, might observe the second; for that sort of uncleanness here spoken of, lasted but one day.

Ver. 28. And Jonathan answered Saul, David earnestly asked leave of me to go to Beth-lehem.] Which he, being next to the king, had power, we suppose, to grant; as appears, from Saul's demanding of Jonathan an account what was become of him.

Ver. 29. And he said, Let me go, I pray thee, for our family hath a sacrifice in the city, and my brother, he hath commanded me to be there.] The eldest brother let all the rest know that their company was expected.

——— And now if I have found favour in thine eyes, let me get away, I pray thee, and see my brethren: Therefore he cometh not unto the king's table.] He expresses in many words, the importunity of David for leave to go and visit his relations, which he thought might make the king not take it ill, that he had granted him that permission.

Ver. 30. Then Saul's anger was kindled against Jonathan, and he said unto him, Thou son of the perverse rebellious woman.] Or, as it is in the Hebrew, "Thou son of "perverse rebellion," that is, a very perverse rebel.

——— Do not I know that thou hast chosen the son of Jesse to thine own confusion.] Made him his friend, to his utter undoing.

——— And unto the confusion of thy mother's nakedness?] For the world would think that he was none of his son, because he had so strong an affection for the man whom Saul hated extremely.

Ver. 31. For as long as the son of Jesse liveth upon the ground, thou shalt not be established, nor thy kingdom.] He was fully satisfied, that David, if he lived, would be king of Israel. Which if he knew by Samuel's anointing him, it was madness to imagine that he should be able to overthrow the counsel of God.

——— Wherefore now send and fetch him unto me, for he shall surely die.] He could not expect to be obeyed, since his son loved him so much: But his fury made him lay this command upon him.

Ver. 32. And Jonathan answered Saul his father, and said unto him, Wherefore shall he be slain, what hath he done?] He declines his command, by desiring to know wherein the guilt of David consisted.

Ver. 33. And Saul cast a javelin at him to smite him.] It is not said, as it is of David, chap. xix. 10. "to smite "him to the wall;" and therefore some think he intended only to wound him, not to kill him. But the word smite, in Scripture, commonly signifies, to kill, and there is no reason for any other construction here; Saul's fury being so ſo great, that he was regardleſs of what he did. One would imagine he made uſe of a javelin or lance, inſtead of a ſcepter; for it was always ready at hand.

——Whereby Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to ſlay David.] That it was his unalterable reſolution; which is implied in that phraſe, ver. 31. "he "is the ſon of death," as Conſtantius L'Empereur obſerves upon Bava Kama, p. 90.

Ver. 34 So Jonathan aroſe from the table in fierce anger, and did eat no meat the ſecond day of the month: for he was grieved for David, becauſe his father had done him ſhame.] Here are two reaſons why he faſted; firſt, becauſe he was extremely afflicted for David; and ſecondly, Saul had diſgraced Jonathan by his opprobrious language, and by throwing a javelin at him; for ſo the words run clearly in the Hebrew, "for he was grieved for David, "and becauſe, &c. the copulative and being wanting, as it is in many other places.

Ver. 35. And it came to paſs in the morning.] Of the third day.

——That Jonathan went out into the field at the time appointed with David, and a little lad with him.] According to their agreement, ver. 20, 21.

Ver. 36. And he ſaid unto his lad, Run, find out now the arrow which I ſhoot. And as the lad ran, he ſhot an arrow beyond him.] Which was the ſign given to David, of Saul's ill intentions, ver. 22.

Ver. 37. And when the lad was come to the place of the arrow which Jonathan had ſhot, Jonathan cried after the lad, and ſaid, Is not the arrow beyond thee?] He cried ſo loud, we ſuppoſe, that David might hear what he ſaid.

Ver. 38. And Jonathan cried after the lad, Make ſpeed, haſte, ſtay not.] So deſirous he was to be alone with David.

Ver. 39. But the lad knew not any thing: only Jonathan and David knew the matter.] The meaning of this proceeding was a ſecret to all but Jonathan and David.

Ver. 40. And Jonathan gave his artillery unto his lad, and ſaid unto him, Go, carry them to the city.] That he might be left alone with David.

Ver. 41. And aſſoon as the lad was gone, David aroſe out of a place toward the ſouth.] On the ſouth of the ſtone Ezel; on the north ſide of which Jonathan ſhot his arrows, that the lad might not chance to ſtumble upon David.

——And fell on his face to the ground, and bowed himſelf three times.] After three bows, he fell on his face; out of reverence to him, as the king's ſon, and his excellent friend. Arrianus ſaith, (lib. 4.) that this proſtration was introduced by Cyrus; but he is confuted by this action of David, which ſhews it to have been a far more ancient indication of reſpect.

——And they kiſſed one another, and wept one with another, until David exceeded.] As he was now to become an exile from his friend, from his wife, from his kindred, and the people of God, and from all ſacred ſolemnities, the grief of David might naturally exceed that of Jonathan.

Ver. 42. And Jonathan ſaid to David, Go in peace, foraſmuch as we have ſworn both of us, in the name of the Lord, ſaying, The Lord be between me and thee, and between my ſeed and thy ſeed for ever.] As much as to ſay, Doubt not that I will keep my covenant faithfully with thee; as I have no diſtruſt of thy perpetual ſtedfaſtneſs in it, when I am dead: and this muſt be our ſatisfaction, in this ſorrowful ſeparation.

——And he aroſe and departed.] That is, David left Jonathan.

——And Jonathan went into the city.] We ſuppoſe their diſcourſe continued but a ſhort time, for fear of being diſcovered.

CHAP. XXI.

1 David at Nob, obtaineth of Ahimelech hallowed bread. 7 Doeg was preſent. 8 David taketh Goliaths ſword. 10 David at Gath feigneth himſelf mad.

THEN came David to Nob to Ahimelech the prieſt: and Ahimelech was afraid at the meeting of David, and 1 ſaid unto him, Why art thou alone, and no man with thee?

2 And David ſaid unto Ahimelech the prieſt, The king hath commanded me a buſineſs, and hath ſaid unto me, Let no man know any thing of the buſineſs whereabout I ſend thee, and what I have commanded thee: and I have appointed my ſervants to ſuch and ſuch a place.

3 Now therefore what is under thine hand? give me five loaves of bread in mine hand, or what there is preſent.

4 And the prieſt anſwered David, and ſaid, There is no common bread under mine hand, but there is hallowed bread; if the young men have kept themſelves at leaſt from women.

5 And David anſwered the prieſt, and ſaid unto him, Of a truth, women have been kept from us about theſe three days, ſince I came out, and the veſſels of the young men are holy, and the bread is in a manner common, yea, though it were ſanctified this day in the veſſel.

6 So the prieſt gave him hallowed bread; for there was no bread there, but the ſhew-bread that was taken from before the LORD, to put hot bread in the day when it was taken away.

7 Now a certain man of the ſervants of Saul, was there that day detained before the LORD; and his name was Doeg an Edomite, the chiefeſt of the herd-men that belonged to Saul.

8 ¶ And David ſaid unto Ahimelech, And is there not here under thine hand ſpear or ſword? for I have neither brought my ſword nor my weapons with me, becauſe the kings buſineſs required haſte.

9 And the prieſt ſaid, The ſword of Goliath the Philiſtine, whom thou ſleweſt in the valley of Elah, behold, it is here wrapt in a cloth behind the ephod: if thou wilt take that, take it: for there is no other ſave that, here. And David ſaid, There is none like that, give it me.

10 ¶ And David aroſe, and fled that day for fear of Saul, and went to Achiſh the king of Gath.

11 And the ſervants of Achiſh ſaid unto him, Is not this David the king of the land? did they not ſing one to another of him in dances, ſaying, Saul hath ſlain his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands?

12 And David laid up these words in his heart, and was sore afraid of Achish the king of Gath.

13 And he changed his behaviour before them, and feigned himself mad in their hands, and scrabbled on the doors of the gate, and let his spittle fall down upon his beard.

14 Then said Achish unto his servants, Lo, you see the man is mad: wherefore then have ye brought him to me?

15 Have I need of mad-men, that ye have brought this fellow to play the mad-man in my presence? shall this fellow come into my house?

——Then came David to Nob.] That this was a sacerdotal city is evident from chap. xxii. 19. and also from Nehem. ii. 32. where we find it not only reckoned among the Levitical cities, but also among those cities which belonged to the tribe of Benjamin. It is not enumerated among the cities that were first assigned to the priests, but it seems to have been added afterward, and that only occasionally, while the ark was at Kirjath-jearim. St. Jerom says, that in his time it was entirely destroyed, and that the ruins of it might be seen not far from Diospolis.

——Unto Ahimelech the priest.] He is no where called the high-priest, but always Ahimelech the priest, or simply, the priest, ver. 4, 5, 6, 9. Yet as he was the son of Ahitub, chap. xxii. 9, 11. who was the son of Phinehas, the son of Eli, he is commonly supposed to have been the brother of Ahiah, mentioned, chap. xiv. 3. and he being dead, Ahimelech is reckoned his successor in the high-priesthood.

——And Ahimelech was afraid at the meeting of David.] He perhaps had heard some account of the king's displeasure against him, and might therefore imagine it unsafe to afford him a favourable reception.

——And said unto him, Why art thou alone? &c.] He could not but be sensible, that it was very unusual for a man of David's quality to travel without attendants. David, indeed, had some persons with him, as appears by the fourth verse, and likewise from the words of our blessed Saviour, in the second chapter of St. Mark, where he mentions "David and those that were with him." But he had no such persons as used to be his guard; and he left those who were with him at some distance, that they might not be seen by Ahimelech.

Ver. 2. And David said unto Ahimelech the priest, The king hath commanded me a business, &c.] David was obliged to dispel the surprise the priest was in at his unexpected and solitary arrival, with a pretence of being sent by the king upon some private business of importance, which was not to be communicated to any but those who were immediately concerned in it. We, however, are not to consider this as any precedent to us for uttering untruths, but should rather deplore the wickedness of the world, which imposes on excellent men a necessity of having recourse to some disagreeable falsehood, for the preservation of their lives, which would otherwise become the prey of impious persons.

——And I have appointed my servants to such and such a place.] He here acknowledges that he had servants with him, who were then disposed into several places, that the king's business might be the better concealed.

Ver. 3. Now therefore what is under thine hand? give me five loaves of bread in mine hand, or what there is present.] David perhaps had observed there, Doeg the Edomite, who is mentioned in the seventh verse, and as that person was one of Saul's great officers, David might naturally imagine that he should be betrayed by that man, if he made any long stay. He therefore desired Ahimelech to furnish some refreshment for himself, and the young men that were with him, intimating, as may well be supposed, that his business was very urgent.

Ver. 4. And the priest answered David, and said, There is no common bread under mine hand, but there is hallowed bread: if the young men have kept themselves at least from women.] It was an ancient custom among other nations, for the priests to abstain from a lawful commerce with women, before they entered upon the performance of their office; as Porphyry informs us, (lib. 4. Περὶ Ἀποχῆς, sect. 7.) Ahimelech therefore requires this of David's companions, that as they were to eat of the holy bread, which was the peculiar food of the priests, they should eat it with the same purity, which was enjoined the priests.

Ver. 5. And David answered the priest, and said, Of a truth, women have been kept from us these three days, &c.] These were as many days as God himself required for sanctifying the people, when he appeared to Moses on mount Sinai, at the promulgation of the law, Exod. xix. 15.

——And the vessels of the young men.] That is, their bodies, for so the Hebrew word keli signifies in this place, as σκεῦος doth in 1 Tim. iv. 4.

——Are holy.] That is, separated from women.

——And the bread is in a manner common.] Considering the time, and our necessity, this bread may be required, in a manner, like common bread, and it is used by others as such. For tho', while it is to stand before the Lord, it be so holy, that the priest himself is not permitted to eat it, yet it is afterward eaten by the priest, and his whole family, as their common food; and so it may by us in our present circumstances.

——Yea, tho' it were sanctified this day in the vessel.] The marginal translation is more plain, "especially when "there was other bread that day sanctified in the vessel." By which David means, that new bread was placed upon the table of the Lord, in consequence of which, they were in no danger of committing any prophanation by eating the old.

Ver. 6. So the priest gave him hallowed bread; for there was no bread there but the shew-bread that was taken from before the Lord, to put hot bread in the day when it was taken away.] In this neither Ahimelech, nor David, committed any sin, for invincible necessity dispensed with all those ritual laws, as the Jews themselves acknowledge; particularly R. Levi, who declares, that in a great famine they might eat the head of an ass, which was counted an unclean creature. This likewise gave occasion to the following maxim among the Jews, "The danger of death "banishes the sabbath." They likewise justify this proceeding by the words of the law, Levit. xviii. 5. He shall live in them, not, He shall die in them; from whence they conclude, that whenever life happens to be in danger, such laws were not to be observed. Procopius Gazæus likewise observes, that wise men among the ancient people of God, had less regard to those bodily precepts of the law; and he adds, that Abiathar, in permitting David and his men to eat of the pontifical bread, plus quam vulgus sapiebat, Was wiser than the vulgar class of people. This author calls the priest, who granted this indulgence, Abiathar, not Ahimelech; and so doth our blessed Saviour, Mark ii. 26. Though it is commonly thought that he was only the Sagan, as the Jews in latter times call him, who was the high priests vicar; and upon that account was a secondary high priest. And beside this, there is no incongruity in saying, That was done in the days of Abiathar the priest, (as our Saviour speaks) which was done in Abiathar's days, tho' somewhat before he came to be high priest.

Ver. 7. Now a certain man of the servants of Saul, who was there that day, detained before the Lord.] It is not to be supposed, that he was detained there by any compulsion from others; but he might fix his abode there for that day, either because it was the sabbath, on which he might not proceed on his journey; or by some other business of importance, such as the discharge of a vow, or his desire to beg direction from God in some affair of moment.

——And his name was Doeg an Edomite, the chiefest of the herdmen that belonged to Saul.] The Hebrew word abir, signifies a potent man, or prince; and is sometimes attributed to God himself. The proper import of it in this place is, that Doeg was set over all the herdsmen, as their inspector or governor.

The ſight of this man was ſufficient to make David think he could not be long ſafe in that place. He therefore repreſented the urgency of his buſineſs to Ahimelech, and asked him whether he could not furniſh him with a ſword or ſpear, and was anſwered, that there was no weapon there but the ſword of Goliath. David deſired he might have that, and, when the prieſt had complied with his requeſt, he departed the ſame day from thence, and fled to Achiſh, the king of Gath, ver. 10. His condition was indeed deplorable, ſince he was obliged to fly for protection to thoſe who were his inveterate enemies: For Gath was the city of Goliath, whom David had ſo lately ſlain, and with whoſe ſword he was now armed. He might poſſibly think he ſhould not be known, or he knew Achiſh to be a prince of great humanity. And as David was now in diſgrace with Saul, it was natural for him to imagine the Philiſtines would believe him to be Sauls enemy, and that there would be no difficulty to engage him to declare in their favour againſt that prince. Thus Themiſtocles, when he was baniſhed from his own country, fled firſt to Admetus, king of the Moloſſians, with whom he had been at enmity, and then to the king of Perſia.

Ver. 11. And the ſervants of Achiſh ſaid unto him, Is not this David the king of the land?] They call him king, either more generally for the governor; as that word is uſed, Deut. xxxiii. 5. that is, for the moſt eminent captain and commander, and in ſome meaſure the king of the Iſraelitiſh armies: Or rather more ſpecially, the king, namely, the king elect: For, by this time, the fame of Saul's rejection, and David's deſtination to the kingdom, was propagated among the Iſraelites, and from them, in all probability, to the Philiſtines.

——Did they not ſing to one another of him in dances, ſaying, Saul hath ſlain his thouſands, and David his ten thouſands?] It appears from hence, that they had good intelligence of what was tranſacted in the land of Iſrael; and might conſequently know, that Samuel had anointed David to be their king. The ſervants of Achiſh therefore thought this a proper opportunity for their king to ſecure ſo formidable a foe, who was now in his power, and deſtitute of all aid.

David was ſenſible of his own danger, and reſolved, if poſſible, to change the hatred of Achiſh and his ſubjects, either into pity or contempt. The ſtratagem to which he had recourſe on this occaſion, ſucceeded according to his wiſh, and he counterfeited the actions of an idiot ſo well, that Achiſh believing him to be what he appeared, were glad to be rid of him, and David, on his part, was as deſirous of that opportunity of eſcaping from them.

CHAP. XXII.

1 Companies reſort unto David at Adullam. 3 At Mizpeh he commendeth his parents unto the king of Moab. 5 Admoniſhed by Gad, he cometh to Hareth. 6 Saul going to purſue him, complaineth of his ſervants unfaithfulneſs. 9 Doeg accuſeth Ahimelech. 11 Saul commandeth to kill the prieſts. 17 The footmen refuſing, Doeg executeth it. 20 Abiathar eſcaping, bringeth David the news.

DAVID therefore departed thence, and eſcaped to the cave Adullam: and when his brethren, and all his fathers houſe heard it, they went down thither to him.

2 And every one that was in diſtreſs, and every one that was in debt, and every one that was diſcontented, gathered themſelves unto him, and he became a captain over them: and there were with him about four hundred men.

3 ¶ And David went thence to Mizpeh of Moab: and he ſaid unto the king of Moab, Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, come forth, and be with you, till I know what God will do for me.

4 And he brought them before the king of Moab: and they dwelt with him all the while that David was in the hold.

5 ¶ And the prophet Gad ſaid unto David, Abide not in the hold, depart, and get thee into the land of Judah. Then David departed, and came into the foreſt of Hareth.

6 ¶ When Saul heard that David was diſcovered, and the men that were with him (now Saul abode in Gibeah under a tree in Ramah, having his ſpear in his hand, and all his ſervants were ſtanding about him)

7 Then Saul ſaid unto his ſervants that ſtood about him, Hear now, ye Benjamites, Will the ſon of Jeſſe give every one of you fields and vineyards, and make you all captains of thouſands, and captains of hundreds:

8 That all of you have conſpired againſt me, and there is none that ſheweth me that my ſon hath made a league with the ſon of Jeſſe, and there is none of you that is ſorry for me, or ſheweth unto me that my ſon hath ſtirred up my ſervant againſt me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

9 ¶ Then anſwered Doeg the Edomite (which was ſet over the ſervants of Saul) and ſaid, I ſaw the ſon of Jeſſe coming to Nob, to Ahimelech the ſon of Ahitub.

10 And he enquired of the LORD for him: and gave him victuals, and gave him the ſword of Goliath the Philiſtine.

11 Then the king ſent to call Ahimelech the prieſt, the ſon of Ahitub, and all his fathers houſe, the prieſts that were in Nob: and they came all of them to the king.

12 And Saul ſaid, Hear now, thou ſon of Ahitub: and he anſwered, Here I am, my lord.

13 And Saul ſaid unto him, Why have ye conſpired againſt me, thou and the ſon of Jeſſe, in that thou haſt given him bread and a ſword, and haſt enquired of God for him, that he ſhould riſe againſt me, to lie in wait, as at this day?

14 Then Ahimelech anſwered the king, and ſaid, And who is ſo faithful among all thy ſervants, as David, which is the kings ſon-in-law, and goeth at thy bidding, and is honourable in thine houſe?

15 Did I then begin to enquire of God for him? be it far from me: let not the king impute any thing unto his ſervant, nor to all the houſe of my father: for thy ſervant knew nothing of all this, leſs or more.

16 And the king ſaid, Thou ſhalt ſurely die, Ahimelech, thou, and all thy fathers houſe.

17 ¶ And the king ſaid unto the footmen that ſtood about him, Turn and ſlay the prieſts of the LORD; becauſe their hand alſo is with David, and becauſe they knew when he fled, and did not ſhew it to me. But the ſervants of the king would not put forth their hand to fall upon the prieſts of the LORD.

18 And the king ſaid to Doeg, Turn thou and fall upon the prieſts. And Doeg the Edomite turned, and he fell upon the prieſts, and ſlew on that day fourſcore and five perſons, that did wear a linen ephod.

19 And Nob, the city of the prieſts, ſmote he with the edge of the ſword, both men and women, children and ſucklings, and oxen, and aſſes, and ſheep, with the edge of the ſword.

20 ¶ And one of the ſons of Ahimelech the ſon of Ahitub, named Abiathar, eſcaped and fled after David.

21 And Abiathar ſhewed David, that Saul had ſlain the LORDS prieſts.

22 And David ſaid unto Abiathar, I knew it that day, when Doeg the Edomite was there, that he would ſurely tell Saul: I have occaſioned the death of all the perſons of thy fathers houſe.

23 Abide thou with me, fear not: for he that ſeeketh my life, ſeeketh thy life: but with me thou ſhalt be in ſafeguard.

Ver. 1. David therefore departed thence, and eſcaped to the cave Adullam.] This cave was in the neighbourhood of the city of Adullam, which belonged to the tribe of Judah, and was ſituated in the ſouthern part of this tribe, toward the Dead-ſea. Euſebius ſays, that, in his time, it was a large town, ten miles from Eleutheropolis, eaſtward. Jerom likewiſe declares, that it was not a ſmall town in his days, and he places it at the diſtance of eleven miles from Eleutheropolis.

——And when his brethren, and all his fathers houſe heard it, they went down thither to him.] Partly to comfort and aſſiſt him in his misfortunes; partly to ſecure themſelves from the rage of Saul, which they knew to be barbarous and unrelenting, and were apprehenſive that he would extend it to the relations and friends of David; and partly, that they might ſhare with David in his honour and advancement; which they now believed was certain and near, tho' interrupted by ſome difficulties.

Ver. 2. And every one that was in diſtreſs.] Through want, or oppreſſion, or from any other cauſe.

——And every one that was in debt.] If it be aſked, How could David receive and countenance ſuch perſons, to the prejudice of their creditors? We anſwer, 1. David might be ignorant of their debts, and, in all probability, they concealed that circumſtance from him, and pretended other cauſes of their coming to him; as the protection of the innocent, and the defence of his juſt rights, &c 2. They might be, and probably were, poor inſolvent debtors, whom their creditors were obliged to ſpare and favour, Exod. xxii. 25. And tho' their perſons were with David, yet their effects, if they had any, were liable to the demands of their creditors. It was cuſtomary, among the ancient Gauls, for thoſe who were in debt, or oppreſſed, to betake themſelves to the ſervice of ſome great men; by whom, as they were maintained, ſo they devoted themſelves to live and die with them. Theſe perſons were called ſoldurii, and the men who reſorted to David, ſeem to have been ſuch as were determined to live and die with him.

——And every one that was diſcontented.] Or, bitter of ſoul, as it is in the Hebrew; that is, ſuch as were in a very afflicted and calamitous condition.

——Gathered themſelves unto him, and he became a captain over them.] They liſted themſelves under him as their commander; but tho' David was obliged to have recourſe to this expedient for his own defence and preſervation, yet he never countenanced any unjuſt and violent proceedings in theſe his adherents; but, on the contrary, inſtructed them in the practice of juſtice and honeſty, and obliged them to act conformably to thoſe principles, as appears from chap. xxv. 15. And he only employed them in his juſt defence.

Ver. 3. And David went thence to Mizpeh of Moab.] Mizpeh, or Maſphath, was a city in the tribe of Gad, and in the mountains of Galeed. 'Twas in this place that Laban and Jacob made a covenant together; and it is here called Mizpeh of Moab, becauſe it was conquered by the Moabites. Mizpeh, in general, ſignifies ſome elevated place, which commanded an extenſive proſpect, or an eminence, where a watch was kept.

——And he ſaid unto the king of Moab, Let my father and my mother, I pray thee, come forth, and be with you, till I know what God will do for me.] The enmity which ſubſiſted between Saul and this nation, might be David's inducement, when perſecuted by that prince, to ask the king of Moab's protection for his aged parents, till his affairs ſhould be in a better poſture. David might likewiſe think himſelf in ſome meaſure entitled to this favour, ſince he himſelf was deſcended from a Moabite, by the mother's ſide; and eſpecially if Ruth the Moabiteſs were of the Royal family, as the Jews imagine.

The king of Moab readily granted the requeſt of David, and not only protected his parents from all inſults, but treated them with a generous hoſpitality, all the time that David lay concealed in the cave of Adullam.

Ver. 5. And the prophet Gad ſaid unto David, Abide not in the hold, depart, and get thee into the land of Judah.] This prophet was bred up under Samuel, and as he knew that he had anointed David to be king, he reſolved to accompany him in his baniſhment. He is called, Davids ſeer, 2 Sam. xxiv. 11. probably, becauſe God had appointed him to aſſiſt this prince, and foretell what ſhould happen to him. He now adviſes David to get into the land of Judah, where he would have him publickly appear; as one who confided in the watchful providence of God, and in his own innocence, which had hitherto been untainted.

——Then David departed and came into the foreſt of Hareth.] This foreſt is not mentioned in any other paſſage of ſcripture, but it lay in the tribe of Judah, and probably not far from Keilah, of which we read, chapter xxiii. ver. 1.

Ver. 6. When Saul heard that David was diſcovered, and the men that were with him.] Saul was not ſo well beloved by his ſubjects as to have early intelligence of David's liſting men into his ſervice.

——(Now Saul abode in Gibeah, under a tree in Ramah.] Or, in an high place, as Ramah ſignifies. Otherwiſe the firſt words muſt be interpreted, near Gibeah, or in the territories of Gibeah.

——Having his ſpear in his hand.] By his ſpear, is to be underſtood his ſcepter, according to the language of thoſe times. Juſtin ſpeaking of the firſt times of the Romans, which were nearly coincident with the reign of Saul, declares, Per ea adhuc tempora, Reges haſtas pro diademate habebant, quas Græci ſceptra dixere, &c. lib. xliii.

xliii. cap. 3. "In thoſe days, kings hitherto had ſpears, "as enſigns of regal authority, which ſpears the Greeks "call ſcepters. For in the beginning of things, the an- "cients worſhipped ſpears for immortal gods. In memory "of which religion, ſpears are ſtill added to the images "of the gods." And thus the kings of Argos, as Pauſanias informs us in his Bœotica, called their ſcepters, ſpears.

——— And all his ſervants were ſtanding about him.] His uſual guards, and the principal officers of his court.

Ver. 7. Then Saul ſaid unto his ſervants that ſtood about him, Hear now, ye Benjamites.] You who are of my own tribe and kindred, from whom David intends to tranſlate the kingdom to another tribe. Saul ſpeaks with diſdain to them, becauſe he ſuſpected they had taken ſome clandeſtine meaſures in favour of David.

——— Will the ſon of Jeſſe give every one of you fields and vineyards, and make you all captains of thouſands, and captains of hundreds.] Will the ſon of Jeſſe, whoſe intereſt you eſpouſe in oppoſition to that of your lawful prince, have the generoſity and gratitude to enrich every individual among you? Will he diſtribute profits and preferments among you, and eſtabliſh you in the poſſeſſion of fruitful fields and vineyards, as I have done? Or, will he not rather prefer thoſe of his own tribe before you, who can have nothing to boaſt of to him, but your reaſonable conſpiracy againſt your ſovereign?

Ver. 8. That all of you have conſpired againſt me, and that there is none that ſheweth me that my ſon hath made a league with the ſon of Jeſſe, &c.?] This he ſuſpected, partly, from Jonathan's paſſionate love for David, which he had formerly declared without any reſerve, and from his late diſcontent and departure from court, and partly from David's appearing with four hundred men in arms, which Saul imagined he would never preſume to do, without ſome ſecret encouragement, and promiſe of aſſiſtance from Jonathan.

Ver. 9. Then anſwered Doeg the Edomite.] The reſt being ſilent, he undertook to inform the king who were falſe to him; or, perhaps, his officious forwardneſs, and his averſion to David, prevented all the reſt of his fellow ſervants who were then preſent.

——— And ſaid I ſaw the ſon of Jeſſe coming to Nob, to Ahimelech the ſon of Ahitub.] He ſpeaks as contemptibly of David, as his maſter had lately been wont to do; not vouchſafing to call him by his name; and he likewiſe repreſents him, as if he came to take advice of Ahimelech and lay his deſigns accordingly.

Ver. 10. And he enquired of the Lord for him.] This is not recorded by the Sacred Hiſtorian; and therefore ſome think, that Doeg, in order to ingratiate himſelf with Saul, invented this circumſtance; for it is certain that David chargeth him with the ſin of lying, Pſalm. lii. 3. Tho' it is not improbable, that he might be guilty of other untruths, which are not here expreſſed; and he undoubtedly was highly culpable for concealing part of the truth, which, in juſtice to Ahimelech, he ought to have declared in his vindication; namely, the artifice whereby David circumvented the good old man, who was made to believe that David was employed at that time in the king's buſineſs, which induced the hoſpitable prieſt to tender him all the aſſiſtance in his power.

——And gave him victuals, and gave him the ſword of Goliath the Philiſtine.] And very innocently, as Doeg well knew; but he had the baſeneſs to repreſent theſe as acts whereby Ahimelech abetted David in his conſpiracy. Theſe may poſſibly be the lies of which David accuſes him, ſince nothing could be more inconſiſtent with truth, than ſuch an odious repreſentation of Ahimelech's conduct.

Doeg ſo inflamed the king with theſe malicious inſinuations, that without allowing himſelf time to conſider how far Ahimelech might be unacquainted with the unhappy difference between David and his ſovereign, he ordered him and his kindred to be brought immediately to him; and after many bitter invectives againſt them, for confederating with his rebellious ſon-in-law, as he was pleaſed to repreſent him, he ſolemnly ſwore they ſhould all be put to death. Ahimelech endeavoured in vain to convince Saul, that they were all ignorant of David's having any ſiniſter deſign againſt him; and as his behaviour had always been ſo commendable and upright, they really believed he had been ſent by his ſovereign to tranſact ſome important affair. This juſt apology was altogether unavailing; for the exaſperated king would not credit the moſt ſolemn proteſtations that the prieſt could make; and therefore commanded his ſervants to murder Ahimelech and his whole family, together with all the other prieſts who were then preſent. But when he ſaw that his own people expreſſed an uncommon reluctancy to ſtain their hands with the innocent blood of ſo many helpleſs perſons, he ordered Doeg to perform that cruel office, and he immediately obeyed. Saul, not contented to ſee fourſcore and five innocent perſons butcher'd at his feet, ordered a detachment of ſoldiers to go and maſſacre all the inhabitants of Nob. This inhuman commiſſion was executed with ſuch barbarous ſpeed, that none but Abiathar, one of the ſons of the unfortunate Ahimelech, had an opportunity of eſcaping. Abiathar went immediately to David, and acquainted him with the diſmal tidings; upon which David replied, that this inſtance of Saul's barbarity was no more than what he expected, when he ſaw the Edomitiſh Doeg with Ahimelech. He then ſaid all he could to comfort this afflicted ſon, promiſing to be his ſafeguard, as long as he ſhould be able to defend his own life.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 David enquiring of the Lord by Abiathar, reſcueth Keilah. 7 God ſhewing him the coming of Saul, and the treachery of the Keilites, he eſcapeth from Keilah. 14 In Ziph Jonathan cometh and comforteth him. 19 The Ziphites diſcover him to Saul. 25 At Maon he is reſcued from Saul by the invaſion of the Philiſtines. 29 He dwelleth at En-gedi.

THEN they told David, ſaying, Behold, the Philiſtines fight againſt Keilah, and they rob the threſhing-floors.

2 Therefore David enquired of the LORD, ſaying, Shall I go and ſmite theſe Philiſtines? And the LORD ſaid unto David, Go, and ſmite the Philiſtines, and ſave Keilah.

3 And Davids men ſaid unto him, Behold, we be afraid here in Judah: how much more then if we come to Keilah againſt the armies of the Philiſtines?

4 Then David enquired of the LORD yet again. And the LORD anſwered him, and ſaid, Ariſe, go down to Keilah; for I will deliver the Philiſtines into thine hand.

5 So David and his men went to Keilah, and fought with the Philiſtines, and brought away their cattle, and ſmote them with a great ſlaughter: ſo David ſaved the inhabitants of Keilah.

6 And it came to paſs when Abiathar the ſon of Ahimelech fled to David to Keilah, that he came down with an ephod in his hand.

7 ¶ And it was told Saul that David was come to Keilah: and Saul ſaid, God hath delivered him into mine hand; for he is ſhut in, by entring into a town that hath gates and bars.

8 And

8 And Saul called all the people together to war, to go down to Keilah, to beſiege David and his men.

9 ¶ And David knew that Saul ſecretly practiſed miſchief againſt him; and he ſaid to Abiathar the prieſt, Bring hither the ephod.

10 Then ſaid David, O LORD God of Iſrael, thy ſervant hath certainly heard that Saul ſeeketh to come to Keilah, to deſtroy the city for my ſake.

11 Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? will Saul come down as thy ſervant hath heard? O LORD God of Iſrael, I beſeech thee, tell thy ſervant. And the LORD ſaid, He will come down.

12 Then ſaid David, Will the men of Keilah deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul? And the LORD ſaid, They will deliver thee up.

13 ¶ Then David and his men, which were about ſix hundred, aroſe and departed out of Keilah, and went whitherſoever they could go: and it was told Saul that David was eſcaped from Keilah, and he forbare to go forth.

14 And David abode in the wilderneſs in ſtrong holds, and remained in a mountain in the wilderneſs of Ziph: And Saul ſought him every day, but God delivered him not into his hand.

15 And David ſaw that Saul was come out to ſeek his life: and David was in the wilderneſs of Ziph, in a wood.

16 And Jonathan Sauls ſon aroſe, and went to David into the wood, and ſtrengthned his hand in God.

17 And he ſaid unto him, Fear not: for the hand of Saul my father ſhall not find thee, and thou ſhalt be king over Iſrael, and I ſhall be next unto thee; and that alſo Saul my father knoweth.

18 And they two made a covenant before the LORD: and David abode in the wood, and Jonathan went to his houſe.

19 ¶ Then came up the Ziphites to Saul to Gibeah, ſaying, Doth not David hide himſelf with us in ſtrong holds in the wood, in the hill of Hachilah, which is on the ſouth of Jeſhimon?

20 Now therefore, O king, come down according to all the deſire of thy ſoul to come down, and our part ſhall be to deliver him into the kings hand.

21 And Saul ſaid, Bleſſed be ye of the LORD; for ye have compaſſion on me.

22 Go, I pray you, prepare yet, and know, and ſee his place where his haunt is, and who hath ſeen him there: for it is is told me that he dealeth very ſubtilly.

23 See therefore, and take knowledge of all the lurking-places where he hideth himſelf, and come ye again to me with the certainty, and I will go with you: and it ſhall come to paſs, if he be in the land, that I will ſearch him out throughout all the thouſands of Judah.

24 And they aroſe, and went to Ziph before Saul: but David and his men were in the wilderneſs of Maon, in the plain on the ſouth of Jeſhimon.

25 Saul alſo and his men went to ſeek him; and they told David: wherefore he came down into a rock, and abode in the wilderneſs of Maon: and when Saul heard that, he purſued after David in the wilderneſs of Maon.

26 And Saul went on this ſide of the mountain, and David and his men on that ſide of the mountain: and David made haſte to get away for fear of Saul; for Saul and his men compaſſed David and his men round about to take them.

27 ¶ But there came a meſſenger unto Saul, ſaying, Haſte thee, and come; for the Philiſtines have invaded the land.

28 Wherefore Saul returned from purſuing after David, and went againſt the Philiſtines: therefore they called that place Sela-hammah-lekoth.

29 ¶ And David went up from thence, and dwelt in ſtrong holds at En-gedi.

Ver. 1. Then they told David, ſaying, Behold, the Philiſtines fight againſt Keilah.] Keilah was a town in the tribe of Judah. Euſebius places it at the diſtance of ſeventeen miles from Eleutheropolis, on the ſide of Hebron. St. Jerom makes it to be only eight miles from Hebron. It is ſaid, that the prophet Habbakuk's tomb was ſhewn there. The Philiſtines were perhaps encouraged to form the ſiege of this place, when they heard that David had been obliged to quit his native country, in order to elude the cruelty of Saul.

——And they rob the threſhing-floors.] Which were commonly without the cities, for the convenience of wind, to ſeparate the chaff from the corn.

Ver. 2. Therefore David enquired of the Lord] Probably, by the miniſtration of the prophet Gad, who was now with him; for Abiathar is not mentioned as coming to David with the ephod, till after he had defeated the Philiſtines, ver. 6.

——Saying, Shall I go and ſmite theſe Philiſtines? For the caſe was both doubtful and new, David having not yet made any attempt againſt the Philiſtines, without a previous commiſſion from Saul; and it was likewiſe dangerous, conſidering the ſmall number of his forces. This therefore was a remarkable inſtance of David's generous love for his country, even when he was baniſhed from it in ſo inhuman a manner.

——And the Lord ſaid unto David, Go, and ſmite the Philiſtines, and ſave Keilah.] So noble a ſpirit of patriotiſm obtained the approbation of the Almighty, and he permitted David to enjoy all the glory that could result from it. David accordingly relieved Keilah, defeated the Philiſtines with a great ſlaughter, and made himſelf maſter of their cattle.

Ver. 6. And it came to paſs, when Abiathar the ſon of Ahimelech fled to Keilah, that he came down with an ephod in his hand.] Or rather, with the ephod. For Abiathar being left, as we ſuppoſe, to take charge of the ſanctuary, while his father and the reſt of the prieſts went to wait upon Saul, he, aſſoon as he heard of their ſlaughter, took this principal veſtment of the high-prieſt, namely, the ephod, unto which the urim and thummim, with the breaſt-plate, were annexed, and carried it to David; unto whom he hoped to be more acceptable, when he appeared capable of ſerving him in the pontifical office. The only difficulty is, that Saul, after this, ſeems to have conſulted God by urim, chap. xxviii. 6. Perhaps he made a new one, in the room of that which Abiathar had carried away; but God would not own it, nor give him advice any other way.

Ver. 7. And it was told Saul, that David was come to Keilah.] So ſignal a deliverance as David had wrought for the inhabitants of that place, could not long be concealed from Saul, who, inſtead of being mollified by it, conſidered this new acceſſion of glory to David, as a diminution of his own, and became more reſolutely bent on his deſtruction.

——And Saul ſaid, God hath delivered him into mine hand, &c.] He eaſily believed what he ſo ardently deſired, tho' he had been made ſenſible, by frequent experience, in how ſurpriſing a manner God had delivered David out of his hands; and with what a ſingular care the Divine Providence had been watchful for his preſervation.

Ver. 8. And Saul called all the people together to war, to go down to Keilah, to beſiege David and his men.] He perhaps might give out, that he intended, by theſe military preparations, to avenge himſelf on the Philiſtines, tho' in reality they were calculated for the deſtruction of David, who deſerved no ſuch inhuman treatment from him.

Ver. 9. And David knew that Saul ſecretly practiſed miſchief againſt him.] This intimates, that Saul did not openly declare that he would beſiege Keilah, but pretended to employ his forces in ſome other expedition.

——And he ſaid to Abiathar the prieſt, Bring hither the ephod.] Which Abiathar undoubtedly put on: otherwiſe he could not have inquired of the Lord by it.

Ver. 10. Then ſaid David, O Lord God of Iſrael, thy ſervant hath certainly heard that Saul ſeeketh to come to Keilah, &c.] Some have imagined from hence, that David array'd himſelf with the ephod, and then asked counſel of God. But there is no ground for ſuch a ſuppoſition; for the high prieſt was the perſon appointed by the Lord to ask counſel of him for the ſupreme governor, Numb. xxvii. 21. David therefore uttered theſe words by the mouth of Abiathar.

Ver. 11. Will the men of Keilah deliver me up into his hand? Will Saul come down as thy ſervant hath heard? O Lord God of Iſrael, I beſeech thee, tell thy ſervant. And the Lord ſaid, He will come down.] David ſeems to have been in great perturbation of mind, when he uttered theſe words; which made him not only ask two things together, which the Jews ſay was not uſual, but he likewiſe asked them out of due order. For the firſt queſtion ſhould have been, Will Saul come down? and then the other ſhould have followed, Will they deliver me into his hand? God therefore taught him the right method, by anſwering to the laſt queſtion firſt; as the Jewiſh doctors obſerve in the Gemara of the Codex Joma.

Ver. 12. Then ſaid David, Will the men of Keilah deliver me and my men into the hand of Saul?] Hence the Talmudiſts gather, that he who asked out of the proper order, was obliged to ask again.

——And the Lord ſaid, They will deliver thee up.] God ſaw the baſe and unmanly diſpoſition of their hearts, whatſoever gratitude they pretended to David for their deliverance. For that's a rare virtue, not to be found in thoſe in whom ſelf-love predominates.

Ver. 13. Then David and his men, which were about ſix hundred.] His forces were increaſed by two hundred, ſince his famous victory over the Philiſtines, at Keilah.

——Aroſe and departed out of Keilah, and went whitherſoever they could go.] Sometimes to one place, ſometimes to another; according as they found any hope of ſafety.

Ver. 14. And David abode in the wilderneſs in ſtrong holds, and remained in a mountain in the wilderneſs of Ziph.] We find a city of this name, mentioned Joſh. xv. 55. together with Carmel and Maon; and therefore it probably adjoined to them. And accordingly, in this part of the hiſtory of David, mention is made of Maon, as being not far from Ziph; from whence we may conclude, that by the Ziph, in the wilderneſs whereof David now lay concealed, and where was the hill of Hachilah, ver. 19. is to be underſtood the Ziph near Carmel and Maon. This is placed by St. Jerom eight miles eaſtward from Hebron.

Ver. 16. And Jonathan Saul's ſon aroſe, and went to David in the wood.] Which being a very private place, they perhaps, by ſome intelligence which paſſed between them, agreed upon an interview there.

——And ſtrengthened his hand in God.] He comforted and ſupported David againſt all his fears, by reminding him of the infallible promiſes God had condeſcended to make in his favour, and his ſingular providence, which had hitherto preſerved him, and would ſtill continue to be his defence.

What Hecuba ſaid in Euripides, is exactly true in this amiable friend of David, and in Saul his father.

Ὁ μὲν πονηρὸς οὐδ' ἐν ἄλλο πλὴν κακός·
Ὁ δ' ἐσθλός, ἐσθλὸς· οὐδ' ἃ συμφορᾶς ὑπὸ
Φῦσιν δ' ἐφθειρ', ἀλλὰ χρηστὸς ἐς' ἀεί.

A wicked man ne'er ceaſes to be ſo,
But the good man lives upright all his days;
Nor can calamity corrupt his nature,
He lives a bleſſing, and he knows no change.

The deſign of Jonathan, in this dangerous interview, was to ſecure the friendſhip of David, by a new covenant between them, and to obtain a promiſe from him, that when he had gained the kingdom from his father, which he frankly told him he was well aſſured he would, himſelf might be the next in dignity to him; and that in caſe he ſhould die before that time, David ſhould manifeſt the ſame friendly regard to his children, as he had teſtified to him. This covenant was ratified with a freſh oath on both ſides, and Jonathan then returned to his own houſe.

Ver. 19. Then came up the Ziphites to Saul to Gibeah, ſaying, Doth not David hide himſelf with us in ſtrong holds in the wood, &c?] Thoſe people were of the tribe of Judah, and David thought himſelf the ſafer among them, becauſe he himſelf was of the ſame tribe; but they were apprehenſive of being treated like the inhabitants of Nob, ſhould they afford a ſanctuary to this illuſtrious fugitive: They therefore acquainted Saul, that David lay concealed in their neighbourhood; upon which that prince was ſo tranſported with joy, that he could not forbear bleſſing them, as the only people who ſhewed any compaſſion for him, ver. 21. He then deſired them to watch David as narrowly as poſſible; adding that he was a very ſubtile enemy; and he aſſured them, that he himſelf would aſſiſt them in forcing him out of the retreat where he lay concealed. But David having gained ſome intelligence of this intention, was by that time removed to the wilderneſs of Maon, on the ſouth of the plain of Jeſhimon; whither the implacable Saul ſoon purſued him, and pitched over againſt him, with a deſign to ſurround him: For as Saul's forces were far more numerous than David's, he divided them into ſeveral parties, who marching various ways, were on the point of encompaſſing the whole mountain, ſo that it would have been impoſſible for David to have eſcaped, had not Saul received intelligence at that inſtant, that the Philiſtines had made a freſh incurſion into his territories; ſo that he was obliged to return with his troops, in order to check the progreſs of thoſe enemies who were incited, in a very providential manner, to make an iſruption into the land of Iſrael, for the preſervation of David, when he was in the utmoſt danger.

David, in memory of this ſignal deliverance, called the rock where he then was, Sela-hammah-lekoth, or, the rock of diviſions, either becauſe Saul was divided in his judgment, and in great perplexity to determine, whether he he ſhould purſue David, or march immediately againſt the Philiſtines: Or, becauſe God divided Saul from David, when he was on the point of ſeizing him.

Ver. 29. And David went up from thence, and dwelt in ſtrong holds at En-gedi.] The old name of this place, as appears from Gen. xiv. 7. compared with 2 Chron. xx. 2. was Hazezon-tamar, which ſignifies, the city of palm-trees, becauſe the territory adjacent to this city abounded with thoſe trees. It was likewiſe enriched with large and fertil growths of Cyprus vines, and trees that bore balm. St. Jerom declares, that it was remarkable for Opo-balſamum, which ſome ſuppoſe to have been the celebrated balm of Gilead. Solomon mentions the vineyards of En-gedi in his rapturous ſong, chap. i. ver. 14. En-gedi was ſituated near the lake of Sodom, otherwiſe called the dead ſea, three hundred furlongs from Jeruſalem, and not far from Jericho, and the out-let of the river Jordan, through which it diſcharges itſelf into the dead ſea. En-gedi ſignifies the fountain of wild goats, and the city was ſo called, from the multitude of goats and ſheep which were kept in the rocky parts that were in the neigbourhood of it.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 David in a cave at En-gedi, having cut off Saul's skirt, ſpareth his life. 8 He ſheweth thereby his innocency. 16 Saul acknowledging his fault, taketh an oath of David, and departeth,

AND it came to paſs when Saul was returned from following the Philiſtines, that it was told him, ſaying, Behold, David is in the wilderneſs of En-gedi.

2 Then Saul took three thouſand choſen men out of all Iſrael, and went to ſeek David and his men upon the rocks of the wild goats.

3 And he came to the ſheep-cotes by the way, where was a cave, and Saul went in to cover his feet: and David and his men remained in the ſides of the cave.

4 And the men of David ſaid unto him, Behold the day of which the LORD ſaid unto thee, Behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, that thou mayſt do to him as it ſhall ſeem good unto thee. Then David aroſe, and cut off the skirt of Sauls robe privily.

5 And it came to paſs afterward, that Davids heart ſmote him, becauſe he had cut off Sauls skirt.

6 And he ſaid unto his men, The LORD forbid that I ſhould do this thing unto my maſter the LORDS anointed, to ſtretch forth mine hand againſt him, ſeeing he is the anointed of the LORD.

7 So David ſtayed his ſervants with theſe words, and ſuffered them not to riſe againſt Saul: but Saul roſe up out of the cave, and went on his way.

8 David alſo aroſe afterward, and went out of the cave, and cried after Saul, ſaying, My lord the king. And when Saul looked behind him, David ſtooped with his face to the earth, and bowed himſelf.

9 ¶ And David ſaid to Saul, Wherefore heareſt thou mens words, ſaying, Behold, David ſeeketh thy hurt?

10 Behold, this day thine eyes have ſeen, how that the LORD had delivered thee to day into mine hand in the cave: and ſome bade me kill thee, but mine eye ſpared thee, and I ſaid, I will not put forth mine hand againſt my lord; for he is the LORDS anointed.

11 Moreover, my father, ſee, yea, ſee the skirt of thy robe in my hand: for in that I cut off the skirt of thy robe, and killed thee not; know thou and ſee that there is neither evil nor tranſgreſſion in mine hand, and I have not ſinned againſt thee; yet thou hunteſt my ſoul, to take it.

12 The LORD judge between me and thee, and the LORD avenge me of thee: but mine hand ſhall not be upon thee.

13 As ſaith the proverb of the ancients, Wickedneſs proceedeth from the wicked: but mine hand ſhall not be upon thee.

14 After whom is the king of Iſrael come out? after whom doſt thou purſue? after a dead dog, after a flea.

15 The LORD therefore be judge, and judge between me and thee, and ſee, and plead my cauſe, and deliver me out of thine hand.

16 ¶ And it came to paſs when David had made an end of ſpeaking theſe words unto Saul, that Saul ſaid, Is this thy voice, my ſon David? And Saul lift up his voice and wept.

17 And he ſaid to David, Thou art more righteous than I: for thou haſt rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil.

18 And thou haſt ſhewed this day how that thou haſt dwelt well with me: foraſmuch as when the LORD had delivered me into thine hand, thou killedſt me not.

19 For if a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away? wherefore the LORD reward thee good for that thou haſt done unto me this day.

20 And now behold, I know well that thou ſhalt ſurely be king, and that the kingdom of Iſrael ſhall be eſtabliſhed in thine hand.

21 Swear

21 Swear now therefore unto me by the LORD, that thou wilt not cut off my ſeed after me, and that thou wilt not deſtroy my name out of my fathers houſe.

22 And David ſware unto Saul: and Saul went home; but David and his men gat them up unto the hold.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs when Saul was returned from following the Philiſtines, that it was told him, ſaying, Behold David is in the wilderneſs of En-gedi,] Saul was victorious over the Philiſtines, who were his mortal enemies, but he could not conquer his implacable animoſity againſt David, whoſe loyalty had ever been untainted. The moment he was informed, that his ſon-in-law lay concealed in the wilderneſs of En-gedi, he renewed his preparations to deſtroy him; and tho' he had ſufficient reaſon to believe, that David was favoured with the Divine Protection, yet he was ſo far infatuated as to hope, that his indefatigable cruelty would at laſt be gratified, even in oppoſition to heaven itſelf.

Ver. 2. Then Saul took three thouſand choſen men out of all Iſrael, and went to ſeek David and his men upon the rocks of the wild goats.] Thoſe rocks were exceeding ſteep, and full of ghaſtly precipices; and yet Saul was ſo tranſported with rage as to venture himſelf and his army there, that he might have the pleaſure of ſurpriſing David, who he imagined would judge himſelf ſecure, and conſequently be leſs circumſpect, in a ſituation that ſeemed ſo inacceſſible.

Ver. 3. And he came to the ſheep-cotes by the way, where was a cave.] Theſe rocks abounded with ſheep cotes and caverns, in which the cattle uſed to ſhelter themſelves during the heat of the day. The caverns in Paleſtine were almoſt innumerable, and Strabo declares, lib. 16. that one of them was ſpacious enough to contain four thouſand men.

——— And Saul went in to cover his feet.] Providence conducted Saul into one of theſe caverns, to give David an opportunity to clear himſelf from the imputation of diſloyalty and rebellion, and to give an inſtance of the greateſt generoſity that is to be met with in hiſtory; tho' at the hazard of becoming the victim of his mens reſentment, for rejecting the only opportunity of ridding himſelf of his enemy, and putting himſelf into a condition of rewarding their ſervices.

Saul's entring into this cave, to cover his feet, is commonly thought to ſignify, his retiring thither to eaſe nature; but we think the words are capable of another meaning; and it is certain, that the Syriac and Arabic verſions, which are no contemptible authorities, interpret the expreſſion in a very different manner from our tranſlators, namely, that Saul went in to ſleep there. And it is highly probable, that Saul, being exceedingly fatigued with his eager and almoſt inceſſant purſuit, firſt of David, then of the Philiſtines, and now of David again, both needed and deſired the refreſhment of ſleep: God alſo diſpoſing him thereunto, that David might have this noble opportunity to demonſtrate his integrity; and the ſeaſon perhaps being hot, Saul might chuſe to ſleep in the cave for the benefit of the ſhade.

If the explication we have offered of this paſſage ſhould happen to be excepted againſt, we deſire it may be conſidered, that this phraſe of covering the feet, in the paſſage before us, and likewiſe in Judges iii. 24 ſeems to be cleared up in a more natural manner, by the ſenſe we have aſſigned to it, than it is by the common interpretation. That this ſenſe agrees better with the hiſtorical account in that chapter of the book of Judges, is in ſome meaſure render'd evident, by our commentary on that paſſage; and that it accords altogether as well with the paſſage we are now conſidering, will perhaps appear from the following obſervation. Firſt, Perſons compoſing themſelves to ſleep in this manner, are not only ſaid in general to have been covered with a mantle, as is obſerved of Siſera, Judges iv. 18. but are likewiſe repreſented as having their feet cover'd. This is expreſly obſerved concerning Boaz, when he lay down to ſleep on the threſhing-floor, Ruth iii. 4, 7. The reaſon whereof may poſſibly be this, that when they lay down to ſleep in their garments, their feet were the only parts of their body that were viſible and expoſed, for which reaſon it was neceſſary to cover them, partly to prevent the inconveniences of cold, and partly for the ſake of decency, leſt their garments, being large and looſe below, ſhould be diſorder'd, and happen to expoſe what modeſty requires to be concealed. We think, therefore, that our explication of this paſſage can hardly ſeem forced or unnatural, and eſpecially as it clears up all the difficulties to which the common interpretation is obnoxious. For if Saul were faſt aſleep, which might eaſily be perceived by David and his men, within the cave, it cannot be then thought ſtrange, that this prince neither heard David and his ſoldiers converſing about him, nor felt David when he cut off the skirt of his robe.

Ver. 4. And the men of David ſaid unto him, Behold the day of which the Lord ſaid unto thee, Behold, I will deliver thine enemy into thine hand, that thou mayſt do to him as it ſhall ſeem good unto thee.] The ſcripture has not any where informed us, that God promiſed to deliver Saul into the hand of David; but David's men thus interpreted the prediction of Samuel, that God would take the kingdom from Saul, and give it to David. And they being then impatient to return to their own habitations, and to enjoy preferment under David, deſired him to improve the preſent favourable opportunity of deſtroying his enemy, and of aſcending the throne of Iſrael, in conſequence thereof.

David ſeemed inclinable to comply with their advice, and, without acquainting them with his real intention, roſe up, and advanced ſoftly to Saul, and cut off the skirt of his robe, ver. 4. Saul therefore had an opportunity of eſcaping, while David appeaſed the reſentment of his own men, by repreſenting to them, how heinous a crime it was to ſtretch forth a hand againſt their lawful prince, and the Lord's anointed. He even expreſſed an uncommon remorſe, for what he had already done, eſteeming it an indignity, or at leaſt a want of due reſpect to the regal power, tho' he meant no more by it, than to give his father-in-law, an unexceptionable proof of his innocence, and filial duty. Aſſoon, therefore, as Saul had quitted the cave, David called after him in the moſt tender manner, and intreated him not to entertain ſuch undeſerved ſuſpicions of him, nor to liſten to the malignant whiſpers of defamatory tongues; ſince he had now given him ſo ſignal a proof, how much his ſoul abhorred the crimes, with which he was ſo unjuſtly charged. This humble and affecting expoſtulation, ſtrengthened with the infallible teſtimony of the skirt of Saul's robe, drew tears of tenderneſs and ſorrow from the eyes of that prince. He acknowledged the ſuperior vertue and merit of David, in ſparing the life of ſo inhuman an enemy as himſelf; and, in the concluſion, acknowledged, that he alone was worthy to ſit on the throne of Iſrael; to which he told him, he was now ſenſible, he would ſhortly be raiſed; and therefore, as a farther proof of his unexampled generoſity, and filial affection, he requeſted him to ſwear, that he would not revenge his father's injuries upon any of his children, but that he would ſhew the ſame pity to them, as he had now teſtified for him. David readily gave him that ſatisfaction, and, after mutual embraces, Saul returned to Gibeah, and David and his men to their ſtrong hold. David knew it was dangerous to truſt a reconciled enemy; and he had ſo often experienced the inconſtancy of Sauls temper, that he juſtly thought he could not be too circumſpect with regard to his own ſafety.

CHAP. XXV.

1 Samuel dieth. 2 David in Paran ſendeth to Nabal. 10 Provoked by Nabals churliſhneſs, he mindeth to deſtroy him. 14 Abigail underſtanding thereof, 18 Taketh a preſent, 23 And by her wiſdom 32 Pacifieth David. 36 Nabal hearing thereof, dieth. 39 David taketh Abigail and Ahinoam to be his wives. 44 Michal is given to Phalti.

AND Samuel died, and all the Iſraelites were gathered together, and lamented him, and buried him in his houſe at Ramah

Ramah. And David aroſe and went down to the wilderneſs of Paran.

2 And there was a man in Maon, whoſe poſſeſſions were in Carmel, and the man was very great, and he had three thouſand ſheep, and a thouſand goats: and he was ſhearing his ſheep in Carmel.

3 Now the name of the man was Nabal, and the name of his wife, Abigail: and ſhe was a woman of good underſtanding, and of a beautiful countenance; but the man was churliſh and evil in his doings, and he was of the houſe of Caleb.

4 ¶ And David heard in the wilderneſs, that Nabal did ſhear his ſheep.

5 And David ſent out ten young men, and David ſaid unto the young men, Get you up to Carmel, and go to Nabal, and greet him in my name.

6 And thus ſhall ye ſay to him that liveth in proſperity, Peace be both to thee, and peace be to thine houſe, and peace be unto all that thou haſt.

7 And now I have heard that thou haſt ſhearers: now thy ſhepherds which were with us, we hurt them not, neither was there ought miſſing unto them, all the while they were in Carmel.

8 Ask thy young men, and they will ſhew thee: wherefore let the young men find favour in thine eyes: (for we come in a good day) give, I pray thee, whatſoever cometh to thine hand, unto thy ſervants, and to thy ſon David.

9 And when Davids young men came, they ſpake to Nabal according to all thoſe words in the name of David, and ceaſed.

10 ¶ And Nabal anſwered Davids ſervants, and ſaid, Who is David? and who is the ſon of Jeſſe? there be many ſervants now-a-days that break away every man from his maſter.

11 Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and my fleſh that I have killed for my ſhearers, and give it unto men whom I know not whence they be?

12 So Davids young men turned their way, and went again, and came and told him all thoſe ſayings.

13 And David ſaid unto his men, Gird you on every man his ſword. And they girded on every man his ſword, and David alſo girded on his ſword: and there went up after David about four hundred men, and two hundred abode by the ſtuff.

14 ¶ But one of the young men told Abigail Nabals wife, ſaying, Behold, David ſent meſſengers out of the wilderneſs to ſalute our maſter; and he railed on them.

15 But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt, neither miſſed we any thing, as long as we were converſant with them, when we were in the fields.

16 They were a wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the ſheep.

17 Now therefore know and conſider what thou wilt do: for evil is determined againſt our maſter, and againſt all his houſhold: for he is ſuch a ſon of Belial, that a man cannot ſpeak to him.

18 ¶ Then Abigail made haſte, and took two hundred loaves, and two bottles of wine, and five ſheep ready dreſſed, and five meaſures of parched corn, and an hundred cluſters of raiſins, and two hundred cakes of figs, and laid them on aſſes.

19 And ſhe ſaid unto her ſervants, Go on before me, behold I come after you; but ſhe told not her husband Nabal.

20 And it was ſo; as ſhe rode on the aſs, that ſhe came down by the covert of the hill, and behold, David and his men came down againſt her, and ſhe met them.

21 (Now David had ſaid, Surely in vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderneſs, ſo that nothing was miſſed of all that pertained unto him: and he hath requited me evil for good.

22 So and more alſo do God unto the enemies of David, if I leave of all that pertain to him by the morning light, any that piſſeth againſt the wall.)

23 And when Abigail ſaw David, ſhe haſted, and lighted off the aſs, and fell before David on her face, and bowed herſelf to the ground.

24 And fell at his feet, and ſaid, Upon me, my lord, upon me let this iniquity be, and let thine handmaid, I pray thee, ſpeak in thine audience, and hear the words of thine handmaid.

25 Let not my lord, I pray thee, regard this man of Belial, even Nabal: for as his name is, ſo is he; Nabal is his name, and folly is with him: but I thine handmaid ſaw not the young men of my lord, whom thou didſt ſend.

26 Now therefore, my lord, as the LORD liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, ſeeing the LORD hath withholden thee from coming to ſhed blood, and from avenging thyſelf with thine own hand: now let thine enemies, and they that ſeek evil to my lord, be as Nabal.

27 And now this bleſſing which thine handmaid hath brought unto my lord, let it even be given unto the young men that follow my lord.

28 I pray thee forgive the treſpaſs of thine handmaid: for the LORD will certainly make my lord a ſure houſe: becauſe my lord fighteth the battles of the LORD, and evil hath not been found in thee all thy days.

29 Yet a man is riſen to purſue thee, and to ſeek thy ſoul: but the ſoul of my lord ſhall be bound in the bundle of life with the LORD thy God; and the ſouls of thine enemies, them ſhall he ſling out, as out of the middle of a ſling.

30 And it ſhall come to paſs when the LORD ſhall have done to my lord according to all the good that he hath ſpoken concerning thee, and ſhall have appointed thee ruler over Iſrael;

31 That this ſhall be no grief unto thee, nor offence of heart unto my lord, either that thou haſt ſhed blood cauſeleſs, or that my lord hath avenged himſelf: but when the LORD ſhall have dealt well with my lord, then remember thine handmaid.

32 And David ſaid to Abigail, Bleſſed be the LORD God of Iſrael, which ſent thee this day to meet me:

33 And bleſſed be thy advice, and bleſſed be thou which haſt kept me this day from coming to ſhed blood, and from avenging my ſelf with mine own hand.

34 For in very deed, as the LORD God of Iſrael liveth, which hath kept me back from hurting thee, except thou hadſt haſted and come to meet me, ſurely there had not been left unto Nabal, by the morning light, any that piſſeth againſt the wall.

35 So David received of her hand that which ſhe had brought him, and ſaid unto her, Go up in peace to thine houſe; ſee I have hearkned to thy voice, and have accepted thy perſon.

36 ¶ And Abigail came to Nabal; and behold, he held a feaſt in his houſe like the feaſt of a king; and Nabals heart was merry within him, for he was very drunken: wherefore ſhe told him nothing, leſs or more, until the morning light.

37 But it came to paſs in the morning, when the wine was gone out of Nabal, and his wife had told him theſe things, that his heart died within him, and he became as a ſtone.

38 And it came to paſs about ten days after, that the LORD ſmote Nabal, that he died.

39 ¶ And when David heard that Nabal was dead, he ſaid, Bleſſed be the LORD that hath pleaded the cauſe of my reproach from the hand of Nabal, and hath kept his ſervant from evil: for the LORD hath returned the wickedneſs of Nabal upon his own head. And David ſent and communed with Abigail, to take her to him to wife.

40 And when the ſervants of David were come to Abigail to Carmel, they ſpake unto her, ſaying, David ſent us to thee, to take thee to him to wife.

41 And ſhe aroſe, and bowed herſelf on her face to the earth, and ſaid, Behold, let thine handmaid be a ſervant to waſh the feet of the ſervants of my lord.

42 And Abigail haſted, and aroſe, and rode upon an aſs, with five damſels of hers that went after her; and ſhe went after the meſſengers of David, and became his wife.

43 David alſo took Ahinoam of Jezreel, and they were alſo both of them his wives.

44 ¶ But Saul had given Michal his daughter, Davids wife, to Phalti the ſon of Laiſh, which was of Gallim.

Ver. 1. And Samuel died, and all the Iſraelites were gathered together and lamented him, and buried him in his houſe at Ramah.] The longeſt life will have a cloſe; and the beſt and greateſt of men muſt deſcend to the dark chambers of the grave. The good old prophet Samuel died in the 97th or 98th year of his age; and came to his grave in a full age, like as a ſhock of corn cometh in, in his ſeaſon, Job. v. 26. He was greatly lamented by all true Iſraelites, and was buried at Ramah, in his own houſe, or rather, perhaps, in his garden. He had judged Iſrael twenty years from the death of Eli, and had lived about forty eight more, from the time of his anointing Saul to the regal dignity. This faithful ſervant of God died 1059 years before the incarnation of the great redeemer of mankind.

Samuel began the chain of the prophets, which was never broken, or diſcontinued from his time, to that of Zechariah and Malachi. His body is ſaid to have been tranſported from Paleſtine to Conſtantinople, in the time of the emperor Arcadius. St. Jerom ſays, they carried the aſhes of this prophet in a golden veſſel, lapped up in ſilk: That the biſhops and people every where received this precious urn with a joy not to be expreſſed, and with honours that were almoſt infinite. The Roman Martyrology ſets down his feſtival on the twentieth of Auguſt.

The ſon of Sirach, who penned the book of Eccleſiaſticus, has conſecrated the following Eulogium to the memory of this great man. "Samuel the prophet of the "Lord, beloved of his Lord, eſtabliſhed a kingdom, and "anointed princes over his people. By the law of the "Lord he judged the congregation, and the Lord had "reſpect unto Jacob. By his faithfulneſs he was found "a true prophet, and by his word he was known to be "faithful in viſion. He called upon the mighty Lord, "when his enemies preſſed upon him on every ſide, when "he offered the ſucking lamb. And the Lord thundered "from

" from heaven, and with a great noiſe made his voice to " be heard. And he deſtroyed the rulers of the Tyrians, " and all the princes of the Philiſtines. And before his " long ſleep he made proteſtations in the ſight of the " Lord and his anointed, I have not taken any mans " goods, ſo much as a ſhoe; and no man did accuſe " him. And after his death he propheſied, and ſhewed " the king his end, and liſt up his voice from the earth in " prophecy, to blot out the wickedneſs of the people." Ecclus. xlvi. 13, &c.

Beſide the true hiſtory of Samuel, which is tranſmitted down to us in the Sacred Records, there are ſeveral traditions ſubſiſting concerning this prophet, moſt of which are very uncertain. The Mohammedans relate, for inſtance, that Samuel having made his report to the moſt High, that the Hebrews were determined to have a king; God gave him two things, one of which was a veſſel, or horn full of oil, and the other a ſtaff. The Deity then revealed to him, that the man in whoſe preſence the oil ſhould boil in the veſſel, and the height of whoſe ſtature ſhould be equal to that of the ſtaff, was the perſon appointed by God for their king. Aſſoon as this was publiſhed among the people, all the chiefs of the tribes came with great eagerneſs to meaſure themſelves by the ſtaff, and to try if the oil would boil in their preſence. But neither was any of them of the ſame height with the ſtaff, nor would the oil boil before them.

They then add, that Saul, otherwiſe called Sharek, and ſurnamed Thalout, that is, the tall, and who was no more than a carrier of water, or dreſſer of leather, came to the prophet among the reſt, and immediately the oil began to boil in the veſſel, and his height was found exactly equal to that of the miraculous ſtaff; upon which, Samuel declared him to be king. But the heads of the tribes, particularly thoſe of Judah, to whom the regal dignity had been promiſed, expoſtulated with the prophet, ſaying, How can this man, who has no eſtate, be our king? To which Samuel replied, He is choſen by the Lord, who diſpoſes of kingdoms without controul, to whomſoever he pleaſes. The Iſraelites, however, would not ſubmit, but inſiſted on a ſign from Samuel, that they might be aſſured from God, that this was his will: The prophet then anſwered them, This is the miracle which God gives you for the confirmation of the preſent choice: The ark of the Lord, which was taken away by the Philiſtines, ſhall be brought back to you by angels.

This ark, according to the deſcription which the Muſſelmans give of it, was a cheſt made of various metals, around which the pictures of all the patriarchs were engraven, and upon which the Shechinah reſted. This Shechinah was the cherubim, whoſe eyes were like two lamps, and whoſe inſupportable ſplendour, infuſed a terror into the hearts of all who beheld it. In this ark was kept, as the followers of Mohammed ſay, the baſon in which the angels waſhed the hearts of the prophets; it likewiſe contained the rod of Moſes, the high prieſt's mitre, the pontifical robes of Aaron, the veſſel filled with manna, and a piece of the wood Aluah, which ſweetned the waters of Marah.

When therefore the election of Saul was proclaimed, the Philiſtines being reſolved to conceal the ark of the Lord which had occaſioned ſo many calamities to their nation by its preſence, hid it in a dunghill; but were ſmitten with a ſhameful diſeaſe, which made them reſolve to ſend it back to the confines of the land of Iſrael; and aſſoon as it arrived there, the angels of the Lord took it up, and conveyed it to the tabernacle at Shiloh; in conſequence of which miracle, Saul aſcended the throne without any oppoſition. D'Herbel. Bib. Orient. p. 735, and 1021.

Theſe are the traditions of the oriental people, with relation to Samuel; and though they are blended with a number of wild fictions, they yet teſtify the veneration which the followers of Mohammed pay to the memory of Samuel; and furniſh us with an opportunity of diſcovering how much the ſimple narration, and the noble truths of the ſacred records, ſurpaſs the moſt glowing inventions of men.

——And David aroſe and went down to the wilderneſs of Paran.] David having loſt ſo good a friend as Samuel, had no inclination to continue any longer in that part of the country, and he perhaps received intelligence that Saul had relapſed into his ſavage antipathy againſt him. He therefore removed to the wilderneſs of Paran, which was in the ſouthern border of Judæa, but conſtituted part of Arabia Deſerta, according to the Mohammedan writers. This was the ancient habitation of Kedar, the ſon of Iſhmael. Here alſo David is thought to have compoſed the hundred and twentieth pſalm, in which he ſhews, how freſh the calumnies of Doeg the Edomite continued in his memory; and he laments his misfortune in being conſtrained to lead a wandering life, and at laſt to have his habitation among the tents of Kedar, Pſalm 120. ver. 5.

Ver. 2. And there was a man in Maon, whoſe poſſeſſions were in Carmel, and the man was very great, &c.] Maon was a city in the moſt ſoutherly part of the country belonging to the tribe of Judah. It is thought by ſome to have been the capital of the Meonians, of whom mention is made in the Hebrew of 1 Chron. iv. 40, 41. and 2 Chron. xx. 1. The Vulgate, in this laſt place, reads Ammonites, inſtead of Maonim; and in other paſſages it has habitatores, and the LXX Μινæος. The city of Maon, from whence the deſert of that name was denominated, is probably the ſame as Mænois, or Mæonis, which Euſebius places in the neighbourhood of Gaza; and likewiſe the ſame as Menæum in the Codex Theodoſianus, which is near Beerſheba, or Verſabinum Caſtrum. It is called Minois, in the ſubſcriptions of the council of Chalcedon, in the year 451.

Carmel was a city in the tribe of Judah, ſituated on a mountain of the ſame name, in the ſouthern part of Paleſtine. This mountain was not the Carmel to which Elijah reſorted, for that roſe to the ſouth of Ptolemais, the north of Dora, and upon the eaſtern coaſt of the Mediterranean. St. Jerom ſays, that the Romans in his time had a garriſon at the Carmel mentioned in this verſe.

——And the man was very great, and he had three thouſand ſheep, and a thouſand goats: and he was ſhearing his ſheep in Carmel.] They pulled off the wool at Rome, and in the neighbouring countries, as Bochart obſerves, but not in Greece, nor Judæa, where they ſheared it, as we do now.

Ver. 3. Now the name of the man was Nabal, and the name of his wife, Abigail; and ſhe was a woman of good underſtanding, and of a beautiful countenance: but the man was churliſh and evil in his doings, and he was of the houſe of Caleb.] If Nabal was really a deſcendant from Caleb, 'tis certain that he was very unlike his worthy anceſtor. But as the Hebrew word Caleb ſignifies a dog, ſome of the ancient interpreters ſuppoſe the Sacred Hiſtorian intended to intimate, that Nabal was doglike in his diſpoſition and manners. Whence the LXX tranſlate it, ὁ ἄνθρωπος κυνικός, a dogged man, or a Cynic. The Arabic and Syriac Verſions likewiſe render the Hebrew word in the ſame manner.

Ver. 4. And David heard in the wilderneſs, that Nabal did ſhear his ſheep.] The wilderneſs of Paran was not far from Nabal's houſe; David therefore might ſoon be informed of this ſheep-ſhearing, the times of which were always celebrated with feaſts, and great joy.

Ver. 5. And David ſent out ten young men.] To ſhew his great reſpect to him.

—— And David ſaid unto the young men, Get you up to Carmel.] For it was a mountain, as the other Carmel was.

——And go to Nabal, and greet him in my name.] Preſent his ſervice to him, as we now ſpeak, and wiſh him continued happineſs, as it is in the following words.

Ver. 6. And thus ſhall ye ſay to him that liveth in proſperity.] In the Hebrew the words are only, to him that liveth; unto which we add, in proſperity; becauſe life in ſcripture denotes happineſs, as death ſignifies miſery.

——Peace be both to thee, and peace be to thine houſe, and peace be unto all that thou haſt.] A moſt affectionate, and comprehenſive ſalutation: Wherein he wiſhes well to him, (both his ſoul and body) and to his whole family, and to all he poſſeſſed, either at home or abroad: And ſome think in the firſt words, he wiſhes all this might be perpetuated as long as he lived. There could not well be an higher compliment, as we now ſpeak: For peace comprehends all manner of bleſſings in the holy language.

Ver. 7. And now I have heard that thou haſt ſhearers.] Whom he entertained that day.

—Now

——Now thy ſhepherds which were with us, we hurt them not, neither was there ought miſſing unto them, all the while they were in Carmel.] He repreſents the good demeanour of thoſe who belonged to him, while they were in his neighbourhood; and ſuggeſts, that he would not have had ſo many ſheep to ſhear, if his men had been like others in their condition. But tho' they were ſoldiers, and in great neceſſity, they never took any thing from him.

Ver. 8. Ask thy young men, and they will ſhew thee.] He deſires him to be informed of the truth of this, from his own ſervants.

——Wherefore let the young men find favour in thine eyes: (for we come in a good day) give, I pray thee, whatſoever cometh to thine hand, unto thy ſervants, and to thy ſon David.] Moſt humble words, and full of reſpect; mixed with ſtrong arguments; from their harmleſs and friendly living in his neighbourhood, and from the preſent feſtival which he kept, when mens hearts uſed to be open and bountiful: And they did not deſire delicacies, but any thing that was at hand, which he could ſpare.

Ver. 9. And when David's young men came, they ſpake to Nabal according to all thoſe words in the name of David, and ceaſed.] Added nothing of their own, but waited for his anſwer in ſilence, as Maimonides interprets it, in his More Nevochim, P. 1. cap. 116.

Ver. 10. And Nabal anſwered David's ſervants, and ſaid, Who is David? and who is the ſon of Jeſſe?] A moſt rude and brutiſh anſwer, to ſo civil a meſſage, and humble requeſt.

——— There be many ſervants now-a-days that break every man from his maſter.] He reproaches them all as a company of fugitives and vagabonds, and taxes David ſecretly, with infidelity to his maſter Saul.

Ver. 11. Shall I then take my bread and my water, and my fleſh that I have killed for my ſhearers, and give it unto men, whom I know not whence they be?] A moſt fooliſh Speech; when he had immediately before called David the ſon of Jeſſe; which is a plain demonſtration that he knew well enough who he was.

Ver. 12. So David's young men turned their way, and went again, and came and told him all thoſe ſayings.] They did not ſtand arguing with him, or intreating him, but ſlighted him, as much as he did them.

Ver. 13. And David ſaid unto his men, Gird ye on every man his ſword.] Being reſolved, in the heat of his paſſion, to be revenged on Nabal.

———And there went up after David about four hundred men, and two hundred abode by the ſtuff.] For he had with him ſix hundred men in all; as we read before, chap. xxiii. 13.

Ver. 14. But one of the young men.] One of thoſe who belonged unto Nabal.

——Told Abigail Nabal's wife, ſaying, Behold, David ſent meſſengers out of the wilderneſs to ſalute our maſter; and he railed on them.] Some of his ſervants were wiſer and better than he himſelf, which makes good that ſaying of Seneca, (in his third book de Beneficiis) Nulli præcluſa eſt virtus, omnibus patet, &c. "Virtue is ſhut up from "none; it lies open to all. It admits all, it invites all; "free men and ſervants; kings and exiles. It makes not "choice of ſuch an houſe, or ſuch an eſtate: But is "content with a man himſelf." For who can help admiring the wiſdom and fidelity of this ſhepherd, who admoniſhed his miſtreſs of the danger her family was in, as he rationally concluded, from the rude abuſe that had been put upon David, whoſe merits he honeſtly ſet before her.

Ver. 15. But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt, neither miſſed we any thing as long as we were converſant with them, when we were in the fields.] He confirms every word that David's meſſengers had told his maſter, ver. 7.

Ver. 16. They were a wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the ſheep.] They add more than David's men had ſaid of themſelves, that they not only did them no hurt, but were a guard and defence to them againſt robbers, and againſt wild beaſts.

Ver. 17. Now therefore know and conſider what thou wilt do: for evil is determined againſt our maſter, and againſt all his houſhold.] This they underſtood, either from the young men whom David ſent, who let fall ſome words ſignifying how highly he would reſent the indignity done to him: Or they concluded it from what they had obſerved of the nature of David; who was very kind, but would not put up rude affronts.

———For he is ſuch a ſon of Belial, that a man cannot ſpeak to him.] So willful and obſtinate, that they durſt not ſpeak to him of this matter, fearing he would be more inſolent to them, than he had been to David.

Ver. 18. Then Abigail made haſte.] For ſhe was ſo prudent a woman as not to neglect the advice of a ſervant.

———And took two hundred loaves, and two bottles of wine, and five ſheep ready dreſſed, and five meaſures of parched corn, and an hundred cluſters of raiſins, and two hundred cakes of figs, and laid them on aſſes.] This ſhews he was a great man, who had ſuch plenty of proviſions in his houſe: For it is not to be imagined that ſhe would rob the ſhearers of a feſtival-day, to gratify David.

Ver. 19. And ſhe ſaid unto her ſervants, Go on before me, behold, I come after you.] They carried the preſent, that David beholding it, might be a little mitigated before ſhe came to him.

———But ſhe told not her husband Nabal.] Who, it is likely, would have perſiſted in his folly; or been ſo long before he would have been perſuaded to be wiſer, that it would have been too late to prevent the danger.

Ver. 20. And it was ſo, as ſhe rode on the aſs, that ſhe came down by the covert of the hill.] By a way full of buſhes, ſo that David ſaw not her, nor ſhe him, till they met together.

——— And behold, David and his men came down againſt her.] From another hill, we may ſuppoſe.

——— And ſhe met them.] In the bottom, between the two hills.

Ver. 21. (Now David had ſaid, Surely in vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderneſs, ſo that nothing was miſſed of all that pertained unto him: and he hath requited me evil for good.] This he ſaid to himſelf, or to his men, aſſoon as the meſſengers came back, or as they were upon the road to Nabal's houſe.

Ver. 22. So and more alſo do God unto the enemies of David.] He means to himſelf; but being unwilling to pronounce his own name, or any other whom he reſpected, together with a curſe, he tranſfers it to an enemy; by a figure called Euphemiſmus; or, as ſome take it, the meaning is, Let my enemy deſtroy me, if I let Nabal and his family eſcape. But the former is the plaineſt interpretation, it being common in the Jewiſh language, (as Joh. Cocceius obſerves) when they ſpeak of any evil to themſelves, to tranſlate it to another perſon. Of which, he gives inſtances out of Maccoth, and Bava Bathra. See him upon the Gemara Sanhedrim, cap. 4. ſect. 18. annot. 1.

——If I leave of all that pertain to him by the morning light.] He intended to fall upon them in the night, when they were in a dead ſleep, after a great jollity.

———Any that piſſeth againſt the wall.] That is, (as the generality of interpreters ſuppoſe) ſo much as a dog. This being, they think, like that ſaying of Aurelian, mentioned by Vopiſcus; who going to the city, and finding the gates ſhut againſt him, ſaid in his wrath, Canem in hoc oppido non relinquam, "I will not leave a dog in this "town." But Bochart excepts to this interpretation, that all dogs do not piſs againſt the wall, but the males only, and that not till they be ſix or eight months old, as Ariſtotle and others obſerve: And therefore (to omit his other reaſons) he takes this phraſe to be a periphraſis of a man, as the Hebrews expound it, particularly Ralbag. So that it is as much as to ſay, I will not leave a man alive.

Ver. 23. And when Abigail ſaw David ſhe haſted, and lighted off the aſs, and fell before David on her face, and bowed herſelf to the ground.] Both out of reverence to him as a great man, and as an humble ſupplicant, for pardon of a great offence.

Ver. 24. And fell at his feet, and ſaid, upon me my Lord, upon me let this iniquity be.] She applies herſelf to him, in a ſpeech full of art and prudence; and firſt begs, like a kind wife, that ſhe might ſuffer, not her husband; who was not ſo wiſe as he ſhould be.

——— And let thine hand-maid, I pray thee, ſpeak in thine audience, and hear the words of thine hand-maid.] She deſires him patiently to hear her reaſons.

Ver. 25. Let not my Lord, I pray thee, regard this man of Belial, even Nabal: For as his name is, ſo is he: Nabal is his name, and folly is with him.] She repreſents him as a man that offended rather out of folly than malice; which might a little excuſe his rudeneſs. There are many ſuch alluſions in ſcripture, as there is here of Nebala and Nabal. See Gen. v. 25. xlix. 8. 16, 19. and Zephan. ii. 4.

——— But I thine hand-maid ſaw not the young men of my Lord, whom thou didſt ſend.] If any were to be puniſhed, ſhe had deſired that it might be herſelf; yet ſhe had this to ſay in her own behalf, that ſhe knew nothing of the meſſage ſent by David.

Ver. 26. Now therefore, my Lord, as the Lord liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, ſeeing the Lord hath withholden thee from coming to ſhed blood, and from avenging thyſelf with thine own hand.] This is wonderfully artificial, to preſume ſo much upon his goodneſs and clemency, as already to conclude, ſhe had diverted him from his purpoſe; or rather, that God had interpoſed by his good providence, to hinder him from ſhedding blood.

——— Now let thine enemies, and they that ſeek evil to my Lord, be as Nabal.] That is, may thou have no worſe enemy than he. Or, may thine enemies have no more power to hurt thee, than Nabal hath. This is another argument to perſuade him to mercy, that Nabal was ſo inconſiderable, that as he would do him no good, ſo he could do him no evil.

Ver. 27. And now this bleſſing.] That is, this preſent or gift. The ſame phraſe in xxx. 26. 2 Kings v. 15.

——— Which thine hand-maid hath brought unto my Lord, let it even be given unto the young men that follow my Lord.] To appeaſe their anger; or, as unworthy of David's acceptance.

Ver. 28. I pray thee, forgive the treſpaſs of thine hand-maid.] She ſtill ſpeaks as if ſhe had been the offender, becauſe ſhe deſired none might ſuffer but herſelf.

——— For the Lord will certainly make my Lord a ſure houſe.] She prays him to be good to her, as God would certainly be to him.

——— Becauſe my Lord fighteth the battles of the Lord, and evil hath not been found in thee all thy days.] She puts him in mind of all his heroical acts againſt the Philiſtines, and other enemies, and that hitherto he had been blameleſs, and done no hurt unto the Iſraelites; and therefore ſhe hoped he would do none to her, and to her family.

Ver. 29. Yet a man is riſen to purſue thee, and to ſeek thy ſoul.] Saul ſhe means reſtleſly endeavoured to take away his life.

——— But the ſoul of my Lord ſhall be bound in the bundle of life, with the Lord thy God.] Be preſerved: For thoſe things which we would not have loſt, nor ſcattered about, it is common to bind up in bundles.

——— And the ſouls of thine enemies, them ſhall he ſling out, as out of the middle of a ſling.] As we bind up things to preſerve them from being thrown about and loſt; ſo we put things in a ſling, that they may be caſt out of ſight, or a great way from us.

Ver. 30. And it ſhall come to paſs when the Lord ſhall have done to my Lord according to all the good that he hath ſpoken concerning thee, and ſhall have appointed thee ruler over Iſrael.] Nothing could be more obliging than this, at every word to call him her Lord, and to acknowledge his title to the kingdom, and her belief that he would certainly enjoy it.

Ver. 31. That this ſhall be no grief unto thee, and offence of heart unto my Lord, either that thou haſt ſhed blood cauſeleſs, or that my Lord hath avenged himſelf.] She reſerves the moſt divine argument to the laſt; that he would have a clear and quiet conſcience, and not be diſturbed with remembring that he had ſhed the blood of the innocent, or otherwiſe avenged himſelf, which belonged unto God.

——— But when the Lord ſhall have dealt well with my Lord, then remember thine Hand-maid.] Thou wilt thank me for my advice.

Ver. 32. And David ſaid to Abigail, Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, which ſent thee this day to meet me.] He was ſo moved with this pathetic ſpeech, that in the firſt place, he acknowledges the good providence of God, which directed her to come ſo ſeaſonably to prevent the effects of his anger; whereby he was abſolved from his oath, which he had ſworn to cut off Nabal's family. And indeed it was well in itſelf; for no man can oblige himſelf to do an evil thing, as this would have been; there being a double guilt in it, as Philo obſerves, if he had ſhed their blood; to which may be applied the words of Seneca, that in ſuch caſes, ſcelus eſt fides, to keep one's word, is a wicked thing. See Grotius de Jure B. & P. cap. 13. ſect. 6. where he obſerves that Cicero mentions the like caſe with this in the vow of Agamemnon. And Procopius Gazæus here well reſolves, that this oath of David was the effect of anger; but this ſparing Nabal the effect of reaſon and prudent counſel.

Ver. 33. And bleſſed be thy advice, and bleſſed be thou, which haſt kept me this day from coming to ſhed blood, and from avenging myſelf with mine own hand.] Next he commends her, and her wiſe counſel, for which he beſeeches God to bleſs her: For ſhe had preſerved him from a very outrageous piece of revenge, which might have afflicted him all his days.

Ver. 34. For in very deed, as the Lord God of Iſrael liveth, which hath kept me back from hurting thee, except thou hadſt haſted and come to meet me, ſurely there had not been left unto Nabal, by the morning light, any that piſſeth againſt the wall.] It may ſeem ſtrange, that his anger ſhould not cool, in ſo much time as paſſed between the return of his meſſengers, and Abigail's meeting him: But the affront was great, and his ſoldiers, it is likely, inflamed his rage, and he reſolved to make Nabal an example to others, not to uſe him ſo rudely.

Ver. 35. So David received of her hand that which ſhe had brought him, and ſaid unto her, Go up in peace to thine houſe; ſee, I have hearkened to thy voice, and have accepted thy perſon.] Both ſhe herſelf, and what ſhe ſaid, and what ſhe brought, were moſt welcome to him. So happy a thing it is (as Euripedes ſpeaks in his Heraclidæ, ver. 359.) to fall into the hand of a wiſe, and not a fooliſh enemy: For the latter, if he get the better, exerciſes nothing but cruelty; but with the former, there is room for juſtice, mercy, moderation, and pardon; ſuch an enemy Abigail met withal, unto whom Nabal's offence was not more provoking to the deſtruction of his family, than the admiration of Abigail's virtue to its preſervation.

Ver. 36. And Abigail came to Nabal; and behold, he held a feaſt in his houſe, like the feaſt of a king; and Nabal's heart was merry within him, for he was very drunken.] Had eaten and drank too liberally, at a very great feaſt, which he made for his ſhearers.

——— Wherefore ſhe told him nothing, leſs or more, till the morning-light.] Said not a word of what had paſſed, becauſe he was not capable to underſtand the mercy of God to him.

Ver. 37. But it came to paſs in the morning, when the wine was got out of Nabal.] When he had ſlept himſelf ſober.

——— And his wife had told him theſe things, that his heart died within him, and he became as a ſtone.] He fainted away, and was as cold as a ſtone, out of dread of the danger, which he imagined ſtill hung over him. For it is a frigid interpretation of Raci and Kimchi, that he was troubled to hear of the large preſent that his wife had made to David.

Ver. 38. And it came to paſs about ten days after, that the Lord ſmote Nabal, that he died.] It ſeems he lay ſo long diſpirited, in a ſtupid ſenſeleſs condition, and then God put an end to his life, either by ſome diſeaſe, or by a ſudden ſtroke.

Ver. 39. And when David heard that Nabal was dead, he ſaid, Bleſſed be the Lord that hath pleaded my reproach from the hand of Nabal, and hath kept his ſervant from evil: For the Lord hath returned the wickedneſs of Nabal upon his own head.] He doth not rejoice ſo much in his death (who was a worthleſs wretch) as in the juſtice of God; who ſhewed him, that if men would have patience, they ſhould ſee right done unto them; ſo that they need not go about to avenge themſelves.

——— And David ſent and communed with Abigail, to take her to him to wife.] Being a woman of admirable prudence, as well as beauty, ver. 3. and one that expreſſed an high eſteem of him, he ſent one to treat with her about marriage with him.

Ver. 40. And when the ſervants of David were come to Abigail to Carmel, they ſpake unto her, ſaying, David ſent us unto thee, to take thee to him to wife.] This was their buſineſs, which no doubt they delivered in many more words, which ſignified the great eſteem and affection which David had for her, whom he knew to be a woman of ſuch great wiſdom, that ſhe had reſpect not merely to his preſent, but to his future condition. Otherwiſe, he would not have adventured, being now very poor, to court one with ſo great riches.

Ver. 41. And ſhe aroſe, and bowed herſelf on her face to the earth.] In reverence to the very name of David, whom ſhe highly honoured, as a man of an heroic ſpirit, and who, ſhe was fully perſuaded, ſhould be king of Iſrael, ver. 30.

——And ſaid, Behold, Let thine handmaid be a ſervant to waſh the feet of the ſervants of my Lord.] She ſent him an anſwer in theſe words, which ſhew her humility to be as great as her other virtues; for to waſh one's feet was the loweſt ſort of ſervice.

Ver. 42. And Abigail haſted, and aroſe, and rode upon an aſs, with five damſels of hers that went after her.] That ſhe might come attended ſuitable to her quality and his. See Grotius upon Gen. xxx. 3.

—— And ſhe went after the meſſengers of David.] Tho' ſhe did not long deliberate about the matter, but ſoon conſented; yet it is not likely ſhe followed them immediately, but ſtaid ſome decent time before ſhe went to David.

—— And became his wife.] She had a ſtrong faith in God, to marry a man who had nothing to live upon, but was forced to wander from place to place, and beg the aſſiſtance of his friends. But ſhe firmly believed that he would at laſt come to the throne, as ſhe before expreſſed; and could make ſome proviſion for him out of her own eſtate.

Ver. 43. David alſo took Ahinoam of Jezreel, and they were alſo both of them his wives.] At the ſame time, according to the corrupt cuſtom of thoſe days, wherein they had perverted the law of nature, which is admirably expreſſed by Euripides in his Andromache, ver. 177, &c.

——————οὐδὲ γὰρκαλὸν
Δυσὶν γυναιξὶν ἄνδρ' ἓν' ἡνίας ἔχειν, &c.

"It is not good for one husband to govern two wives;
"but he ſhould be content with one who would live happily."

And again, ver. 909.

Κακὸν σ' ἔλεξας ἓν' ἄνδρα δ'ιστ' ἔχειν λέχη.

"Thou haſt ſaid, it is an evil for one man to have two "wives.

For where there are more than one, they ſeldom agree, but breed great trouble to their husband. It is commonly thought that Ahinoam was his wife before he married Abigail.

Ver. 44. But Saul.] Or rather, for Saul, the particle vau being often ſo uſed.

—— Had given Michal his daughter, David's wife, to Phalti the ſon of Laiſh.] Here is the reaſon why David took him another wife; becauſe Saul had deprived him of his former. But it was no good reaſon for taking two, which were more than he had before. He was not forced from Michal, and therefore we read afterward that he took her again. And the Jewiſh doctors are of opinion, that this Phalti was a very pious man, and would never touch her, becauſe ſhe was another man's wife: Which was the reaſon David received her again. See 1 Sam. iii. 15.

—— Which was of Gallim.] A town near Accaron, as Euſebius and St. Jerom tell us; which had its name from gal, an heap of ſtones; it being, we ſuppoſe, a ſtony place.

CHAP. XXVI.

1 Saul by the diſcovery of the Ziphites, cometh to Hachilah againſt David. 4 David coming into the trench, ſtayeth Abiſhai from killing Saul, but taketh his ſpear and cruſe. 13 David reproveth Abner, 18 And exhorteth Saul. 21 Saul acknowledgeth his ſin.

AND the Ziphites came unto Saul to Gibeah, ſaying, Doth not David hide himſelf in the hill of Hachilah which is before Jeſhimon?

2 Then Saul aroſe, and went down to the wilderneſs of Ziph, having three thouſand choſen men of Iſrael with him, to ſeek David in the wilderneſs of Ziph.

3 And Saul pitched in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeſhimon by the way: but David abode in the wilderneſs, and he ſaw that Saul came after him into the wilderneſs.

4 David therefore ſent out ſpies, and underſtood that Saul was come in very deed.

5 ¶ And David aroſe, and came to the place where Saul had pitched: and David beheld the place where Saul lay, and Abner the ſon of Ner, the captain of his hoſt: and Saul lay in the trench, and the people pitched round about him.

6 Then anſwered David, and ſaid to Ahimelech the Hittite, and to Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah brother to Joab, ſaying, Who will go down with me to Saul to the camp? And Abiſhai ſaid, I will go down with thee.

7 So David and Abiſhai came to the people by night, and behold, Saul lay ſleeping within the trench, and his ſpear ſtuck in the ground at his bolſter: but Abner and the people lay round about him.

8 Then ſaid Abiſhai to David, God hath delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day: now therefore let me ſmite him, I pray thee, with the ſpear, even to the earth at once, and I will not ſmite him the ſecond time.

9 And David ſaid to Abiſhai, Deſtroy him not: for who can ſtretch forth his hand againſt the LORDS anointed, and be guiltleſs?

10 David ſaid furthermore, As the LORD liveth, the LORD ſhall ſmite him, or his day ſhall come to die, or he ſhall deſcend into battle, and periſh.

11 The LORD forbid that I ſhould ſtretch forth mine hand againſt the LORDS anointed: but I pray thee, take thou now the ſpear that is at his bolſter, and the cruſe of water, and let us go.

12 So

12 So David took the ſpear, and the cruſe of water from Saul's bolſter, and they gat them away, and no man ſaw it, nor knew it, neither awaked: for they were all aſleep, becauſe a deep ſleep from the LORD was fallen upon them.

13 ¶ Then David went over to the other ſide, and ſtood on the top of an hill afar off (a great ſpace being between them)

14 And David cried to the people, and to Abner the ſon of Ner, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou not, Abner? Then Abner anſwered and ſaid, Who art thou that crieſt to the king?

15 And David ſaid to Abner, Art not thou a valiant man? and who is like to thee in Iſrael? wherefore then haſt thou not kept thy lord the king? for there came one of the people in to deſtroy the king thy lord.

16 This thing is not good that thou haſt done: as the LORD liveth, ye are worthy to die, becauſe ye have not kept your maſter the LORDS anointed: and now ſee where the kings ſpear is, and the cruſe of water, that was at his bolſter.

17 And Saul knew Davids voice, and ſaid, Is this thy voice, my ſon David? And David ſaid, It is my voice, my lord, O king.

18 And he ſaid, Wherefore doth my lord thus purſue after his ſervant? for what have I done? or what evil is in mine hand?

19 Now therefore, I pray thee, let my lord the king hear the words of his ſervant: If the LORD have ſtirred thee up againſt me, let him accept an offering: but if they be the children of men, curſed be they before the LORD; for they have driven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the LORD, ſaying, Go ſerve other gods.

20 Now therefore, let not my blood fall to the earth before the face of the LORD: for the king of Iſrael is come out to ſeek a flea, as when one doth hunt a partridge in the mountains.

21 ¶ Then ſaid Saul, I have ſinned: return, my ſon David, for I will no more do thee harm, becauſe my ſoul was precious in thine eyes this day: behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.

22 And David anſwered and ſaid, Behold the kings ſpear, and let one of the young men come over and fetch it.

23 The LORD render to every man his righteouſneſs, and his faithfulneſs: for the LORD delivered thee into my hand to-day, but I would not ſtretch forth mine hand againſt the LORDS anointed.

24 And behold, as thy life was much ſet by this day in mine eyes; ſo let my life be much ſet by in the eyes of the LORD, and let him deliver me out of all tribulation.

25 Then Saul ſaid to David, Bleſſed be thou, my ſon David: thou ſhalt both do great things, and alſo ſhalt ſtill prevail. So David went on his way, and Saul returned to his place.

Ver. 1. And the Ziphites.] The old Enemies of David, xxiii. 19.

——Came unto Saul to Gibeah, ſaying, Doth not David hide himſelf in the hill of Hachilah which is before Jeſhimon?] He thought he might return thither with ſafety, Saul having ſo lately made peace with him. The Ziphites alſo could not but hear how he had obliged Saul, and what declaration Saul had made, that he knew David would be king of Iſrael, xxiv. 20. which David thought might reſtrain them from meddling any more with him. But this had a quite contrary effect; for they fearing that, if he came to the crown, he would remember and revenge their ill uſage of him, went to excite Saul to deſtroy him.

Ver. 2. Then Saul aroſe, and went down to the wilderneſs of Ziph, having three thouſand choſen men of Iſrael with him.] The ſame number he had when he went the laſt time in purſuit of him, xxiv. 2.

—— To ſeek David in the wilderneſs of Ziph.] The inconſtancy, the falſeneſs, and implacable rage of this prince are inconceivable; who having but a little before been indebted to David for his life, and had acknowledged his error, and made David ſwear he would be good to his poſterity, yet now again openly declares himſelf his enemy, and ſeeks to kill him.

Ver. 3. And Saul pitched in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeſhimon by the way.] That is, by the way that went into the wilderneſs.

—— But David abode in the wilderneſs, and he ſaw that Saul came after him into the wilderneſs.] At firſt imagin'd that his intelligence was untrue; but he was credibly inform'd, that Saul's wrath was broke out again, and that he intended to come thither.

Ver. 4. David therefore ſent out ſpies, and underſtood that Saul was come in very deed.] A good and prudent captain always has ſcouts abroad: And David's ſpies aſſur'd him that his information was true, and that Saul was not far from him.

Ver. 5. And David aroſe, and came to the place where Saul had pitched.] He came within ſight of it, where he might obſerve the poſture in which they lay.

——And David beheld the place where Saul lay, and Abner the ſon of Ner, the captain of his hoſt.] Who, it is very probable, lay near him.

—— And Saul lay in the trench.] Or rather, in his chariot, for ſo the LXX tranſlate the Hebrew word by ἁμαξιᾷ, or, as ſome editions have it, ἁπλοΐ; which ſignifies a chariot drawn by mules, as Bochart ſhews out of Homer, and other authors; Hierozoicon, P. 1. L. 2. cap. 19.

—— And the people pitched round about him.] He was incloſed, we may ſuppoſe, with the carriages, as our marginal tranſlation of the foregoing word is.

Ver. 6. Then anſwered David and ſaid to Ahimelech the Hittite.] A valiant man of that nation, who was a proſelyte to the Jewiſh religion: And not only followed David, but was always near his perſon.

——And to Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah brother to Joab.] Who were the ſons of David's ſiſter, 1 Chron. xi. 16. but whoſe whoſe father is no where mentioned; being a man, we ſuppoſe, of no note.

——Saying, who will go down with me to Saul to the camp?] That is, which of you two will accompany me thither?

——And Abiſhai ſaid, I will go down with thee.] Either Ahimelech declined it, as an enterprize too hazardous; or Abiſhai, being a hot and bold man, offered himſelf, while the other ſtood deliberating.

Ver. 7. So David and Abiſhai came to the people by night.] A bold and daring attempt, for two men to come into the midſt of an army of three thouſand choſen men; who were not without a watch, tho' they were not aſleep. But a ſtrong confidence in God's promiſe to preſerve him, overcame all fear of danger.

——And behold, Saul lay ſleeping within the trench, and his ſpear ſtuck in the ground at his bolſter; but Abner and the people lay round about him.] To ſecure his perſon from any ſudden aſſault.

Ver. 8. Then ſaid Abiſhai to David, God hath delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day: Now therefore let me ſmite him, I pray thee, with the ſpear, even to the earth at once, and I will not ſmite him the ſecond time.] Tho' David would not kill Saul himſelf, when he had the like opportunity, xxiv. 4. yet Abiſhai thought he might conſent to his doing it; and he undertook to rivet him to the ground at one thruſt, ſo that he ſhould make no noiſe by crying out.

Ver. 9. And David ſaid to Abiſhai, deſtroy him not: for who can ſtretch forth his hand againſt the Lord's anointed, and be guiltleſs?] Being made king by the ſpecial appointment of the Divine Majeſty, David eſteem'd it an enormous crime to do him any hurt, becauſe he was a ſacred perſon.

Ver. 10. David ſaid furthermore, as the Lord liveth, the Lord ſhall ſmite him, or his day ſhall come to die, or he ſhall deſcend into battle, and periſh.] God alone, who made him king, after a ſolemn manner, could depoſe him: And that the Divine Majeſty could effect ſeveral ways: either by a ſudden ſtroke, in the courſe of nature, or by ſuffering him to fall in battle.

Ver. 11. The Lord forbid that I ſhould ſtretch forth mine hand againſt the Lord's anointed.] What he permitted another to do, when it was in his power to prevent it, was as if he had done it himſelf. But he abhorred to meddle with that, which belonged to God, as he had before ſaid.

——But I pray thee, take thou now the ſpear that is at his bolſter.] As a witneſs what they could have done, if reſpect to God, whoſe anointed Saul was, had not witheld them.

——And the cruſe of water, and let us go.] This was ſet there, either for him to drink, if he was thirſty; or to waſh himſelf, which was preſcribed by their law in caſe of many pollutions.

Ver. 12. So David took the ſpear and the cruſe of water from Saul's bolſter.] By the hand of Abiſhai; who, like an excellent ſoldier, was perfectly ſubject to his commander, to forbear, or to do whatſoever David enjoined him.

——And they gat them away, and no man ſaw it, nor knew it, neither awaked: for they were all aſleep, becauſe a deep ſleep from the Lord was fallen upon them.] The Jewiſh doctors in Bereſchith Rabba obſerve, that there are three ſorts of that they call Tardama, which is the Hebrew word for deep ſleep in this place. The firſt mere ſound ſleep, which God ſent upon Adam, Gen. xi 21. The ſecond is the deep ſleep of prophecy, which he ſent upon Abraham, Gen. xv. 12. The third is this here mentioned, which they call the ſleep Marmorita, (it ſhould be printed Marmota as Bochart obſerves) which is a little creature more drowſy than a Dormouſe. Hierozoicon, p. 1. lib. 3. cap. 33.

Ver. 13. Then David went over to the other ſide, and ſtood on the top of an hill afar off, (a great ſpace being between them.] So that he was in ſafety, and yet his voice might be heard.

Ver. 14. And David cried to the people, and to Abner the ſon of Ner, ſaying, Anſwereſt thou not, Abner?] Art thou ſtill aſleep?

——Then Abner anſwered and ſaid, who art thou that crieſt to the king?] And diſturbeſt his repoſe.

Ver. 15. And David ſaid to Abner, Art not thou a valiant man? and who is like thee in Iſrael?] In the Hebrew the words are, Art thou not a man? That is, of place and authority, as well as of great courage and valour.

——Wherefore then haſt thou not kept thy Lord the king?] Obſerved better military diſcipline, and been more watchful for the preſervation of Saul's perſon.

——For there came one of the people in to deſtroy the king thy Lord.] Came into the camp with that intention, and had a very fair opportunity for accompliſhing it.

Ver. 16. This thing is not good that thou haſt done.] A ſoft way of ſpeaking; but David's meaning was, that Abner was very faulty as appears by what follows.

——As the Lord liveth, ye are worthy to die, becauſe ye have not kept your maſter the Lord's anointed.] Guarded him better from any danger: It is likely that they deſpiſed David's ſmall forces, which made them ſo groſly negligent.

——And now ſee where the king's ſpear is, and the cruſe of water, that was at his bolſter.] He ſets before them the tokens of their careleſsneſs, and of the opportunity he had to kill Saul.

Ver. 17. And Saul knew David's voice, and ſaid, Is this thy voice, my ſon David?] He was in great confuſion of mind, and knew not what more to ſay to David.

——And David ſaid, It is my voice, my Lord, O King.] He humbly acknowledgeth Saul's authority, and the allegiance he owed him: Tho' he had done him ſo many injuries.

Ver. 18. And he ſaid, Wherefore doth my Lord thus purſue after his ſervant? For what have I done? Or what evil is in mine hand?] David being conſcious of his own innocence, expoſtulates with Saul in a long ſpeech; and deſires, in the firſt place, to know what crime he had to accuſe him of, eſpecially ſince he lately acknowledged that he was more righteous than himſelf, xxiv. 17.

Ver. 19. Now therefore, I pray thee, let my lord the king hear the words of his ſervant.] Having received no anſwer to that queſtion, David intreats the king to be ſo patient, as to ſuffer him to argue a while with him.

——If the Lord have ſtirred thee up againſt me, let him accept an offering.] For God is not implacable, but willing to be reconciled, if I have offended him. Or the meaning may be, if, for any offence againſt God, there be juſt cauſe for this anger, I refuſe not to die, and expiate the offence with my blood. Or the words may refer to Saul, as if he had ſaid, Offer to God ſome ſacrifice, that ſo the Lord being appeaſed, may free thee from this pertinacious melancholly.

——But if they be the children of men, curſed be they before the Lord; for they have driven me out this day from abiding in the inheritance of the Lord.] From having any ſettled abode in his country; which he foreſaw he ſhould be forced alſo to leave, as we read he did, in the next chapter.

——Saying, Go ſerve other gods.] That was the effect of their actions, tho' they did not make ſuch a declaration in expreſs words. For they baniſhed him into a nation of a different religion, as Mr. Mede expounds theſe words. See book 3. p. 823.

Ver. 20. Now therefore, let not my blood fall to the earth before the face of the Lord.] God ſeeing it, and being the avenger.

——For the king of Iſrael is come out to ſeek a flea.] Which was neither for his profit nor his glory; ſee chap. xxiv. 14.

——As when one doth hunt a partridge in the mountains.] Hunt a poor bird from mountain to mountain, with abundance of labour, and which is of no value when one hath it. The Hebrew word kore is no where to be found but here, and in Jer. xvii. 11. from both which places we learn, that it was a mountainous bird, and of little worth; in taking of which, the fowler ſpent his pains to little purpoſe. And it was one of thoſe birds that ſit upon the eggs of others, as the words of Jeremiah import, ſhe gathereth what ſhe hath not brought forth, that is, eggs which ſhe did not lay. From whence it is apparent, that this word doth not ſignify a partridge, which is a bird of price, and doth not ſit upon the eggs of other birds, but (as Bochart hath taken a great deal of pains to ſhew) was a bird with a long bill, and ſhort feet, called ruſticula. It is unneceſſary to mention the opinions of interpreters about it, for they are very various, and of no conſequence.

Ver. 21. Then ſaid Saul, I have ſinned: return, my ſon David.] He invites him to come back again to the court, which is more than he did at their former meeting.

— For I will no more do thee harm, becauſe my ſoul was precious in thine eyes this day: behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.] This is a very ingenuous confeſſion, wherein he condemns himſelf, as a great offender againſt God, and againſt David. In which, for the preſent, no doubt, he was very ſerious, and both aſhamed and ſorry for what he had done.

Ver. 22. And David anſwered and ſaid, Behold the king's ſpear, and let one of the young men come over and fetch it.] He durſt not venture to go and preſent it himſelf to Saul, tho' it was the teſtimony of his fidelity and affection to him. For he did not know but the evil ſpirit might come on a ſudden upon him, and make him change his good reſolution.

Ver. 23. The Lord render to every man his righteouſneſs, and his faithfulneſs: for the Lord delivered thee into my hand to-day, but I would not ſtretch forth mine arm againſt the Lord's anointed.] He repeats what Saul had confeſſed, the more to affect his heart with it: and tells him, he doubted not, the Lord would deal with him accordingly, howſoever Saul uſed him.

Ver. 24. And behold, as thy life was much ſet by this day in mine eyes, ſo let my life be much ſet by in the eyes of the Lord, and let him deliver me out of all tribulation.] He prays God to deal with him, as he had done with Saul, and then he doubted not to be freed from all his troubles.

Ver. 25. Then Saul ſaid to David, Bleſſed be thou, my ſon David: thou ſhalt both do great things, and alſo ſhalt ſtill prevail.] He perceived it was in vain to contend any longer againſt David, whom God deſigned for great things, (as he ſaw by his worthy and noble actions) and who would ſtill have the better of him, till he came to the throne; for poſſibly Saul look'd upon the taking away of his ſpear (which, as we formerly obſerved, was his ſcepter) as an omen that the royal authority ſhould be tranſlated to David.

——— So David went on his way, and Saul returned to his place.] To Gibeah, from whence he came, ver. 1. but David did not think fit to accompany him, remembering how fickle he was, and therefore, notwithſtanding all thoſe good words, not to be truſted.

CHAP. XXVII.

1 Saul hearing David to be in Gath, ſeeketh no more for him. 5 David beggeth Ziklag of Achiſh. 8 He invading other countries, perſuadeth Achiſh he fought againſt Judah.

AND David ſaid in his heart, I ſhall now periſh one day by the hand of Saul: there is nothing better for me than that I ſhould ſpeedily eſcape into the land of the Philiſtines; and Saul ſhall deſpair of me, to ſeek me any more in any coaſt of Iſrael: ſo ſhall I eſcape out of his hand.

2 And David aroſe, and he paſſed over with the ſix hundred men that were with him, unto Achiſh the ſon of Maoch king of Gath.

3 And David dwelt with Achiſh at Gath, he and his men, every man with his houſhold, even David with his two wives, Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs, and Abigail the Carmeliteſs, Nabals wife.

4 And it was told Saul that David was fled to Gath: and he ſought no more again for him.

5 And David ſaid unto Achiſh, If I have now found grace in thine eyes, let them give me a place in ſome town in the country, that I may dwell there: for why ſhould thy ſervant dwell in the royal city with thee?

6 Then Achiſh gave him Ziklag that day: wherefore Ziklag pertaineth unto the kings of Judah unto this day.

7 And the time that David dwelt in the country of the Philiſtines, was a full year and four months.

8 ¶ And David and his men went up and invaded the Geſhurites, and the Gezrites, and the Amalekites: for thoſe nations were of old the inhabitants of the land, as thou goeſt to Shur, even unto the land of Egypt.

9 And David ſmote the land, and left neither man nor woman alive, and took away the ſheep, and the oxen, and the aſſes, and the camels, and the apparel, and returned, and came to Achiſh.

10 And Achiſh ſaid, Whither have ye made a rode to-day? And David ſaid, Againſt the ſouth of Judah, and againſt the ſouth of the Jerahmeelites, and againſt the ſouth of the Kenites.

11 And David ſaved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, ſaying, Leſt they ſhould tell on us, ſaying, So did David, and ſo will be his manner, all the while he dwelleth in the country of the Philiſtines.

12 And Achiſh believed David, ſaying, He hath made his people Iſrael utterly to abhor him; therefore he ſhall be my ſervant for ever.

Ver. 1. And David ſaid in his heart, I ſhall now periſh one day by the hand of Saul.] David had ſo frequently experienced the malignity of Saul's diſpoſition, and his inconſtancy in the good reſolutions he pretended to form, that he could no longer credit any aſſurances that prince could give him of his future favour. He fully perſuaded himſelf, that he ſhould at laſt fall into the hands of his perſecutor, if he did not retire to ſome place, where he might live ſecure from the purſuits of that prince.

Theſe apprehenſions were indulged by David with too much inconſideration, and his conduct in conſequence of them is not to be juſtified. He had already been directed by the prophet Gad, to retire into the land of Judah, ch. xxii. 5. where he might naturally expect to be ſafe from the perſecutions of Saul. He accordingly complied with the order of the inſpired prophet, but diſcovered his weakneſs, in not perſiſting in his obedience to it; for he quitted the country where he might reaſonably hope to gain a ſanctuary from his foes, and threw himſelf a ſecond time into the arms of the moſt implacable enemies to the Iſraelites.

Ver. 2. And David aroſe, and he paſſed over with the ſix hundred men that were with him, unto Achiſh the ſon of Maoch, king of Gath.] From this mention of his father's name, ſome interpreters have ſuppoſed, that this Achiſh was a different perſon from the prince at whoſe court David practiſed the actions of an ideot, chap. xxi. 13. and they are the rather induced to entertain this opinion, from the generous reception the prince, mentioned in this verſe, afforded David, whom the former had deſpiſed, as a poor ſenſeleſs wretch, utterly unfit to appear in a court. But it is no wonder, if Achiſh did not then care to be troubled with ſo unhappy a creature as David repreſented himſelf to him at that time; and the ſame prince may have entertained a more advantageous opinion of him, when he was let into the ſecret of David's fears. He may even have carried on a correſpondence with a perſon of ſuch known worth, and invited him into his dominions, with a promiſe of protection againſt the cruel intentions of Saul, hoping thereby to weaken the Iſraelitiſh king, and foment a diviſion in his dominions, at the ſame time that he ſtrengthned himſelf.

Achiſh received David and his wives, together with all his train of followers, into his protection, and treated the diſtreſſed refugees with great hoſpitality, ver. 3. And when David deſired to have ſome place allotted him for his particular dwelling, the king of Gath very generouſly conſigned Ziklag, a city in the ſouthern part of Canaan, to him, for that purpoſe, whence it came to be afterward claimed by the kings of Judah, ver. 6. All this muſt give us a very favourable opinion of Achiſh, if we conſider what reaſons the Philiſtines had to be offended at David, who certainly had no pretenſions to any friendly treatment from them; and thoſe muſt have had very commendable notions, who could thus forgive a man, with whom moſt others would have kept no meaſures, and have ſlighted the obſervance of all laws. Thoſe who remember, that David ſlew two hundred of them, only for their foreskins, may juſtly admire the patience and forgiveneſs of this people, who could, after ſuch an action, receive him any otherwiſe than as a ſworn enemy to them and theirs: and how it was poſſible for them to refrain from treating him with the utmoſt rigour, is altogether inexplicable, unleſs we recur to the immediate interpoſition of the Almighty in his favour.

Ver. 7. And the time that David dwelt in the country of the Philiſtines, was a full year and four months.] The original ſays only, that he continued there days and four months; which ſome think may ſignify, a few days above four months, rather than a year and four months, becauſe David came thither after Samuel's death, and left it immediately after that of Saul; and they reckon but ſeven months between the death of Samuel and Saul.

Ver. 8. And David and his men went up, and invaded the Geſhurites, and the Gezrites, and the Amalekites, &c.] The Geſhurites and Gezrites were reliques of the Canaanites, whoſe utter extirpation had been commanded by God himſelf. The Amalekites, who were near, had been deſtroyed by Saul, but not thoſe who were ſettled in a remote ſituation. Or perhaps, theſe were ſome who fled into diſtant parts of the country, when they heard that Saul was marching againſt them; and the account, in ver. 11. of David's killing all, muſt be underſtood of his deſtroying all whom he found in thoſe places, for there ſtill were Amalekites in other parts, chap. xxx. 1.

Abarbinel imagines, that all the people here mentioned were at enmity with Achiſh and his people, becauſe he made no complaint when David deſtroyed them; but it ought to be conſidered, that David kept him in ignorance with reſpect to the real people, againſt whom he made theſe deſtructive expeditions, and repreſented them as having been carried on againſt the ſouth of Judah, &c. ver. 10. And if they had really been enemies to Achiſh and his ſubjects, we can ſee no reaſon why David ſhould be ſo cautious of concealing his extirpation of them. Others therefore have concluded, that thoſe people were the allies of David's benefactor, the king of Gath, and that he deſtroyed every individual among them, to prevent their tranſmitting to Achiſh any complaints of his barbarity: If this were really the fact, we believe it will not be eaſy to vindicate David in ſuch a proceeding.

David having aſſured Achiſh, that his military exploits had been carried on againſt the ſouthern parts of Judah, that prince naturally imagined, that he had been plundering his own nation, and expreſſed great ſatisfaction thereat; as hoping that David had done ſomething to render himſelf odious in the eyes of his countrymen; in conſequence of which, the Philiſtine prince concluded, he ſhould always retain him in his own ſervice for the future, ver. 12.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1 Achiſh putteth confidence in David. 3 Saul having deſtroyed the witches, 4 and now in his fear forſaken of God, 7 ſeeketh to a witch. 9 The witch, encouraged by Saul, raiſeth up Samuel. 15 Saul hearing his doom, fainteth. 21 The woman with his ſervants refreſh him with meat.

AND it came to paſs in thoſe days, that the Philiſtines gathered their armies together for warfare, to fight with Iſrael: and Achiſh ſaid unto David, Know thou aſſuredly, that thou ſhalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men.

2 And David ſaid to Achiſh, Surely thou ſhalt know what thy ſervant can do. And Achiſh ſaid to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever.

3 ¶ Now Samuel was dead, and all Iſrael had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city: and Saul had put away thoſe that had familiar ſpirits, and the wizards, out of the land.

4 ¶ And the Philiſtines gathered themſelves together, and came and pitched in Shunem: and Saul gathered all Iſrael together, and they pitched in Gilboa.

5 And when Saul ſaw the hoſt of the Philiſtines, he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled.

6 And when Saul enquired of the LORD, the LORD anſwered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by prophets.

7 ¶ Then ſaid Saul unto his ſervants, Seek me a woman that hath a familiar ſpirit, that I may go to her, and enquire of her. And his ſervants ſaid to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar ſpirit at En-dor.

8 And Saul diſguiſed himſelf, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night; and he ſaid, I pray thee divine unto me by the familiar ſpirit, and bring me him up whom I ſhall name unto thee.

9 And the woman ſaid unto him, Behold, thou knoweſt what Saul hath done, how he hath cut off thoſe that have familiar ſpirits, and the wizards, out of the land:

land: wherefore then layeſt thou a ſnare for my life, to cauſe me to die?

10 And Saul ſware to her by the LORD, ſaying, As the LORD liveth, there ſhall no puniſhment happen to thee for this thing.

11 Then ſaid the woman, Whom ſhall I bring up unto thee? And he ſaid, Bring me up Samuel.

12 And when the woman ſaw Samuel, ſhe cried with a loud voice: and the woman ſpake to Saul, ſaying, Why haſt thou deceived me? for thou art Saul.

13 And the king ſaid unto her, Be not afraid: for what ſaweſt thou? And the woman ſaid unto Saul, I ſaw gods aſcending out of the earth.

14 And he ſaid unto her, What form is he of? And ſhe ſaid, An old man cometh up; and he is covered with a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and he ſtooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himſelf.

15 ¶ And Samuel ſaid to Saul, Why haſt thou diſquieted me, to bring me up? And Saul anſwered, I am ſore diſtreſſed; for the Philiſtines make war againſt me, and God is departed from me, and anſwereth me no more, neither by prophets, nor by dreams: therefore I have called thee, that thou mayſt make known unto me what I ſhall do.

16 Then ſaid Samuel, Wherefore then doſt thou ask of me, ſeeing the LORD is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy?

17 And the LORD hath done to him, as he ſpake by me: for the LORD hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to thy neighbour, even to David:

18 Becauſe thou obeyedſt not the voice of the LORD, nor executedſt his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore hath the LORD done this thing unto thee this day.

19 Moreover, the LORD will alſo deliver Iſrael with thee, into the hand of the Philiſtines: and to-morrow ſhalt thou and thy ſons be with me: the LORD alſo ſhall deliver the hoſt of Iſrael into the hand of the Philiſtines.

20 Then Saul fell ſtraightway all along on the earth, and was ſore afraid, becauſe of the words of Samuel, and there was no ſtrength in him: for he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night.

21 ¶ And the woman came unto Saul, and ſaw that he was ſore troubled, and ſaid unto him, Behold, thine handmaid hath obeyed thy voice, and I have put my life in my hand, and have hearkned unto thy words which thou ſpakeſt unto me.

22 Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou alſo unto the voice of thine handmaid, and let me ſet a morſel of bread before thee; and eat, that thou mayſt have ſtrength, when thou goeſt on thy way.

23 But he refuſed, and ſaid, I will not eat: but his ſervants, together with the woman, compelled him, and he hearkned unto their voice: ſo he aroſe from the earth, and ſat upon the bed.

24 And the woman had a fat calf in the houſe, and ſhe haſted, and killed it, and took flour, and kneaded it, and did bake unleavened bread thereof.

25 And ſhe brought it before Saul, and before his ſervants, and they did eat: then they roſe up, and went away that night.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs in thoſe days.] While David was in the country of the Philiſtines.

——— That the Philiſtines gathered their armies together for warfare, to fight with Iſrael.] Muſtered all their forces to invade the land of Iſrael; being encouraged, it is probable, by the baniſhment of David, the death of Samuel, and the frenzy of Saul.

——And Achiſh ſaid unto David, Know thou aſſuredly, that thou ſhalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men.] Achiſh ſeems to have been the principal perſon in the country, and the commander of all their forces. For we read of no other king among them but he, who required David, who was now one of his ſubjects, to aſſiſt him in this war againſt his own native country.

Ver. 2. And David ſaid to Achiſh, Surely thou ſhalt know what thy ſervant can do.] He anſwered in doubtful words, which might be taken in different ſenſes.

——— And Achiſh ſaid to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever.] Achiſh underſtood him, that he would do his beſt to ſerve him: And thereupon promiſed, if he did, that he would make him captain of his guard, or ſome great officer, near his perſon.

Ver. 3. Now Samuel was dead, and all Iſrael had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city.] This was intimated before, (chap. xxv. 1.) but is repeated here to ſhew, that Saul was now ſenſible of the loſs he ſuſtained, by wanting the advice of that great prophet in a time of diſtreſs.

—— And Saul had put away thoſe that had familiar ſpirits, and the wizards, out of the land.] According to the Divine Commandment, Levit. xx. 27. which perhaps he had executed in the beginning of his reign, when he was governed by Samuel: Or if he did it ſince, it was to ſhew that he had ſome zeal for God left, whereby he kept up his authority among the people.

Ver. 4. And the Philiſtines gathered themſelves together.] Met at an appointed place.

———And came and pitched in Shunem.] A place in the tribe of Iſſachar, as we learn from Joſh. xix. 18.

——— And Saul gathered all Iſrael together, and they pitched in Gilboa.] A mountain near the valley of Jezreel, not far from Shunem, as the laſt cited paſſage in Joſhua informs us.

Ver. 5. And when Saul ſaw the hoſt of the Philiſtines.] Of which he had a full view from mount Gilboa.

——— He was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled.] For the ſpirit of God having forſaken him, he was much intimidated, when he ſaw how numerous the Philiſtines were;

were; and was conſcious that he had no reaſon to expect the interpoſition of a gracious Providence in his favour.

Ver. 6. And when Saul enquired of the Lord.] This ſeems to contradict what is ſaid, 1 Chron. x. 14. That he did not enquire of the Lord; which was the reaſon that he ſlew him. But Kimchi, and others, endeavour to reconcile theſe two places, by alledging, that ſince he did not continue to enquire of God, but went to a witch, it was the ſame as if he had not enquired at all; for he did it faintly, and in a very cold and indifferent manner; reſolving, if he was not heard there, to go to ſome other place for counſel. Buxtorf obſerves, out of Samuel Laniado, a learned Jew, that "He whoſe heart is perfect "with God, lifts up his eyes unto him, and fixes them "on them; hoping in him, though he doth not preſently "hear him: And perſeveres in his hopes, firmly reſolving "to wait upon him. But ſo did not Saul, who was re-"miſs and negligent, ſaying, If God will not hear me, "I will go and conſult a familiar ſpirit."

——— The Lord anſwered him not.] Becauſe he had killed his prieſts, as R. Solomon here notes. And conſequently as R. Levi Ben Gerſon farther obſerves, had no perſon ſuſceptible of the Holy Spirit, to conſult God for him.

——— Neither by dreams.] By which he prayed, perhaps, that God would inform him.

——— Nor by Urim.] Kimchi thinks, that Saul ſent to Abiathar, to enquire about the event of this war, for he had the Urim with him. It is obſervable, that the Scripture never ſaith that God anſwered by Thummim, for that is comprehended under Urim; which is always put firſt when they are joined together, and here it is mentioned alone.

—— Nor by prophets.] A college of whom, and ſuch as had been educated by Samuel, was ſtill remaining at Ramah.

Ver. 7. Then ſaid Saul unto his ſervants, ſeek me a woman that hath a familiar ſpirit, that I may go to her and enquire of her.] In this he acted like a diſtracted man, who now approved what he had condemned. He mentions a woman rather than a man; becauſe the weaker ſex were moſt addicted to theſe practices, being moſt eaſily deceived by evil ſpirits.

——— And his ſervants ſaid to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar ſpirit.] There are always ſome flatterers in courts, who will never contradict their princes; but are ready to comply with them in their worſt deſigns. And it appears by this, that tho' this ſort of divination was not publickly practiſed, yet it was known that there were ſome who privately continued to conſult the dead.

——— At Endor.] A place in the tribe of Manaſſeh, Joſh. xvii. 11. not far from Shunem, as Salianus obſerves: And part of the mountain of Gilboa was over-againſt Endor, and another part of it againſt Shunem.

Ver. 8. And Saul diſguiſed himſelf, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, &c.] Saul thought it adviſeable to quit his royal robes, and cloath himſelf like an ordinary man, that he might not be ſuſpected to be what he was; and for the ſame reaſon, he had no more than two perſons to attend him. Theſe, if we may believe the Jews, were Abner and Amaſa; but it is pity they did not favour us with their reaſons for entertaining that opinion. They, indeed, have been ſo extravagant, as to affirm, that the ſorcereſs of Endor was the mother of Abner, and perhaps they might think her ſon the propereſt perſon to introduce Saul to her.

Saul and his attendants could not take the direct way to Endor, for then they muſt have paſſed through the army of the Philiſtines; to avoid which, they fetched a compaſs, and travelled by night; ſo that, in all probability, it was late before they came to the houſe of the ſorcereſs.

—— And he ſaid, I pray thee divine unto me by the familiar ſpirit, and bring me him up whom I ſhall name unto thee.] The original has no expreſſion which ſeems equivalent to that of familiar ſpirit, in our tranſlation, and the words literally rendered would run thus, Divine to me by the ſpirit of Ob. Several interpreters have followed the Vulgate, and repreſented the word Ob, as ſignifying the ſpirit of Python; but if a foreign term ought to be retained, we think that of the Hebrew ſhould be preferred to the Greek, and can ſee no reaſon why the ſpirit of Ob ſhould not be thought a better verſion than the ſpirit of Python.

Ob is an Hebrew word, and originally ſignified, a bottle, and this ſignification is aſſigned to it in the following paſſage of Job, Behold my belly is as wine which hath no vent, it is ready to burſt like new bottles, Job xxxii. 19. Perhaps ſome may think the compariſon would have been more juſt, if Job had ſaid, like old bottles; agreeably to what we read in Matth. ix. ver. 17. "Neither do men "put new wine into old bottles; elſe the bottles break, "and the wine runneth out, and the bottles periſh; but "they put new wine into new bottles, and both are pre-"ſerved." But this ſeeming difficulty will be eaſily removed, by giving this natural gloſs to the words of Job, "My belly is like wine, whoſe fermentation is ſo ex-"ceſſive, that it would burſt even new bottles."

To be poſſeſſed of the ſpirit of Ob, is, according to the opinion moſt generally received, to uſe that kind of utterance of ſpeech, which is called ventriloquy. The Greeks called the perſon who practiſed it ἐγγαστρίμυθος, which is a word compounded of the verb μυθεῖσθαι, to ſpeak, and the noun γαστὴρ, which ſignifies a belly. This was the name then by which thoſe perſons were diſtinguiſhed, who uttered predictions in a language that ſeemed to be formed in the belly. Cælius Rhodiginus gives the following account of one of theſe perſons, "There is, ſays "he, in my country, a woman of mean extraction, who "has an unclean ſpirit in her entrails, from whence a "voice iſſues, weak indeed, but perfectly audible, and "eaſy to be underſtood. This voice has been heard by "an infinite number of people beſide myſelf, and the "truth of the fact has been examined with all poſſible "circumſpection. The name of the dæmon by whom "ſhe is poſſeſſed, is Cincinnatulus, and whenever ſhe calls "him by that name, he immediately anſwers her." Cæl. Rhodig. Lection. Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 10. pag. 417. This is one idea which the Heathens entertained of thoſe perſons whom the Greeks called Engaſtrimuthoi, or ſuch as uttered articulate ſounds from their bellies, according to the literal ſignification of the Greek word γαστὴρ.

But it may not be improper to obſerve, that the ſame word γαστὴρ, has likewiſe a metaphorical ſignification, and is frequently uſed to expreſs the idea of a round veſſel, not unlike a belly in its ſhape. Hermolaus Barbarus, therefore, and ſome other writers, derive a ſecond ſignification from the Greek word engaſtrimuthes, and mean by it, thoſe diviners who practiſed gaſtromancy, or the art of predicting future events by the means of glaſs veſſels, formed in the manner we have mentioned. This part of Pagan ſcience was practiſed in the following manner: A glaſs veſſel was filled with clear water, and ſeveral lighted tapers were then placed around it. After theſe preparations, a pregnant woman, or a child in the age of innocence, was choſen to approach and examine the myſterious veſſel, and to beg an anſwer to ſuch queſtions as had been propoſed. And it is pretended, that a dæmon exhibited the figures of thoſe perſons who were invoked, and uttered oracles, with relation to the ſubject on which that dæmon was conſulted.

If it ſhould be asked, whether the profeſſion of thoſe who invoked the dead, by a ſpirit of Ob, or magical glaſs veſſels, be the ſame with that of the ventriloqui? we anſwer, that if the word engaſtrimuthos be confined to the ſecond and metaphorical ſignification, in which we have repreſented it, as uſed by ſome authors, there will then be no difference between them; but if it be limited to its primitive and literal ſignification, the one profeſſion will have little or no ſimilitude to the other; unleſs we imagine, that thoſe who invoked the dead, by the inſtrumentality of glaſs vaſes, had likewiſe the art of uttering an articulate language from their bellies, which ſome have thought not improbable.

Perhaps the expreſſion of divining by Ob might originally ſignify the practice of gaſtromancy, but as arts have frequently derived their names from the manner in which they were exerciſed at the time of their firſt invention, tho' that particular manner has afterward been aboliſhed in a long ſucceſſion of time, this art of divining by Ob, which originally might be no more than ſome particular kind of invocation, was afterward extended, perhaps, to an invocation of the dead in general; for which reaſon we ſhall not undertake to determine, in what particular manner the Sorceress of Endor proceeded in her invocations. Endor, the name of the place where she lived, and which signifies a fountain that ever flows, does not furnish us with any sufficient reason to believe, that she made use of water in her operations; and it is sufficient for us to know, that some kind of necromancy was her profession.

One would have imagined, that so impious an art would have been detested by the people of God; but it seems there was nothing in all paganism too infamous for a nation so corrupted as the Jews. But why should we be surprised, that necromancy should have any advocates in Israel, when it has been so highly favoured by many Christians, who have not only credited the fallacious promises of that diabolical art, but have even laid down rules for exercising it with success? In this class of men did Cornelius Agrippa affect to rank himself, when he wrote his Occult Philosophy; but when we consider, that he was one of the most learned men of his age, we can hardly believe he was in earnest when he composed that work: For he there introduces the Sacred Scriptures, and the Metamorphoses of Ovid, with the same air of gravity; and speaks with equal confidence of David, Homer, and Algazel. In a word, he seems to place the revelations of the Holy Spirit, with regard to celestial happiness and infernal misery, on the same basis of authority with the pagan accounts of the Elysian fields, the wheel of Ixion, and the rock of Sisyphus.

Ver. 9. And the woman said unto him, Behold thou knowest what Saul hath done, how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land, &c.] Saul himself had for some time treated those who professed infernal arts with the utmost rigour, and yet he could not extirpate necromancy out of the land. So difficult it is to eradicate impious practices from the places where they have once prevailed.

The king silenced the fears of this woman, by swearing in the most solemn manner, that she should incur no danger, by complying with his request; and an oath was held so sacred in those days, that the persons to whom it was made entirely relied upon it, and ventured their lives on its credit. Saul therefore having thus relieved the Sorceress from her apprehensions, directed her to bring up Samuel; but it is very wonderful, that he should imagine she should have power to disturb the rest of that venerable prophet, and bring him up thither at her command. All that we can say with regard to him is, that he was then forsaken of God, and render'd delirious, by the unhappy situation of his affairs.

Ver. 12. And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice: and the woman spake to Saul, saying, Why hast thou deceived me? for thou art Saul.] It is not easy to determine, whether her consternation proceeded from the extraordinary manner in which the apparition presented itself to her view, or from a suspicion that Saul had employed her in this unlawful work, that he might have a fair opportunity to punish her for it. The latter may seem probable, by what she said to him in her fright, and yet she might also be exceedingly surprised at the strangeness of the sight. The Sacred Text has not informed us, how she came to know the king by it; and the notion of the Jews, that the spirits which she called up, by her incantations, used to rise out of the earth with their feet uppermost, and that Samuel ascended from the earth in a contrary position, by which she knew it was Saul who wanted to consult him, is too ludicrous to deserve an answer. But if she saw the real apparition of that prophet, as we shall endeavour to make it probable that she did, she might naturally suppose, that he would not appear in that extraordinary manner to any but the king of Israel: For as to the notion, that this whole affair was transacted by legerdemain and ventriloquy on the woman's part, and received as fact by mere strength of fancy and fear in Saul, we cannot by any means come into that opinion, and shall soon give our reasons for dissenting from it.

The woman having proceeded in her inchantments, Saul asked her what she had seen? to which she replied, that she saw gods ascending out of the earth, ver. 13. The Jews by the word elohim, which is render'd gods by our translators, understand a judge, for so judges are called, Psalm lxxxii. 1, 6. Peter Martyr, therefore, interprets it not amiss, a person very majestic, like a judge or king. And so R. Esaias, mentioned by Vorstius upon Pirke Eliezer; for by elohim he understands, hominem insignis atque excelsæ staturæ, a man of a tall and stately stature. The Scripture in the same manner calls high trees and mountains, trees and mountains of God. Samuel is likewise said to ascend out of the earth, in which manner the Heathens, as we learn from Homer, Virgil, Statius, and other ancient poets, endeavoured to bring up their dead, to furnish them with a solution of their doubts. This impious custom prevailed long among the Jews, for Isaiah alludes to it, in the xxixth chapter, ver. 4. of his prophecy, where he declares, the Israelites should be brought so low, as to speak like a familiar spirit out of the ground, and whisper out of the dust. And it is evident likewise, from Isa. lxiv. 4. that it was customary for them to go to the sepulchres of the dead, there to consult them. For that is the meaning of sacrificing in gardens, ver. 3. of that chapter, it being usual for them to bury their dead in such places.

Saul, by the description the woman gave him of the apparition, immediately concluded it could be none but Samuel; upon which he bowed himself to the earth. Samuel then, as the Text expressly declares, asked him the reason why he had disturbed and called him up? Upon which, Saul acknowledged to him, that the distress he was in from the Philistine army, and his being destitute of counsel from God, had obliged him to have recourse to that method of obtaining the advice of Samuel: To which the apparition replied, "Wherefore then dost thou "ask of me, seeing the Lord is departed from thee, and "is become thine enemy? And the Lord hath done to "him (namely, to David) as he spake by me: for the "Lord hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and "given it to thy neighbour, even to David: Because thou "obeyedst not the voice of the Lord, nor executedst his "fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore hath the Lord "done this thing unto thee this day. Moreover, the "Lord will also deliver Israel with thee, into the hand "of the Philistines, and to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons "be with me," &c. ver. 16, 17, 18, 19.

There is no passage in the Old Testament that has been more canvassed and tortured, by authors of all ages, than this we are now upon; and when one has read them all, he will be forced to own, that there are difficulties in whatever sense we take the history of Samuel's apparition; we however have chosen that opinion, which seems the most natural and obvious, and shall now give our reasons for preferring it to the rest.

First then, as to the notion, that this transaction was nothing more than mere ventriloquy, juggle, or confederacy; beside that, it offers too great a violence to the Sacred Text, and would be a kind of burlesque upon its author, it is not likely that a woman, cunning enough to carry on a trade of this nature, would have been so impolitic, as to give Saul such a dreadful answer; tho' we should even grant, that she was so well acquainted with the calamitous circumstances of that prince, as to be able to foresee that the event was likely to be such as she represented: Such people are rather apt to flatter those who consult them, and the apprehensions with which she was siezed when she knew Saul, would undoubtedly have inclined her to sooth, and not terrify him with such shocking predictions. To which we may add, that so terrible a denunciation would have proved the most effectual means of putting Saul upon any expedient to avoid its effects, either by flight, or any other method, rather than by engaging the enemy.

This last argument is equally strong against those who think, that the devil assumed the shape, and acted the part of Samuel; unless we could suppose that malignant spirit to be so well acquainted with futurity, as to be certain that Saul would rush upon his own destruction, notwithstanding he was forewarned of it in so signal a manner. Again, tho' we should grant, that the devil might foresee, that the enemy would be too strong for Saul and his army, yet he could not be sure that Saul would engage them, especially after such a dreadful dissuasive, or if he did, that he and his sons would certainly be slain. The Israelites had gained many a more unlikely victory, and, at the worst they might have escaped by flight. We need not observe farther, how unnatural and absurd it is to suppose, that the inspired writer would have expressed himself as he doth, and have introduced the venerable prophet as raiſed from the dead, and ſpeaking to Saul, if the devil had been the ſole apparition; neither can we think it at all probable, that this evil ſpirit, if it really had been he that ſpoke to Saul, would have p'ayed the Saint ſo far, as to reprove him for his wickedneſs and diſobedience, but eſpecially for making uſe of an art to raiſe him up, which he was too fond of to diſcountenance in ſo ſevere a manner.

It is indeed objected here, that there are two falſities in the prediction pretended to be uttered by Samuel, which none therefore but either the father of lies, or a juggling old woman, could be the author of. The firſt is, that the viſion ſays to Saul, Thou and thy ſons ſhall be with me.—Now, ſay they, Saul died like a reprobate by his own hands, and could not be where Samuel was; namely, in the manſions of the bleſſed, but who doth not ſee, that the expreſſion means no more than, thou ſhalt be dead, or in another world, as I now am. The ſecond pretended falſity is, that the apparition declares, thou and thy ſons ſhall be with me to-morrow, whereas the battle was not fought on the next day. This objection having ſome air of plauſibility, we ſhall endeavour to offer ſuch particulars as we hope will be thought to anſwer it, in a clear and ſatisfactory manner.

Firſt, the Hebrew word Mahar, which is here tranſlated to-morrow, very frequently ſignifies, ſhortly, and ſometimes hereafter; and in proceſs of time. Thus Moſes, when he preſcribes to the Iſraelites the law relating to the redemption of their firſt-born; ſpeaks to them in this manner, "And it ſhall be when thy ſon asketh thee, Mahar, in time to come, ſaying, what is this"? Exod. xiii. 14. When Joſhua likewiſe orders the twelve Iſraelites to take each of them a ſtone out of the river Jordan, and to ſet them up in the firſt place where they ſhould encamp after their paſſage over that river, he aſſigns the following reaſon for that command, That this may be a ſign among you, that when your children ask their fathers in time to come, &c. Here the word Mahar is again uſed; and theſe inſtances are ſufficient to prove that it ſignifies an undetermined time, as well to-morrow. But leſt any one ſhould ſay, we endeavour to refute the objection we are oppoſing, by a meer criticiſm on a word, we are willing to give up all the advantage we might juſtly claim from that criticiſm, and ſhall offer another anſwer to the objection, which we hope will be thought unexceptionable.
